START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

JANUARY 1994

Camera Operator:
Kathy Wilder

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER: BSO-56-011

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO
	Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO
	Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO
	Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO
	Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO
	Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO
	Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO
	Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO
	Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO
	Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO
	Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO
	Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO
	Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO
	Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO
	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO
	Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO
	Pops	1924
46	BSO
	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO
	Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO
	Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO
	Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO
	Pops
	U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO
	Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO
	Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: (IA) IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATION: 12X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 11

Volume 23

BSO

1905-1906

2.5 mm 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 23

BSO

1905 - 1906

Invoice & Scrap BOOK

HILL, SMITH & CO.
STATIONERS
AND BLANK BOOK
MANUFACTURERS
8 MILK STREET,
OLD SOUTH BUILDING.
BOSTON.
Job No. 12
Duplicate this book by sending the above number.

[e]

SYMPHONY HALL

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

96 PERFORMERS — WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR — TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON 1905-1906

24 CONCERTS

On Consecutive Saturday Evenings from Oct. 14, 1905, to April 28, 1906, Omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, 1905, Jan. 18, Feb. 17 and March 17, 1906, and

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On CONSECUTIVE FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 13, 1905, to April 29, 1906, Omitting Nov. 10. Dec. 8 1905, Jan. 12, Feb. 16, and March 16, 1906.

Soloists: Mme. EMMA EAMES, Mme. JOHANNA GADSKI, Mme. LOUISE HOMER, Mr. BEN DAVIES, Mr. ELLISON VAN HOOSE, Mr. DAVID BISPHAM, Miss ADELE AUS DER OHE, Mme. OLGA SAMAROFF, Mr. ALFRED REISENAUER, Mr. HAROLD BAUER, Mr. WALDEMAR LUTSCHG, Mr. RUDOLPH CANZ, Mr. ERNEST HUTCHESON, Miss MARIE HALL, Mr. HENRI MARTEAU, Professor WILLY HESS, Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Mr. FELIX WINTERNITZ, Mr. JACQUES HOFFMANN, Miss ELSA RUEGGER, Mr. HEINRICH WARNKE.

BY SPECIAL INVITATION THE EMINENT FRENCH COMPOSER

M. VINCENT D'INDY

WILL CONDUCT THE CONCERTS OF DECEMBER 1 AND 2

Tickets for the Series of Concerts and for the Series of Rehearsals 12.00 and 7.50 According to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Monday, Oct. 2, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, Tuesday, Oct. 3, at 10 A. M.
The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Symphony Hall, on Thursday, Oct. 5, at 10 A. M.
The $7.50 seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner, at the same place, on Friday, Oct. 6, at 10 A. M.
Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets Will Be Delivered in the Hall, and Must Be Paid for as Soon as Bought or They Will Be Immediately Resold

---

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

TICKET SALES

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for the Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals at SYMPHONY HALL

Tomorrow (Monday) Beginning at 10 O'Clock

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Rehearsals, Tuesday, October 3, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $12.00 Seats for Concerts, Thursday, October, 5, at 10 A. M.
Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts, Friday, October 6, at 10 A. M.

Soloists who will appear: Mme. EMMA EAMES, Mme. JOHANNA GADSKI, Mme. LOUISE HOMER, Mr. BEN DAVIES, Mr. ELLISON VAN HOOSE, Mr. DAVID BISPHAM, Miss ADELE AUS DER OHE, Mme. OLGA SAMAROFF, Mr. ALFRED REISENAUER, Mr. HAROLD BAUER, Mr. WALDEMAR LUTSCHG, Mr. RUDOLPH CANZ, Mr. ERNEST HUTCHESON, Miss MARIE HALL, Mr. HENRI MARTEAU, Professor WILLY HESS, Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, Mr. FELIX WINTERNITZ, Mr. JACQUES HOFFMANN, Miss ELSA RUEGGER, Mr. HEINRICH WARNKE

BY SPECIAL INVITATION THE EMINENT FRENCH COMPOSER

M. VINCENT D'INDY

WILL CONDUCT THE CONCERTS OF DECEMBER 1 AND 2

JORDAN HALL

Boston Symphony Quartet

SIX CONCERTS

OF CHAMBER MUSIC ON MONDAY EVENINGS, Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5, April 9, at 8 o'clock.
Assisted by RAOUL PUGNO, GEORGE PROCTOR, CARLO BUONAMICI, CARL STASNY, and others, also by Artists of Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Season tickets for the six concerts, $7.50, $6 and $4. Mail orders accompanied by check, payable to C. A. Ellis, will be filled in the order of their reception. On sale Friday, Oct. 20, at Symphony Hall. (A)

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

96 PERFORMERS

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

TWENTY-FOUR CONCERTS

On SATURDAY EVENINGS, from Oct. 14, 1905, to April 28, 1906.

TWENTY-FOUR PUBLIC REHEARSALS

On FRIDAY AFTERNOONS from Oct. 13, 1905, to April 29, 1906.

SOLOISTS:

Mme. Emma Eames, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mme. Louise Homer, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. David Bispham, Miss Adele Aus Der Ohe, Mme. Olga Samaroff, Mr. Alfred Reisenauer, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Waldemar Lutschg, Mr. Rudolph Ganz, Mr. Ernest Hutcheson, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess, Mr. T. Adamowski, Mr. Felix Winternitz, Mr. Jacques Hoffmann, Miss Elsa Ruegger, Mr. Heinrich Warnke.

By Special Invitation the Eminent French Composer,

M. VINCENT D'INDY

Will Conduct the Concerts of Dec. 1 and 2.

TICKETS for the series of CONCERTS and for the series of REHEARSALS, $12.00 and $7.50, according to location.

Auction Sales Tickets

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Mon., Oct. 2, $12 Seats.
Tues., Oct. 3, $7.50 Seats.

24 CONCERTS

Thurs., Oct. 5, $12 Seats.
Fri., Oct. 6, $7.50 Seats.
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

96 PERFORMERS

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

Auction Sales Tickets

24 PUBLIC REHEARSALS

Monday, Oct. 2, $12 Seats.
Tuesday, Oct. 3, $7.50 Seats.

24 CONCERTS

Thursday, Oct. 5, $12 Seats.
Friday, Oct. 6, $7.50 Seats.
At 10 A. M., Symphony Hall.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $7.50 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL THIS TUESDAY MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK.

Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Oct. 5. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Oct. 6. 1t

---

THE AUCTION SALES OF SEASON TICKETS FOR THE PUBLIC REHEARSALS AND CONCERTS BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA WILL BE HELD AT SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY, OCT. 2 AND 3 (REHEARSALS,) THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, OCT. 5 AND 6 (CONCERTS), BEGINNING AT 10 O'CLOCK EACH MORNING.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

AUCTION SALE OF $12.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL THIS MONDAY MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY.

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Oct. 5. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Oct. 6.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

AUCTION SALE OF $12.00 SEATS FOR THE FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS AT SYMPHONY HALL THIS MONDAY MORNING AT 10 O'CLOCK, CONTINUING THROUGH THE DAY

Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Public Rehearsals Tomorrow, TUESDAY. Auction Sale of $12 Seats for Concerts THURSDAY, Oct. 5. Auction Sale of $7.50 Seats for Concerts FRIDAY, Oct. 6. (A)

PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA

The sale to the general public will open

Thursday, October 12

AT HEPPE'S, 1115 CHESTNUT STREET.

Subscription Prices of Season Tickets	Eighteen Symphony Concerts.	Eighteen Public Rehearsals.
Parquet, Parquet Circle, First Two Rows Balcony.	$21	$18
Remainder of Balcony.....	15	All Sold
Family Circle, First Two Rows	12	11
Remainder of Family Circle Not Reserved	9

THE ORCHESTRA will have the assistance of the following artists:

Johanna Gadski	Waldemar Lutschg
Bloomfield-Zeisler	Louise Homer
Marie Hall	Charlotte Maconda
Alfred Reisenauer	Jean Gerardy
Elsa Ruegger	Raoul Pugno
Hugo Heermann	Marie Zimmerman
Henri Marteau	Selden Miller
Emile Sauret	Olga Samaroff

First Concerts Friday Aft., Oct. 27. Saturday Eve., Oct. 28.

MONDAY NIGHT SUBSCRIBERS OF LAST YEAR HAVE UNTIL WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, TO RENEW THEIR SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE FIVE CONCERTS OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AT HEPPE'S, 1115 CHESTNUT STREET. WEDNESDAY NIGHT SUBSCRIBERS MAY RENEW OCTOBER 11, 12, 13. NEW SUBSCRIBERS OCTOBER 16.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

FIVE CONCERTS BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

(96 PERFORMERS)

Wilhelm Gericke, Conductor

MONDAYS

NOVEMBER 6. DECEMBER 4.
JANUARY 8.
FEBRUARY 12. MARCH 12.

SOLO ARTISTS:

Mme. Gadski Ellison Van Hoose
Elsa Ruegger Henri Marteau
Timothee Adamowski

By Special Invitation, the Eminent French Composer,

M. VINCENT D'INDY

Will Conduct the Concert of December 4. Books open for new subscribers to-morrow (Monday) morning, October 16, at the ticket office of Miss Harris, Heppe's Piano Rooms, 1115 Chestnut street. Mail applications must be accompanied by checks, payable to Miss H. Harris.

Prices according to location, $7, $5, $3.50. Boxes, $75, $63, $42.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC—FIRST CONCERTS FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 27; SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 28.

Philadelphia Orchestra

FRITZ SCHEEL, Conductor

During the Sixth Season of 18 Symphony Concerts and 18 Public Rehearsals, THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA will have the assistance of the following Soloists: JOHANNA GADSKI, BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER, MARIE HALL, ALFRED REISENAUER, ELSA RUEGGER, HUGO HEERMANN, HENRI MARTEAU, EMILE JEAN GERARDY, WALDEMAR LUTSCHG, LOUISE HOMER, CHARLOTTE MACONDA, JEAN AROFF, RAOUL PUGNO, MARIE ZIMMERMAN, SELDEN MILLER, OLGA SAMIN EVERY INSTANCE SOLOIST AND PROGRAMME WILL BE IDENTICAL AT PUBLIC REHEARSAL AND CONCERT

SEASON TICKETS

At Heppe's, 1115 Chestnut street, until Thursday Evening, Oct. 19. Prices:

Parquet, Parquet Circle, First 2 Rows Balcony.....	18 Symphony Concerts. $21
Remainder of Balcony.....	$15
Family Circle First 2 Rows	$12
Remainder of Family Circle.....	Not Reserved $9

Prospectus mailed on application to 1520 Chestnut street.

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

SIX CONCERTS

THURSDAY, Oct. 26; WEDNESDAY, Nov. 29, and THURSDAYS, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8, April 19, at 7.45 P. M.

Soloists: Miss ALICE R. COLE, Miss OLIVE MEAD, Miss CLARA KLOBERG, Mme. OLGA SAMAROFF, Mr. MYRON W. WHITNEY, Jr., Mr. GEORGE PROCTOR.

Season tickets for the series, $5. Subscribers of last season may secure the SAME SEATS on application to C. W. Sever & Co., Harvard Sq., on or before Oct. 18. The unclaimed seats will be on sale Saturday morning, Oct. 21, at 9 A. M.

A limited number of seats have been reserved for college officers and invited guests.

(A)

SYMPHONY HALL, SUNDAY EVENING, NOV. 26, at 8

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

GEORG HENSCHEL

The first conductor, has kindly consented to assist

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Commemorative of the twenty-fifth year of the founding of the Orchestra

PROGRAM

Beethoven.....Overture "The Dedication of the House"
(First Overture Performed at the Symphony Concerts.)
GEORG HENSCHEL, Conductor.
Tschaikowsky.....Symphonie Pathetique
Wagner.....Bacchanale from "Tannhäuser"
R. Strauss.....Symphonic Poem "Don Juan"

Reserved Seats $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00 now on sale. Mail orders accompanied by check should be addressed to C. A. ELLIS, Symphony Hall.

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Evening, Nov. 26, at 8

Pension Fund Concert

Boston Symphony Orchestra

WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

This concert commemorative of the 25th year of the founding of the Orchestra.

THE FIRST CONDUCTOR,

GEORG HENSCHEL

Has kindly consented to assist.

Tickets, $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00, on sale Friday, Nov. 17.

[4]

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

COLORED PAPER

1199.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Left,.....

Premium,.....

Name,.....

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Centre,.....

Premium,.....

Name,.....

1399.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Centre,.....

Premium,.....

Name,.....

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

BOSTON, October 2, 1905.

AUCTION SALE of $12 Season Tickets for the FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at Symphony Hall, this (MONDAY) morning at TEN o'clock.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

POSTAGE ONE CENT. WILLIAM McKINLEY. 1843-1901.

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

POSTAGE ONE CENT. WILLIAM McKINLEY. 1843-1901.

THE SPACE ABOVE IS RESERVED FOR POSTMARK.

POSTAL CARD.

THE SPACE BELOW IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

BOSTON, October 5, 1905.

AUCTION SALE of $12 Season Tickets for the

SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS, at Symphony Hall, this

(MONDAY) morning at TEN o'clock.

COLORED PAPER

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Right, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

799.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 REHEARSALS.

FLOOR, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

1199.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Left,

Premium,

Name,

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

Boston, October 5, 1905

AUCTION SALE of $12 Season Tickets for the FRIDAY AFTERNOON PUBLIC REHEARSALS at Symphony Hall, this (MONDAY morning at TEN o'clock.

1399.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 REHEARSALS.

First Bal. Centre, ...

Premium, ...

Name, ...

POSTAL CARD

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASSACHUSETTS AVES.

Boston, October 5, 1905

AUCTION SALE of $12 Season Tickets for the SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS, at Symphony Hall, this (THURSDAY) morning at TEN o'clock.

COLORED PAPER

299.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 REHEARSALS.

FLOOR,

Premium,

Name,

799.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 CONCERTS.

FLOOR,

Premium,

Name,

1399.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Right,

Premium,

Name,

299.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

FLOOR,

Premium,

Name,

1199.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$12 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Left,

Premium,

Name,

999.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Centre

Premium,

Name,

499.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

First Bal. Centre,

Premium,

Name,

699.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Left,

Premium,

Name,

599.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season 1905-1906.

$7.50 CONCERTS.

Second Bal. Right,

Premium,

Name,

TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1905-1906.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2339th to 2346th CONCERT.

JANUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, January 7, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, January 8, at 7 A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, January 9, Baltimore & Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. Special train at 8.30 A.M.
Arrive Washington, Baltimore and Ohio depot, 11.45 A.M.
Matinee at New National Theatre at 4.30 P.M.
Leave Washington Tuesday, January 9, at 7 P.M.
Arrive Baltimore, Camden Street Station, at 7.50 P.M.
Concert at the Lyric, Wednesday, January 10, at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore at 12.45 A.M.
Arrive New York, New Twenty-third St. station, Thursday, Jan. 11, at 7 A.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, January 11, at 8.15 P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, January 12, at 8.15 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday, January 13, at 2.30 P.M.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station via New York, New Haven and Hartford R.R., Monday, January 15, at 2 P.M.
Arrive Hartford at 5.05 P.M.
ALLYN HOUSE.
Concert at Foot Guard Hall, at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Hartford, Tuesday, January 16, at 2.41 P.M.
Arrive Springfield at 3.19 P.M.
Supper at HOTEL WORTHY.
Concert at Court Square Theatre at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Springfield after concert. Sleeping cars ready at 10 P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Wednesday, January 17, ~~11 P.M.~~ 6 A.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES.,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, January 6, 1906

[OVER.]

TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1905-1906.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2358th to 2365th CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, February 11, 7.45 P.M. So. Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, February 12, at 7 A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, February 13, Baltimore & Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. Special train at 8.30 A.M.
Arrive Washington, Baltimore and Ohio depot, 11.45 A.M.
Matinee at New National Theatre at 4.30 P.M.
Leave Washington Tuesday, February 13, at 7 P.M.
Arrive Baltimore, Camden Street Station, at 7.50 P.M.
Concert at the Lyric, Wednesday, February 14, at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore at 12.45 A.M.
Arrive New York, New Twenty-third St. station, Thursday, Feb. 15, at 7 A.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, February 15, at 8.15 P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, February 16, at 8.15 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday, February 17, at 2.30 P.M.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station via New York, Central R.R., Sunday, February 18 at 8.15 A.M.
Lunch at UTICA at 1.25 P.M.
Arrive Buffalo at 6.40 P.M.
HOTEL BERKELEY and CASTLE INN
Concert at Convention Hall, Monday, February 19, at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Buffalo, Tuesday, February 20, at 9 A.M.
Lunch at SYRACUSE at 12.30 P.M.
Arrive Troy at 5 P.M.
Supper at VAN RENSSELAER HOTEL.
Concert at Music Hall, at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Troy after concert. Sleeping cars ready at 10 P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Wednesday, February 21, at 7 A.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES.,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, February 10, 1906.

[OVER.]

TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1905-1906.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2374th to 2381st CONCERT.

MARCH ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, March 11, 7.45 P.M. So. Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, March 12, at 7 A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, March 13, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. Special train at 8.30 A.M.
Arrive Washington, Baltimore and Ohio depot, 11.45 A.M.
Matinee at New National Theatre at 4.30 P.M.
Leave Washington Tuesday, March 13, at 7 P.M.
Arrive Baltimore, Camden Street Station, at 7.50 P.M.
Concert at the Lyric, Wednesday, March 14, at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore at 12.45 A.M.
Arrive New York, New Twenty-third St. station, Thursday, Mar. 15, at 7 A.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, March 15, at 8.15 P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, March 16, at 8.15 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday, March 17, at 2.30 P.M.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station via N. Y., N. H. & H. R.R., Monday, March 19, at 2 P.M.
Arrive Bridgeport at 3.32 P.M.
ATLANTIC HOTEL.
Concert at Smith's Theatre at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Bridgeport at midnight, sleeping cars ready at 10 P.M.
Arrive Hartford Tuesday, March 20.
ALLYN HOUSE.
Concert at Foot Guard Hall at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Hartford after concert. Special train at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10 P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Wednesday, March 21, at 7 A.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES.,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, March 10, 1906.

[OVER.]

TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1905-1906.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

VINCENT D'INDY, CONDUCTOR.
(Specially engaged for this Tour.)

2322d to 2327th CONCERT.

DECEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, Dec'ber 3, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, December 4, at 7 A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, December 5, Baltimore & Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. Special train at 8.30 A.M.
Arrive Washington, Baltimore and Ohio depot, 11.45 A.M.
Matinee at New National Theatre at 4.30 P.M.
Leave Washington Tuesday, December 5, at 7 P.M.
Arrive Baltimore, Camden Street Station, at 7.50 P.M.
Concert at the Lyric, Wednesday, December 6, at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore at 12.45 A.M.
Arrive New York, New Twenty-third St. station, Thursday, Dec. 7, at 7 A.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, December 7, at 8.15 P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, December 8, at 8.15 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday, December 9, at 2.30 P.M.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station at 5.01 P.M.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Saturday, December 9, at 11 P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES.,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, December 2, 1905 [OVER.]

[10]

TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1905-1906.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2305th to 2312th CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, Nov'ber 5, 7.45 P.M. South Terminal Station, Track 15. Back Bay Station, 7.49 P.M.
Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, November 6, at 7 A.M.
CONTINENTAL HOTEL.
Concert at Academy of Music at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 7, Baltimore & Ohio R.R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts. Special train at 8.30 A.M.
Arrive Washington, Baltimore and Ohio depot, 11.45 A.M.
Matinee at New National Theatre at 4.30 P.M.
Leave Washington Tuesday, November 7, at 7 P.M.
Arrive Baltimore, Camden Street Station, at 7.50 P.M.
Concert at the Lyric, Wednesday, November 8, at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Baltimore at 12.45 P.M.
Arrive New York, New Twenty-third St. station, Thursday, Nov. 9, at 7 A.M.
Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday, November 9, at 8.15 P.M.
Concert at Baptist Temple, Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, Friday, November 10, at 8.15 P.M.
Third Avenue surface cars pass the door. Flatbush Avenue surface cars within short block.
Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Saturday, November 11, at 2.30 P.M.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station via New York Central and Hudson River R.R., Monday November 13, at 2.06 P.M.
Arrive Poughkeepsie 4.30 P.M.
MORGAN HOUSE.
Concert at Collingwood Opera House, Monday, Nov. 13, at 8 P.M.
Leave Poughkeepsie by Special Train at 10.30 P.M.
Arrive New York at 12 midnight.
Leave New York, Grand Central Station, Tuesday, November 14, at 2 P.M.
Arrive Hartford at 5.05 P.M.
ALLYN HOUSE and HEUBLEIN'S HOTEL.
Concert at Foot Guard Hall, at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Hartford by Special Train at midnight.
Arrive Boston, South Terminal Station, Wednesday, November 15, at 7 A.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES.,
BOSTON, SATURDAY, November 4, 1905 [OVER.]

Special attention is called to the New Twenty-third St. Station, New York.

TWENTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1905-1906.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

2290th to 2295th CONCERT.

ITINERARY OF OCTOBER TRIP.

Leave Boston Sunday, October 1, 8.30 P.M. North Terminal Station, Track 15, via Canadian Pacific R. R.
Arrive Montreal, Windsor St. Station Monday, October 2, at 7.30 A.M.
WINDSOR HOTEL, one block from station.
Concert at Victoria Rink, Drummond St. at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.
Leave Montreal, Windsor St. Station, by special train, 11.30 P.M.
Arrive Toronto, Union Station, between York and Simcoe sts. Tuesday, October 3, at 7.30 A.M.
KING EDWARD HOTEL, corner Victoria and King sts.
Concert at Massey Music Hall corner Victoria and Shuter sts. at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Toronto, Union Station, between York and Simcoe sts., Wednesday, October 4, at 9.45 A.M.
Arrive Buffalo, Union Station, Exchange st. October 4, at 12.40 P.M.
CASTLE INN, Niagara Sqr. and Delaware Ave.
BERKELEY HOTEL, Johnson Park.
GENESEE HOTEL, Genesee street.
Concert at Convention Hall, Virginia St. and Elmwood Ave. 8.15 P.M.
Leave Buffalo, Michigan Central R. R., Union Station, Exchange Street, Thursday, October 5, at 8.20 A.M.
Arrive Detroit, Brush Street Station, at 1.40 P.M.
RUSSELL HOUSE, Woodward Ave. and Cadillac sqr.
Concert at Light Guard Armory at 8.15 P.M.
Leave Detroit by Special Train, Brush Street Station, Friday, October 6, at 9 A.M.
DINNER at Toledo at 12 noon.
Arrive Cleveland, Union Station foot of Water st., at 3 P.M.
HOLLENDEN HOTEL, Superior st., corner of Bond st.
COLONIAL HOTEL, Euclid and Prospect sts., head of Bond st.
Concert at Grays' Armory, Bolivar Street, at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Cleveland, Union Station, foot of Water st. at 12 midnight.
Arrive Buffalo, Union Station, Saturday October 7, 5.30 A.M.
BREAKFAST from 7 to 8 in Station.
Leave Buffalo, Union Station, N. Y. C. & H. R. R. at 8.10 A.M.
Arrive at Rochester N. Y. C. R. R. Station at 9.55 A.M.
POWERS HOTEL, 36 Main St.
Concert at the Baker Theatre in same block as Hotel at 8.15 P.M.
Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at the owner's expense.
Leave Rochester, N. Y. C. & H. R. Station, at midnight.
BREAKFAST and DINNER in Dining Car.
Arrive Boston, via Boston & Albany R. R., South Terminal Station, Sunday, October 8, at 3 P.M.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SYMPHONY HALL, HUNTINGTON AND MASS. AVES.,
BOSTON SATURDAY September 30 1905 [OVER.]

THE SUN, SUNDAY.

SEPTEMBER 10, 1905.

VINCENT D'INDY COMING.

To Conduct Some Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Announcement is made of an interesting departure in the policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An invitation has been extended to M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer and conductor, to visit this country next winter and conduct the orchestra in a series of its regular concerts. M. d'Indy has accepted the invitation and will reach America in the end of November so that he may conduct concerts in Boston and the December series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. His programs will be devoted entirely to modern French music, which will include some of his own compositions.

Vincent d'Indy is the leader of the group of composers known as "the younger Frenchmen," men for the most part, followers and pupils of César Franck, who have sought to restore absolute music to its proper place in France. He, in common with most of the other members of this school, has always been a most ardent disciple of the art and theories of Richard Wagner. Now in his fifty-fourth year, he has a long list of compositions to his credit, embracing all forms of music, symphonic, chamber, operatic and lyric. Many of his compositions in the larger forms have been performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his chamber music is rapidly coming to be well known in America.

One of the founders of the Schola Cantorum of Paris, he is now a director of the institution and the professor of composition. As a conductor, although he has not been permanently associated in that position with any of the great orchestras of Paris, he is regarded as one of the best men in France. His knowledge of the orchestra is thorough and practical because at the beginning of his career he was kettledrummer in the Colonne Orchestra and for five years after the chorus master.

M. d'Indy is most enthusiastic over his approaching visit. He is one of the few Frenchmen who have an adequate conception of the high state in which the art of music is in America and has for a long time wanted an opportunity to visit this country. He will be here about four weeks.

SUNDAY GLOBE.

SEPTEMBER 10, 1905.

SYMPHONY ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Two interesting announcements are made regarding the coming season of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The first and more important concerns an innovation in the policy of the orchestra. An invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, M Vincent d'Indy, to visit America this winter and conduct a series of the regular concerts of the orchestra. This invitation M d'Indy has accepted and he will arrive in Boston in the latter part of November for a stay of several weeks.

Patrons of the Symphony concerts are already familiar with many of M d'Indy's works, for his name has appeared frequently on the programs of the concerts since Mr Gericke first produced his "Istar" variations in 1899, and his works have always provoked keen interest among music lovers. He is the leader of the group of composers known as the "younger Frenchmen," men for the most part followers and pupils of Cesar Franck, who have sought to restore absolute music to its proper place in France. Now in his fifty-fourth year, he has a long list of compositions to his credit, embracing all forms of music, large and small.

One of the founders of the Schola Cantorum in Paris, he is now a director of that institution and its professor of composition. As a conductor, although he has not been permanently associated in that capacity with any of the great orchestras of Paris, he is regarded as one of the best men in France.

The other interesting announcement is that the orchestra, for the first time since 1893, will this fall make a brief western tour. To this the first week in October will be devoted. Six cities are to be visited. Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester. Mr Gericke will accompany the orchestra as its conductor and the soloist will be Prof Willy Hess. This short tour is in response to urgent requests which have been growing more numerous and urgent every year.

BOSTON AMERICAN—

SEPTEMBER 17, 1905.

Symphony Hall

Preparations are active at Symphony Hall for the extended tour that will be made by the orchestra in the week of October 2. Members of the orchestra are rapidly returning from their Summer vacations and engagements, for the date of first rehearsals has been moved forward considerably on account of the Western trip. There is a prospect that the concerts which will be given in Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester will be among the most successful in the history of the orchestra. Mr. Gericke is still in Maine, but is expected back to town shortly, when full announcements of his plans for the coming season will be made. Professor Hess has been in town for some weeks, having brought his family from Germany and taken a house here. He will be the soloist on the Western tour. Three new faces in the Symphony this year will be those of Heinrich Warnke, the Munich 'cellist; P. Sadony, the German bassoonist, and Max Hess, the young horn, who has been with the Kaim Orchestra.

SEPTEMBER

THE BOSTON JOURNAL

TALENT

Miss Lillian Kemble, Castle Square.

Warnke comes from the Kaim Orchestra, is due to the general policy of the orchestra to safeguard itself against accidents by having two men for each of the principal wind instruments.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Sale of Seats in First Week of October.

The first signal of the opening of the musical season will be the annual sale of seats for the Symphony concerts. This sale will, as usual, be by auction, and will take place in Symphony Hall on the morning of Oct. 2, 3, 5 and 6. The $12 seats for the twenty-four public rehearsals will be sold on Monday, Oct. 2, beginning at 10 A. M. The $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at the same hour on Tuesday, Oct. 3. The $12 seats for the twenty-four concerts will be sold on Thursday morning, Oct. 5, and the $7.50 on Friday morning, Oct. 6.

As is customary at these sales bids will be accepted for seats in the regular order only, and not for the choice. No more than four seats may be bought on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram and marked off as sold. Tickets will be delivered in the hall and must be paid for as they are bought, else they will be resold at once.

Patrons of the orchestra will be interested to know of three important engagements that have been made during the past summer. A new principal 'cello has been engaged to take the place of Mr. Krasselt, who intends to devote himself to conducting; a new first bassoon has been engaged and a new alternate first horn. Heinrich Warnke is the new principal 'cellist.

P. Sadony has the reputation of being the finest bassoonist in the world. Max Hess, the new first horn, who like Mr.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

AY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1905

THE SYMPHONY SEASON

Two interesting announcements are made regarding the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first and more important concerns an innovation in the policy of the orchestra. An invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, M. Vincent d'Indy, to visit America this winter and conduct a series of the regular concerts of the orchestra. This invitation M. d'Indy has accepted and he will arrive in Boston in the latter part of November for a stay of several weeks.

Patrons of the Symphony concerts are already familiar with many of M. d'Indy's works, for his name has appeared frequently on the programmes of the concerts since Mr. Gericke first produced his "Istar" variations in 1899, and his works have always provoked keen interest among music-lovers. He is the leader of the group of composers known as the "younger Frenchmen," men for the most part followers and pupils of César Franck who have sought to restore absolute music to its proper place in France. Now in his fifty-fourth year, he has a long list of compositions to his credit, embracing all forms of music, large and small. He is one of the founders of the Schola Cantorum in Paris, and is now a director of that institution, and its professor of composition. As a conductor, although he has not been permanently associated in that capacity with any of the great orchestras of Paris, he is regarded as one of the best men in France.

The other interesting announcement is that the orchestra, for the first time since 1893, will this fall make a brief western tour. To this the first week in October will be devoted. Six cities are to be visited —Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester. Mr. Gericke will accompany the orchestra as its conductor, and the soloist will be Professor Willy Hess. This short tour is in response to urgent requests which have been growing more and more numerous and urgent every year.

Cleveland Plain Dealer
P. D. Sept 10

MUSIC

The recent announcement that the Boston Symphony orchestra is to give a concert in the Gray's armory Friday evening, Oct. 6, has roused much interest among the music loving public of Cleveland. The memory of the annual concert by the famous organization in the five or six years previous to 1893, when the last one was given in the old Music hall, has never been effaced. Those concerts were veritable feasts of music and the regret caused by their abandonment has been tempered only by the hope that some time the management would find it possible to bring the orchestra west again.

The western tours were given up most reluctantly by the management, because they were a source of very considerable income, but after 1893 they became impracticable. The orchestra was established by its founder primarily to give concerts in Boston. Concerts elsewhere were to be and have been merely incidental to these and when the demand for the extra time of the orchestra became so great in the east, it was deemed unwise to incur the risks of tiresome railway travel.

It is a substantial token of the esteem in which the orchestra was and is held in the middle west, that each year enough invitations in alluring terms have reached Boston to take up the entire season. Of late the requests for concerts have become so many and insistent that the management decided this year to assemble the orchestra much earlier than usual and make a week's tour. The six cities selected are Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester.

This year the orchestra ends its first quarter century of existence and the number of the Cleveland concert will be 2,293, of which over 1,500 have been given in Boston. During all these years neither expense nor effort has been spared to maintain the lofty ideals of its founder and today the orchestra stands without a peer in America if not in the world. It has gained in the east a clientele which embraces the most cultured public in that part of the country. For its concerts in Boston it is all but impossible to purchase seats, Symphony hall being absolutely sold out by subscription for the public rehearsals on Friday afternoons and practically so for its concerts on Saturday evenings, and as the seats are sold at auction huge prices are paid for early choice. The same condition holds almost as true in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

The purpose of the orchestra is uncompromisingly artistic. The highest artistic ideals have always animated its conductor and its individual musicians and no sops have ever been thrown to the Cerberus of "popular taste." It has fought a splendid battle for the cause of musical art and the public have responded as splendidly.

Mr. Gericke, who is now beginning his twelfth year as conductor, will, of course, accompany it on the coming tour. He needs no introduction to the Cleveland public, for in his first term of service he conducted several concerts in this city. He is most enthusiastic over the proposed trip and has taken care unusual even for him in the selection of his programs.

The soloist will be Mr. Willy Hess, who will make his debut to the public of this city. Mr. Hess, after many years of residence in Europe, returned to America last fall to become concert master of the orchestra. With it he appeared as soloist in all the larger eastern cities and the success he won fully sustained the reputation he brought from Europe as one of the leading violinists of the day.

6

The Boston Journal

FOR THE MUSICAL SEASON.

Signs of the opening of the musical season are plentiful around Symphony Hall. Each day brings back to town more members of the orchestra, who have been spending the summer in the mountains or at the seashore. This year, on account of the Western tour, which will be made in the week of Oct. 2, the orchestra will be assembled much earlier than usual.

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE,

SEPTEMBER 17, 1905.

The statement printed some weeks ago in the Tribune to the effect that Vincent d'Indy would visit America in the approaching season to conduct a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is confirmed by a statement sent out by the manager of the orchestra. From this it appears that M. d'Indy will come at the end of November and will conduct concerts in Boston and the December series in New-York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. His programmes will be devoted wholly to modern French music, including some of his own compositions. Mr. Higginson's experiment is interesting, but is not likely to be acclaimed very loudly in New-York, where the works of the younger Frenchmen have not yet struck deep root. The fact is it is a decadent product—the fruit of virtuosoship in manipulation of harmonies and orchestral instruments, sinuous, charming, scintillant, ingenious, but invertebrate and empty. M. d'Indy's earlier works would be more likely to meet with approbation than his later. It is more than likely that he will be heard in his pianoforte quartet with the Kneisel Quartet on December 12, after having conducted the Boston Orchestra concerts of December 7, 8 and 9.

22 Sept 17 1905

The Boston Post

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The annual rush for seats for the Symphony concerts will take place this year in the first week of next month, on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. As usual, the seats will be sold at auction. The $12 seats for the 24 public rehearsals will be auctioned off at 10 o'clock on Monday, Oct. 2, and the $7.50 at the same hour on Tuesday, Oct. 3. The $12 seats for the 24 evening concerts will be sold at 10 a. m. on Thursday, Oct. 5, and the $7.50 on Friday at the same hour.

Three important engagements have been made for the orchestra during the past summer, a new principal 'cello, a new first bassoon and a new alternate first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke has been engaged to take the place of Mr. Krasselt as principal 'cello, the latter having given up orchestral work in order to prepare himself for conducting.

Mr. Warnke comes from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich, of which he has been the principal 'cello for the past eight years. His engagement was due largely to the very urgent recommendations of Felix Weingartner and Richard Strauss, both of whom took a great personal interest in the matter. He brings with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Germany.

Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is a man about 40 years old, and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory.

The engagement of Mr. Max Hess, the new first horn, is in line with the general policy of the orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. So Mr. Hess will share the work with Mr. Hackebarth.

THE NEW YORK TIMES

SEPTEMBER 17, 1905.

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for last Summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged, a new first bassoon, and a new first horn. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. Rudolph Krasselt, who for two years has filled the position successfully, has given up orchestra work to prepare himself for conducting. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely on the recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner. He is a young man of about 40, and is a pupil of Klengel. Curiously enough, he was Krasselt's first teacher, and turned him over after a few years to Klengel.

P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned a celebrated player in Germany. The engagement of Max Hess as hornist, who, by the way, is not a relative of Prof. Willy Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. He is but 27 years old, and most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT 17, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The auction sale of seats of the Boston Symphony orchestra will begin at Symphony Hall Monday morning, Oct 2. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold Oct 2, at 10 a m, and the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday, Oct 3, at 10 a m. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold Thursday, Oct 5, at 10 a m, and the $7.50 for the concerts Friday at the same hour.

The same rules which have governed these sales in previous years will be followed this year. As usual, there will be 24 concerts and 24 public rehearsals, the first concert taking place on Saturday evening, Oct 14, and the first rehearsal Friday afternoon, Oct 13.

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the orchestra this year, for during the past summer a new principal cellist was engaged, a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr Heinrich Warnke, the new cellist, comes from Munich, where, for the past eight years, he has been the principal cellist in the Kaim orchestra.

At the end of last season Mr Rudolph Krasselt, who, for two years had filled the position so successfully, gave up orchestral work, to prepare himself for conducting. Mr Warnke was engaged largely on the very warm recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner, both of whom know his work thoroughly.

In Germany he is regarded as one of the best artists they have over there, and in the past year he has declined two invitations to become the principal cellist of the Berlin Philharmonics. He is a young man, of about 40, and is a pupil of Klengel. Curiously enough, he was Krasselt's first teacher, and turned him over after a few years to Klengel.

Mr P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is a man about 40 years old and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne conservatory, the most celebrated instrumental school in Europe. Three years ago Richter tried to get him for the Manchester orchestra, but failed.

The engagement of Mr Mas Hess, who, by the way, is not a relative of Prof Willey Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston symphony orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. Heretofore Mr Hackebarth, whose work is so admired, has had to bear the burden of all the work, and if anything happened to him there would have been no one able adequately to fill his place. For this reason Mr Hess was engaged. He is called the best horn in Germany. He is but 27 years old, and most of his career has been with the Kaim orchestra, from which organization he comes to Boston.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The auction sale of seats for the Symphony concerts will be held on Oct. 2, 3, 4 and 5. On the first day the $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold, and on the second the $7.50 seats. On Thursday, the 4th, the $12 seats for the concerts will be auctioned off, and on Friday the $7.50 seats for the concerts. The usual rules will prevail. Bids will be accepted for seats in regular order only, and not for choice. No more than four seats will be sold on one bid. As usual there will be 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. Superstition is braved in setting the first public rehearsal for Friday, Oct. 13. The first concert will be on the following night.

Few changes have been made in the personnel of the orchestra since last year. Mr. Heinrich Warnke of Munich will take the place of Mr. Krasselt as principal 'cellist. There will also be a new first bassoon in Mr. Peter Sadony, and Mr. Hackebarth, the first horn, will have a colleague in Mr. Max Hess, who comes from Munich.

Mr. Warnke comes to this country with the highest recommendations, supported by a successful career. He is regarded as one of the leading 'cellists of Germany. For the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim orchestra in Munich, and before that time he held similar positions in Baden Baden, Homburg and Hamburg. Within the last year he has been twice invited to become the principal 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic and once to take the same place in the Vienna Philharmonic. He is a pupil of Klengel and is about 40 years old. He was the first teacher of Mr. Krasselt.

Mr. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is regarded as a great acquisition. He comes from Cologne, where for many years he has been the first bassoon in that city and teacher of that instrument in the conservatory. He has the reputation of being the best bassoonist in Germany, and three years ago Hans Richter offered him great inducements to go to Manchester, Eng., where Richter is the conductor.

In engaging Mr. Max Hess, the new first horn, there is no intention on the part of the management to supplant Mr. Hackebarth, whose work with the orchestra is so highly and so justly valued. It is merely another step in the general policy to double the principal wind instruments. The orchestra has always been confronted with the possibility of something happening to Mr. Hackebarth, in which event it would be placed in a most embarrassing position. It was with this in view that Mr. Hess has been engaged. He is a young man, about 27, and most of his career has been spent in the Kaim orchestra. He brings with him a high reputation, and will doubtless be able to relieve Mr. Hackebarth of some of the burden of his work.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 90.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1905.

The soloist for the first public rehearsal and first concert of the Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 13 and 14, respectively, will be the favorite contralto, Mme. Louise Homer. Mme. Homer is really a Boston product, since her studies were pursued in this city and she married a well known Boston man.

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

Issued daily by Post Publishing Co.
SEPTEMBER 14, 1905. NO. 65; VOL. 180
Office 259 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

Signs of life are beginning to be seen around Symphony Hall for the first time this year. The members of the orchestra are rapidly returning to town from the places where they have been spending the summer, and are making ready for the winter's work. This year the orchestra will be assembled much earlier than usual on account of the Western trip, which will be made in the week of Oct. 2. Mr. Gericke is still in Seal Harbor, where he has been spending the summer. Professor Hess, who spent the summer in Europe, has been back some time, having brought with him his family and taken a house in the city. Professor Hess will be the soloist on the tour.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 76.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 14, 1905.

SYMPHONY'S WESTERN TRIP.

Signs of life are beginning to be seen around Symphony Hall. The members of the orchestra are returning to town from their summer haunts, and are making ready for the winter's work. This year the orchestra will be assembled much earlier than usual on account of the western trip, which will be made in the week of Oct. 2. Reports which have been received from the different cities which will be visited, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester are promising.

It is the first time in over 12 years that the orchestra is to go into Canada and west of the Alleghanies. The mere announcement that the orchestra is to make the short tour has brought requests for concerts from nearly all the larger cities and towns.

Mr. Gerlick is still in Seal Harbor. Prof. Hess, who spent the summer in Europe, has taken a house in the city. Prof. Hess will be the soloist on the tour.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, SEPT 14, 1905.

Signs of the opening of the musical season are plentiful around Symphony hall. Each day brings back to town more members of the orchestra who have been spending the summer in the mountains or at the seashore. This year, on account of the western tour, which will be made in the week of Oct 2, the orchestra will be assembled much earlier than usual. The success of the tour has been assured from the beginning, but the reports which are being received from the cities which will be visited, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, indicate that it will exceed even the highest expectations Mr Gericke is still in Maine, but is expected back shortly. Prof Hess has been in town for some time, settling his family in their new Boston home.

Boston Daily Globe.

MONDAY, SEPT 25, 1905.

The soloists who are to appear the coming season with the Boston symphony orchestra include Mme Emma Eames, Mme Gadski, Miss Homer and Mr Marteau. The sale of tickets will take place in Symphony hall next week, beginning Monday.

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 88.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 26, 1905.

SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

The announcement of the soloists who are to appear the coming season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra is attracting much favorable comment. Mme. Emma Eames, Mme. Gadski, Miss Homer and Mr. Marteau are among the number. The sale of tickets by auction will take place in Symphony Hall next week, beginning Monday, when the $12 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals will be sold; the $7.50 seats on Tuesday, and on Thursday and Friday the tickets for the Saturday evening concents.

BOSTON HERALD SEPTEMBER 8, 1905

Heinrich Warnke, New First 'Cellist of Symphony Orchestra, Sails in Week

HEINRICH WARNKE.

Successor of Mr. Krasselt Engaged Largely on Urgent Recommendations of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner.

Heinrich Warnke, first 'cellist of the celebrated Kaim orchestra of Munich, who was recently secured by Prof. Willy Hess for the Boston Symphony orchestra, will sail for America the 16th on the steamer Grosser Kurfuerst, and will arrive in this country the 25th, in time to open the season early in October.

The new 'cellist has a great reputation in the musical centres of Germany. He was the pet pupil of Klengel, and as an instructor taught Rudolph Krasselt, first solo 'cellist in the Boston Symphony for the past two years, and whose place Mr. Warnke will now fill. At present he is 33 years old, and for so young a man has had many tempting offers from the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra and the Vienna orchestra.

He was very loth to leave Munich, where he was settled and well known, and it was only with great difficulty that Prof. Hess induced him to quit the fatherland.

Mr. Warnke had just refused liberal offers, but Prof. Hess, who has known him for years, urged the many advantages of Boston upon him and he at last consented to make the change.

In speaking of his new acquisition, Prof. Hess said:

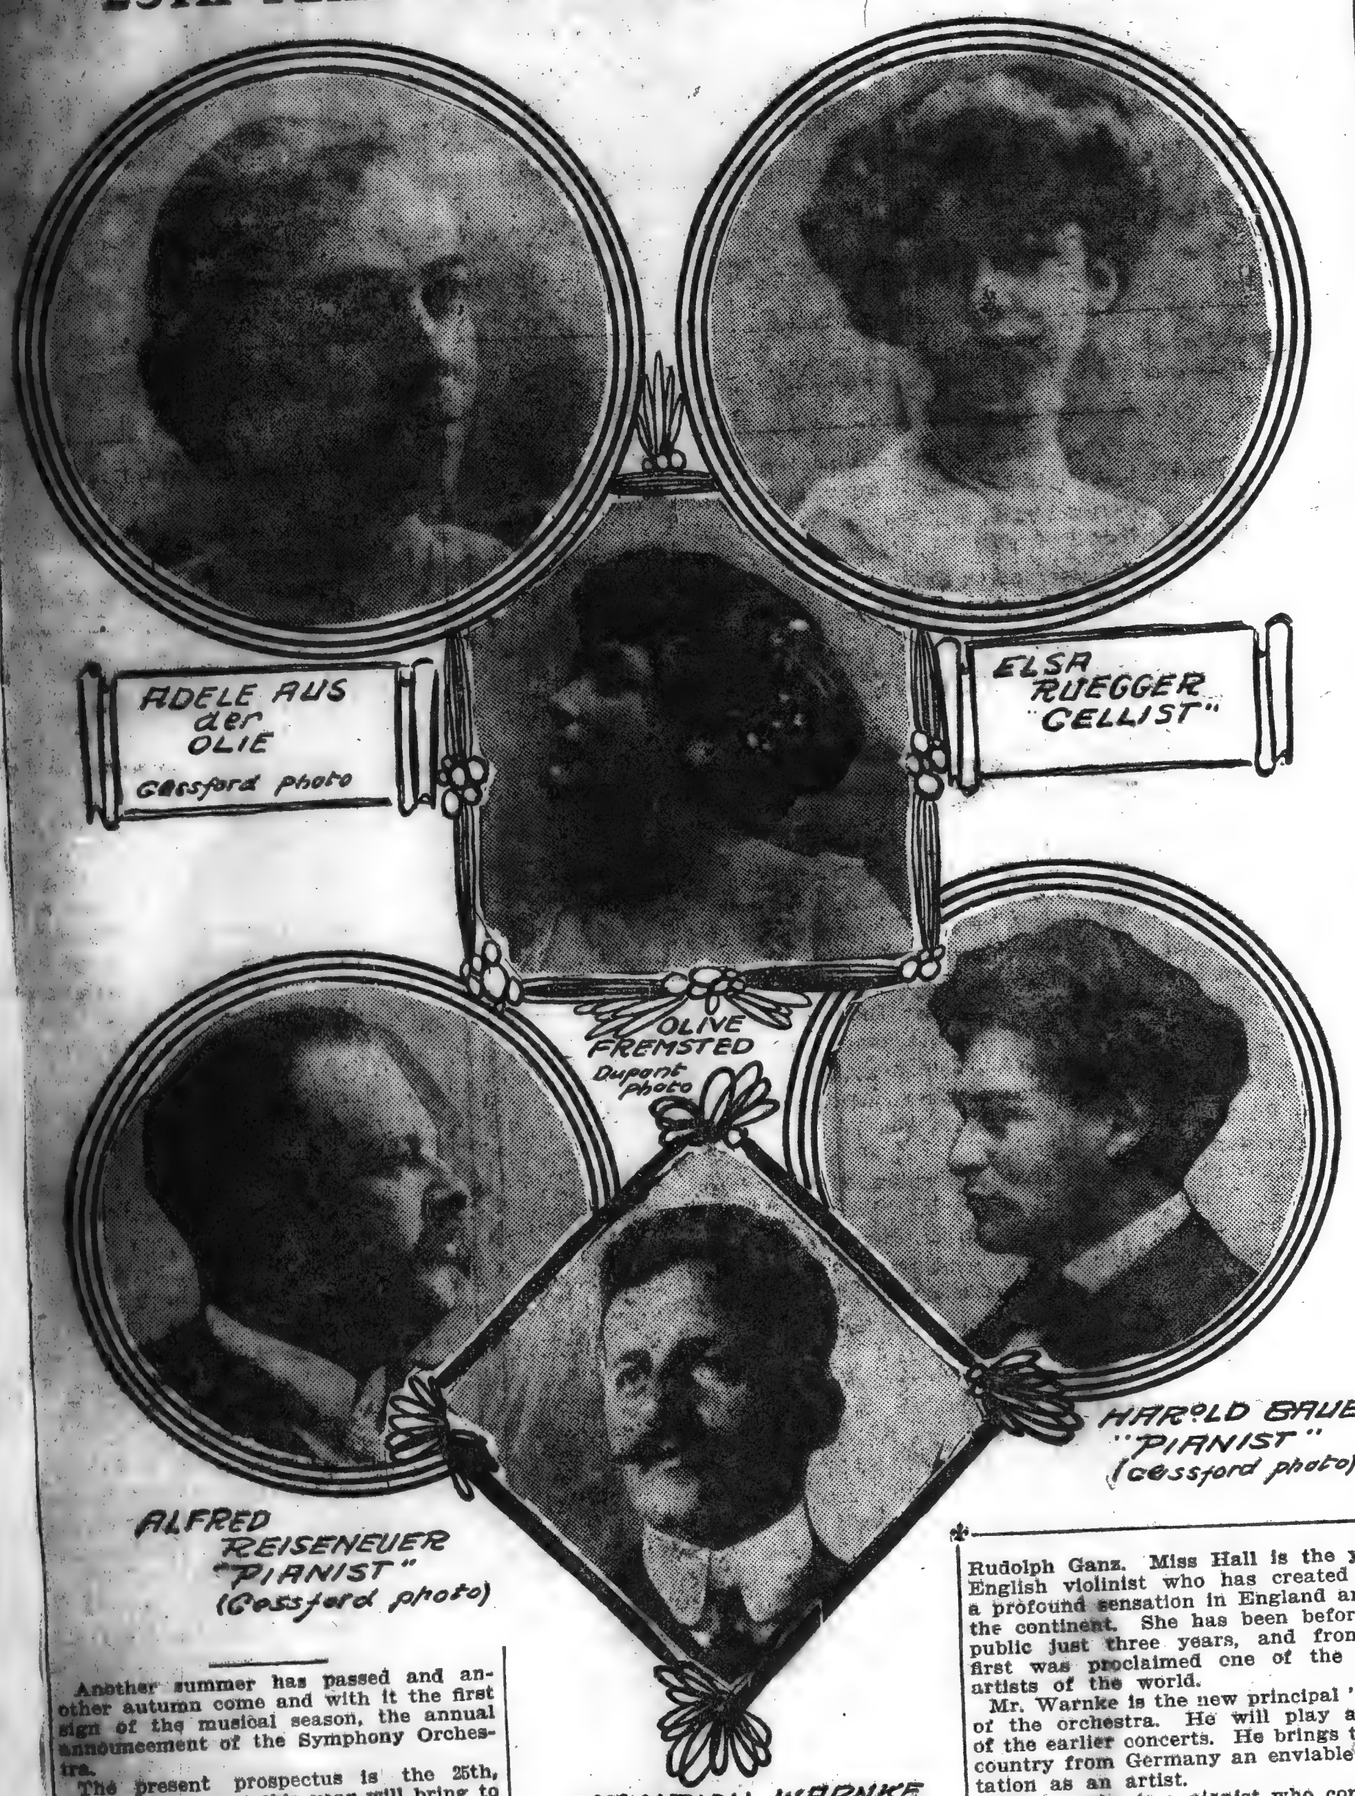
"When the famous conductor Weingartner and Richard Strauss, hearing that I was after a first 'cellist, both told me to hear Warnke, I went, listened to him, and decided on the spot that he must come to Boston."

Max Hess, first horn of the Cologne orchestra, and M. Sadony, bassoon of the Cologne orchestra, who were also engaged by Prof. Hess after a month's trip through Germany, will be here to start the season.

Prof. Hess is convinced that with Mr. Warnke as first 'cellist, Mr. Hess as first horn and Mr. Sadony as bassoon the Symphony orchestra has been greatly strengthened. Mr. Warnke will also make one of the famous Boston Symphony quartet.

The season promises to be a very heavy one, and Prof. Hess says that he is much pleased to secure such talented players.

BRILLIANT SYMPHONY SEASON IS PROMISED FOR 25TH YEAR OF FAMOUS BOSTON ORGANIZATION



Another summer has passed and another autumn come and with it the first sign of the musical season, the annual announcement of the Symphony Orchestra.

The present prospectus is the 25th, which means that this year will bring to a close the first quarter century of the orchestra's existence.

Next month the orchestra is to make a short tour of a week, visiting Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, cities which once used to have it every year, but have not heard it now in over a dozen.

Very different conditions will confront now. Then its concerts were almost the only chances the people of those cities had to hear orchestral music of high class. Now, thanks to the work it did then, nearly all of them have small orchestras of their own.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward one day) from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

The sale of tickets, always by auction, will take place in Symphony Hall next week, beginning on Monday, when the 24 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals will be sold. The $7.50 seats on Tuesday and on Thursday and Friday the tickets for the Saturday evening concerts.

Out of town concerts comprise the usual series of six in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 18; 10 concerts in New York, five in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, respectively; three each in Providence and Hartford, two in Worcester, and one each in Buffalo (in addition to the concert next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. There will probably be a few others.

The concerts in Washington will be the first given there in seven years.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be announced a little later.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz. Miss Hall is the young English violinist who has created such a profound sensation in England and on the continent. She has been before the public just three years, and from the first was proclaimed one of the great artists of the world.

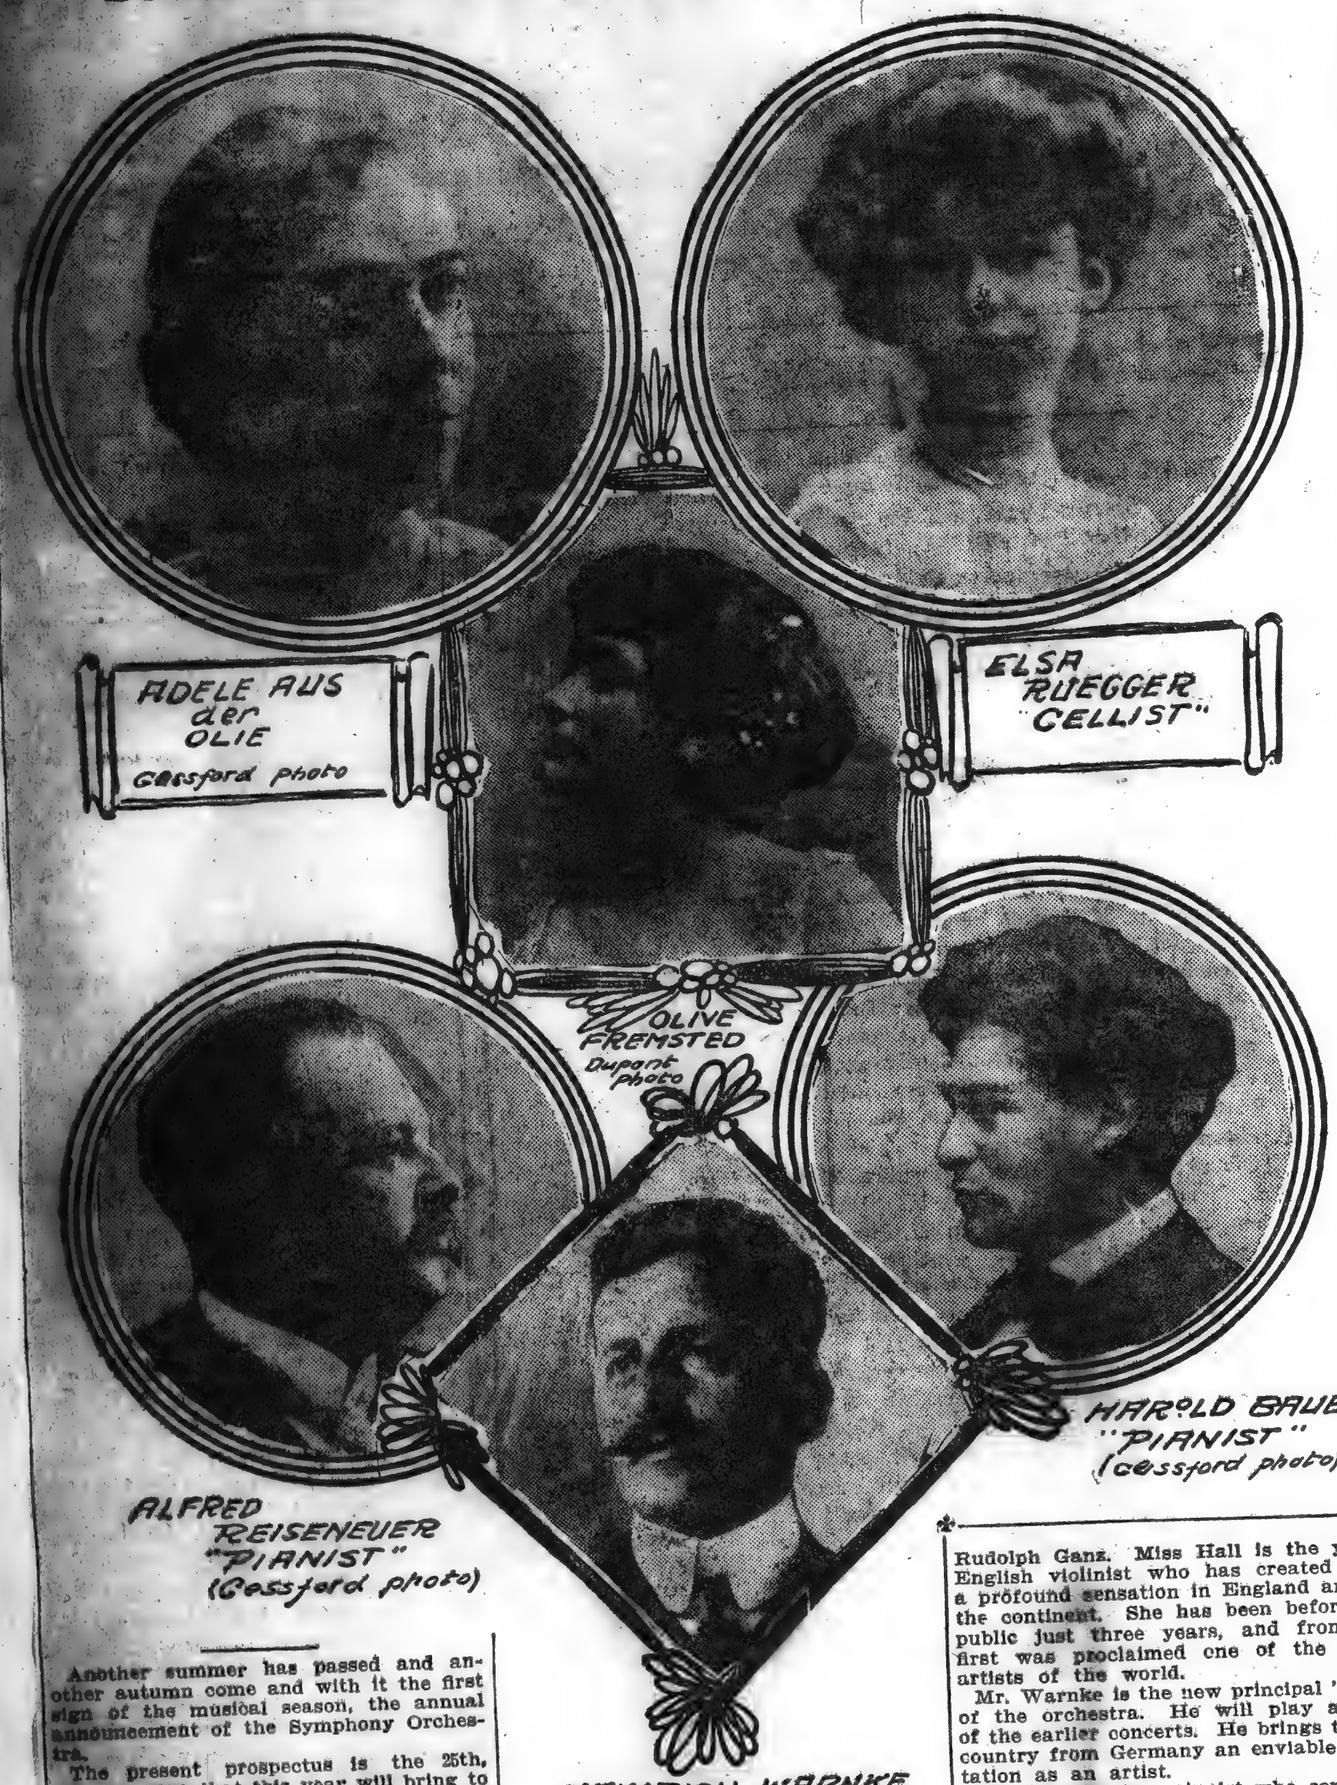
Mr. Warnke is the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play at one of the earlier concerts. He brings to this country from Germany an enviable reputation as an artist.

Mr. Lutschg is a pianist who comes to America for the first time, and Mr. Ganz, also a pianist, although he has been in this country for several years, has never played with the orchestra.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome Henri Marteau, who will be in America for the first time in several years, and Ben Davies, the tenor, and Mme. Emma Eames Story, neither of whom has sung with the orchestra in several years. Other singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer, Alfred Reisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernest Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, is also on the list, and from the orchestra will be drawn Professor Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

The event of the season, however, will be the coming of the distinguished French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who has been invited to conduct the concerts here of Dec. 1 and 2, as well as concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The invitation is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the acknowledged leader.

BRILLIANT SYMPHONY SEASON IS PROMISED FOR 25TH YEAR OF FAMOUS BOSTON ORGANIZATION



Another summer has passed and another autumn come and with it the first sign of the musical season, the annual announcement of the Symphony Orchestra.

The present prospectus is the 25th, which means that this year will bring to a close the first quarter century of the orchestra's existence.

Next month the orchestra is to make a short tour of a week, visiting Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, cities which once used to have it every year, but have not heard it now in over a dozen.

Very different conditions will confront now. Then its concerts were almost the only chances the people of those cities had to hear orchestral music of high class. Now, thanks to the work it did then, nearly all of them have small orchestras of their own.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward one day) from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

The sale of tickets, always by auction, will take place in Symphony Hall next week, beginning on Monday, when the 24 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals will be sold. The $7.50 seats on Tuesday and on Thursday and Friday the tickets for the Saturday evening concerts.

Out of town concerts comprise the usual series of six in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 18; 10 concerts in New York, five in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, respectively; three each in Providence and Hartford, two in Worcester, and one each in Buffalo (in addition to the concert next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. There will probably be a few others.

The concerts in Washington will be the first given there in seven years.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be announced a little later.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz. Miss Hall is the young English violinist who has created such a profound sensation in England and on the continent. She has been before the public just three years, and from the first was proclaimed one of the great artists of the world.

Mr. Warnke is the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play at one of the earlier concerts. He brings to this country from Germany an enviable reputation as an artist.

Mr. Lutschg is a pianist who comes to America for the first time, and Mr. Ganz, also a pianist, although he has been in this country for several years, has never played with the orchestra.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome Henri Marteau, who will be in America for the first time in several years, and Ben Davies, the tenor, and Mme. Emma Eames Story, neither of whom has sung with the orchestra in several years. Other singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer, Alfred Reisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernest Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, is also on the list, and from the orchestra will be drawn Professor Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

The event of the season, however, will be the coming of the distinguished French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who has been invited to conduct the concerts here of Dec. 1 and 2, as well as concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The invitation is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the acknowledged leader.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO OPEN 25TH SEASON WITH MANY NEW ARTISTS

SOME OF THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S SOLOISTS.

The 25th annual announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra lacks none of the interesting features of those which have preceded it and contains some that are entirely novel; for example, the announcement that a distinguished foreign composer will come to Boston by special invitation and conduct a public rehearsal and concert here and concert in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

This year the orchestra completes its first quarter century, and when a start is made on the next quarter Bostonians may well look back with pride on the splendid record it has made.

Until it had demonstrated not only that a permanent orchestra is a practical thing but by its, what fairly may be called, missionary tours of the Middle West, had brought home to the people of that part of the country the absolute necessity of such an organization in the best civic life, no orchestras existed. It was the example set by Boston in its splendid support of the orchestra that impelled other cities to go and do likewise.

Will Tour Country.

Nor has this work of the orchestra been forgotten. Not only has it built up for itself splendid public in the largest eastern cities, but the West has never ceased demanding concerts from it, and this year, when for the first time since the spring of 1893 it was decided to make a short tour, the management could easily have doubled or trebled the time it had so to spend. But the tour had to be limited to one week, and the cities chosen were Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester. This tour will begin on Monday evening, October 2.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday. April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward a day), from October 13 to April 27, omitting November 10, December 8, January 12, February 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday nights from October 14 to April 28, omitting November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17.

The auction sale of seats for these will, as has been announced, take place as follows: The $12 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold on Monday, October 2, at 10 A. M., and the $7.50 seats on Tuesday at the same hour; the $12 seats for the concerts will be sold on Thursday, October 5, at 10 A. M., and the $7.50 seats on the next day at the same hour.

Out-of-town concerts comprise the usual series of six in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on October 26, November 30, December 28, February 1, March 8, and April 18; ten concerts in New York, five in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington; three in Providence and Hartford, two in Worcester, and one each in Buffalo (in addition to the one in the preliminary tour), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. There will probably be a few others.

The concerts in Washington will be the first given there in seven years.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractice set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be made public a little later.

Strong Soloists.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Miss Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Gans. Miss Hall is the young English violinist who has created such a profound sensation in England and on the continent.

Mr. Warnke is the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play at one of the earlier concerts. He brings to this country from Germany a most enviable reputation as a talented artist.

Mr. Lutschg is a pianist who is coming to America for the first time, and Mr. Ganz, who has been in America for some years, has never played with the orchestra.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome back Henri Marteau, who is returning to America this year for the first time in several seasons, and Ben Davies, the tenor; and Mme. Emma Eames-Story. Other singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer; Alfred Weisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernest Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, will also appear, and from the orchestra in addition to Mr. Warnke, will be drawn Professor Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

M. Vincent d'Indy can hardly be called a soloist, yet his coming will be the principal event of the season. The invitation which has been extended to him to conduct the orchestra on December 1 and 2, also in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the leader.

The first four programmes will be as follows:

FIRST CONCERT.

Friday Afternoon, October 13.
Saturday Evening, October 14.

Goldmark—Overture, "In the Spring."
Aria.
Dvorak—"Die Waldtaube."
(First time.)
Aria.
Beethoven—Symphony No. 2 in D major.

SECOND CONCERT.

Friday Afternoon, October 20.
Saturday Evening, October 21.

Smetana—Overture, "L'bussa."
(First time.)
Liszt—Concerto for Pianoforte.
Richard Strauss—"Death and Transfiguration."
Tschaikowski—Symphony No. 4 in A-flat major.
Soloist: Mr. Lutschg.

THIRD CONCERT.

Friday Afternoon, October 27.
Saturday Evening, October 28.

Brahms—Academic Overture.
Concerto for Violoncello.
Elgar—(a) Chanson de Nuit.
(b) Chanson de Matin.
(First time.)
Liszt—A Faust Symphony.
Soloist: Mr. Heinrich Warnke.

FOURTH CONCERT.

Friday Afternoon, November 3.
Saturday Evening, November 4.

WAGNER PROGRAMME.

"Tannhaeuser," Bacchanale, and Scene between Tannhaeuser and Venus from the First Act. (Paris Version.)
"Die Meistersinger," Walther's Prize Song.
"Die Goetterdaemmerung," Siegfried's Parting from Bruennhilde.
Siegfried's Death.
Funeral March.
Closing Scene.
Soloists: Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

NEWS
BALTIMORE, MD.
SEP 16 1905

Three New Faces Among The Musicians Next Season.

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for during the past summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is a man about 40 years old, and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory. Mr. Max Hess, the first horn, is 27 years old, and most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra of Munich.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

STAR

n

ress

e

MUSICAL MENTION

While "The Valkyrie" is to take the place of "Parsifal" in the repertory of the English Grand Opera Company this year, Henry W. Savage does not intend that Wagner shall monopolize his efforts. An elaborate production in English of Verdi's brilliant "Rigoletto" is to be a feature equally prominent. Emanuel, who has been of great assistance to Mr. Savage in making his first production in English of "Tosca," "Othello," "La Boheme" and other important works, will be musical director for "Rigoletto."

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for during the past summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged, a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim orchestra. Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is a most celebrated player in Germany.

The engagement of Mr. Max Hess, the horn player, who, by the way, is not a relative of Prof. Wiley Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. Heretofore Mr. Hackebarth has had to bear the burden of all the work, and if anything happened to him there would have been no one able adequately to fill his place.

Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist of the Boston symphony quartet this season, will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke. During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof. Hess secured some new music that promises to be interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, op 15, by Alexander Glazoumov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, op 5, by L. Siningaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the eminent Hungarian composer.

ess

SEP 21 1905

The busiest conductor in America during the summer was Mr. Walter Damrosch. Mr. Gericke, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been resting and preparing programmes for the coming season at Seal Harbor; Mr. Van der Stucken, of the Cincinnati Orchestra, has been with his family in Hanover, Germany; Mr. Fritz Scheel, of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has summered at Castine, Me.; Emil Paur, of the Pittsburg Orchestra, has been in Europe since the beginning of June. Meanwhile the orchestras have been disbanded. Only the New-York Symphony Orchestra remained intact. After the close of the regular concert season it gave nightly concerts for three weeks in New-York, six weeks in Chicago, three weeks in Philadelphia and two weeks in Pittsburg. In all Mr. Damrosch has conducted about one hundred and seventy-five concerts while his colleagues were recuperating from their labors of last season. He is now seeking rest in the woods of the Adirondacks and Canada.

SUN, BOS., TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1905

GREAT SYMPHONY SEASON IS PROMISED FOR 25TH YEAR OF FAMOUS BOSTON ORGANIZATION

...mother summer has passed and another come and with it the first ... the musical season, the annual ... ment of the Symphony Orches-

... present prospectus is the 25th, ... that this year will bring to ... the first quarter century of the ... existence.

... the orchestra is to make ... of a week, visiting Montreal, ... Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and ... cities which once used to have ... year, but have not heard it now ... dozen.

... different conditions will confront ... its concerts were almost the ... the people of those cities ... orchestral music of high ..., thanks to the work it did ... all of them have small ... of their own.

... laid out for the orchestra ... is more comprehensive than ... far 104 concerts have been ... including those of the pre... tour. For Boston there are the ... public rehearsals and 24 con... The public rehearsals will be given ... Friday afternoons (ex... Friday, April 18, which re... moved forward one day) from ... April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. ... Feb. 16 and March 16. The ... be given on consecutive ... from Oct. 11 to April ... Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. ... tickets, always by auction, ... in Symphony Hall next ... on Monday, when the ... Friday afternoon re... will be sold. The $7.50 seats on Tuesday and on Thursday and Friday the tickets for the Saturday evening concerts.

Out of town concerts comprise the usual series of six in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 18; 10 concerts in New York, five in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, respectively; three each in Providence and Hartford, two in Worcester, and one each in Buffalo (in addition to the concert next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. There will probably be a few others.

The concerts in Washington will be the first given there in seven years.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be announced a little later.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz. Miss Hall is the young English violinist who has created such a profound sensation in England and on the continent. She has been before the public just three years, and from the first was proclaimed one of the great artists of the world.

Mr. Warnke is the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play at one of the earlier concerts. He brings to this country from Germany an enviable reputation as an artist.

Mr. Lutschg is a pianist who comes to America for the first time, and Mr. Ganz, also a pianist, although he has been in this country for several years, has never played with the orchestra.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome Henri Marteau, who will be in America for the first time in several years, and Ben Davies, the tenor, and Mme. Emma Eames Story, neither of whom has sung with the orchestra in several years. Other singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer, Alfred Reisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernest Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, is also on the list, and from the orchestra will be drawn Professor Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

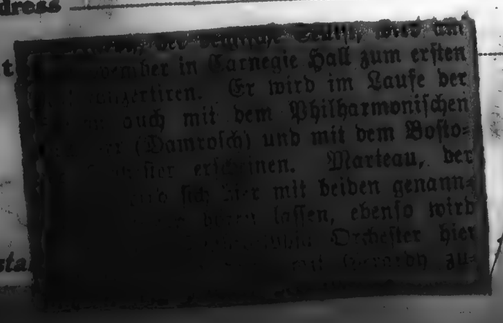
The event of the season, however, will be the coming of the distinguished French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who has been invited to conduct the concerts here of Dec. 1 and 2, as well as concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The invitation is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the acknowledged leader.

From N. Y. EVG. STAATSZEITUNG.

Address

Dat

Esta



From NEW YORK PRESS

Address

Date SEP 23 1905

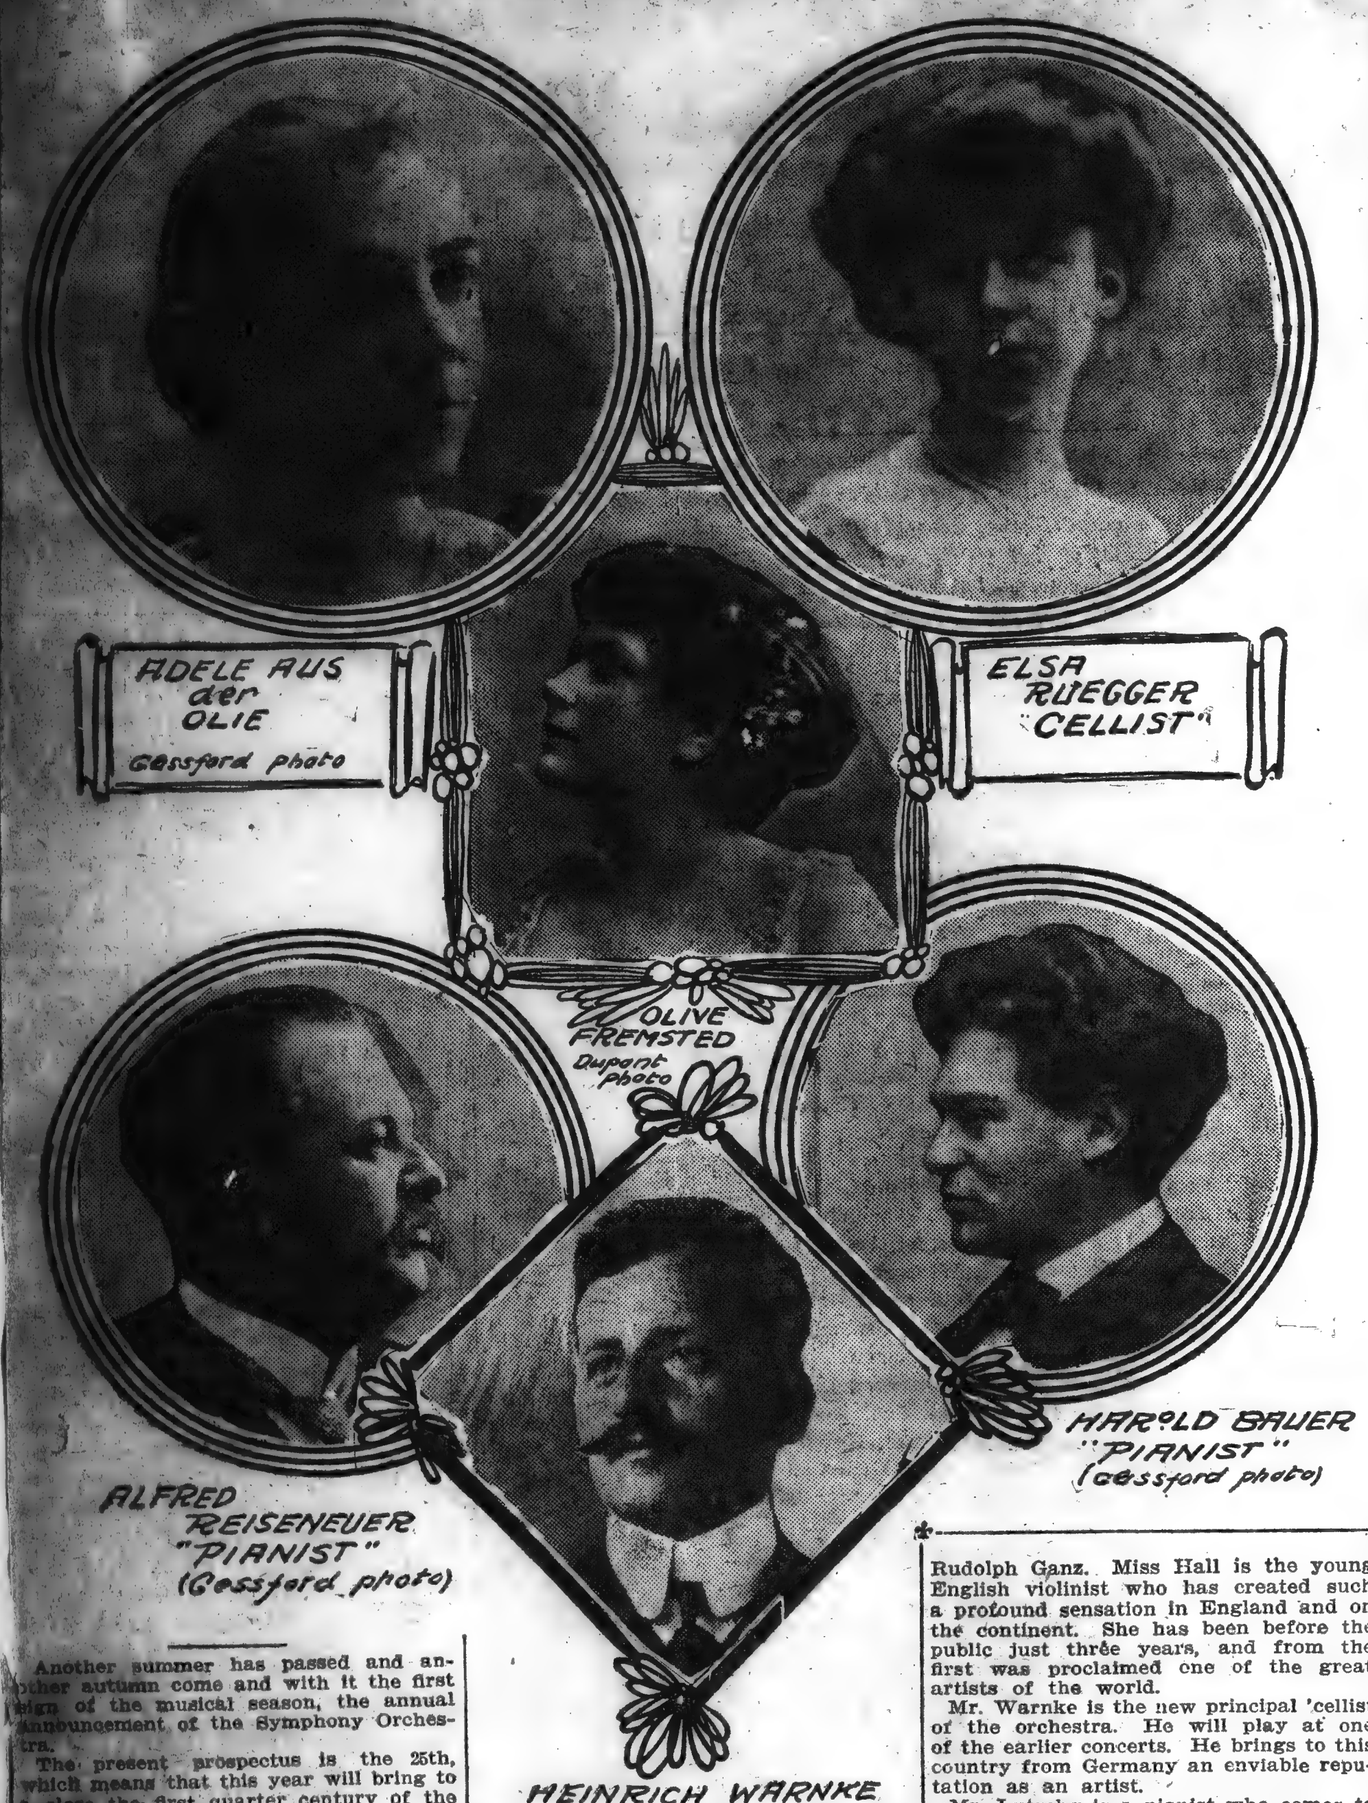
William Gericke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming season. The work will have its first performance in this country at the Boston concerts in December. It has been performed successfully in Warsaw and London.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

[15]

BOSTON POST, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1905

BRILLIANT SYMPHONY SEASON IS PROMISED FOR 25TH YEAR OF FAMOUS BOSTON ORGANIZATION



Another summer has passed and another autumn come and with it the first sign of the musical season, the annual announcement of the Symphony Orchestra.

The present prospectus is the 25th, which means that this year will bring to a close the first quarter century of the orchestra's existence.

Next month the orchestra is to make a short tour of a week, visiting Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, cities which once used to have it every year, but have not heard it now in over a dozen.

Very different conditions will confront now. Then its concerts were almost the only chances the people of those cities had to hear orchestral music of high class. Now, thanks to the work it did then, nearly all of them have small orchestras of their own.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward one day) from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

The sale of tickets, always by auction, will take place in Symphony Hall next week, beginning on Monday, when the $12 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals will be sold. The $7.50 seats on Tuesday and on Thursday and Friday the tickets for the Saturday evening concerts.

Out of town concerts comprise the usual series of six in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 18; 10 concerts in New York, five in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, respectively; three each in Providence and Hartford, two in Worcester, and one each in Buffalo (in addition to the concert next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. There will probably be a few others.

The concerts in Washington will be the first given there in seven years.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be announced a little later.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz. Miss Hall is the young English violinist who has created such a profound sensation in England and on the continent. She has been before the public just three years, and from the first was proclaimed one of the great artists of the world.

Mr. Warnke is the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play at one of the earlier concerts. He brings to this country from Germany an enviable reputation as an artist.

Mr. Lutschg is a pianist who comes to America for the first time, and Mr. Ganz, also a pianist, although he has been in this country for several years, has never played with the orchestra.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome Henri Marteau, who will be in America for the first time in several years, and Ben Davies, the tenor, and Mme. Emma Eames Story, neither of whom has sung with the orchestra in several years. Other singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme: David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer, Alfred Reisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernest Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, is also on the list, and from the orchestra will be drawn Professor Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

The event of the season, however, will be the coming of the distinguished French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who has been invited to conduct the concerts here of Dec. 1 and 2, as well as concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The invitation is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the acknowledged leader.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
ss

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHANGES.

Three New Faces Among The Musicians Next Season.

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for during the past summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is a man about 40 years old, and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory. Mr. Max Hess, the first horn, is 27 years old, and most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra of Munich.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR
n ress
e

MUSICAL MENTION

While "The Valkyrie" is to take the place of "Parsifal" in the repertory of the English Grand Opera Company this year, Henry W. Savage does not intend that Wagner shall monopolize his efforts. An elaborate production in English of Verdi's brilliant "Rigoletto" is to be a feature equally prominent. Emanuel, who has been of great assistance to Mr. Savage in making his first production in English of "Tosca," "Othello," "La Boheme" and other important works, will be musical director for "Rigoletto."

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for during the past summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged, a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim orchestra. Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is a most celebrated player in Germany.

The engagement of Mr. Max Hess, the horn player, who, by the way, is not a relative of Prof. Wiley Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. Heretofore Mr. Hackebarth has had to bear the burden of all the work, and if anything happened to him there would have been no one able adequately to fill his place.

Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist of the Boston symphony quartet this season, will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke. During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof. Hess secured some new music that promises to be interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, op 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, op 5, by L. Siningaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the eminent Hungarian composer.

Newspaper
ess

The busiest conductor in America during the summer was Mr. Walter Damrosch. Mr. Gericke, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been resting and preparing programmes for the coming season at Seal Harbor; Mr. Van der Stücken, of the Cincinnati Orchestra, has been with his family in Hanover, Germany; Mr. Fritz Scheel, of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has summered at Castine, Me.; Emil Paur, of the Pittsburg Orchestra, has been in Europe since the beginning of June. Meanwhile the orchestras have been disbanded. Only the New-York Symphony Orchestra remained intact. After the close of the regular concert season it gave nightly concerts for three weeks in New-York, six weeks in Chicago, three weeks in Philadelphia and two weeks in Pittsburg. In all Mr. Damrosch has conducted about one hundred and seventy-five concerts while his colleagues were recuperating from their labors of last season. He is now seeking rest in the woods of the Adirondacks and Canada.

From N. Y. EVG. STAATSZEITUNG
Address
Date
Gerardy, der belgische Cellist, wird am 26. November in Carnegie Hall zum ersten Mal konzertiren. Er wird im Laufe der Saison auch mit dem Philharmonischen Orchester (Damrosch) und mit dem Bostoner Orchester erscheinen. Marteau, der Geiger, wird sich hier mit beiden genannten Orchestern hören lassen, ebenso wird er mit dem Philadelphia Orchester hier konzertiren und dann mit Gerardy zu-
Esta
From
Address
Date
PRESS
William Gericke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming season. The work will have its first performance in this country at the Boston concerts in December. It has been performed successfully in Warsaw and London.
Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884
[15]

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY 25 YEARS IN ACTIVE SERVICE

MME. EMMA EAMES.
Who will be one of the symphony soloists this season.

This year the Boston Symphony orchestra completes its first quarter century and when a start is made on the next quarter, Bostonians may well look back with pride on the splendid record it has made. The orchestra has been for so many years an established institution of Boston, that its patrons are not always mindful of the extraordinary work it has done and is doing each year. When one looks back 25 years ago and remembers the Cimmerian darkness in which practically all the country dwelt in respect to orchestral music and compares then and now, when besides the large orchestras of Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Chicago, dozens of smaller organizations are found throughout the country, he may well feel a thrill of pride that this vast and potent change is due directly to the accomplishments of Boston's great orchestra.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward a day), from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday nights from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be made public a little later. This year, as in the past, there will be a plentiful supply of the "substantials," with a sufficient flavoring of the newer music to give the desired contrast and maintain the interest of the patrons at the highest point.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome back Henri Marteau, who is returning to America this year for the first time in several seasons, and Ben Davies, the tenor; and Mme. Emma Eames-Story. Other singers will be Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer; Alfred Weisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernst Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, will also appear, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, will be drawn Prof. Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

Vincent d'Indy can hardly be called a soloist, yet his coming will be the principal event of the season. The invitation which has been extended to him to conduct the orchestra on Dec. 1 and 2, also in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the leader.

Music.

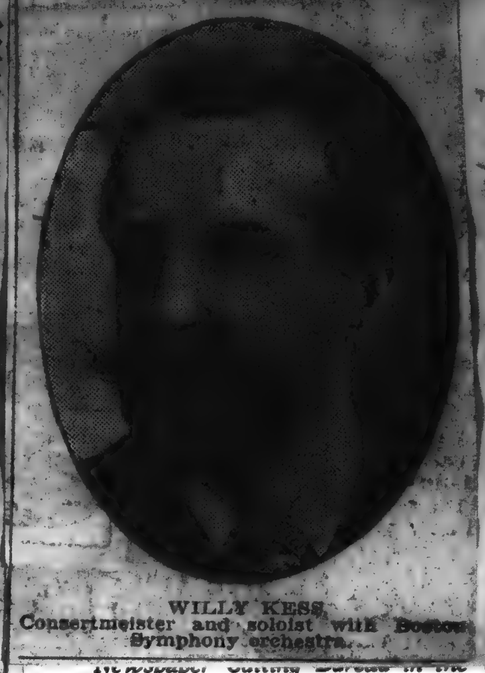
BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The musical event of the week and one of the most interesting of the season will be the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Grays' armory, Friday evening. For years the Boston Symphony has been the greatest of American orchestras and one of the greatest formed anywhere. It's long absence from the city has served to whet public interest very greatly and the indications point to an audience worthy of the event. Since it was here in 1893 Cleveland has heard much that was good in symphony programs and is prepared to appreciate the program prepared. There will be the added interest caused by timely alterations at the armory, the changes being planned for the purpose of making the armory more suitable for musical events, changes that should appeal strongly to the public.

Mr. Gericke has decided opinions about programs and their making. The regular programs of the orchestra in the east are limited to an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Cleveland, because the program he has arranged for this city will play about two hours. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn as found in his overture "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage" to the serene beauty of the mighty master, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form" admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach student, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes the brilliant work for the violin, "Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1," and this is followed by the delicious forest episode in the second act of Richard Wagner's "Siegfried," which is so appropriately called "Waldweben." Finally the program has "Beethoven's C Minr Symphony No. 5," which despite the preference shown by many for the choral symphony, still remains the greatest work of its kind that has yet been written.

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Will Hess, whose appearance on Friday night will be his first in Cleveland. Cleveland knows of the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the east last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston, New York and the other cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that had ever appeared there. His choice of the Bruch concerto should prove a most wise one, for, of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is considered the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. The last concert he conducted in Cleveland was in the spring of 1899, just before he returned to Vienna. He is the same strong, virile interpreter he was in those days, solid, substantial, authoritative. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. The concert opens at 8:15.



WILLY KESS
Concertmeister and soloist with Boston Symphony orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
MUSICAL COURIER.
From
Address
Date

As usual, the orchestral and oratorio concerts are to be given in the Baptist Temple. The dates of the five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are November 10, December 8, January 12, February 16 and March 16. The soloists are to be Reisenauer, Bauer, Pugno and a violinist and soprano to be announced later. The symphony concerts are to be preceded by lectures, and the lecturers engaged are five musical critics of New York, Brooklyn and Boston, three of them being Henry T. Finck, of the New York Evening Post; Charles M. Skinner, of the Brooklyn Eagle, and Louis C. Elson, of the Boston Advertiser.

HAROLD
om
dress
te

Aus Kunstkreisen.

Interessante Konzerttournee.

Der junge Pianist Rudolph Ganz, dessen Carriere vor einigen Jahren in Chicago unter der Leitung Theodor Thomas' einen so vielversprechenden Anfang genommen, wird am 1. Oktober hierher zurückkehren, um seine Konzerttournée aufzunehmen. Alle angesehenen Orchester des Landes haben ihn engagirt. Er eröffnet seine West-Saison am 3. und 4. November mit dem Thomas-Orchester. Am 23. und 24. März spielt er in Boston mit dem dortigen Symphonie-Orchester und schon vorher, am 4. und 6. Februar, sowie am 2. und 3. März wird er in Pittsburg spielen. Ueberdies wird er mit Felix Weingartner und dem New Yorker Symphonie-Orchester in New York, Philadelphia und in anderen Städten auftreten. Die ersten Clubs des Landes haben sich seine Mitwirkung in Soiréen gesichert und endlich wird er sich mit den beiden vornehmsten Organisationen für Kammermusik, dem Kneisel-Quartett und dem Heß-Quartett des Boltoner Symphonie-Orchesters in Boston, New York und anderen Städten im Osten hören lassen.

Neue Opernwerke.

Ueber Uraufführungen neuer Opernwerke liegen uns wieder eine Anzahl Mittheilungen vor. Zwei bedeutende Neuheiten wird zuerst die Prager Oper bringen. Dort gelangt in diesem Jahre noch die neueste Oper Leo Blechs, des Komponisten von „Das war ich", „Aschenbrödel" zur Aufführung. Den Text hierzu schrieb wiederum Dr. Richard Batka. Neben diesem Werk hat die Prager Oper für kommenden Winter sich die Uraufführung der neuen Oper Eugen d'Alberts gesichert, die den „Flauto Solo" führt. In Budapest wird als erste Neuheit die komische Oper „Der Tiger" aufgeführt, ein Werk des in Wien lebenden ungarischen Komponisten Peter Stojanovich, Text von Wiener Konservatoriumsdirektor Max von Perger. Eugen Hubays „Gemma", erste Liebe" wird die zweite Novität, während als Hauptneuheit der Spielzeit wohl die Oper „Vanna" Abrannis gelten kann, frei nach Maeterlinck, der der Komponisten das Textbuch [illegible] das man in Anbetracht [illegible] des echt opernhaften [illegible] Sujets gemacht hat.

+ + +

It is likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is an authority on the aesthetics of music. Already inquiries have been received from colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer, and arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on Dec. 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on Nov. 25.

+ + +

THEATRICAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Victor Herbert announces that his series of Sunday night concerts at the Majestic will be inaugurated October 22.

The latest Victor Herbert opera, "Alice and the Eight Princesses," will open at the Majestic on the following night. The entire company of "Alice and the Eight Princesses" will be present at the first concert, as will also the members of the "It Happened in Nordland" company and the "Miss Dolly Dollars" company, scores of which musical plays were composed by Mr. Herbert.

Emma Eames is due to arrive to-day on La Gascogne. She will remain in this city for a few days to confer with her manager regarding the details of her coming concert tour, and will then go to her old home in Bath, Me., where she will rest preparatory to the beginning of her concert tour on October 4 in Bangor, Me. At the conclusion of her tour, Madame Eames will rejoin the Metropolitan Opera Company for the New York season only.

"The Prince Chap" will be transferred from the Madison Square to Joe Weber's a week from Monday. "The Man on the Box" will succeed it.

It is quite probable that M. Vincent d'Indy, the French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony Concerts in December, will deliver several lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the authorities on the aesthetics of music, and in France is in demand as a lecturer on this subject. It is said of him that he possesses that charm of diction and felicity of expression which are peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing him as a lecturer.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From N. Y. [illegible]
Address
Date SEP 21 190[illegible]

William Gericke, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming musical season. The work will have its first production in this country at the Boston concerts on December 29 and 30. After the finish of the tour of Mme. Emma Eames, with whom Mr. Webber will journey, on December 17, Mr. Webber will go to Boston as the guest of the Boston Orchestra, to be present at the rehearsals and initial performance. The new symphony has been performed both in Warsaw and London, but he has never heard it. Mr. Webber's opera, "Fiorella," was produced at the New Waldorf Theatre, in London, last spring. He has written many songs, the best known of which is "Le Premiere," one of the numbers which Mme. Eames has included in her repertory for her coming concert tour.

[16]

BOSTON EVENING RECORD, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1903

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY 25 YEARS IN ACTIVE SERVICE

MME. EMMA EAMES.
Who will be one of the symphony soloists this season.

This year the Boston Symphony orchestra completes its first quarter century and when a start is made on the next quarter, Bostonians may well look back with pride on the splendid record it has made. The orchestra has been for so many years an established institution of Boston, that its patrons are not always mindful of the extraordinary work it has done and is doing each year. When one looks back 25 years ago and remembers the Cimmerian darkness in which practically all the country dwelt in respect to orchestral music and compares then and now, when besides the large orchestras of Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Chicago, dozens of smaller organizations are found throughout the country, he may well feel a thrill of pride that this vast and potent change is due directly to the accomplishments of Boston's great orchestra.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward a day), from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday nights from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be made public a little later. This year, as in the past, there will be a plentiful supply of the "substantials," with a sufficient flavoring of the newer music to give the desired contrast and maintain the interest of the patrons at the highest point.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome back Henri Marteau, who is returning to America this year for the first time in several seasons, and Ben Davies, the tenor; and Mme. Emma Eames-Story. Other singers will be Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer; Alfred Weisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernst Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, will also appear, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, will be drawn Prof. Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

Vincent d'Indy can hardly be called a soloist, yet his coming will be the principal event of the season. The invitation which has been extended to him to conduct the orchestra on Dec. 1 and 2, also in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the leader.

+ + +

It is likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is an authority on the aesthetics of music. Already inquiries have been received from colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer, and arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on Dec. 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on Nov. 25.

+ + +

Music.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The musical event of the week and one of the most interesting of the season will be the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Grays' armory, Friday evening. For years the Boston Symphony has been the greatest of American orchestras and one of the greatest formed anywhere. It's long absence from the city has served to whet public interest very greatly and the indications point to an audience worthy of the event. Since it was here in 1893 Cleveland has heard much that was good in symphony programs and is prepared to appreciate the program prepared. There will be the added interest caused by timely alterations at the armory, the changes being planned for the purpose of making the armory more suitable for musical events, changes that should appeal strongly to the public.

Mr. Gericke has decided opinions about programs and their making. The regular programs of the orchestra in the east are limited to an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Cleveland, because the program he has arranged for this city will play about two hours. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn as found in his overture "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage" to the serene beauty of the mighty master, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form" admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach student, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes the brilliant work for the violin, "Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1," and this is followed by the delicious forest episode in the second act of Richard Wagner's "Siegfried," which is so appropriately called "Waldweben." Finally the program has "Beethoven's C Minr Symphony No. 5," which despite the preference shown by many for the choral symphony, still remains the greatest work of its kind that has yet been written.

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Will Hess, whose appearance on Friday night will be his first in Cleveland. Cleveland knows of the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the east last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston, New York and the other cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that had ever appeared there. His choice of the Bruch concerto should prove a most wise one, for, of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is considered the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. The last concert he conducted in Cleveland was in the spring of 1899, just before he returned to Vienna. He is the same strong, virile interpreter he was in those days, solid, substantial, authoritative. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. The concert opens at 8:15.

WILLY KESS,
Consertmeister and soloist with Boston Symphony orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau of the World
MUSICAL COURIER
From
Address
Date

As usual, the orchestral and oratorio concerts are to be given in the Baptist Temple. The dates of the five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are November 10, December 8, January 12, February 16 and March 16. The soloists are to be Reisenauer, Bauer, Pugno and a violinist and soprano to be announced later. The symphony concerts are to be preceded by lectures, and the lecturers engaged are five musical critics of New York, Brooklyn and Boston, three of them being Henry T. Finck, of the New York Evening Post; Charles M. Skinner, of the Brooklyn Eagle, and Louis C. Elson, of the Boston Advertiser.

om
dress
te.

Aus Kunstkreisen.

Interessante Konzerttournee.

Der junge Pianist Rudolph Ganz, dessen Carriere vor einigen Jahren in Chicago unter der Leitung Theodor Thomas' einen so vielversprechenden Beginn genommen, wird am 1. Oktober hierher zurückkehren, um seine Konzerttournée aufzunehmen. Alle angesehenen Orchester des Landes haben ihn engagirt. Er eröffnet seine West-Saison am 3. und 4. November mit dem Thomas-Orchester. Am 23. und 24. März spielt er in Boston mit dem dortigen Symphonie-Orchester und schon vorher, am 4. und 6. Februar, sowie am 2. und 3. März wird er in Pittsburg spielen. Ueberdies wird er mit Felix Weingartner und dem New Yorker Symphonie-Orchester in New York, Philadelphia und in anderen Städten auftreten. Die ersten Clubs des Landes haben sich seine Mitwirkung bei Soiréen gesichert und endlich wird er sich mit den beiden vornehmsten Organisationen für Kammermusik, dem Kneisel-Quartett und dem Hess-Quartett des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters in Boston, New York und anderen Städten im Osten hören lassen.

Neue Opernwerke.

Ueber Uraufführungen neuer Opernwerke liegen uns wieder eine Anzahl Mittheilungen vor. Zwei bedeutsame Neuheiten wird zuerst die Prager Oper bringen. Dort gelangt in diesem Herbst noch die neueste Oper Leo Blechs, des Komponisten von „Das war ich", „Aschenbrödel" zur Aufführung. Den Text hierzu schrieb wiederum Dr. Richard Batka. Neben diesem Werk hat die Prager Oper für kommenden Winter sich die Uraufführung der neuen Arbeit Eugen d'Alberts gesichert, die den Titel „Flauto Solo" führt. In Budapest wird als erste Neuheit die komische Oper „Der Tiger" aufgeführt, ein Werk des in Wien lebenden ungarischen Komponisten Peter Stojanovich, Text vom Wiener Konservatoriumsdirektor Rich. von Perger. Eugen Hubays „Lavottas erste Liebe" wird die zweite Novität sein, während als Hauptwerk der neuen Spielzeit wohl die Oper „Monna Vanna" Abranhis gelten kann, zu der, frei nach Maeterlinck, der Vater des Komponisten das Textbuch schrieb, auf das man in Anbetracht der Dankbarkeit des echt opernhaften Stoffes auffallend lange gewartet hat.

THEATRICAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Victor Herbert announces that his series of Sunday night concerts at the Majestic will be inaugurated October 22.

The latest Victor Herbert opera, "Alice and the Eight Princesses," will open at the Majestic on the following night. The entire company of "Alice and the Eight Princesses" will be present at the first concert, as will also the members of the "It Happened in Nordland" company and the "Miss Dolly Dollars" company, scores of which musical plays were composed by Mr. Herbert.

Emma Eames is due to arrive to-day on La Gascogne. She will remain in this city for a few days to confer with her manager regarding the details of her coming concert tour, and will then go to her old home in Bath, Me., where she will rest preparatory to the beginning of her concert tour on October 4 in Bangor, Me. At the conclusion of her tour, Madame Eames will rejoin the Metropolitan Opera Company for the New York season only.

"The Prince Chap" will be transferred from the Madison Square to Joe Weber's a week from Monday. "The Man on the Box" will succeed it.

It is quite probable that M. Vincent d'Indy, the French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony Concerts in December, will deliver several lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the authorities on the aesthetics of music, and in France is in demand as a lecturer on this subject. It is said of him that he possesses that charm of diction and felicity of expression which are peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing him as a lecturer.

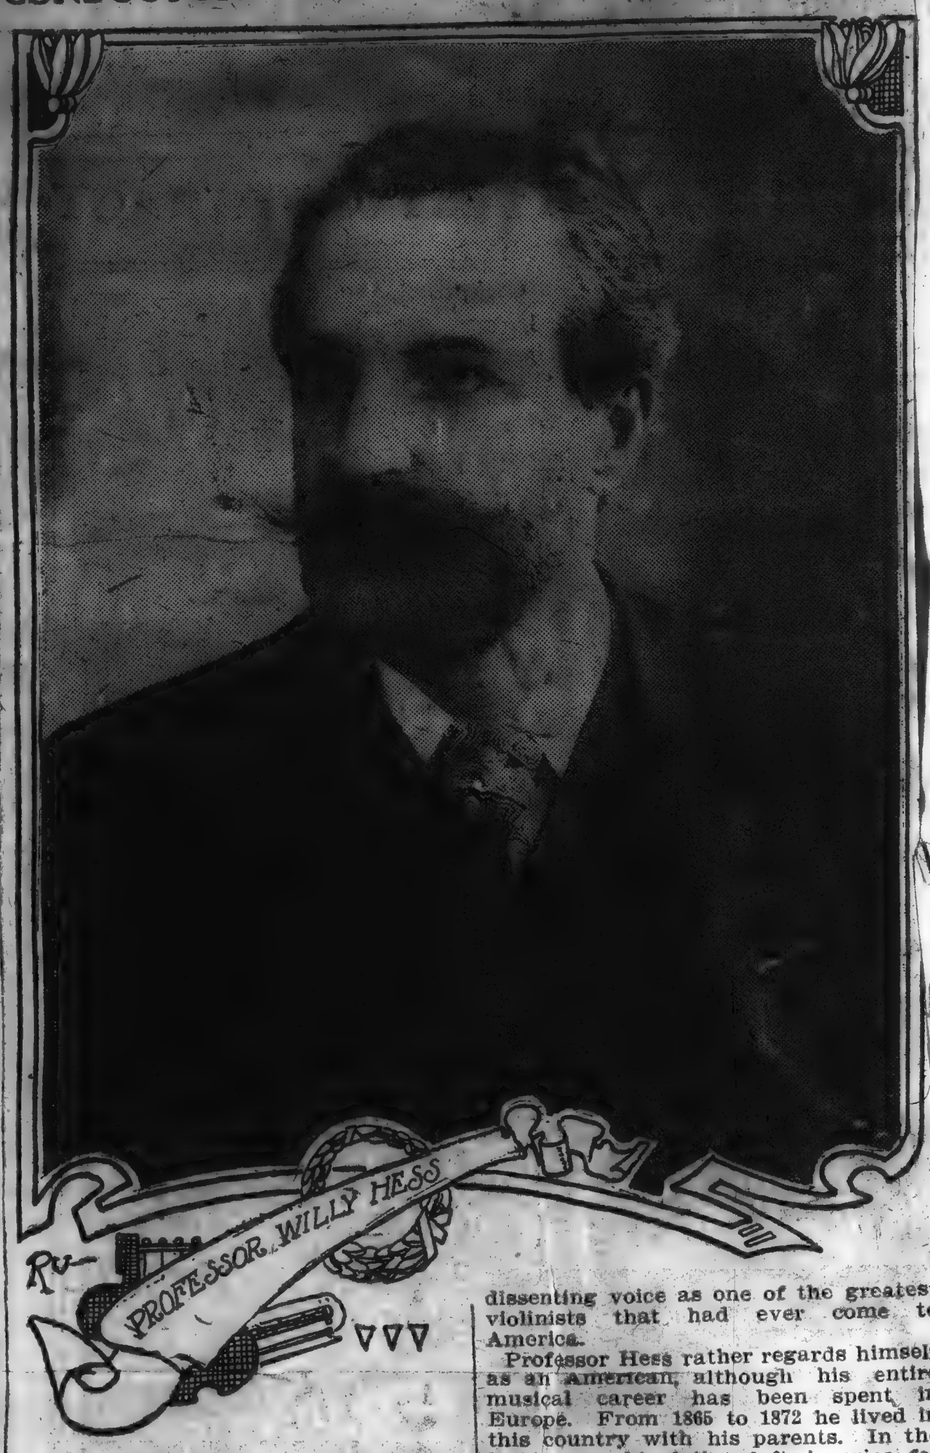
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From
Address
Date

William Gericke, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming musical season. The work will have its first production in this country at the Boston concerts on December 29 and 30. After the finish of the tour of Mme. Emma Eames, with whom Mr. Webber will journey, on December 17, Mr. Webber will go to Boston as the guest of the Boston Orchestra, to be present at the rehearsals and initial performance. The new symphony has been performed both in Warsaw and London, but he has never heard it. Mr. Webber's opera "Fiorella" was produced at the New Waldorf Theatre, in London, last spring. He has written many songs, the best known of which is "La Premiere," one of the numbers which Mme. Eames has included in her repertory for her coming concert tour.

[16]

MUSICAL EVENTS

CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA



...sale of seats for the concert ... the famous Boston Symphony ... orchestra is to give in Grays' Armory ... next Friday evening, October 6, will ... at the store of the Burrows Broth... company Monday morning at 9 ... This concert coming in Octo... is as if the climax of the musical ... came at the beginning. It has ... a matter of regret ever since 1893, ... the last concert by the Boston ... was given here, that it made no ... journeys so far West as Cleve... Cleveland is not to-day so ... stricken in the matter of or... music as it was a dozen years ... and yet the concerts it has had ... only to have served to make ... the desire to hear the orchestra ... comes from Boston town. Un... there will be a crowded ... to welcome the return of these ... musicians, and the fact that the ... Armory has undergone many ... and improvements during the ... summer will not serve to keep ... away.

Mr. Gericke has the reputation of having his own decided opinions about programs and their making. It is well known that the regular programs of the orchestra in the East are limited in time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently he has staretched a point for Cleveland, because the program he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn, as found in his overture, "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, most admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach student, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this is followed by the delicious forest episode in the second act of Richard Wagner's "Siegfried," which is so appropriately called "Waldweben," and finally the Beethoven C Minor Symphony No. 5, which, despite the preference shown by many for the choral symphony, still remains the greatest work of its kind that has yet been written.

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Professor Willy Hess, whose appearance on Friday night will be his first in Cleveland. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression that Mr. Hess made in the East last winter, when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, New York and other great cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that had ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice as soloist in the one season, a most extraordinary event. His choice of the Bruch concerto has been a wise one, for, of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. The last concert he conducted in Cleveland was in the spring of 1899, just before he returned to Vienna. Those who have not heard the orchestra in the East during the last seven seasons, when he has again been its conductor, will find him the same strong, virile interpreter that he was in those days, solid, substantial and authoritative, who plays on his orchestra with the ease that a great pianist plays on his instrument. Moreover, passing years have not left him standing still. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the last few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms—as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann, and the melodious Schubert; he can, with equal authority, reveal the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski and a Richard Strauss. He has always been a great Wagnerian.

The majority of the men in the orchestra were members thirteen years ago, but among the principals there have been some changes, made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is to-day, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation. In the violins, besides Professor Willy Hess, the concertmaster, are such men as Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Listemann and Barleben. The violas have Loeffler and Max Zach. In the cellos Heinrich Warnke, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Eric Loeffler, Nagel and Kuntzsch. And if the strings are famous the world over, the wind choirs are no less so. The first oboe is Georges Gillet, the greatest artist on this instrument that France ever produced. It would be difficult to find the equal of such men as Maquarre, the first clarinet; Grisez, the first bassoon; Hacklebarth [illegible], the first horns, and [illegible] the harpist. Certainly W. [illegible] of the New York Sun, [illegible] when he called it [illegible] orchestra." The con[illegible] Thomas [illegible]

Despite the energetic attempts of a certain school of musicians to ignore the solos in a symphony concert, that factor, with the public at least, still remains most important. Not the least item of interest in the program of the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the first appearance in this city of Professor Willy Hess, the famous violin virtuoso. Professor Hess is now beginning his second year as concert master of the orchestra, having given up most desirable positions and engagements in London and on the continent to do so. His success in America has been little short of sensational. As soloist he appeared last year with the orchestra before the critical audiences of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and other of the larger cities of the East, and everywhere he was proclaimed, without a dissenting voice as one of the greatest violinists that had ever come to America.

Professor Hess rather regards himself as an American, although his entire musical career has been spent in Europe. From 1865 to 1872 he lived in this country with his parents. In the latter year his father left America for Holland, taking his son with him, and his busy life in Europe prevented Professor Hess' return until last year.

He was born in Mannheim, German in 1859, and, like nearly all great violinists, betrayed signs of his talent at a early age. When his family returne to Holland in 1872 the boy, then thirteen, began his public appearances, and on one occasion distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harsen Quartet. A year later his family removed to Heidelberg, and the young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France, and in Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first philharmonic concert there.

[illegible] excellent program was [illegible]

NEW YORK PRESS

[illegible] 1905

Gerardy, the Belgian 'cellist, who will arrive here on November 2, will open his season in Indianapolis on November 6. He will visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Philadelphia. He will be heard in this city on November 26, in Carnegie Hall, and again in that place with the Philharmonic Society, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in a joint recital with Marteau, violinst. Marteau will be heard in this city with the Boston Symphony, Damrosch and Philadelphia orchestras. In addition he will give two recitals by himself.

NEW YORK PRESS

SEP 25 1905

Besides waving the wand over the Boston Symphony players at a series of concerts in next December, Vincent d'Indy may give a few lectures in this country. France looks on him as an authority on the aesthetics of music. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on December 1 and 2 respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

SEP 22 1905

New York City

Marteau's American Engagements.

Marteau, the violinist, will be heard in New York with the Boston Symphony, Damrosch and the Philadelphia orchestras. He will have two recitals by himself and two joint recitals with Gerardy.

From MUSICAL COURIER

Address New York City

SEP 20 1905

Date

Ganz and Clark.

RUDOLPH GANZ returns to Chicago about October 1 to begin his tour under the direction of F. Wight Neumann. Mr. Neumann announces that he has already such a great number of bookings for Mr. Ganz that the season promises to be exceedingly busy. All of the leading orchestras of the country have engaged him. He opens his Western season with the Thomas Orchestra November 3 and 4; on March 23 and 24 he plays in Boston with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In Pittsburg he will play March 2 and 3; February 4 and 6 he appears with Felix Weingartner and the New York Symphony Orchestra in New York. He will also be heard with the New York Symphony Orchestra in other cities. The leading clubs of the country have engaged him for recitals and he will appear with the two foremost chamber music organizations of the country, the Hess Quartet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, New York and other Eastern cities.

Another artist, Charles W. Clark, the beginnings of whose career are intimately associated with Chicago musical life, returns at the end of January for an extended concert tour under the direction of Mr. Neumann. Mr. Clark has made an immense European success, but that was not necessary to create a demand for his services by nearly all of the leading choral societies of the United States and Canada, including the New York Choral Society, with Frank Damrosch as conductor. Mr. Clark will begin his Western season with the Thomas Orchestra February 3 and 4. Engagements with the Apollo Club and Mendelssohn Club follow successively, and he will also appear with the St. Louis Apollo Club and the Choral Association, the Alton Dominant Ninth Choral Society, the Mendelssohn Choir in Toronto, the Milwaukee Arion Club and the Cincinnati and other May festivals.

Both Mr. Ganz and Mr. Clark are personal friends of Mr. Neumann, who is not in the regular business of securing dates for artists, but has generously undertaken the task for his two friends, a task which has been rendered arduous only by the great demand on the part of the public for their services.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

NEW YORK SUN

SEP 24 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHANGES.

Three New Members Added to the Orchestra Since Last Season.

Three new members have been added to the Boston Symphony Orchestra since last season. Rudolph Krasselt, who for two seasons acted as first 'cellist, has given up instrumental playing in order to prepare himself for a career as conductor and Heinrich Warnke of Munich has been engaged to take his place.

For the last eight years, Mr. Warnke has been principal 'cellist of the Kain Orchestra in Munich. Felix Weingartner and Richard Strauss, who have conducted the concerts of this orchestra, both recommended Mr. Warnke highly.

He is a pupil of Klengel and was the first teacher of Mr. Krasselt, his predecessor. He began his career at Baden-Baden and later played at Homburg and Hamburg. He declined places in the Vienna and Berlin philharmonic orchestras in order to go to Boston.

Paul Sardony, who is regarded as the best bassoon player in Germany, goes to the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Cologne, where he played in the philharmonic and was an instructor in the Cologne Conservatory, the most famous instrumental school in Europe.

Max Hess, who is not related to Willy Hess, the concert master, is regarded as one of the best horn players in Germany, and like Mr. Warnke comes from the Kaim orchestra. He is to share with Mr. Hackebarth the work of this instrument in the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Quartet will be unchanged this season but for the presence of Mr. Warnke, who will replace Mr. Krasselt as 'cellist of this organization also. Willy Hess, Otto Roth and Edward Ferir will return to their posts in the quartet.

Prof. Hess received in Europe a number of novelettes which will be played during the present season. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert étude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

Cleveland Leader
2 n Oct

MUSICAL EVENTS

The sale of seats for the concert which the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in Grays' Armory on next Friday evening, October 6, will open at the store of the Burrows Brothers Company Monday morning at 9 o'clock. This concert coming in October is as if the climax of the musical season came at the beginning. It has been a matter of regret ever since 1893, when the last concert by the Boston band was given here, that it made no more journeys so far West as Cleveland. Cleveland is not to-day so poverty-stricken in the matter of orchestral music as it was a dozen years ago, and yet the concerts it has had seem only to have served to make keener the desire to hear the orchestra which comes from Boston town. Undoubtedly there will be a crowded house to welcome the return of these famous musicians, and the fact that the Grays' Armory has undergone many changes and improvements during the past summer will not serve to keep anybody away.

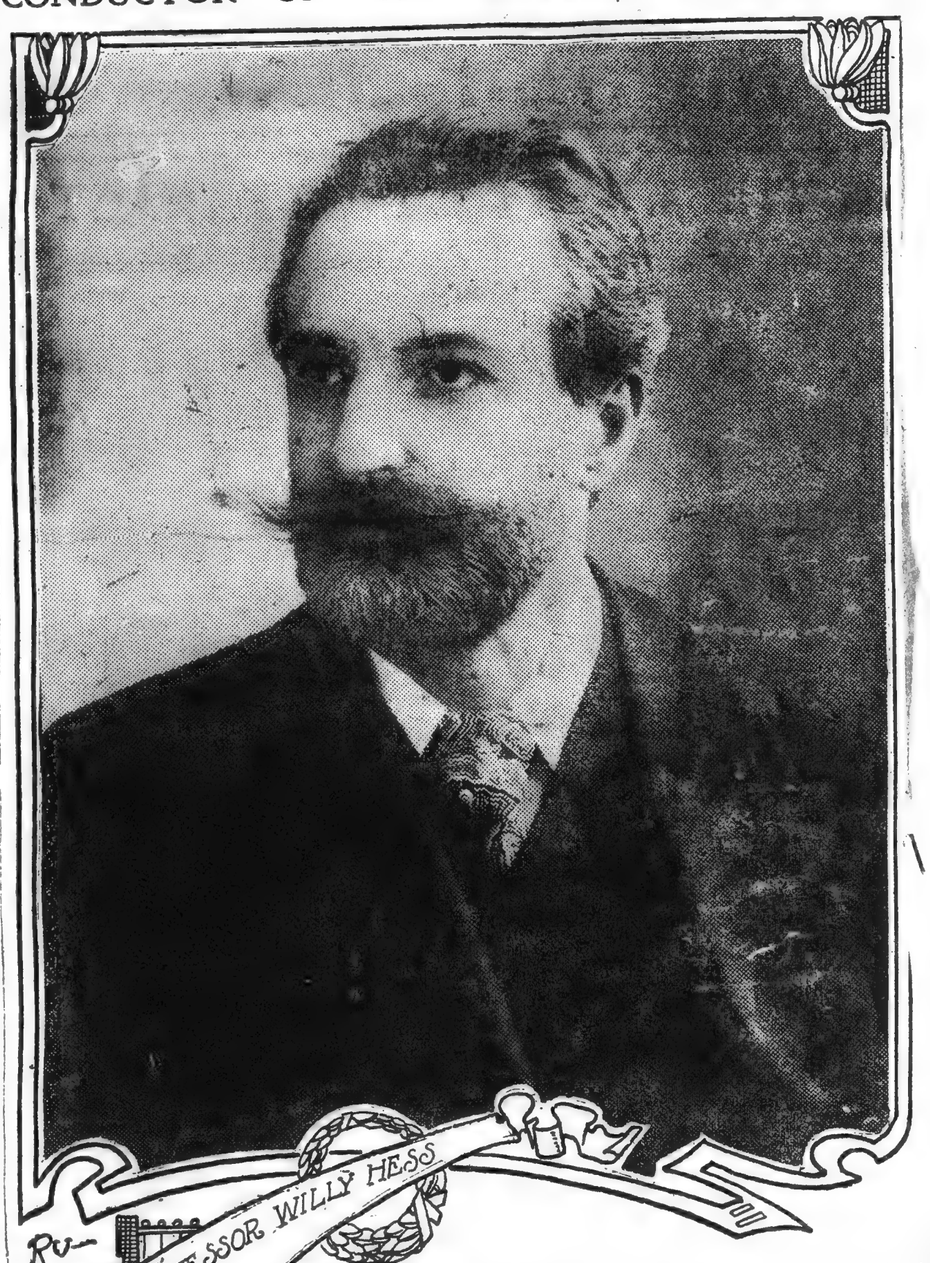
Mr. Gericke has the reputation of having his own decided opinions about programs and their making. It is well known that the regular programs of the orchestra in the East are limited in time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently he has staretched a point for Cleveland, because the program he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn, as found in his overture, "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, most admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach student, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this is followed by the delicious forest episode in the second act of Richard Wagner's "Siegfried," which is so appropriately called "Waldweben," and finally the Beethoven C Minor Symphony No. 5, which, despite the preference shown by many for the choral symphony, still remains the greatest work of its kind that has yet been written.

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Professor Willy Hess, whose appearance on Friday night will be his first in Cleveland. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression that Mr. Hess made in the East last winter, when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, New York and other great cities. He was pronounced atonce one of the greatest artists that had ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice as soloist in the one season, a most extraordinary event. His choice of the Bruch concerto has been a wise one, for, of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. The last concert he conducted in Cleveland was in the spring of 1899, just before he returned to Vienna. Those who have not heard the orchestra in the East during the last seven seasons, when he has again been its conductor, will find him the same strong, virile interpreter that he was in those days, solid, substantial and authoritative, who plays on his orchestra with the ease that a great pianist plays on his instrument. Moreover, passing years have not left him standing still. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the last few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms—as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann, and the melodious Schubert; he can, with equal authority, reveal the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski and a Richard Strauss. He has always been a great Wagnerian.

The majority of the men in the orchestra were members thirteen years ago, but among the principals there have been some changes, made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is to-day, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation. In the violins, besides Professor Willy Hess, the concertmaster, are such men as Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben. The violas have Ferir and Max Zach. In the cellos are Heinrich Warnke, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Eric Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. And if the strings are famous the world over, the wind choirs are equally so. The first oboe is Georges Longy, the greatest artist on this instrument that France ever produced. And it would be difficult to find the equals of such men as Maquarre, the first flute; Grisoz, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hacklebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist. Certainly W. J. Henderson, of the New York Sun, was not far wrong when he called it "An Orchestra of Virtuosi." The concerts begin at 8:15 o'clock pre-

CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA



Despite the energetic attempts of a certain school of musicians to ignore the solos in a symphony concert, that factor, with the public at least, still remains most important. Not the least item of interest in the program of the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the first appearance in this city of Professor Willy Hess, the famous violin virtuoso. Professor Hess is now beginning his second year as concert master of the orchestra, having given up most desirable positions and engagements in London and on the continent to do so. His success in America has been little short of sensational. As soloist he appeared last year with the orchestra before the critical audiences of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and other of the larger cities of the East, and everywhere he was proclaimed without a dissenting voice as one of the greatest violinists that had ever come to America.

Professor Hess rather regards himself as an American, although his entire musical career has been spent in Europe. From 1865 to 1872 he lived in this country with his parents. In the latter year his father left America for Holland, taking his son with him, and his busy life in Europe prevented Professor Hess' return until last year.

He was born in Mannheim, German in 1859, and, like nearly all great violinists, betrayed signs of his talent at a early age. When his family returne to Holland in 1872 the boy, then thirteen, began his public appearances, and on one occasion distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harser Quartet. A year later his family removed to Heidelberg, and the young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France, and in Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first philharmonic concert there.

excellent programme was ...

Gerardy, the Belgian 'cellist, who will arrive here on November 2, will open his season in Indianapolis on November 6. He will visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Philadelphia. He will be heard in this city on November 26, in Carnegie Hall, and again in that place with the Philharmonic Society, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in a joint recital with Marteau, violinst. Marteau will be heard in this city with the Boston Symphony, Damrosch and Philadelphia orchestras. In addition he will give two recitals by himself.

Besides waving the wand over the Boston Symphony players at a series of concerts in next December, Vincent d'Indy may give a few lectures in this country. France looks on him as an authority on the aesthetics of music. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on December 1 and 2 respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington in the following week.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH
SEP 22 1905

Marteau's American Engagements.

Marteau, the violinist, will be heard in New York with the Boston Symphony, Damrosch and the Philadelphia orchestras. He will have two recitals by himself and two joint recitals with Gerardy

From MUSICAL COURIER

Address

Date

Ganz and Clark.

RUDOLPH GANZ returns to Chicago about October 1 to begin his tour under the direction of F. Wight Neumann. Mr. Neumann announces that he has already such a great number of bookings for Mr. Ganz that the season promises to be exceedingly busy. All of the leading orchestras of the country have engaged him. He opens his Western season with the Thomas Orchestra November 3 and 4; on March 23 and 24 he plays in Boston with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In Pittsburg he will play March 2 and 3; February 4 and 6 he appears with Felix Weingartner and the New York Symphony Orchestra in New York. He will also be heard with the New York Symphony Orchestra in other cities. The leading clubs of the country have engaged him for recitals and he will appear with the two foremost chamber music organizations of the country, the Hess Quartet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, New York and other Eastern cities.

Another artist, Charles W. Clark, the beginnings of whose career are intimately associated with Chicago musical life, returns at the end of January for an extended concert tour under the direction of Mr. Neumann. Mr. Clark has made an immense European success, but that was not necessary to create a demand for his services by nearly all of the leading choral societies of the United States and Canada, including the New York Choral Society, with Frank Damrosch as conductor. Mr. Clark will begin his Western season with the Thomas Orchestra February 3 and 4. Engagements with the Apollo Club and Mendelssohn Club follow successively, and he will also appear with the St. Louis Apollo Club and the Choral Association, the Alton Dominant Ninth Choral Society, the Mendelssohn Choir in Toronto, the Milwaukee Arion Club and the Cincinnati and other May festivals.

Both Mr. Ganz and Mr. Clark are personal friends of Mr. Neumann, who is not in the regular business of securing dates for artists, but has generously undertaken the task for his two friends, a task which has been rendered arduous only by the great demand on the part of the public for their services.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK SUN
SEP 24 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHANGES.

Three New Members Added to the Orchestra Since Last Season.

Three new members have been added to the Boston Symphony Orchestra since last season. Rudolph Krasselt, who for two seasons acted as first 'cellist, has given up instrumental playing in order to prepare himself for a career as conductor and Heinrich Warnke of Munich has been engaged to take his place.

For the last eight years, Mr. Warnke has been principal 'cellist of the Kain Orchestra in Munich. Felix Weingartner and Richard Strauss, who have conducted the concerts of this orchestra, both recommended Mr. Warnke highly.

He is a pupil of Klengel and was the first teacher of Mr. Krasselt, his predecessor. He began his career at Baden-Baden and later played at Homburg and Hamburg. He declined places in the Vienna and Berlin philharmonic orchestras in order to go to Boston.

Paul Sardony, who is regarded as the best bassoon player in Germany, goes to the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Cologne, where he played in the philharmonic and was an instructor in the Cologne Conservatory, the most famous instrumental school in Europe.

Max Hess, who is not related to Willy Hess, the concert master, is regarded as one of the best horn players in Germany, and like Mr. Warnke comes from the Kaim orchestra. He is to share with Mr. Hackebarth the work of this instrument in the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Quartet will be unchanged this season but for the presence of Mr. Warnke, who will replace Mr. Krasselt as 'cellist of this organization also. Willy Hess, Otto Roth and Edward Feris will return to their posts in the quartet.

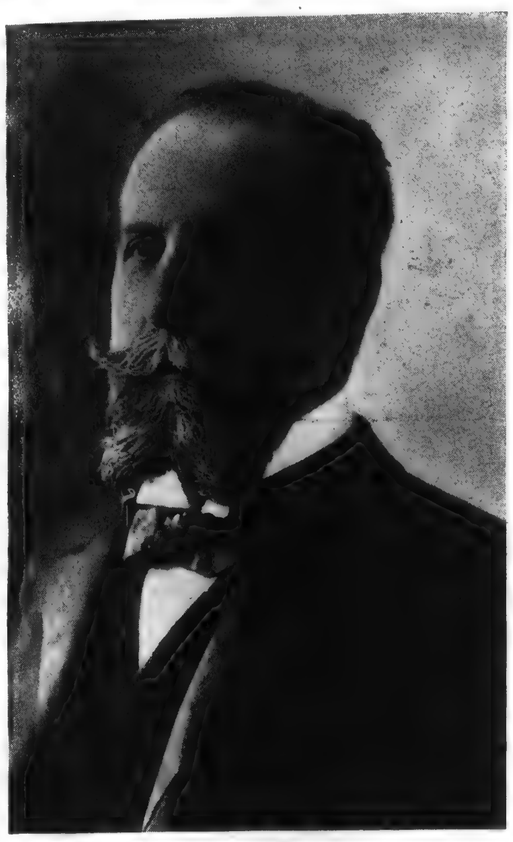
Prof. Hess received in Europe a number of novelettes which will be played during the present season. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert étude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

[17]

Cleveland Town Topics Sept 30 9

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

A warm welcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert in the Grays' Armory on next Friday evening will give an unusually brilliant opening to the local musical season. It is twelve and a half years since Cleveland last had an opportunity of hearing this great orchestra. The last concert was given in the old Music Hall, where also had been given the seven other concerts in as many preceding years. In those days, Cleveland became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, the present conductor, and later with Mr. Nikisch, who succeeded him for a term of four years. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—for this is its twenty-fifth season,—but it has been run on a basis which has been possible in no other case known in the world. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony, and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results that have been obtained. Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben; among its violas, such men as Ferir, and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists, such men as Heinrich, Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, who comes from the Kaim orchestra of Munich; Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eric Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestra work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy, and resonance of its strings, and if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind-choirs, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, brought to this country several years ago the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood-wind instruments exists, and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done with the Boston Orchestra. In Maquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary virtuosity, and the same is true of Grisez, the first clarinet, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist. The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the Continent. Last year he made his first appearances in the East, with really sensational success. His present appearances will be his first in this part of the country. It would be difficult to devise a more attractive program than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Cleveland. Beginning with Mendelssohn's charming overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," by Bach; Bruch's G Minor Concerto for violin, the exquisite "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," and finally what many regard as the greatest of all symphonies, Beethoven's in C Minor No. 5.



MR. GERICKE, CONDUCTOR

The fifth season of symphony orchestra concerts will be more pretentious than any of its predecessors, the result of the steady growth of public interest in and support of this valuable institution. Seven concerts instead of five are to be offered at but a slight increase in the price of season tickets and a more varied series of programs are thus made possible. The Pittsburgh Orchestra, under Emil Paur, and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, under Frank van der Stucken, will appear. Choral features of novel interest are made possible by the valued co-operation of the Rubinstein and Singers' Clubs, each of whom will sing with the Pittsburgh Orchestra on different occasions. The soloists comprise the most famous artists before the public today. Mme. Gadski, the world renowned Wagner interpreter, Muriel Foster, the beautiful English contralto, Ellison Van Hoose, Herbert Witherspoon, Elsa Ruegger, Emil Paur, as pianist, and a number of others to be announced later. The opening concert takes place on Thursday, November 23d, the other dates being December 7th, January 4th and 18th, February 6th and 26th, and March 13th. The symphony concerts are given as usual under the auspices of the Fortnightly Musical Club and the management of Adella Prentiss Hughes. The list of guarantors contains many new names in addition to those who have made these concerts possible during the past four years, a striking proof of the widespread appreciation of the value of this work to the community.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the ... REVUE.
... York City
ess ...
SEP 21 1903

Veränderungen im Personal Boston er Symphonie-Orchesters sind so seltene Vorkommnisse, daß sie spezielle Aufmerksamkeit verdienen müssen. Es wird nämlich berichtet, daß drei wichtige Stellen neu besetzt werden. Ein neuer erster Cellist, ein neuer erster Bassist und ein neuer erster Hornist sind engagirt worden.

Herr Rudolf Krasselt, welcher 22 Jahre lang der erste Cellist des Orchesters war, hat am Schlusse der letzten Saison resignirt, um ehrgeizigen Pläne, welche auf einen Dirigentenposten abzielen, zu verwirklichen. Auf die Empfehlung von Richard Strauß und Felix Weingartner hin, ist sein Platz ausgefüllt worden durch Herrn Heinrich Warnke aus München, welcher seit acht Jahren der erste Cellist des Kaim-Orchesters war. Man betrachtet ihn als einen der besten Cellisten Deutschlands. Der neue erste Bassist ist Herr P. Sadony, welcher das Kölnische Orchester und eine Professur am Kölner Conservatorium aufgiebt, um hierher zu kommen.

Das Engagement von Herrn Max Heß aus München als ersten Hornisten giebt dem Boston-Orchester zwei „erste" Spieler dieses Instruments. Herr Gericke hat dies so eingerichtet, um dem Herrn Hackebarth, dem gegenwärtigen hervorragenden ersten Hornisten, eine ebenbürtige Unterstützung und für den Nothfall einen Stellvertreter zu geben.

Durch die Liberalität des Oberst Higgison wurde das Boston-Orchester in den Stand gesetzt, in Europa sich nach musikalischen Kapacitäten ersten Ranges umzusehen.

m ... COURIER.
lress ...
te ...

THE Boston Symphony concerts in Greater New York will take place on November 9, 10 and 11; December 7, 8 and 9; January 11, 12 and 13; February 15, 16 and 17, and March 15, 16 and 17. The New York Symphony Orchestra will be heard here on the afternoons of November 21, December 10 and 17, January 7 and 14, February 4 and March 4, and on the evenings of November 14 and 28, December 12 and 19, January 9 and 16, February 6 and March 6. The Russian Symphony Society will play on the afternoons of December 21, February 25 and April 8, and on the evenings of November 18, December 30, January 27, February 24, March 17 and April 7. The Philharmonic dates were published in this column last week.

Boston Symphony Quartet for This Coming Season.

THE Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. The work done by this organization last year left a very deep impression on the minds of all that heard it, and its success as a new organization made it certain that there was a large place for it to fill in the Eastern musical season.

One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra, and, besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe, has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the last summer, which he spent in Europe, Professor Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet, by Sinding, in A minor, op. 70; five Novelettes for string quartet, op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major, by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure and a sextet for string in E minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

Buys is a Dutchman of about forty years. He has written much choral music and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam.

Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch, he is between thirty-five and forty years old and has composed music in all forms. Among other things is a very successful violin concerto, which Professor Hess played two years ago.

Hans Koessler, a resident of Budapest, is the composer of much interesting music, little of which has been heard in this country. He is the foremost musician of Hungary and was the teacher of Dohnayi.

Margaret Anglin appears in "Zira" to-night at the opening of the Princess Theatre.

Newspaper ...
om ... COURIER.
dress ...
te ...

The Samaroff Season.

OLGA SAMAROFF'S piano tour in the United States this season is developing apace. Manager Francke reports that Madame Samaroff will play three times with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, four times with the Philadelphia Orchestra, on tour, twice with the Choral Symphony Society in St. Louis, and several times in New York, with orchestra, and also in recital.

Cleveland Town Topics Dept 30

9

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

...lcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston ...stra, whose concert in the Grays' Armory on next Friday ... ear ...nusually brilliant opening to the local musical season. ...d ... half years since Cleveland last had an opportunity of ...rchestra. The last concert was given in the old Music ...ad ...ve... ...ac... Mr. ...resent ...later ...kisch, ...him ...four ...y is ...phony ...oldest Orc... ...s ...s ...s

...Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...EVG. STAATSZEITUNG
...
...ress ...

Der Spaziergänger

Copyright 1905 by the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung.

Die Post ist angekommen! Mein Valet reicht mir auf der Tablette von „near-silver" ein wohlgezähltes Dutzend Briefe und Briefchen, aus denen er zunächst die geheimnisvoll duftenden in den mehr oder minder farbigen Umschlägen ausscheidet, denn die öffnet man immer zuerst. Die Herrschaften mit den länglichen weißen Envelopes, auf denen unvorsichtigerweise sehr oft auch noch die Firma aufgedruckt ist, können warten . . . . . ihre werthen Zuschriften kennt man ohnehin auswendig und wirken bei nüchternem Magen verstimmend.

Da ist ein Brieflein in perlgrau (nebenbei bemerkt die Modefarbe), das mich für . . . . well nevermind das gehört vorläufig noch nicht hierher, das erzähle ich Ihnen ein andermal. Da ist ein Brief in dunkelgelb, eine höchst ungewohnte Farbe für Briefumschläge, und die Aufschrift läßt auch nicht auf eine zarte Damenhand schließen:

„Sehr geehrter Herr! Sie haben vor kurzem geschrieben, daß ein Amerikaner, der in Berlin das Cabaret besuchte, ganz entzückt davon war und die Ansicht äußerte, daß ein derartiges Unternehmen in New York große Aussichten auf Erfolg habe. Ganz zufällig habe ich erfahren, daß bereits Schritte eingeleitet sind zur Errichtung eines derartigen Unternehmens. Ein Herr Ludwig Lessing Bolgar, ein Schriftsteller, dessen Wiege theils in Deutschland, theils in Ungarn gestanden, will sich, trotz der nicht mehr ganz intakten Lockenfülle, mit den Resten eines ehemals jugendlichen Leichtsinnes an diese Sache heranwagen, und hat dieserhalb eine Anzahl Künstler beiderlei Geschlechts um sich gesammelt, mit denen er kommende Woche im Deutschen Preßclub einen weniger schüchternen als ersten Versuch machen will. Der Herr Ludwig Lessing Bolgar wird selbst als Conferencier seines Amtes walten, er wird die Leitung des Ganzen inne haben, er wird eigene Dichtungen vortragen, er wird die Hörer — seine Opferwilligkeit ist rührend und anerkennenswerth zugleich — mit einigen seiner Dramen in condensirter Fassung bekannt machen, und zwar so, daß jedes dieser Dramen, daß sonst vier Stunden und darüber dauert, in zehn Minuten aufgeführt wird. Wie der Herr Ludwig Lessing Bolgar das macht, die Condensirungsmethode, ist sein Geheimnis! Außer seiner eigenen Person hat der Impresario die Sopranistin Estellea Vida de Peremarton und die Liedersängerin Madame Louise Serly zur Mitwirkung gewonnen; am Klavier wird Madame Henriette Hanisch, Schülerin von Bruckner, Epstein und den Konservatorien in Kassa und Wien begleiten. Dazu kommen noch die Herren Louis Schaerlae-Serly, Komponist und Kapellmeister, der Tenorist Johann Sz. Förh und der Heldentenor Nicolaus Rieger von Ottmahau. Sie sehen, die Namen sind direkt überbrettlhaft oder cabarettig und das Programm ist dementsprechend; es werden Vorträge in deutscher, englischer, französischer, italienischer und ungarischer Sprache gehalten werden, über die Reichhaltigkeit werden sich die Zuhörer nicht zu beklagen haben. Falls es Sie, werther Herr, interessiren sollte, möchte ich bemerken, daß die einzelnen Künstler über phänomenale Mittle, ich meine natürlich Stimmmittil, verfügen; der Heldentenor Rieger könnte heute in Budapesth Lorbeeren und Gold scheffelweise ernten, aber es hat ihm theils dieserhalb, theils außerdem an der Theiß nicht mehr gefallen, Er hatte einen sehr beträchtlichen Vorschuß erhalten, aber selbst das fesselte ihn nicht und er folgte seinem unhemmbaren Freiheitsdrang nach Amerika. Geld ist bei diesen echten Künstlernaturen, ich will nicht sagen das Wenigste, aber es ist überhaupt Nebensache; der Herr Ludwig Lessing Bolgar hatte das Anerbieten hier ein ungarisches Theater zu gründen und man hatte ihm fünfzigtausend Dollars zu diesem Zwecke zur Verfügung gestellt. Glauben Sie er hat es angenommen? Er will nun einmal der elften Muse, dem Cabaret, eine Gasse bahnen und hofft mit seinen Mitarbeitern das Wagestück siegreich zu bestehen."

Das ist interessante Neuigkeit und das amüsanteste dabei war mir, daß ich diesen Brief höchst eigenhändig an mich selbst geschrieben habe, damit ich nämlich auf die Details nicht vergesse; ich hatte das Vergnügen, den Herrn Entrepreneur kennen zu lernen, er hat mir sogar einige seiner Gedichte vorgelesen und ich glaube daraus schließen zu können, daß das ein recht vergnüglicher Abend wird.

Ein anderes Brieflein kam als Antwort auf eine kürzliche Bemerkung in einem Spaziergang, welche also lautete:

„Ich habe noch selten oder niemals eine größere Aehnlichkeit gesehen als zwischen dem Begleiter des Herrn Bollmann und Direktor Conried; diese Aehnlichkeit war so auffallend, daß man dem Herrn schon wiederholt ansehen mußte, um sich zu überzeugen, daß es nicht Conried war. Wenn ich von Aehnlichkeit rede, dann meine ich natürlich rein äußerliche, und auch das nur bei flüchtigem Anschauen, denn für den, der Conried kennt, fehlten doch so manche Merkmale, die dem Herrn Direktor eigen: die Intelligenz des Blickes, das Ordensbändchen und vor allem die elegante Liebenswürdigkeit, die ließ der Doppelgänger gänzlich vermissen."

Darauf erhielt ich von einem Korrespondenten die Mittheilung, daß besagter Doppelgänger des Herrn Dir. Conried ein Bruder der Frau Alexandra Blum sei, die zu Herrn Bollmann in schwiegermütterlichem Verhältnis steht. Besagter Herr heißt Humann und ist trotz seiner glatten Schauspielerphysiognomie zwar Künstler, aber kein Bühnenkünstler. Herr Humann ist Violinist und gehörte als solcher dem Boston Symphonie Orchester an, lebt aber jetzt nur noch von seinen Renten . . . die echte Kunst findet auch in Amerika ihren Lohn. Humann muß ein ganz hervorragender Meister mit dem Fiedelbogen gewesen sein, denn er erfreute sich der besonderen Protektion einer Dame aus den Kreisen der Vierhundert. Die Dame, deren Gatte seine Millionen in Zucker erworben hatte und demgemäß trotz seines deutschen Namens in den allerbesten Kreisen Zutritt fand, hat nun einmal ein "faible" für die Kunst und wer wollte ihr das verübeln? Irgendetwas müssen die Leute mit den Millionen schon thun, um ihre Zeit todtzuschlagen. Wenn sie sich nachher erkenntlich zeigen bei den Künstlern, die ihnen die Künste verdolmetschen, muß man nicht immer gleich das Schlimmste denken. Mein Gott, die Welt ist so unglaublich mißgünstig und bösartig! Ist es denn ein unbedingtes Muß, daß eine Leibrente immer gleich eine Unterleibrente sei!? Es giebt doch auch Menschen, bei denen der Kopf der edelste Theil ist!

Und ein drittes Brieflein, das kurzweg Arnold unterzeichnet ist, dessen Absender ich nicht kenne, aber wohl zu errathen glaube. Er theilt mir mit, daß der Herr Putnam Griswold von dem Savage Parsifal Ensemble auf ein Jahr an die Berliner Hofoper engagirt wurde, was immerhin ein recht anerkennenswerther Fortschritt für den jungen Künstler ist. Er theilt mir ferner mit, daß der Loisl der Andere und der Parsifal der Andere, der Alois Pennarini (sprich Federl) ebenfalls von der englischen Parsifalgesellschaft wieder im Hamburger Stadttheater aufgetreten ist, und er legt mir die folgende Kritik eines Hamburger Blattes bei:

„Unter den Sängern dieser Lohengrinaufführung erregte Herr Pennarini, der lichte Gralsritter, schon darum besonderes Interesse, weil er fast ein Jahr lang drüben in Amerika nur für seinen Spartopf sich anstrengen mußte. Der talentvolle und außerordentlich verwendbare Künstler, der in Amerika als Parsifal einen nicht ganz unbestrittenen, in anderen Rollen aber um so erfreulichere Erfolge errungen hat, kehrte aus dem amerikanischen Feldzug heil und munter zurück, als Künstler durchaus ungeändert: er singt und spielt genau wie früher: temperamentvoll, ein wenig dekorativ; nur seine Tonbildung scheint unter dem Einfluß der englischen Sprache mit ihren Kehllauten eine etwas stärkere Färbung zum Gutturalen hin angenommen zu haben. Mögen alle seine Schutzengel den famosen Künstler vor einer Verbildung seiner schönen und warmen Stimme bewahren. Auch die beim Singen emporgerollte Zunge — Rollmops nennen es drastisch die Gesanglehrer — möge er unter strenge Aufsicht stellen."

Ob der Loisl nach den rund zweihundert Parsifalvorstellungen froh ist, wieder in Hamburg an dem Elbestrand zu sein? Und nur für seinen Spartopf war er hier, trotzdem man uns erzählt hatte, er sei als Pionier der deutschen Kunst zur Wahrung der höheren Ehre des Parsifal herübergekommen . . . für den Spartopf? Auch gut, es war uns beiderseits jedenfalls sehr angenehm!

Ein viertes Brieflein von zarter Damenhand, einige vorlaute Bemerkungen von hinter den Kulissen unseres deutschen Theaters . . . etwas von Wolken am klaren Himmel und dergleichen geheimnisvolle Andeutungen . . . . Theaterklatsch, dem man keinen Werth beilegen darf. Es geht allerdings etwas vor, aber darüber schweigt des Spaziergängers Höflichkeit — vorläufig; zur rechten Zeit wird schon das rechte Wort gesprochen werden, dafür wird schon der Herr Direktor selber sehr energisch sorgen.

H. R. H.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. The work done by this organization last year left a very deep impression on the minds of all that heard it and its success as a new organization made it certain that there was a large place for it to fill in the Eastern musical season.

One change is noted in its members Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra, and beside bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Prof. Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

...RECORD
...ss ...

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Newcomers of Note to Join This Fine Organization.

Three new comers will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, a principal 'cellist, a first bassoon and a first horn.

Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist comes from Munich where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. At the end of last season Rudolph Krasselt, who for two years has filled the position so successfully, gave up orchestral work in order to prepare himself for conducting, it being his ambition to devote his career to that branch of the art. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely on the very warm recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner. In Germany he is regarded as one of their best artists, and in the past year he has declined invitations to become the principal 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra of the Vienna Philharmonics. He is a young man, and is a pupil of Klengel. Curiously enough, he was Krasselt's first teacher and turned him over after a few years to Klengel.

P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is about 40 years old and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory, the most celebrated instrumental school in Europe. Three years ago Richter tried to get him for the Manchester Orchestra, but failed.

The engagement of Max Hess, who, by the way, is not a relative of Willy Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. Heretofore Mr. Hackebarth has had to bear the burden of all the work, and if anything happened to him there would have been no one able to fill his place. For this reason Mr. Hess was engaged. He is called the best horn in Germany. He is but 27 years old and most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra, from which organization he comes to the Boston forces.

...PRESS ...

Announcement is made of a departure in the policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An invitation has been extended to M. Vincent d'Indy, the eccentric French composer and conductor, to visit this country next Winter and conduct the orchestra in a series of its regular concerts. M. d'Indy has accepted the invitation and will reach America in the end of November so that he may conduct concerts in Boston and the December series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. His programmes will be devoted entirely to modern French music, which will include some of his own compositions.

Vincent d'Indy is the leader of the group of composers known as "the younger Frenchmen," men for the most, followers and pupils of Caesar Franck, who have sought to restore absolute music to its proper place in France. He, in common with most of the other members of this school, has always been a most ardent disciple of the art and theories of Richard Wagner. Now in his fifty-fourth year, he has a long list of compositions to his credit, embracing all forms of music, symphonic, chamber, operatic and lyric that do not please the public at all, being convulsive and noisy.

One of the founders of the Schola Cantorum of Paris, he is now a director of the institution and the professor of composition. As a conductor, although he has not been permanently associated in the position with any of the great orchestras of Paris, he is regarded as one of the best men in France. His knowledge of the orchestra is thorough and practical because at the beginning of his career he was kettledrummer in the Colonne Orchestra and for five years after the chorus master.

M. d'Indy is most enthusiastic over his approaching visit. He is one of the few Frenchmen who have an adequate conception of the high state in which the art of music is in America and has for a long time wanted an opportunity to visit this country. He will be here about four weeks and The Item doubts whether he will be received by the general public as anything but an exaggerator of Wagner.

...PUBLIC LEDGER
From ...
Address ...
Date ...
Establis...

Calve is not to sing in opera here this season, but will make a concert tour embracing the principal towns of the United States and Canada and extending to Cuba and Mexico. The chief feature of her programmes will be the old chansons of southern France, in which she has made a distinct impression at home. She is also to give some old English and Scottish songs, and, of course, selections from "Carmen," in costume. The supporting company will include Bouxmann, basso; Von Norden, tenor, and Argyro Kastion, a woman violinist. The Philadelphia concert will occur at the Academy of Music on Saturday afternoon, November 18.

Vincent D'Indy, who will conduct the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Boston, on December 1 and 2, and the concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and elsewhere in the following week, is expected also to give some lectures during his visit.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
m PUBLIC LEDGER
ress
e

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have three new players in leading parts this year, a new first 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, who has held that position for eight years in the Kaim Orchestra at Munich, and who was the first teacher of Krasselt, whom he now succeeds at Boston; a new first bassoon, P. Sadony, from Cologne, who is said to be the most celebrated player on this instrument in Germany, and a new first horn, Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra, who will share the desk with Mr. Hackebarth. Willy Hess, the concertmaster, has reorganized the Boston Symphony Quartet, consisting of himself as first violin; Otto Roth as second, E. Ferir, viola, and Warnke 'cello. Mr. Krasselt, who played the 'cello last year, has left the orchestra and is going to study conducting. Mr. Hess spent the past summer in Europe, and has brought home a great deal of new chamber music for the coming season. This quartet holds the same relation to the Boston Orchestra that was formerly held by the Kneisel Quartet, whose members are now settled in New York, at Frank Damrosch's new Institute. To devote himself to this establishment Mr. Damrosch has resigned his position as director of music in the New York public schools.

* * *

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
RECORD
s

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for during the past Summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged, a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. At the end of last season Mr. Rudolph Krasselt, who for two years has filled the position so successfully, gave up orchestral work in order to prepare himself for conducting, it being his ambition to devote his career to that branch of the art. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely on the very warm recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner, both of whom know his work thoroughly.

Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is a man about 40 years old and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory, the most celebrated instrumental school in Europe.

The engagement of Mr. Max Hess, who, by the way, is not a relative of Prof. Willy Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. Heretofore Mr. Hackebarth, whose work is so admired, has had to bear the burden of all the work and if anything happened to him there would have been no one able adequately to fill his place. For this reason Mr. Hess was engaged. He is called the best horn in Germany. He is but 27 years old and most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra, from which organization he comes to Boston.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

D'Indy to Lecture on French Music.

Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the greatest living authorities on the aesthetics of music, and in France is always in great demand as a speaker on that subject. It is said that he possesses to a maximum degree that charm of diction and felicity of expression which is peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer.

Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on December 1 and 2, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the following week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 25.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
Brooklyn, N. Y.
s

MUSICAL SEASON SOON TO BEGIN

Engagement of Many Notables Announced by the Brooklyn Institute.

MORE ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,

With Especial Attention to Educational Work, Will Be Features.

In its list of musical attractions for the coming season the Brooklyn Institute announces the engagement of Gadski, Eames, Kubelik, Marteau, Gerardy, Reisenauer, Joseffy, Bauer, Bispham, Pugno, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Damrosch orchestra, the Kneisels and the Adamowskis.

As heretofore, concerts will be given in the Baptist Temple or in Association Hall. Holders of season tickets for the Symphony concerts this season at the Baptist Temple will be offered first choice of seats in the new Academy of Music in the season of 1906-07.

The assisting artists have not yet been secured for the Boston Symphony concerts, but it is certain that D'Indy, the French composer and conductor, will conduct the concert of Jan. 12, at which two of the numbers will be his, and all by French composers. The other dates are Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Feb. 16 and March 16. The Institute has arranged for lecture recitals on the programme.

The Damrosch orchestra will be heard on Feb. 8 and March 1, with Felix Weingartner as conductor of the first and Walter Damrosch of the second, for which Rafael Joseffy has been engaged as soloist.

David Bispham, baritone, and Miss Marie Nichols, violin, are to give the opening song recital, Oct. 26. Dec. 1 Mme. Gadski, soprano; Elison Van Hoose, tenor, and an assisting pianist, will be heard in recital, and on Dec. 14 Mme. Emma Eames, soprano; Emilio Gogorza, baritone; Joseph Holiman, 'cellist, and Amherst Webber, piano, will appear in concert. Miss Marie Hall will give a violin recital on Nov. 16, and Jan Kubelik on Dec. 28. Henri Marteau, violin; Jan Gerardy, 'cello, and a pianist yet to be chosen will play on Feb. 28. Maud Powell, violin, and Ben Davis, tenor, will join in programme on March 29, and the Imperial Male Quartet, with Miss Bessie Collier, violin, have been invited to give a concert at a date to be selected later. Other recitals are in preparation, but wait the arrival of the artists or their agents before being announced.

The Kneisels will give five chamber music concerts on Nov. 2 and 23, Dec. 21, Feb. 1 and March 1, with assisting artists: Mrs. Thomas Tapper, piano; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello; Miss Mary Wood Chase, piano; Franz Kneisel, violin, and Rudolph Ganz, piano. Single concerts will be given by the Olive Meade Quartet, assisted by Arthur Foote, on Jan. 18, and the Adamowski Trio (Mme. Szumowska piano) on April 5.

"The Messiah" will be sung at the Christmas season, by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, which society is also to be heard late in the spring, and choral concerts will be given by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, Hugo Steinbruch conductor, on March 22, and the Arion Society of Brooklyn, Arthur Claassen conductor, on April 19.

By arrangement with Henry W. Savage, Institute members are to have the advantage of special rates for grand opera in English at the new Montauk Theatre the week of Oct. 2. The following week the Tyrolean Alpine Singers, from Zillerthal, Tyrol, Herr Franz Rainer director, will give concerts on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, with matinées on Wednesday and Friday at 4 P. M.

Some time after January the Hiawatha Music Drama will be presented by the Ojibway Indians under the direction of Frederick Burton.

A course of six lecture concerts on "Modern Chamber Music," by Thomas Whitney Surette, with assisting artists begins on Sept. 29.

After January there will be three courses of lecture recitals, by Carl Fique: "Important Chapters in Musical History," beginning Jan. 8; by Mrs. Mary Gregory Murray, "Searchlights in Modern Music Study," beginning Feb. 14; by Mrs. Raymond Brown, of Chicago, "The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner," beginning March 28, and John C. Griggs, Ph.D., "National Types of Song," beginning April 18. With the exception of Mrs. Brown's recitals, which are to be three in number, each course will have six, and Dr. Griggs will have Miss Beatrice Shaw and Miss Susan Griggs, sopranos; M. W. Byrnes and Edward Strong, tenors, and Miss Leila Morse, for his assisting artists.

Carl Fique will give a lecture course on "German Folk Songs" early in 1906.

P. W. Dykema, A.M., of the Ethical Culture School, Manhattan, will conduct a series of conferences on "Music Instruction" on Thursday afternoons, beginning Oct. 19, and the usual sight-singing classes will be conducted by Wilbur A. Luyster, on Fridays, beginning Oct. 18.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
ress

STARS OF MUSIC WORLD TO BE HERE THIS WINTER

BROOKLYN INSTITUTE HAS ARRANGED A SERIES OF EXCELLENT PROGRAMMES.

Many Noted Foreign Artists to Contribute to the Entertainment of Brooklynites—Gadsky, Eames, Kubelik, Marteau, Gerardy, Joseffy and Boston Symphony Are Engaged.

In presenting its list of musical attractions for the coming season the Brooklyn Institute puts before the public names of the best artists of wide renown, such as Gadski, Eames, Kubelik Marteau, Gerardy, Reisenauer, Joseffy, Bauer, Bispham, Pugno, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Damrosch Orchestra, the Kneisels and the Adamowskis. There are many other well-known local artists also to appear. Concerts, vocal and instrumental; grand opera, music drama, oratorios, recitals, conferences and instruction are offered, thus insuring variety sufficient to attract all forms of refined musical taste. As heretofore they will be housed in the Baptist Temple or in Association Hall. Just here it is well to remember that holders of season tickets for the symphony concerts this season at the Baptist Temple, will be offered first choice of seats in the new Academy of Music in the season of 1906-'07.

Perhaps the majority of symphony subscribers have had this in mind, for the most of them have renewed their subscriptions and did so at the earliest opportunity, so that the financial success of the concerts is assured. Their artistic success is always assured. For this season Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, has secured Heinrich Warnke, of Munich, as fire 'cellist; P. Sadony, a celebrated German player, as first bassoon, and Max Hess, as hornist. Mr. Warnke and Mr. Hess were members of the Kaim Orchestra in Munich, Mr. Warnke having been its first 'cellist for eight years. He is a pupil of Klengel and was the first teacher of Rudolph Krasselt, whom he succeeds in the Boston Orchestra, which Krasselt left to prepare himself for conducting. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely upon the recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner. Mr. Hess is not a relative of Wily Hess, the first violin of the orchestra. The assisting artists have not yet been secured for the Boston Symphony concerts, but it is certain that D'Indy, the French composer and conductor, will conduct the concert of January 12, at which two of the numbers will be his, and all by French composers. The other dates are November 10, December 8, February 16, and March 16. To add to the pleasure and instruction of these concerts the Institute has arranged for lecture recitals relative to the programme, on Wednesday afternoons preceding them, the lecturers to be Henry E. Krehbial, of the Tribune; Henry T. Finck, of the Evening Post; William J. Henderson, of the Sun; Charles M. Skinner, of the Eagle, and Louis C. Elson, of the Boston Advertiser. There will be assisting pianists.

The Damrosch orchestra will be heard on February 8, and March 1, with Felix Weingartner as conductor of the first, and Walter Damrosch of the second, for which Rafael Joseffy has been engaged as soloist. The soloist for the first is not yet secured.

David Bispham, baritone, and Miss Marie Nichols, violin, are to give the opening song recital, on October 26. On December 1, Mme. Gadski, soprano; Elison Van Hoose, tenor, and an assisting pianist, will be heard in recital, and on December 14, Mme. Emma Eames, soprano; Emilio Gogorza, baritone; Joseph Hollman, 'cellist, and Amherst Webber, piano, will appear in concert. Miss Marie Hall will give a violin recital on November 16 and Jan Kubelik on December 28. Henri Marteau, violin; Jan Gerardy, 'cello, and a pianist yet to be chosen, will play on February 28; Maud Powell, violin, and Ben Davis, tenor, will join in programme on March 29, and the Imperial Male Quartette, with Miss Bessie Collier, violin, have been invited to give a concert at a date to be selected later. Other recitals are in preparation, but wait the arrival of artists or their agents before being announced.

The series of Chamber Music concerts is also noteworthy. The Kneisels will give five: On November 2 and 23, December 21, February 1, and March 1, with assisting artists; Mrs. Thomas Tapper, piano; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello; Miss Mary Wood Chase, piano; Franz Kneisel, violin, and Rudolph Ganz, piano. Single concerts will be given by the Olive Meade Quartet, assisted by Arthur Foote, on January 18, and the Adamowski Trio (Mme. Szumowska, piano), on April 5.

"The Messiah" will be presented as usual at the Christmas season, by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, which society is also to be heard late in the spring, and choral concerts will be given by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, Hugo Steinbruch, conductor, on March 22, and the Arion Society of Brooklyn, Arthur Claassen, conductor, on April 19.

The first concerts of the season of the Glee Singers, from Zillerthal, Tyrol, Herr Franz Rainer director, will be given on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings with matinees on Wednesday and Friday at 4 P. M. These will be their first public concerts in New York this season. Sometime after January the Hiawatha Music Drama will be presented by the Ojibway Indians, under the direction of Frederick Burton.

A course of six lecture concerts on "Modern Chamber Music," by Thomas Surette, will have for assisting artists, Miss Anna Otten, violin; Miss Clara Otten, piano; Miss Bostleman, 'cello; at the first, third and fifth lectures, and the Olive Meade String Quartet, at the second, fourth and sixth. These begin on September 29. Mr. Surette has also classes in the Institute School of Pedagogy. After January there will be three courses of lecture recitals, by Carl Fique, "Important Chapters in Musical History," beginning January 8; by Mrs. Mary Gregory Murray; "Searchlights in Modern Music Study," beginning February 14; by Mrs. Raymond Brown, of Chicago; "The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner," beginning March 28, and John C. Griggs, Ph. D.; "National Types of Song," beginning April 18. With the exception of Mrs. Brown's recitals which are to be three in number, each course will have six, and Dr. Griggs will have Miss Beatrice Shaw and Miss Susan Griggs, sopranos; M. W. Brines and Edward Strong, tenors, and Miss Leila Morse, for his assisting artists. Under the auspices of the German section of the department of philology, Carl Fique will give a lecture concert on "German Folk Songs" early in 1906.

P. W. Dykema, A. M., of the Ethical Culture School, Manhattan, will conduct a series of conferences on "Music Instruction," on Thursday afternoons, beginning October 19, and the usual sight-singing classes will be conducted by Wilbur A. Luyster, on Fridays, beginning October 18.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From Brooklyn Union
Address N. Y.
Date OCT 25 1905

Mme. Gadski's first appearance this fall will be at one of the home concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

[20]

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...PUBLIC LEDGER
n
ress
e

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have three new players in leading parts this year, a new first 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, who has held that position for eight years in the Kaim Orchestra at Munich, and who was the first teacher of Krasselt, whom he now succeeds at Boston; a new first bassoon, P. Sadony, from Cologne, who is said to be the most celebrated player on this instrument in Germany, and a new first horn, Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra, who will share the desk with Mr. Hackebarth. Willy Hess, the concertmaster, has reorganized the Boston Symphony Quartet, consisting of himself as first violin; Otto Roth as second, E. Ferir, viola, and Warnke 'cello. Mr. Krasselt, who played the 'cello last year, has left the orchestra and is going to study conducting. Mr. Hess spent the past summer in Europe, and has brought home a great deal of new chamber music for the coming season. This quartet holds the same relation to the Boston Orchestra that was formerly held by the Kneisel Quartet, whose members are now settled in New York, at Frank Damrosch's new Institute of Music. To devote himself to this establishment Mr. Damrosch has resigned his position as director of music in the New York public schools.

* * *

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, for during the past Summer a new principal 'cellist was engaged, a new first bassoon and a new first horn. Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for the past eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. At the end of last season Mr. Rudolph Krasselt, who for two years has filled the position so successfully, gave up orchestral work in order to prepare himself for conducting, it being his ambition to devote his career to that branch of the art. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely on the very warm recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner, both of whom know his work thoroughly.

Mr. P. Sadony, the new first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. He is a man about 40 years old and has for many years been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory, the most celebrated instrumental school in Europe.

The engagement of Mr. Max Hess, who, by the way, is not a relative of Prof. Willy Hess, is in line with the general policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to have two principals for each of the first wind instruments. Heretofore Mr. Hackebarth, whose work is so admired, has had to bear the burden of all the work and if anything happened to him there would have been no one able adequately to fill his place. For this reason Mr. Hess was engaged. He is called the best horn in Germany. He is but 27 years old and most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra, from which organization he comes to Boston.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...RD
s

D'Indy to Lecture on French Music.

Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the greatest living authorities on the aesthetics of music, and in France is always in great demand as a speaker on this subject. It is said that he possesses to a maximum degree that charm of diction and felicity of expression which is peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer.

Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on December 1 and 2, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the following week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 25.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
s

MUSICAL SEASON SOON TO BEGIN

Engagement of Many Notables Announced by the Brooklyn Institute.

MORE ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS,

With Especial Attention to Educational Work, Will Be Features.

In its list of musical attractions for the coming season the Brooklyn Institute announces the engagement of Gadski, Eames, Kubelik, Marteau, Gerardy, Reisenauer, Joseffy, Bauer, Bispham, Pugno, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Damrosch orchestra, the Kneisels and the Adamowskis.

As heretofore, concerts will be given in the Baptist Temple or in Association Hall. Holders of season tickets for the Symphony concerts this season at the Baptist Temple will be offered first choice of seats in the new Academy of Music in the season of 1906-07.

The assisting artists have not yet been secured for the Boston Symphony concerts, but it is certain that D'Indy, the French composer and conductor, will conduct the concert of Jan. 12, at which two of the numbers will be his, and all by French composers. The other dates are Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Feb. 16 and March 16. The Institute has arranged for lecture recitals on the programme.

The Damrosch orchestra will be heard on Feb. 8 and March 1, with Felix Weingartner as conductor of the first and Walter Damrosch of the second, for which Rafael Joseffy has been engaged as soloist.

David Bispham, baritone, and Miss Marie Nichols, violin, are to give the opening song recital, Oct. 26. Dec. 1 Mme. Gadski, soprano; Elison Van Hoose, tenor, and an assisting pianist, will be heard in recital, and on Dec. 14 Mme. Emma Eames, soprano; Emilio Gogorza, baritone; Joseph Holiman, 'cellist, and Amherst Webber, piano, will appear in concert. Miss Marie Hall will give a violin recital on Nov. 16, and Jan Kubelik on Dec. 28. Henri Marteau, violin; Jan Gerardy, 'cello, and a pianist yet to be chosen will play on Feb. 23. Maud Powell, violin, and Ben Davis, tenor, will join in programme on March 29, and the Imperial Male Quartet, with Miss Bessie Collier, violin, have been invited to give a concert at a date to be selected later. Other recitals are in preparation, but wait the arrival of the artists or their agents before being announced.

The Kneisels will give five chamber music concerts on Nov. 2 and 23, Dec. 21, Feb. 1 and March 1, with assisting artists: Mrs. Thomas Tapper, piano; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello; Miss Mary Wood Chase, piano; Franz Kneisel, violin, and Rudolph Ganz, piano. Single concerts will be given by the Olive Meade Quartet, assisted by Arthur Foote, on Jan. 18, and the Adamowski Trio (Mme. Szumowska piano) on April 5.

"The Messiah" will be sung at the Christmas season, by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, which society is also to be heard late in the spring, and choral concerts will be given by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, Hugo Steinbruch conductor, on March 22, and the Arion Society of Brooklyn, Arthur Claassen conductor, on April 19.

By arrangement with Henry W. Savage, Institute members are to have the advantage of special rates for grand opera in English at the new Montauk Theatre the week of Oct. 2. The following week the Tyrolean Alpine Singers, from Zillerthal, Tyrol, Herr Franz Rainer director, will give concerts on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, with matinées on Wednesday and Friday at 4 P. M.

Some time after January the Hiawatha Music Drama will be presented by the Ojibway Indians under the direction of Frederick Burton.

A course of six lecture concerts on "Modern Chamber Music," by Thomas Whitney Surette, with assisting artists begins on Sept. 29.

After January there will be three courses of lecture recitals, by Carl Fique: "Important Chapters in Musical History," beginning Jan. 8; by Mrs. Mary Gregory Murray, "Searchlights in Modern Music Study," beginning Feb. 14; by Mrs. Raymond Brown, of Chicago, "The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner," beginning March 23, and John C. Griggs, Ph.D., "National Types of Song," beginning April 13. With the exception of Mrs. Brown's recitals, which are to be three in number, each course will have six, and Dr. Griggs will have Miss Beatrice Shaw and Miss Susan Griggs, sopranos; M. W. Byrnes and Edward Strong, tenors, and Miss Leila Morse, for his assisting artists.

Carl Fique will give a lecture course on "German Folk Songs" early in 1906.

P. W. Dykema, A.M., of the Ethical Culture School, Manhattan, will conduct a series of conferences on "Music Instruction" on Thursday afternoons, beginning Oct. 19, and the usual sight-singing classes will be conducted by Wilbur A. Luyster, on Fridays, beginning Oct. 13.

m
ress

STARS OF MUSIC WORLD TO BE HERE THIS WINTER

BROOKLYN INSTITUTE HAS ARRANGED A SERIES OF EXCELLENT PROGRAMMES.

Many Noted Foreign Artists to Contribute to the Entertainment of Brooklynites—Gadsky, Eames, Kubelik, Marteau, Gerardy, Joseffy and Boston Symphony Are Engaged.

In presenting its list of musical attractions for the coming season the Brooklyn Institute puts before the public names of the best artists of wide renown, such as Gadski, Eames, Kubelik Marteau, Garardy, Reisenauer, Joseffy, Bauer, Bispham, Pugno, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Damrosch Orchestra, the Kneisels and the Adamowskis. There are many other well-known local artists also to appear. Concerts, vocal and instrumental; grand opera, music drama, oratorios, recitals, conferences and instruction are offered, thus insuring variety sufficient to attract all forms of refined musical taste. As heretofore they will be housed in the Baptist Temple or in Association Hall. Just here it is well to remember that holders of season tickets for the symphony concerts this season at the Baptist Temple, will be offered first choice of seats in the new Academy of Music in the season of 1906-'07.

Perhaps the majority of symphony subscribers have had this in mind, for the most of them have renewed their subscriptions and did so at the earliest opportunity, so that the financial success of the concerts is assured. Their artistic success is always assured. For this season Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, has secured Heinrich Warnke, of Munich, as fire 'cellist; P. Sadony, a celebrated German player, as first bassoon, and Max Hess, as hornist. Mr. Warnke and Mr. Hess were members of the Kalm Orchestra in Munich, Mr. Warnke having been its first 'cellist for eight years. He is a pupil of Kiengel and was the first teacher of Rudolph Krasselt, whom he succeeds in the Boston Orchestra, which Krasselt left to prepare himself for conducting. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely upon the recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner. Mr. Hess is not a relative of Wily Hess, the first violin of the orchestra. The assisting artists have not yet been secured for the Boston Symphony concerts, but it is certain that D'Indy, the French composer and conductor, will conduct the concert of January 12, at which two of the numbers will be his, and all by French composers. The other dates are November 10, December 8, February 16, and March 16. To add to the pleasure and instruction of these concerts the Institute has arranged for lecture recitals relative to the programme, on Wednesday afternoons preceding them, the lecturers to be Henry E. Krehbial, of the Tribune; Henry T. Finck, of the Evening Post; William J. Henderson, of the Sun; Charles M. Skinner, of the Eagle, and Louis C. Elson, of the Boston Advertiser. There will be assisting pianists.

The Damrosch orchestra will be heard on February 8, and March 1, with Felix Weingartner as conductor of the first, and Walter Damrosch of the second, for which Rafael Joseffy has been engaged as soloist. The soloist for the first is not yet secured.

David Bispham, baritone, and Miss Marie Nichols, violin, are to give the opening song recital, on October 26. On December 1, Mme. Gadski, soprano; Elison Van Hoose, tenor, and an assisting pianist, will be heard in recital, and on December 14, Mme. Emma Eames, soprano; Emilio Gogorza, baritone; Joseph Holiman, 'cellist, and Amherst Webber, piano, will appear in concert. Miss Marie Hall will give a violin recital on November 16 and Jan Kubelik on December 28. Henri Marteau, violin; Jan Gerardy, 'cello, and a pianist yet to be chosen, will play on February 23; Maud Powell, violin and Ben Davis, tenor, will join in programme on March 29, and the Imperial Male Quartette, with Miss Bessie Collier, violin, have been invited to give a concert at a date to be selected later. Other recitals are in preparation, but wait the arrival of artists or their agents before being announced.

The series of Chamber Music concerts is also noteworthy. The Kneisels will give five: On November 2 and 23, December 21, February 1, and March 1, with assisting artists; Mrs. Thomas Tapper, piano; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello; Miss Mary Wood Chase, piano; Franz Kneisel, violin, and Rudolph Ganz, piano. Single concerts will be given by the Olive Meade Quartet, assisted by Arthur Foote, on January 18, and the Adamowski Trio (Mme. Szumowska, piano), on April 5.

"The Messiah" will be presented as usual at the Christmas season, by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, which society is also to be heard late in the spring, and choral concerts will be given by the Brooklyn Saengerbund. Hugo Steinbruch, conductor, on March 22, and the Arion Society of Brooklyn, Arthur Claassen, conductor, on April 19.

Institute members are to have the advantage of special rates for grand opera, in English, at the new Montauk Theatre, the week of October 2. The following week the Tyrolean Alpine Singers, from Zillerthal, Tyrol, Herr Frans Rainer, director, will give concerts on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings with matinees on Wednesday and Friday at 4 P. M. These will be their first public concerts in New York this season. Sometime after January the Hiawatha Music Drama will be presented by the Ojibway Indians, under the direction of Frederick Burton.

A course of six lecture concerts on "Modern Chamber Music," by Thomas Whitney Surette, will have for assisting artists, Miss Anna Otten, violin; Miss Clara Otten, piano; Miss Bostleman, 'cello; at the first, third and fifth lectures, and the Olive Meade String Quartet, at the second, fourth and sixth. These begin on September 29. Mr. Surette has also classes in the Institute School of Pedagogy. After January there will be three courses of lecture recitals, by Carl Fique, "Important Chapters in Musical History," beginning January 8; by Mrs. Mary Gregory Murray; "Searchlights in Modern Music Study," beginning February 14; by Mrs. Raymond Brown, of Chicago; "The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner," beginning March 23, and John C. Griggs, Ph. D.; "National Types of Song," beginning April 13. With the exception of Mrs. Brown's recitals which are to be three in number, each course will have six, and Dr. Griggs will have Miss Beatrice Shaw and Miss Susan Griggs, sopranos; M. W. Brines and Edward Strong, tenors, and Miss Leila Morse, for his assisting artists. Under the auspices of the German section of the department of philology, Carl Fique will give a lecture concert on "German Folk Songs" early in 1906.

P. W. Dykema, A. M., of the Ethical Culture School, Manhattan, will conduct a series of conferences on "Music Instruction," on Thursday afternoons, beginning October 19, and the usual sight-singing classes will be conducted by Wilbur A. Luyster, on Fridays, beginning October 13.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From .....

Address .....

Date .....

Mme. Gadski's first appearance this fall will be at one of the home concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

[20]

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
SEP 22 1905

MUSICAL OUTLOOK FOR COMING SEASON

Wide Variety of Concerts Scheduled with a Considerable Invasion of Foreigners.

SOME LECTURES IN BROOKLYN

Open the Institute's Course This Week. Kubelik Among the Coming Violinists.

It is rather more than likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in September, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the greatest living authorities on the esthetics of music, and in France is always in great demand as a lecturer on this subject. It is said of him that he possesses to a maximum degree that charm of diction and felicity of expression which is peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer. As he is the most distinguished master of French music that has ever come to this country there is a great desire to hear him talk on a subject on which he is an authority. Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsals and concerts in Boston on December 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 25.

The New York Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate this fall a new series of Tuesday evening symphony concerts, in addition to their customary series of Sunday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall of past seasons. The number of Sunday afternoon concerts has been increased from six to eight, and the performance of Sunday afternoon will be repeated on each following Tuesday evening. Herr Felix Weingartner, who will visit America in January, has consented to conduct two afternoon and two evening concerts. The complete schedule of dates is as follows:

Sunday afternoon concerts, November 12, 26, December 10, 17, January 7, 14, February 4, March 4; Tuesday evening concerts, November 14, 28, December 12, 19, January 9, 16, February 6, March 6.

In addition to the soloists for the Boston Symphony concerts in Brooklyn, so far as definitely arranged, are Harold Bauer, pianist; Willy Hess, violinist, and Mr. Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra.

Indeed a great galaxy of artists will be heard in the United States this coming winter. Marie Hall, the young English violinist, hardly out of her teens, is one of the first to be heard in New York. She will make her initial bow to an American audience in Carnegie Hall, on Wednesday evening, November 8, in a most attractive and pretentious programme, playing two concertos, those of Tschaikowski and Paganini. Her tour will be under the direction of Henry Wolfsohn.

Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, and pronounced the interpreter of the music of Mozart, will again visit our shores, this being his third visit. He will give a series of piano recitals in Mendelssohn Hall on November 14, 18 and 24. After these recitals Pugno will be heard with the different Symphony orchestras in Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago and New York and continue his tour to the Pacific coast, where he plays for the first time.

Other pianists who will be heard here in their own recitals and with orchestra are Adele Aus Der Ohe, from November until February and Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, surnamed the "Bundle of Nerves," "The Bernhardt of the Piano," who will tour from February and only for twenty concerts.

A new comer looking for pianistic honors is Minnie Coons, who appeared successfully in Berlin last year with the Philharmonic orchestra and who will make her debut here in her own orchestral concert in Carnegie Hall, on Tuesday evening, November 2.

Another great violinist who will revisit us is Hugo Heermann, who will be heard in this country from the middle of October until the middle of December.

Of the vocalists to be heard here, one of the most interesting figures will be Bessie Abott, the young American soprano, protegee of Jean de Reszke, and also his pupil, whose debut in the Grand Opera House in Paris a few years ago as Juliette made such a stir in the French capital. She will be heard in the beginning of December either in an orchestral concert or in the Metropolitan Opera House, as negotiations to that effect are now pending between Director Conried and Mr. Wolfsohn.

Mme. Kirkby Lunn, the English contralto, with that voice of remarkable range, last season's Kundry of the English "Parsifal" performances, returns for a short tour during the months of December, January and February. She will give song recitals, one in New York, and appear in the leading orchestral and choral concerts. Her reappearance will be with the New York Oratorio Society, in "The Messiah" performances at Christmas time. She will sing the same work with the Apollo Club in Chicago also.

Muriel Foster, another eminent English contralto, will return in February and remain until May. She will begin her tour in San Francisco on February 4 and later come East to sing with the leading orchestras and New York Oratorio Society, when she will sing the part of Delilah in Saint-Saens operatic oratorio, "Samson and Delilah," on April 3. Miss Foster has been reengaged as leading contralto of the Cincinnati May festival, where she will sing Elgar's "Apostles" and his "Dream of Gerontius" under the composer's baton.

Guiseppe Campanari, the popular baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made such a marked success last season on his concert tour that he will continue on the same lines this coming season. He will head his own company for a limited tour in October and part of November. He will open the Pittsburg series of symphony concerts, and will sing for the first time in New York in two years, with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch, conductor, on November 26 and 28. Campanari wil linclude the Pacific Coast in his itinerary this season.

Ben Davies, the Welsh tenor, best known in oratorio and song recitals, returns early in March, and will remain until May, singing in the leading festivals, as well as with the Pittsburg Orchestra, Boston Symphony and Boston Handel and Haydn Society. His reentree in New York will be in a song recital.

Herbert Witherspoon, the American basso, whose sensational success in London last spring the critics compare to that of Plancon, will be heard in a recital in New York early in November, repeating his London programme. Mr. Witherspoon's tour will open at the coming Worcester Festival late this month, where he is engaged as leading basso for the third consecutive year. All the important choral societies have engaged this sterling orchestra for their "Messiah" performances, including the Chicago Apollo Club.

Other American artists who will sing prominently in this coming season of music will be Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, whose star of success is rapidly traveling heavenward; Mrs. Hissem De Moss, one of our most artistic and conscientious sopranos; Janet Spencer, contralto; Edward Johnson, tenor; Theodore Van Yorx, tenor; Gwylim Miles, baritone, and Frank Croxton, basso.

A pleasant echo of the success achieved by the Kneisel Quartet in Europe last year has just reached the ears of that organization. It comes in the form of an invitation from the Societe Philharmonique de Paris to give a concert under its auspices next February. The letter, couched in complimentary terms, was written on behalf of the society, whose concerts of chamber music are the most aristocratic as well as artistic affairs of their kind in the French capital by M. Emanuel Rey. Unfortunately, the newly

...aper Cutting Bureau in the World

MUSICAL OUTLOOK FOR COMING SEASON

Wide Variety of Concerts Scheduled with a Considerable Invasion of Foreigners.

SOME LECTURES IN BROOKLYN

Open the Institute's Course This Week. Kubelik Among the Coming Violinists.

It is rather more than likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in September, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the greatest living authorities on the esthetics of music, and in France is always in great demand as a lecturer on this subject. It is said of him that he possesses to a maximum degree that charm of diction and felicity of expression which is peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer. As he is the most distinguished master of French music that has ever come to this country there is a great desire to hear him talk on a subject on which he is an authority. Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsals and concerts in Boston on December 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 25.

The New York Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate this fall a new series of Tuesday evening symphony concerts, in addition to their customary series of Sunday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall of past seasons. The number of Sunday afternoon concerts has been increased from six to eight, and the performance of Sunday afternoon will be repeated on each following Tuesday evening. Herr Felix Weingartner, who will visit America in January, has consented to conduct two afternoon and two evening concerts. The complete schedule of dates is as follows:

Sunday afternoon concerts, November 12, 26, December 10, 17, January 7, 14, February 4, March 4; Tuesday evening concerts, November 14, 28, December 12, 19, January 9, 16, February 6, March 6.

[21]

MUSICAL OUTLOOK FOR COMING SEASON

Wide Variety of Concerts Scheduled with a Considerable Invasion of Foreigners.

SOME LECTURES IN BROOKLYN

Open the Institute's Course This Week. Kubelik Among the Coming Violinists.

It is rather more than likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in September, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the greatest living authorities on the esthetics of music, and in France is always in great demand as a lecturer on this subject. It is said of him that he possesses to a maximum degree that charm of diction and felicity of expression which is peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer. As he is the most distinguished master of French music that has ever come to this country there is a great desire to hear him talk on a subject on which he is an authority. Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsals and concerts in Boston on December 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 25.

The New York Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate this fall a new series of Tuesday evening symphony concerts, in addition to their customary series of Sunday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall of past seasons. The number of Sunday afternoon concerts has been increased from six to eight, and the performance of Sunday afternoon will be repeated on each following Tuesday evening. Herr Felix Weingartner, who will visit America in January, has consented to conduct two afternoon and two evening concerts. The complete schedule of dates is as follows:

Sunday afternoon concerts, November 12, 26, December 10, 17, January 7, 14, February 4, March 4; Tuesday evening concerts, November 14, 28, December 12, 19, January 9, 16, February 6, March 6.

In addition to the soloists for the Boston Symphony concerts in Brooklyn, so far as definitely arranged, are Harold Bauer, pianist; Willy Hess, violinist, and Mr. Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra.

Indeed a great galaxy of artists will be heard in the United States this coming winter. Marie Hall, the young English violinist, hardly out of her teens, is one of the first to be heard in New York. She will make her initial bow to an American audience in Carnegie Hall, on Wednesday evening, November 8, in a most attractive and pretentious programme, playing two concertos, those of Tschaikowski and Paganini. Her tour will be under the direction of Henry Wolfsohn.

Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, and pronounced the interpreter of the music of Mozart, will again visit our shores, this being his third visit. He will give a series of piano recitals in Mendelssohn Hall on November 14, 18 and 24. After these recitals Pugno will be heard with the different Symphony orchestras in Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago and New York and continue his tour to the Pacific coast, where he plays for the first time.

Other pianists who will be heard here in their own recitals and with orchestra are Adele Aus Der Ohe, from November until February and Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, surnamed the "Bundle of Nerves," "The Bernhardt of the Piano," who will tour from February and only for twenty concerts.

A new comer looking for pianistic honors is Minnie Coons, who appeared successfully in Berlin last year with the Philharmonic orchestra and who will make her debut here in her own orchestral concert in Carnegie Hall, on Tuesday evening, November 2.

Another great violinist who will revisit us is Hugo Heermann, who will be heard in this country from the middle of October until the middle of December.

Of the vocalists to be heard here, one of the most interesting figures will be Bessie Abott, the young American soprano, protegee of Jean de Reszke, and also his pupil, whose debut in the Grand Opera House in Paris a few years ago as Juliette made such a stir in the French capital. She will be heard in the beginning of December either in an orchestral concert or in the Metropolitan Opera House, as negotiations to that effect are now pending between Director Conried and Mr. Wolfsohn.

Mme. Kirkby Lunn, the English contralto, with that voice of remarkable range, last season's Kundry of the English "Parsifal" performances, returns for a short tour during the months of December, January and February. She will give song recitals, one in New York, and appear in the leading orchestral and choral concerts. Her reappearance will be with the New York Oratorio Society, in "The Messiah" performances at Christmas time. She will sing the same work with the Apollo Club in Chicago also.

Muriel Foster, another eminent English contralto, will return in February and remain until May. She will begin her tour in San Francisco on February 4 and later come East to sing with the leading orchestras and New York Oratorio Society, when she will sing the part of Delilah in Saint-Saens operatic oratorio, "Samson and Delilah," on April 3. Miss Foster has been reengaged as leading contralto of the Cincinnati May festival, where she will sing Elgar's "Apostles" and his "Dream of Gerontius" under the composer's baton.

Guiseppe Campanari, the popular baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made such a marked success last season on his concert tour that he will continue on the same lines this coming season. He will head his own company for a limited tour in October and part of November. He will open the Pittsburg series of symphony concerts, and will sing for the first time in New York in two years, with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch, conductor, on November 26 and 28. Campanari wil linclude the Pacific Coast in his itinerary this season.

Ben Davies, the Welsh tenor, best known in oratorio and song recitals, returns early in March, and will remain until May, singing in the leading festivals, as well as with the Pittsburg Orchestra, Boston Symphony and Boston Handel and Haydn Society. His reentree in New York will be in a song recital.

Herbert Witherspoon, the American basso, whose sensational success in London last spring the critics compare to that of Plancon, will be heard in a recital in New York early in November, repeating his London programme. Mr. Witherspoon's tour will open at the coming Worcester Festival late this month, where he is engaged as leading basso for the third consecutive year. All the important choral societies have engaged this sterling orchestra for their "Messiah" performances, including the Chicago Apollo Club.

Other American artists who will sing prominently in this coming season of music will be Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, whose star of success is rapidly traveling heavenward; Mrs. Hissem De Moss, one of our most artistic and conscientious sopranos; Janet Spencer, contralto; Edward Johnson, tenor; Theodore Van Yorx, tenor; Gwylim Miles, baritone, and Frank Croxton, basso.

A pleasant echo of the success achieved by the Kneisel Quartet in Europe last year has just reached the ears of that organization. It comes in the form of an invitation from the Societe Philharmonique de Paris to give a concert under its auspices next February. The letter, couched in complimentary terms, was written on behalf of the society, whose concerts of chamber music are the most aristocratic as well as artistic affairs of their kind in the French capital by M. Emanuel Rey. Unfortunately, the newly

per Cutting Bureau in the World

MUSICAL OUTLOOK FOR COMING SEASON

Wide Variety of Concerts Scheduled with a Considerable Invasion of Foreigners.

SOME LECTURES IN BROOKLYN

Open the Institute's Course This Week. Kubelik Among the Coming Violinists.

It is rather more than likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in September, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the greatest living authorities on the esthetics of music, and in France is always in great demand as a lecturer on this subject. It is said of him that he possesses to a maximum degree that charm of diction and felicity of expression which is peculiar to French literary men. Already inquiries have been received from different colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer. As he is the most distinguished master of French music that has ever come to this country there is a great desire to hear him talk on a subject on which he is an authority. Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsals and concerts in Boston on December 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 25.

The New York Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate this fall a new series of Tuesday evening symphony concerts, in addition to their customary series of Sunday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall of past seasons. The number of Sunday afternoon concerts has been increased from six to eight, and the performance of Sunday afternoon will be repeated on each following Tuesday evening. Herr Felix Weingartner, who will visit America in January, has consented to conduct two afternoon and two evening concerts. The complete schedule of dates is as follows:

Sunday afternoon concerts, November 12, 26, December 10, 17, January 7, 14, February 4, March 4; Tuesday evening concerts, November 14, 28, December 12, 19, January 9, 16, February 6, March 6.

In addition to the soloists for the Boston Symphony concerts in Brooklyn, so far as definitely arranged, are Harold Bauer, pianist; Willy Hess, violinist, and Mr. Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra.

Indeed a great galaxy of artists will be heard in the United States this coming winter. Marie Hall, the young English violinist, hardly out of her teens, is one of the first to be heard in New York. She will make her initial bow to an American audience in Carnegie Hall, on Wednesday evening, November 8, in a most attractive and pretentious programme, playing two concertos, those of Tschaikowski and Paganini. Her tour will be under the direction of Henry Wolfsohn.

Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, and pronounced the interpreter of the music of Mozart, will again visit our shores, this being his third visit. He will give a series of piano recitals in Mendelssohn Hall on November 14, 18 and 24. After these recitals Pugno will be heard with the different Symphony orchestras in Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago and New York and continue his tour to the Pacific coast, where he plays for the first time.

Other pianists who will be heard here in their own recitals and with orchestra are Adele Aus Der Ohe, from November until February and Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, surnamed the "Bundle of Nerves," "The Bernhardt of the Piano," who will tour from February and only for twenty concerts.

A new comer looking for pianistic honors is Minnie Coons, who appeared successfully in Berlin last year with the Philharmonic orchestra and who will make her debut here in her own orchestral concert in Carnegie Hall, on Tuesday evening, November 2.

Another great violinist who will revisit us is Hugo Heermann, who will be heard in this country from the middle of October until the middle of December.

Of the vocalists to be heard here, one of the most interesting figures will be Bessie Abott, the young American soprano, protegee of Jean de Reszke, and also his pupil, whose debut in the Grand Opera House in Paris a few years ago as Juliette made such a stir in the French capital. She will be heard in the beginning of December either in an orchestral concert or in the Metropolitan Opera House, as negotiations to that effect are now pending between Director Conried and Mr. Wolfsohn.

Mme. Kirkby Lunn, the English contralto, with that voice of remarkable range, last season's Kundry of the English "Parsifal" performances, returns for a short tour during the months of December, January and February. She will give song recitals, one in New York, and appear in the leading orchestral and choral concerts. Her reappearance will be with the New York Oratorio Society, in "The Messiah" performances at Christmas time. She will sing the same work with the Apollo Club in Chicago also.

Muriel Foster, another eminent English contralto, will return in February and remain until May. She will begin her tour in San Francisco on February 4 and later come East to sing with the leading orchestras and New York Oratorio Society, when she will sing the part of Delilah in Saint-Saens operatic oratorio, "Samson and Delilah," on April 3. Miss Foster has been reengaged as leading contralto of the Cincinnati May festival, where she will sing Elgar's "Apostles" and his "Dream of Gerontius" under the composer's baton.

Guiseppe Campanari, the popular baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made such a marked success last season on his concert tour that he will continue on the same lines this coming season. He will head his own company for a limited tour in October and part of November. He will open the Pittsburg series of symphony concerts, and will sing for the first time in New York in two years, with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch, conductor, on November 26 and 28. Campanari wil linclude the Pacific Coast in his itinerary this season.

Ben Davies, the Welsh tenor, best known in oratorio and song recitals, returns early in March, and will remain until May, singing in the leading festivals, as well as with the Pittsburg Orchestra, Boston Symphony and Boston Handel and Haydn Society. His reentree in New York will be in a song recital.

Herbert Witherspoon, the American basso, whose sensational success in London last spring the critics compare to that of Plancon, will be heard in a recital in New York early in November, repeating his London programme. Mr. Witherspoon's tour will open at the coming Worcester Festival late this month, where he is engaged as leading basso for the third consecutive year. All the important choral societies have engaged this sterling orchestra for their "Messiah" performances, including the Chicago Apollo Club.

Other American artists who will sing prominently in this coming season of music will be Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, whose star of success is rapidly traveling heavenward; Mrs. Hissem De Moss, one of our most artistic and conscientious sopranos; Janet Spencer, contralto; Edward Johnson, tenor; Theodore Van Yorx, tenor; Gwylim Miles, baritone, and Frank Croxton, basso.

A pleasant echo of the success achieved by the Kneisel Quartet in Europe last year has just reached the ears of that organization. It comes in the form of an invitation from the Societe Philharmonique de Paris to give a concert under its auspices next February. The letter, couched in complimentary terms, was written on behalf of the society, whose concerts of chamber music are the most aristocratic as well as artistic affairs of their kind in the French capital by M. Emanuel Rey. Unfortunately, the newly

[21]

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EAGLE
s ...

ARTISTS BOOKED FOR BROOKLYN INSTITUTE SEASON.

IN presenting its list of musical attractions for the coming season the Brooklyn Institute puts before the public names of the best artists of wide renown, such as Gadski, Eames, Kuelik, Marteau, Geraldy, Reisenauer, Joseffy, Bauer, Bispham, Pugno, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Damrosch Orchestra, the Kneisels and the Adamowskis. There are many others. Well known local artists also appear. Concerts, vocal and instrumental, grand opera, music drama, oratorios, recitals, conferences and instruction are offered, thus insuring variety sufficient to attract all forms of refined musical taste. As heretofore they will be housed in the Baptist Temple or in Association Hall. Just here it is well to remember that holders of season tickets for the Symphony concerts this season at the Baptist Temple, will be offered first choice of seats in the new Academy of Music in the season of 1906-07.

Perhaps the majority of Symphony subscribers have had this in mind, for the most of them have renewed their subscriptions and did so at the earliest opportunity, so that the financial success of the concerts is assured. Their artistic success is always assured. For this season Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, has secured Heinrich Warnke, of Munich, as first 'cellist; P. Sadony, a celebrated German player, as first basso, and Max Hess, as hornist. Mr. Warnke and Mr. Hess were members of the Kaim Orchestra in Munich, Mr. Warnke having been its first 'cellist for eight years. He is a pupil of Klengel and was the first teacher of Rudolph Krasselt whom he succeeds in the Boston Orchestra, which Krasselt left to prepare himself for conducting. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely upon the recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner. Mr. Hess is not a relative of Willy Hess, the first violin of the orchestra. The assisting artists have not yet been secured for the Boston Symphony concerts but it is certain that D'Indy, the French composer and conductor, will conduct the concert of January 12, at which two of the numbers will be his, and all by French composers. The other dates are November 16, December 8, February 16 and March 16. To add to the pleasure and instruction of these concerts the Institute has arranged for lecture recitals relative to the programme on Wednesday afternoons preceding them, the lecturers to be Henry E. Krehbiel, of the Tribune; Henry T. Finck, of the Evening Post; William J. Henderson, of the Sun; Charles M. Skinner, of the Eagle, and Louis C. Elson, of the Boston Advertiser. There will be assistant pianists.

Raphael Joseffy.

Alwin Schroeder.

The Damrosch Orchestra will be heard on February 8 and March 1, with Felix Weingartner as conductor of the first and Walter Damrosch of the second concert, for which Rafael Joseffy has been engaged as soloist. The soloist for the first concert is not yet secured.

David Bispham, barytone, and Miss Marie Nichols, violin, are to give the opening song

Mme. Gadski.

recital on October 26. On December 1 Mme. Gadski, soprano; Elison Van Hoose, tenor, with an assisting pianist, will be heard in recital, and on December 14 Mme. Emma Eames, soprano; Emilio Gogorza, barytone; Joseph Hollman, 'cellist, and Amherst Webber, piano, will appear in concert. Miss Marie Hall will give a violin recital on November 16 and Jan Kubelik on December 28. Henri Marteau, violin; Jan Gerardy, 'cello, and a pianist yet to be chosen will play on February 22; Maud Powell, violin, and Ben Davis, tenor, will join in programme on March 29, and the Imperial Male Quartet, with Miss Bessie Collier, violin, has been invited to give a concert at a date to be selected later. Other recitals are in preparation, but wait the arrival of artists or their agents before being announced.

Jan Kubelik.

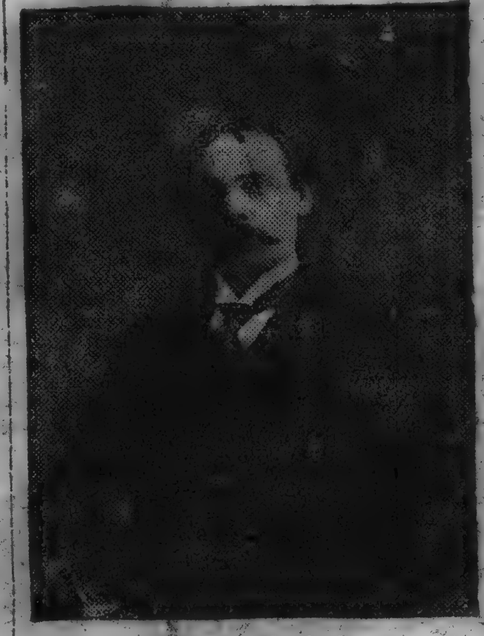
The series of chamber music concerts is also noteworthy. The Kneisels will give five—on November 2 and 23, December 21, February 1 and March 1, with assisting artists: Mrs. Thomas Tapper, piano; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello; Miss Mary Wood Chase, piano; Franz Kneisel, violin, and Rudolph Ganz, piano. Single concerts will be given by the Olive Meade Quartet, assisted by Arthur Foote, on January 18, and the Adamowski Trio (Mme. Szumowska, piano), on April 5.

"The Messiah" will be presented as usual



Franz Kneisel.

at the Christmas season by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, which society is also to be heard late in the spring, and choral concerts will be given by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, Hugo Steinbruch, conductor, on March 22, and the Arion Society of Brooklyn, Arthur Claassen, conductor, on April 19.

By arrangement with Henry W. Savage, Institute members are to have the advantage of special rates for grand opera in English at the New Montauk Theater the week of October 2. The following week the Tyrolean Alpine Singers, from Zillerthal, Tyrol, Herr Franz Rainer, director, will give concerts on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, with matinees on Wednesday and Friday at 4 P.M. These will be their first public concerts in New York this season. Sometime after January the Hiawatha Music Drama will be presented by the Ojibway Indians under the direction of Frederick Burton.

A course of six lecture concerts on "Modern Chamber Music," by Thomas Whitney Surette, will have for assisting artists Miss Anna Otten, violin; Miss Clara Otten, piano; Miss Bostleman, 'cello; at the first, third and fifth lectures, and the Olive Mead String Quartet, at the second, fourth and sixth. These begin on September 29. Mr. Surette has also classes in the Institute School of Pedagogy. After January there will be three courses of lecture recitals by Carl Fique—"Important Chapters in Musical History,"—beginning January 8; by Mrs.

Miss Maud Powell.

Mary Gregory Murray, "Searchlights in Modern Music Study," beginning February 14; by Mrs. Raymond Brown, of Chicago, "The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner," beginning March 28, and by John C. Griggs, Ph.D., "National Types of Song," beginning April 13. With the exception of Mrs. Brown's recitals, which are to be three in number, each course will have six, and Dr. Griggs will have Miss Beatrice Shaw and Miss Susan Griggs, sopranos; M. W. Brines and Edward Strong, tenors, and Miss Leila Morse for his assisting artists. Under the auspices of the German section of the department of philology, Carl Fique will give a lecture concert on "German Folk Songs," early in 1906.

P. W. Dykema, A.M., of the Ethical Culture School, Manhattan, will conduct a series of conferences on "Music Instruction," on Thursday afternoons, beginning October 19, and the usual sight-singing classes will be conducted by Wilbur A. Luyster, on Fridays, beginning October 13.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World EAGLE
ess ...
22[illegible]

William Gerike, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming season. The work will have its first performance in this country at the Boston concerts on Dec. 29 and 30. Mr. Webber, who is to be one of the assisting artists with Madame Eames on her concert tour, will go to Boston to be present at the final rehearsals of his work and for its first performance as he has never heard it played in public, though it has been performed in Warsaw and also in London by the Henry J. Wood orchestra. Mr. Webber has written many successful compositions, principally songs, the most popular which is "La Premiere," which Madame Eames has included in her repertoire for her coming tour. His new opera "Morella" was successfully produced at the New Wonderland Theatre in London

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

ARTISTS BOOKED FOR BROOKLYN INSTITUTE SEASON.

IN presenting its list of musical attractions for the coming season the Brooklyn Institute puts before the public names of the best artists of wide renown, such as Gadski, Eames, Kuelik, Marteau, Geraldy, Reisenauer, Joseffy, Bauer, Bispham, Pugno, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Damrosch Orchestra, the Kneisels and the Adamowskis. There are many others. Well known local artists also appear. Concerts, vocal and instrumental, grand opera, music drama, oratorios, recitals, conferences and instruction are offered, thus insuring variety sufficient to attract all forms of refined musical taste. As heretofore they will be housed in the Baptist Temple or in Association Hall. Just here it is well to remember that holders of season tickets for the Symphony concerts this season at the Baptist Temple, will be offered first choice of seats in the new Academy of Music in the season of 1906-07.

Perhaps the majority of Symphony subscribers have had this in mind, for the most of them have renewed their subscriptions

Raphael Joseffy.

and did so at the earliest opportunity, so that the financial success of the concerts is assured. Their artistic success is always assured. For this season Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, has secured Heinrich Warnke, of Munich, as first 'cellist; P. Sadony, a celebrated German player, as first basso, and Max Hess, as hornist. Mr. Warnke and Mr. Hess were members of the Kalm Orchestra in Munich, Mr. Warnke having been its first 'cellist for eight years. He is a pupil of Klengel and was the first teacher of Rudolph Krasselt whom he succeeds in the Boston Orchestra, which Krasselt left to prepare himself for conducting. Mr. Warnke was engaged largely upon the recommendation of Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner. Mr. Hess is not a relative of Willy Hess, the first violin of the orchestra. The assisting artists have not yet been secured for the Boston Symphony concerts but it is certain that D'Indy, the French composer and conductor, will conduct the concert of January 12, at which two of the numbers will be his, and all by French composers. The other dates are November 10, December 8, February 16 and March 16. To add to the pleasure and instruction of these concerts the Institute has arranged for lecture recitals relative to the programme on Wednesday afternoons preceding them, the lecturers to be Henry E. Krehbial, of the Tribune; Henry T. Finck, of the Evening Post; William J. Henderson, of the Sun; Charles M. Skinner, of the Eagle, and Louis C. Elson, of the Boston Advertiser. There will be assistant pianists.

Alwin Schroeder.

The Damrosch Orchestra will be heard on February 8 and March 1, with Felix Weingartner as conductor of the first and Walter Damrosch of the second concert, for which Rafael Joseffy has been engaged as soloist. The soloist for the first concert is not yet secured.

David Bispham, barytone, and Miss Marie Nichols, violin, are to give the opening song

Mme. Gadski.

recital on October 26. On December 1 Mme. Gadski, soprano; Elison Van Hoose, tenor, with an assisting pianist, will be heard in recital, and on December 14 Mme. Emma Eames, soprano; Emilio Gogorza, barytone; Joseph Hollman, 'cellist, and Amherst Webber, piano, will appear in concert. Miss Marie Hall will give a violin recital on November 16 and Jan Kubelik on December 28. Henri Marteau, violin; Jan Gerardy, 'cello, and a pianist yet to be chosen will play on February 23; Maud Powell, violin, and Ben Davis, tenor, will join in programme on March 29, and the Imperial Male Quartet, with Miss Bessie Collier, violin, has been invited to give a concert at a date to be selected later. Other recitals are in preparation, but wait the arrival of artists or their agents before being announced.

Jan Kubelik.

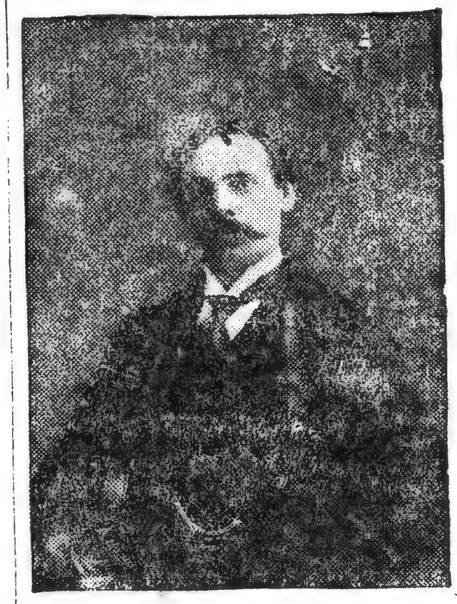
The series of chamber music concerts is also noteworthy. The Kneisels will give five—on November 2 and 23, December 21, February 1 and March 1, with assisting artists: Mrs. Thomas Tapper, piano; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello; Miss Mary Wood Chase, piano; Franz Kneisel, violin, and Rudolph Ganz, piano. Single concerts will be given by the Olive Meade Quartet, assisted by Arthur Foote, on January 18, and the Adamowski Trio (Mme. Szumowska, piano), on April 5.

"The Messiah" will be presented as usual



Franz Kneisel.

at the Christmas season by the Oratorio Society of Brooklyn, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, which society is also to be heard late in the spring, and choral concerts will be given by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, Hugo Steinbruch, conductor, on March 22, and the Arion Society of Brooklyn, Arthur Claassen, conductor, on April 19.

By arrangement with Henry W. Savage, Institute members are to have the advantage of special rates for grand opera in English at the New Montauk Theater the week of October 2. The following week the Tyrolean Alpine Singers, from Zillerthal, Tyrol, Herr Franz Rainer, director, will give concerts on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, with matinees on Wednesday and Friday at 4 P.M. These will be their first public concerts in New York this season. Sometime after January the Hiawatha Music Drama will be presented by the Ojibway Indians under the direction of Frederick Burton.

A course of six lecture concerts on "Modern Chamber Music," by Thomas Whitney Surette, will have for assisting artists Miss Anna Otten, violin; Miss Clara Otten, piano; Miss Bostleman, 'cello; at the first, third and fifth lectures, and the Olive Mead String Quartet, at the second, fourth and sixth. These begin on September 29. Mr. Surette has also classes in the Institute School of Pedagogy. After January there will be three courses of lecture recitals by Carl Fique—"Important Chapters in Musical History,"—beginning January 8; by Mrs.

Miss Maud Powell.

Mary Gregory Murray, "Searchlights in Modern Music Study," beginning February 14; by Mrs. Raymond Brown, of Chicago, "The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner," beginning March 23, and by John C. Griggs, Ph.D., "National Types of Song," beginning April 13. With the exception of Mrs. Brown's recitals, which are to be three in number, each course will have six, and Dr. Griggs will have Miss Beatrice Shaw and Miss Susan Griggs, sopranos; M. W. Brines and Edward Strong, tenors, and Miss Leila Morse for his assisting artists. Under the auspices of the German section of the department of philology, Carl Fique will give a lecture concert on "German Folk Songs," early in 1906.

P. W. Dykema, A.M., of the Ethical Culture School, Manhattan, will conduct a series of conferences on "Music Instruction," on Thursday afternoons, beginning October 19, and the usual sight-singing classes will be conducted by Wilbur A. Luyster, on Fridays, beginning October 13.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

William Gerike, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral noveltics for the coming season. The work will have its first performance in this country at the Boston concerts on Dec. 29 and 30. Mr. Webber, who is to be one of the assisting artists with Madame Eames on her concert tour, will go to Boston to be present at the final rehearsals of his work and for its first performance as he has never heard it played in public, though it has been performed in Warsaw and also in London by the Henry J. Wood orchestra. Mr. Webber has written many successful compositions, principally songs, the most popular which is "La Premiere," which Madame Eames has included in her repertoire for her coming tour. His new opera "Fiorella", was successfully produced at the new Waldorf Theater in London last spring.

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for Boston Symphony Orch

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From DAILY. WITNESS

Address

Date SEP 16 1905

Two factors go to make up the supremacy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in this city in its full strength, and for the first time in its history, on Oct. 2. They are the individual attainments of the performers, and the perfection of the discipline and rehearsal to which they are subjected. Ysaye said of the strings that they included a dozen or more great artists, and that he felt when playing before them that he was playing before men in his own rank. The oboist Georges Longy, is probably the first player of that instrument in the world. Andre Maquarre, first flute, is a soloist of the highest rank. The horn quartette of the orchestra is unique among the wind instruments of the world. The plan for this concert opens to-day.

Estab 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for Boston Symphony Orch

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From HERALD

Address EAL, CAN.

Date SEP 21 1905

THE GREATEST AMERICAN ORCHESTRA.

Not since 1892 has the Boston Symphony Orchestra been so far afield as in the trip which will bring it to this city on Monday, the second of next month. In all these years it has been kept amply busy by its work in New England, its ten New York concerts and its single concert a year in five of the great Atlantic coast cities. In Boston alone it has to give twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts per season. Thus the only way of adding a six-night tour to its programme was to assemble it several days earlier than usual. Its regular Boston season does not begin till Oct. 14. Although the Montreal date is so early in the season the number of applications for seats from Montrealers now in the country and at the seaside shows that society's holiday-making will be generally suspended on account of it. The concert will be in the Victoria Rink and subscription lists are now open at Nordheimer's and Archambault's, where the plan will open Saturday.

York, 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for Boston Symphony Orch

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From HERALD

Address CAL, CAN

Date

MR. GERICKE'S IDEA OF CONDUCTING.

For the Montreal concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Victoria Rink on October 2, Mr. Gericke is breaking one of his hitherto inviolable rules. His belief, based on thirty years experience as a conductor, is that a symphonic programme should be brought within an hour and a half and that is his constant practice in the east where concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are annual fixtures. But since the first announcement of the Montreal concert was made, so many requests have come in and such keen interest has been evinced that he decided for once to make an exception and arrange a programme which would play about two hours. This, he regards as the outside limit and in many respects it is an ideal length of programme, for it demands no sacrifice on the part of the orchestra for the soloist.

The programme for the Montreal concert is practically decided on and will be announced at a proper time. Certain details of it are yet to be settled, but in general it may be said that it will comprise a symphony and a contrasting mixture of classic and modern romantic music. Mr. Hess has not yet decided what concerto he will play.

The orchestra will be assembled two weeks before the trip begins and this time will be devoted to constant rehearsal, so that the preparation will be ample. Mr Gericke leaves nothing to chance. He derides the "inspiration of the moment." He believes that if a work is not played perfectly in rehearsal it will not be so played in a concert. It is partly due to this fact, indeed, that he is not a showy or sensational conductor. His energetic gesticulations are confined to the rehearsals where no one sees them except the men at whom they are aimed.

Estab 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR

Address

Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in the Victoria Rink in this city on October, contains a list of players which cannot be surpassed in any orchestra on this continent. Among its violins are Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben, every one of them known to music-lovers of Montreal either by concert appearances here or by the reputation of their solo playing or for their compositions. The violas include Ferir, considered by many the greatest viola player of the world, and Max Zach; the new first 'cellist is Warnke, who was imported a short time ago from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra of Munich, while behind him are Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Toellner, Nagel and Hadley. Longy, the oboist, is another artist with pretensions to rank among the world's great musicians. Maquarre, the first flute; Debuchy, the first clarinet; Hackebarth, the first horn; Schuecker, the first bassoon, all are known wherever orchestral music is a thing of interest. The Boston Symphony tours so seldom that one may almost say never. This trip, which is to last exactly one week and include exactly six cities around the Great Lakes, is the first it has taken in a dozen years.

Es , 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From Gazette

Address

Date SEP 16 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert in Victoria Hall, on Monday evening, October 2, will mark the opening of the coming musical season, has been called by Mr. W. J. Henderson, the eminent music critic of the New York Sun "an orchestra of virtuosi." Among the violins are such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben, every one of whom had made large reputations as soloists before they joined the orchestra, and they now appear on the regular lists of soloists of the Symphony concerts in Boston and other cities. Among the violas are Ferir and Max Zach; the new first 'cellist is Warnke, who came from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Toellner, Nagel and Hadley. Longy, the oboist; Debuchy, the first clarinet; Hackebarth, the first horn, and Schueckher, the bassoon; Maquarre, the first flute; Debuchy, the first clarinet; Hackebarth, the first horn, and Schueckher, the harpist.

Established:

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR

Address CAL, CAN.

Date SEP 18 1905

Music and Drama

All music-lovers have been awaiting with the greatest interest the program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Massey Music Hall on Tuesday evening, October 3rd, two weeks from to-morrow. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke has made a selection that is sure to appeal to the public. His first number will be Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C Major. The next number will be Spohr's Concerto for the violin in D Minor, No. 9. In this selection the soloist will be Prof. Willy Hess, the very eminent violinist. The other numbers are Weber's charming "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Hector Berlioz. This will be remembered as one of the most attractive features of the Pittsburg Orchestra program last year. Tschaikowsky's very interesting "Italian Caprice" will also be heard, and the program will conclude with Wagner's "Tannhauser," in the interpretation of which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned the world over. The subscription list is now open at Massey Hall.

Estab 884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR

Address HAL, CAN.

Date SEP 20 1905

VICTORIA RINK.

Professor Willy Hess, the first violin and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the only soloist on the programme which will be given by that organization at the Victoria Rink on Monday week. He will probably play a concerto of Spohr's. This is the second year Prof. Hess has spent in Boston, and during last season his solo playing gained him much appreciation. Professor Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and studied with Vieuxtemps and Joachim. He was for seven years concert master of the Berlin Orchestra of Liverpool, and for one year

Established

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From DAILY. WITNESS

Address

Date SEP 16 1905

Two factors go to make up the supremacy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in this city in its full strength, and for the first time in its history, on Oct. 2. They are the individual attainments of the performers, and the perfection of the discipline and rehearsal to which they are subjected. Ysaye said of the strings that they included a dozen or more great artists, and that he felt when playing before them that he was playing before men in his own rank. The oboist, Georges Longy, is probably the first player of that instrument in the world. Andre Marquarre, first flute, is a soloist of the highest rank. The horn quartette of the orchestra is unique among the wind instruments of the world. The plan for this concert opens to-day.

Esta 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR.

Address

Da

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in the Victoria Rink in this city on October, contains a list of players which cannot be surpassed in any orchestra on this continent. Among its violins are Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben, every one of them known to music-lovers of Montreal either by concert appearances here or by the reputation of their solo playing or for their compositions. The violas include Ferir, considered by many the greatest viola-player of the world, and Max Zach; the new first 'cellist is Warnke, who was imported a short time ago from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra of Munich, while behind him are Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. Longy, the oboist, is another artist with pre-eminent rank among the world's greatest musicians. Maquarre, the first flute; Debuchy, the first clarinet; Hackebarth, the first horn; Schuecker, the harpist, all are known wherever orchestral music is a thing of interest. The organization tours so seldom that one can almost say never. This trip, which is to last exactly one week and include exactly six cities around the great lakes, is the first it has taken in half a dozen years.

Es , 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR.

Address

Date SEP 20 1905

VICTORIA RINK.

Professor Willy Hess, the first violin and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the only soloist on the programme which will be given by that organization at the Victoria Rink on Monday week. He will probably play a concerto of Spohr's. This is the second year Prof. Hess has spent in Boston, and during last season his solo playing gained him much appreciation. Professor Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and studied with Vieuxtemps and Joachim. He was for seven years concert master of the Halle Orchestra of Liverpool, and for one year professor of the Royal Academy, which post he left to go to Boston.

Establishe

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From HERALD

Address

Date SEP 21 1905

THE GREATEST AMERICAN ORCHESTRA.

Not since 1893 has the Boston Symphony Orchestra been so far afield as in the trip which will bring it to this city on Monday, the second of next month. In all these years it has been kept amply busy by its work in New England, its ten New York concerts and its single concert a year in five of the great Atlantic coast cities. In Boston alone it has to give twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts per season. Thus the only way of adding a six-night tour to its programme was to assemble it several days earlier than usual. Its regular Boston season does not begin till Oct. 14. Although the Montreal date is so early in the season the number of applications for seats from Montrealers now in the country and at the seaside shows that society's holiday-making will be generally suspended on account of it. The concert will be in the Victoria Rink and subscription lists are now open at Nordheimer's and Archambault's, where the plan will open Saturday.

York, 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From Gazette

Address

Date 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert in Victoria Hall, on Monday evening, October 2, will mark the opening of the coming musical season, has been called by Mr. W. J. Henderson, the eminent music critic of the New York Sun "an orchestra of virtuosi." Among the violins are such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben, every one of whom had made large reputations as soloists before they joined the orchestra, and they now appear on the regular lists of soloists of the Symphony concerts in Boston and other cities. Among the violas are Ferir and Max Zach; and among the cellists Warnke, the new first cellist, who come from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. Nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute; Debuchy, the first clarinet; Hackebarth, the first horn, and Schuecker, the harpist.

Established: remanus.

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date

MR. GERICKE'S IDEA OF CONDUCTING.

For the Montreal concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Victoria Rink on October 2, Mr. Gericke is breaking one of his hitherto inviolable rules. His belief, based on thirty years experience as a conductor, is that a symphonic programme should be brought within an hour and a half and that is his constant practice in the east where concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are annual fixtures. But since the first announcement of the Montreal concert was made, so many requests have come in and such keen interest has been evinced that he decided for once to make an exception and arrange a programme which would play about two hours. This, he regards as the outside limit and in many respects it is an ideal length of programme, for it demands no sacrifice on the part of the orchestra for the soloist.

The programme for the Montreal concert is practically decided on and will be announced at a proper time. Certain details of it are yet to be settled, but in general it may be said that it will comprise a symphony and a contrasting mixture of classic and modern romantic music. Mr. Hess has not yet decided what concerto he will play.

The orchestra will be assembled two weeks before the trip begins and this time will be devoted to constant rehearsal, so that the preparation will be ample. Mr Gericke leaves nothing to chance. He derides the "inspiration of the moment." He believes that if a work is not played perfectly in rehearsal it will not be so played in a concert. It is partly due to this fact, indeed, that he is not a showy or sensational conductor. His energetic gesticulations are confined to the rehearsals where no one sees them except the men at whom they are aimed.

Estab 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR.

Address

Date 1905

Music and Drama

All music-lovers have been awaiting with the greatest interest the program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Massey Music Hall on Tuesday evening, October 3rd, two weeks from to-morrow. Mr. Wilhelm Gericke has made a selection that is sure to appeal to the public. His first number will be Schumann's Symphony No. 2 in C Major. The next number will be Spohr's Concerto for the violin in D Minor, No. 9. In this selection the soloist will be Prof. Willy Hess, the very eminent violinist. The other numbers are Weber's charming "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Hector Berlioz. This will be remembered as one of the most attractive features of the Pittsburg Orchestra program last year. Tschaikowsky's very interesting "Italian Caprice" will also be heard, and the program will conclude with Wagner's "Tannhauser," in the interpretation of which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned the world over. The subscription list is now open at Massey Hall.

Estab 884

[23]

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for Boston Lynd

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From MAIL EMPIRE

Address

Date SEP 16 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert in Massey Hall on Oct. 3rd will mark the opening of the coming musical season, has been called by Mr. W. J. Henderson, the eminent music critic of the New York Sun, "an orchestra of virtuosi." It is a matter of common knowledge that no orchestra in the world commands the services of so many masters of the several instruments. Among the violins are such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben, every one of whom had made large reputations as soloists before they joined the orchestra, and they now appear on the regular lists of soloists of the symphony concerts in Boston and other cities. Among the violas are such men as Ferir and Max Zach, and among the 'cellists such men as Warnke, the new first 'cellist who comes from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. Such men as these have made the strings of the orchestra famous the world over. Nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute; Debuchy, the first clarionet; Hackebarth, the first horn, and Schuecker, the harpist. Nor is it merely that the orchestra contains so many great artists. The men, truly artistic sink their individuality in the ensemble so that the highest state of discipline is maintained and the perfection of execution attained. The subscription list is now open at the hall.

Est 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From STAR

Address

Date SEP 16 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant, in that without exception they confirm the opinion held here in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its equal. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now when a distinguished musician reaches America almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony.

One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss who, a year ago last spring conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.

Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne, and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe, and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such men as these. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing, and not a small part of the reputation the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these.

The first appearance in Canada of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place at Massey Hall, on Oct. 3rd. The subscribers' list is now open.

Est 1884

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

COURIER

From

Address

Date

Establish

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here on Wednesday evening, October 4th, will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may here be used in its fullest significance, because there is no orchestra in the world like the one [illegible] claims Boston as its home. It is a public institution in that it serves the public of Boston and the larger cities of the East to the number of tens of thousands. But it is a private institution in that it is, so to say, the personal propery of a private citizen of Boston, Mr. Henry L. Higginson. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organized in 1881 by Mr. Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music, as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members were to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purpose than the giving of Symphony concerts of the highest class.

Even Boston twenty-four years ago was compared with today living in musical darkness and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the very best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Prophesies of failure have come to naught, for now at the end of its first quarter century it stands at the head of the orchestras of the world and has in the East a splendid clientele which regularly fills the halls to capacity wherever it plays.

The orchestra as first constituted consisted of seventy men and the first conductor was George Henschel. The first concert was given on October 22, 1881. The last concert last season was numbered 2,289.

Under Mr. Henschel the orchestra did excellent work, but excellent musician that he was, Mr. Henschel lacked experience as conductor and the personnel of the orchestra left something to be desired. Accordingly in the fall of 1884 Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who was Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera in Vienna, and was conductor also of the Society of Friends of Music. With Mr. Gericke came much new blood in the way of young, talented and enthusiastic musicians, and from that day the orchestra has been accounted great. To Mr. Gericke is due chief credit for making the orchestra what it is. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will with all the technique and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends he gave the orchestra its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity and its beauty of tone which are not to be equaled in the world.

At the end of the season of 1887 and 1888, Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna and he was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a brilliant career which now has placed him in the ranks of the leading conductors of the world. Mr. Nikisch was with the orchestra for three years, when he returned to Europe and was succeeded for the next five years by Emil Paur. At the end of Mr. Paur's term of five years Mr. Gericke again became the conductor and was welcomed back with an enthusiasm rarely shown even to popular musicians. His success in the last seven years has been a duplicate of that won by him in his first term of service.

Since 1893 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinatti orchestras as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence, its personnel has constantly been strengthened, either expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent in the world. For this reason it has often been called an "Orchestra of Virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that sitting at the desks are violinists of highest rank. It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its violins. The principal violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the 'cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal 'cellist who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarionet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackarbarth

[24]

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

NEWS

n BUFFALO, N. Y.

ress SEP 21 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although distinctly an Eastern product and maintained primarily for the benefit of Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra whose coming concert here will mark the opening of the musical season, has been one of the chief factors in the development of music in the Middle West and this part of the country owes a debt of gratitude to it that is hardly realized now. For many thousands of persons who now form a part of that magnificent public which is supporting the art of music in the cities of the Middle West, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first that enabled them to realize what orchestra music in the large and best sense of the term means.

Organized in 1881, its first concert having been given on Oct. 22 of that year, the first five years were devoted entirely to Boston and some of the surrounding cities of New England. With the arrival in America of Mr. Gericke, (the successor of Mr. Henschel), in the fall of 1886, and with the rapid advance of the orchestra to perfection, the idea grew that there was a splendid field lying fallow in the West. At that time there were no good orchestras west of the Alleghanies—in fact the only other regularly constituted orchestra was the Philharmonic Society of New York. What orchestral music was heard was given by organizations which now would be called "scratch bands," that is to say, orchestras of occasion, organized for a tour, and to disband after it.

Manifestly artistic results could not be obtained from such means and from the West came requests that the Boston Symphony should give concerts in that part of the country. The problem was difficult. To carry 75 or 80 men around the country is an expensive operation, but it was finally decided to make the attempt.

Accordingly in the spring of 1886 a first tour of the Middle West was made. The success was astonishing. No sops were thrown to Cerberus of popular taste. The programmes were like those played in Boston, for Mr. Gericke who was then the conductor, knew no compromise between "good and almost as good." Yet the public responded in a manner which completely bewildered the sceptics, of whom there had been many. Everywhere the concerts were crowded with men and women eager to hear good music, who for the most part were hearing it adequately played for the first time in their lives.

The success of this tour was such, that similar tours were made in the spring of the next succeeding seven years, during the directorship of Mr. Gericke and of his successor, Mr. Nikisch.

Once awakened to the meaning of the orchestral music, the public began to start movements to have orchestras in different cities. Directly to the influence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be traced the foundation and prosperity of such admirable organizations as the permanent orchestras of Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, as well as similar local orchestras which for the past 10 years have been doing missionary work in the cause. It was the Boston Symphony Orchestra which taught the public the possibility and desirability of maintaining such orchestras. It was the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who showed during the early days of that organization that the inevitable deficits were matters of minor moment compared with the other substantial results obtained.

In his article in the Century Magazine last winter, Mr. Richard Aldrich, the eminent critic of the New York Times, said, in speaking of the orchestra and its founder, Mr. Henry L. Higginson:

"He (Mr. Higginson) has raised the standard of orchestral playing in this country immeasurably, and has created a taste and a demand for what was unknown before he began his work. . . . He has caused American music to be spoken of with respect and admiration by every European musician. And all music lovers of his own land ought to rise up and call him blessed."

It is almost needless to state again the date of the first concert, Wednesday evening, Nov. 4, and to add that the sale of single seats will open Tuesday morning, Sept. 26, at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' music store.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau

EXPRESS

BUFFALO, N. Y.

SEP 19 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On Thursday morning, at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store, the sale of seats will open for the two concerts to be given by Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall on October 4th and February 19th. This is a subscription sale for both concerts, no single seats being sold until the subscription is closed. The single-seat sale for the first concert opens on September 26th.

For the two concerts a reduced price is offered of $3 and $2.50, according to location, while single tickets are $2 and $1.50.

COURIER

BUFFALO, N.Y.

SEP 16 1905

Other cities [illegible] themselves fortunate to have [illegible] concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Buffalo is the only city [illegible] Alleghanies which has secured [illegible] first takes place at Convention [illegible]

Wednesday evening, October 4th; the second, on Monday evening, February 19th. Already the demand for seats is large for the information of those who make early reservations, it is announced that no seats for a single concert will be sold until after the subscription sale is closed. To secure the more desirable seats and also to get the advantage of the reduced price, it is best to send in applications for subscriptions without delay. These will be filed away and at the closing of the subscription sale will be filled in the order received. There will be no deviation from this rule, which insures the best seats to the early applicants. Such orders should be sent, accompanied by check or money order, to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, 26 Irving place, Buffalo. Under other conditions will reservations be made. Conductor Gericke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has assembled his men earlier this season than usual, for he wished to begin rehearsals ahead of time to prepare for the autumn tour. The eminent conductor of the greatest orchestra in America leaves nothing to chance and never ends his rehearsals until he has secured perfection, for he believes that a number imperfectly played at rehearsal will not be satisfactory, to him, at least, at the concert, and perfection is what he demands and secures. It is too early to announce the program for the first Buffalo concert, but it is now in preparation and will include a symphony and some of the more brilliant works of the modern romantic school. Prof. Willy Hess, the famous violinist and concert-meister of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist at the first concert. Professor Hess is the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartette, now in its second season. He is a musician of great ability, a student, and his interpretation of violin music makes him one of the leading artists of his time.

The First Established and Most Comp[lete] Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the Wo[rld]

ILLUSTRATED [illegible]

om

ldress

te

It is a matter for congratulation among Buffalo music lovers that this city is the only one west of the Alleghanies which will have two concerts this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first concert takes place at Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th, the second at Convention Hall, on Monday evening, February 19th. Already requests for seats for both performances are pouring in, and in response to the demand, it is announced that no seats for a single performance will be sold until the expiration of the subscription sale. To secure the more desirable seats and also to gain the advantage of the reduction in price, it is advisable to send in applications for subscriptions without delay. Such applications, accompanied by checks or money orders, will be honored in the order they are received. They should be addressed to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, No. 26 Irving Place, Buffalo. No reservations will be made except upon these conditions and the policy of filing applications in the order received will be strictly adhered to. Mr. Gericke, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has assembled his men much earlier than usual this season in order to prepare for this autumn tour, a tour arranged in response to a tremendous demand. Mr. Gericke has secured ample time for rehearsals, for he is a careful conductor and leaves nothing to chance, believing that if a work is not played perfectly in rehearsal it will not be played perfectly at the concert and perfection is what he demands. The program for the first Buffalo concert is now in course of preparation, and, while it is too early to announce it yet, it will be one of great interest, including a symphony and some of the highly modern music. Prof. Willy Hess, the famous violinist and concert-meister of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist at the opening concert. He is the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, now entered upon its second season, a brilliant musician and one of the most exquisite interpreters of violin compositions ever heard in America. This is the musical treat which Buffalo has secured this season because of the generosity of the men and women who raised a guarantee for the purpose of bringing the Boston Symphony Orchestra here.

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for 13

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

EMPIRE

From .....

Address .....

Date .....

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert in Massey Hall on Oct. 3rd will mark the opening of the coming musical season, has been called by Mr. W. J. Henderson, the eminent music critic of the New York Sun, "an orchestra of virtuosi." It is a matter of common knowledge that no orchestra in the world commands the services of so many masters of the several instruments. Among the violins are such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben, every one of whom had made large reputations as soloists before they joined the orchestra, and they now appear on the regular lists of soloists of the symphony concerts in Boston and other cities. Among the violas are such men as Ferir and Max Zach, and among the 'cellists such men as Warnke, the new first 'cellist who comes from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. Such men as these have made the strings of the orchestra famous the world over. Nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute; Debuchy, the first clarionet; Hackebarth, the first horn, and Schuecker, the harpist. Nor is it merely that the orchestra contains so many great artists. The men, truly artistic sink their individuality in the ensemble so that the highest state of discipline is maintained and the perfection of execution attained. The subscription list is now open at the hall.

Est. 1884

TELEPHONE 1118-GRAMERCY

Intended for .....

"O wad some power the giftie gi'e us
To see oursel's as ithers see us."

HENRY ROMEIKE, Inc.

33 UNION SQUARE, BROADWAY

CABLE ADDRESS, "ROMEIKE," NEW YORK — NEW YORK

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

STAR

From .....

Address .....

SEP 1905

Date .....

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant, in that without exception they confirm the opinion held here in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its equal. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now when a distinguished musician reaches America almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony.

One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss who, a year ago last spring conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.

Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne, and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe, and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such men as these. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing, and not a small part of the reputation the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these.

The first appearance in Canada of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place at Massey Hall, on Oct. 3rd. The subscribers' list is now open.

Est. 1884

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

EMPIRE

From .....

Address .....

Date .....

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here on Wednesday evening, October 4th, will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may here be used in its fullest significance, because there is no orchestra in the world like the one which claims Boston as its home. It is a public institution in that it serves the public of Boston and the larger cities of the East to the number of tens of thousands. But it is a private institution in that it is, so to say, the personal propery of a private citizen of Boston, Mr. Henry L. Higginson. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organized in 1881 by Mr. Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music, as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members were to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purpose than the giving of Symphony concerts of the highest class.

Even Boston twenty-four years ago was compared with today living in musical darkness and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the very best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Prophesies of failure have come to naught, for now at the end of its first quarter century it stands at the head of the orchestras of the world and has in the East a splendid clientele which regularly fills the halls to capacity wherever it plays.

The orchestra as first constituted consisted of seventy men and the first conductor was George Henschel. The first concert was given on October 22, 1881. The last concert last season was numbered 2,289.

Under Mr. Henschel the orchestra did excellent work, but excellent musician that he was, Mr. Henschel lacked experience as conductor and the personnel of the orchestra left something to be desired. Accordingly in the fall of 1884 Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who was Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera in Vienna, and was conductor also of the Society of Friends of Music. With Mr. Gericke came much new blood in the way of young, talented and enthusiastic musicians, and from that day the orchestra has been accounted great. To Mr. Gericke is due chief credit for making the orchestra what it is. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will with all the technique and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends he gave the orchestra its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity and its beauty of tone which are not to be equaled in the world.

At the end of the season of 1887 and 1888, Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna and he was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a brilliant career which now has placed him in the ranks of the leading conductors of the world. Mr. Nikisch was with the orchestra for three years, when he returned to Europe and was succeeded for the next five years by Emil Paur. At the end of Mr. Paur's term of five years Mr. Gericke again became the conductor and was welcomed back with an enthusiasm rarely shown even to popular musicians. His success in the last seven years has been a duplicate of that won by him in his first term of service.

Since 1893 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinatti orchestras as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence, its personnel has constantly been strengthened, either expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent in the world. For this reason it has often been called an "Orchestra of Virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that sitting at the desks are violinists of highest rank. It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its violins. The principal violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the 'cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal 'cellist who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarionet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackerbarth

[24]

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

NEWS

n .....

ress .....

e .....

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although distinctly an Eastern product and maintained primarily for the benefit of Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra whose coming concert here will mark the opening of the musical season, has been one of the chief factors in the development of music in the Middle West and this part of the country owes a debt of gratitude to it that is hardly realized now. For many thousands of persons who now form a part of that magnificent public which is supporting the art of music in the cities of the Middle West, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first that enabled them to realize what orchestra music in the large and best sense of the term means.

Organized in 1881, its first concert having been given on Oct. 22 of that year, the first five years were devoted entirely to Boston and some of the surrounding cities of New England. With the arrival in America of Mr. Gericke, (the successor of Mr. Henschel), in the fall of 1886, and with the rapid advance of the orchestra to perfection, the idea grew that there was a splendid field lying fallow in the West. At that time there were no good orchestras west of the Alleghanies—in fact the only other regularly constituted orchestra was the Philharmonic Society of New York. What orchestral music was heard was given by organizations which now would be called "scratch bands," that is to say, orchestras of occasion, organized for a tour, and to disband after it.

Manifestly artistic results could not be obtained from such means and from the West came requests that the Boston Symphony should give concerts in that part of the country. The problem was difficult. To carry 75 or 80 men around the country is an expensive operation, but it was finally decided to make the attempt.

Accordingly in the spring of 1886 a first tour of the Middle West was made. The success was astonishing. No sops were thrown to Cerberus of popular taste. The programmes were like those played in Boston, for Mr. Gericke who was then the conductor, knew no compromise between "good and almost as good." Yet the public responded in a manner which completely bewildered the sceptics, of whom there had been many. Everywhere the concerts were crowded with men and women eager to hear good music, who for the most part were hearing it adequately played for the first time in their lives.

The success of this tour was such, that similar tours were made in the spring of the next succeeding seven years, during the directorship of Mr. Gericke and of his successor, Mr. Nikisch.

Once awakened to the meaning of the orchestral music, the public began to start movements to have orchestras in different cities. Directly to the influence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be traced the foundation and prosperity of such admirable organizations as the permanent orchestras of Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, as well as similar local orchestras which for the past 10 years have been doing missionary work in the cause. It was the Boston Symphony Orchestra which taught the public the possibility and desirability of maintaining such orchestras. It was the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who showed during the early days of that organization that the inevitable deficits were matters of minor moment compared with the other substantial results obtained.

In his article in the Century Magazine last winter, Mr. Richard Aldrich, the eminent critic of the New York Times, said, in speaking of the orchestra and its founder, Mr. Henry L. Higginson:

"He (Mr. Higginson) has raised the standard of orchestral playing in this country immeasurably, and has created a taste and a demand for what was unknown before he began his work. . . . He has caused American music to be spoken of with respect and admiration by every European musician. And all music lovers of his own land ought to rise up and call him blessed."

It is almost needless to state again the date of the first concert, Wednesday evening, Nov. 4, and to add that the sale of single seats will open Tuesday morning, Sept. 26, at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' music store.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

EXPRESS

N. Y.

19 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

On Thursday morning, at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store, the sale of seats will open for the two concerts to be given by Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall on October 4th and February 19th. This is a subscription sale for both concerts, no single seats being sold until the subscription is closed. The single-seat sale for the first concert opens on September 26th.

For the two concerts a reduced price is offered of $3 and $2.50, according to location, while single tickets are $2 and $1.50.

COMMERCIAL

SEP 16 1905

Other cities this season have considered themselves fortunate to have captured one concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Buffalo is the only city west of the Alleghanies which has secured two. The first takes place at Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th; the second, on Monday evening, February 19th. Already the demand for seats is large and for the information of those wishing to make early reservations, it is announced that no seats for a single concert will be sold until after the subscription sale is closed. To secure the more desirable seats and also to get the advantage of the reduced price, it is best to send in applications for subscriptions without delay. These will be filed away and at the opening of the subscription sale will be filed in the order received. There will be no deviation from this rule, which insures the best seats to the early applicants. Such orders should be sent, accompanied by check or money order, to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, 26 Irving place, Buffalo. Under no other conditions will reservations be made. Conductor Gericke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has assembled his men earlier this season than usual, for he wished to begin rehearsals ahead of time to prepare for the autumn tour. The eminent conductor of the greatest orchestra in America leaves nothing to chance and never ends his rehearsals until he has secured perfection, for he believes that a number imperfectly played at rehearsal will not be satisfactory, to him, at least, at the concert, and perfection is what he demands and secures. It is too early to annoounce the program for the first Buffalo concert, but it is now in preparation and will include a symphony and some of the more brilliant works of the modern romantic school. Prof. Willy Hess, the famous violinist and concert-meister of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist at the first concert. Professor Hess is the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartette, now in its second season. He is a musician of great ability, a student, and his interpretation of violin music makes him one of the leading artists of his time.

The First Established and Most Comp... Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the Wo...

ILLUSTRATED

om .....

ldress .....

ate .....

It is a matter for congratulation among Buffalo music lovers that this city is the only one west of the Alleghanies which will have two concerts this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The first concert takes place at Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th, the second at Convention Hall, on Monday evening, February 19th. Already requests for seats for both performances are pouring in, and in response to the demand, it is announced that no seats for a single performance will be sold until the expiration of the subscription sale. To secure the more desirable seats and also to gain the advantage of the reduction in price, it is advisable to send in applications for subscriptions without delay. Such applications, accompanied by checks or money orders, will be honored in the order they are received. They should be addressed to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, No. 26 Irving Place, Buffalo. No reservations will be made except upon these conditions and the policy of filing applications in the order received will be strictly adhered to. Mr. Gericke, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has assembled his men much earlier than usual this season in order to prepare for this autumn tour, a tour arranged in response to a tremendous demand. Mr. Gericke has secured ample time for rehearsals, for he is a careful conductor and leaves nothing to chance, believing that if a work is not played perfectly in rehearsal it will not be played perfectly at the concert, and perfection is what he demands. The program for the first Buffalo concert is now in course of preparation, and, while it is too early to announce it yet, it will be one of great interest, including a symphony and some of the highly modern music. Prof. Willy Hess, the famous violinist and concert-meister of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist at the opening concert. He is the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, now entered upon its second season, a brilliant musician and one of the most exquisite interpreters of violin compositions ever heard in America. This is the musical treat which Buffalo has secured this season because of the generosity of the men and women who raised a guarantee for the purpose of bringing the Boston Symphony Orchestra here.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ILLUSTRATED EXPRESS
From
Address
Date

A noteworthy addition to the faculty of the Chicago Musical College is Alexander von Fielitz, the German composer, who arrived in that city for the opening of the school fall term. The eminent musician is a native of Leipzig and music lovers are familiar with many of his famous compositions. He has written many original works for the piano and in his vocal compositions he exhibits an inexhaustible wealth of melodies. The music of some of his cycles is among the most beautiful that has emanated from any modern composer.

Since it was announced that Buffalo is to have two concerts the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several other cities have made requests that they may be visited about the same time the orchestra comes here in February. All these requests, however, have been denied for the very good reason that Buffalo was fortunate enough to get the one date on which the orchestra could in the midst of a busy season go so far from its home city.

The interest which has been aroused among the music lovers of this city by the announcement of the two concerts seems to increase each day. Numerous inquiries are being made regarding the subscription sale of seats for the two concerts. In reply to these the management announces that while the regular subscription sale will open on September 21st and continue for three days, mail orders for the subscription may be sent at any time to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, No. 26 Irving place. The orders must be accompanied by check or money order and they will be filed away in the order in which they are received, and when the time comes for allotting the seats they will be honored accordingly. This method of securing seats will be found most convenient and will assure good places. It looks now as if Convention Hall would be sold out for both concerts.

It is impossible at this time to make definite announcement concerning the programme of the first concert beyond the fact that Willy Hess will be the violin soloist. Mr. Gericke has been giving much time and thought to the programme and is not yet settled in his own mind concerning certain of the numbers. Of course, the principal number will be a symphony and the others will include some of the more brilliant works of the modern romantic school.

Address,
" NEW YORK
NEW YORK
First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER
From
Address
Date

Buffalo has cause to congratulate itself in being the only city west of the Alleghanies which will have two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The interest which has been aroused by the announcement that the great Boston orchestra was coming to this city twice has aroused the keenest interest in musical circles and the prospects are that the greater part of the house will be sold by subscription. It is well to recall that the first concert will be given in Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th, and the second concert at the same place on Monday evening, February 19th. In order to be sure to get the more desirable seats and at the same time take advantage of the reduction in price, it would be advisable to send in application for subscriptions at an early date. These, when accompanied by checks or money order, will be honored in the order in which they are received. They should be addressed to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, No. 26 Irving Place.

Preparations are making actively for the first concert, but it is not yet possible to make final announcement of the programme. It goes almost without saying that the many requests that are being made for special works cannot be granted, unless, indeed, it happens that some of them hit on the works that have been chosen by Mr. Gericke. As the orchestra has been enabled to assemble much earlier than usual ample time will be had for rehearsals. Mr. Gericke leaves nothing to chance. He believes that if a work is not played perfectly in rehearsal it cannot be so played in a concert. He has taken a special care in the choice of this programme for the first concert in Buffalo, and in making it as one which has been with him an inviolable rule, which is to limit his concerts to a maximum of two and a half. He realizes the conditions are different in Buffalo from what they are in New York and Boston, where concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are the rule of a season rather than an exception.

NEWS
From
Address
Date

Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 4.

In response to many inquiries that have been made regarding the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be given in Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, and Monday evening, Feb. 19, it is announced that mail orders for subscriptions for the two concerts will be received by Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, 26 Irving Place. The orders must be accompanied by checks or money orders, and they will be filed in the order in which they are received, so that in allotting the seats there will be absolute impartiality.

The interest already shown in the concerts is most gratifying to those who are undertaking to bring the great orchestra to Buffalo, and everything indicates that great houses will greet the musicians on both occasions. Certainly Buffalo is to be congratulated in having secured the Boston Orchestra. This is the only city west of the Alleghanies which will hear the orchestra twice during the season.

Many requests concerning the programme numbers are being received, and if all of them were granted the concert would last from sundown to sunup. It goes almost without saying that only such requests that happen to strike works chosen by Mr. Gericke can be granted. Mr. Gericke has given a great deal of time and thought to the first Buffalo programme and it may safely be promised that it will be one of great interest. It will, of course, contain a symphony and some of the highly modern music. The exact programme cannot be announced yet, as Mr. Gericke has not quite settled in his own mind concerning one or two of the numbers, and as it is not yet decided which violin concerto Willy Hess, the soloist, will play. Full details concerning the programme will be announced a little later.

As usual, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will furnish material for a string quartet this season, the quartet to be known as the Boston Symphony Quartet, and with one exception to be composed of the same instrumentalists who formed the quartet last season.

Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra and besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe he has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Prof. Willy Hess, concert-master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof. Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet in A minor by Sinding, op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert Etude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and a sextet for strings in M minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

Buys is a Dutchman of about 40 years. He has written much choral music and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam.

Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch, he is between 35 and 40 years old and has composed music in all forms.

Not the least interesting attraction of the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the soloist. It will be Professor Willy Hess' first appearance in Buffalo. Professor Hess is now beginning his second year as concert master of the Boston Orchestra, having given up most desirable positions and engagements in London and on the continent to do so. His success in America has been little short of sensational. As soloist he appeared last year with the orchestra before the very critical audiences of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and other of the larger cities of the East and everywhere he was proclaimed without a dissenting voice as one of the greatest violinists that had ever come to America.

Professor Hess rather regards himself as an American although his entire musical career has been spent in Europe. From 1865 to 1872 he lived in this country with his parents. In the latter year his father left America for Holland, taking his son with him, and his busy life in Europe prevented Professor Hess' return until last year.

Professor Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and like nearly all great violinists betrayed signs of his talent at a very early age. When his family returned to Holland in 1872 the boy, then 13, began his public appearances and on one occasion distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartet. A year later his family removed to Heidelberg and the young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France and in Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who [illegible]

In 1886 he accepted a post at the Conservatory in Rotterdam as professor and leader of the orchestra and also succeeded to the famous string quartet which had been led by Professor Wirth. Two years in Rotterdam were followed by seven as concert master of the Halle Orchestra in Manchester. During this time he also was conductor of the Philharmonic Society in Liverpool and did a great deal of concert work as a virtuoso.

Professor Hess left England in 1895 to become the head of the Conservatory of Music in Cologne where he also became the leader of the famous Gurzenich Quartet. This post he held until 1903, when he was called to London to become professor in the Royal Academy of Music, which post he gave up to come to Boston.

In this country Mr. Hess has scored such a success that his permanent residence here has become necessary. Buffalo musicians may well rejoice over the prospect of hearing this great artist.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
From
Address

Most gratifying in every respect has been the subscription sale for the two concerts which will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall on October 4 and February 19. The sale demonstrates beyond peradventure that Buffalo will welcome most eagerly the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A large part of Convention Hall has been sold by subscription for the two concerts, and there is practically no doubt that the sale for the first concert which will begin next Tuesday morning will tax the capacity of the house.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. The following is the programme:

Overture, "Sea-calm and prosperous Voyage," Op. 27..Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte ....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
I Allegro moderato.
II Adagio.
III Finale: Allegro energico.
Italian Caprice, Op. 45 ...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61 .....Schumann
I Sostenuto assai; Allegro, ma non troppo.
II Scherzo; Allegro Vivace.
III Adagio Espressivo.
IV Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is noted in the world of music for one thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and celles, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," one of the most beautiful compositions ever written for the violin. Melodious, graceful and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is a typical bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of an orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
From
Address
Date

Gerardy, the great Belgian 'cellist, who arrives in this country on the steamer Touraine, Nov. 2, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there Nov. 6.

He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Philadelphia. He will be heard in New York Nov. 22, at Carnegie Hall; afterwards with the Boston Symphony, and with the Philharmonic, and in a joint recital with Marteau.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
Buffalo, N. Y.
SEP 20 1903

GOOD BOOST FOR THINGS MUSICAL

Buffalo People are quick to back Effort to bring Boston Symphony here.

SURPRISE AND A DELIGHT

Begins to look as if musical Interests were about to climb after Years of Inanition.

With a new music hall for Buffalo under discussion and the announcement made that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is coming here for two concerts this season, it certainly looks as if musical interests in the city were taking a climb after years of inanition.

When the statement was first made that the Boston Symphony Orchestra was coming here, everyone was surprised and delighted, for it is twelve years since this, the finest orchestra in America and one of the greatest in the world, could be lured to Buffalo under any consideration whatever, and everybody was guessing what inducement had been brought to bear upon the management to secure this change of policy.

The very nature of the explanation does away with any suspicion that such a change has taken place; for there has been no radical departure from the orchestra's old rule, and there is no general plan to give concerts outside Boston and the circumscribed circle where the big organization goes each season. Buffalo gets the concerts through the united efforts of 40 men and women, who feel that with the artistic development of the city, as exemplified in its new Albright Art Gallery and in the project for a new music hall, the time is ripe to bring to Buffalo a musical organization of the highest standard.

So they joined forces, with the result that the orchestra gives two concerts here, the first at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, the second on February 19th.

Here are the names of those who have backed the enterprise, a backing strong enough, it would seem, to satisfy the most exacting:

Fred C. M. Lautz, Hobart Weed, Edmund Hayes, George P. Sawyer, Charles R. Huntley, Willis O. Chapin, Charles W. Goodyear, George Bleistein, Dr. Roswell Park, William B. Hoyt, Dr. John Parmenter, Dr. M. D. Mann, J. J. Albright, Joseph P. Dudley, William A. Rogers, Charles L. Gurney, Mrs. Frederick H. Stevens, William H. Glenny, Mrs. William Hamlin, Spencer Kellogg, H. M. Gerrans, August C. Esenwein, George K. Birge, Frank H. Goodyear, Howard A. Forman, J. J. McWilliams, S. M. Clement, Edwin A. Bell, H. H. Hewitt, Frank S. McGraw, Robert W. Pomeroy, Dudley M. Irwin, W. H. Gratwick, Pendennis White, George L. Williams, John R. H. Richmond, Harry Yates, Carleton Sprague, W. Perry Taylor, J. Ambrose Butler.

It is a long stride in the right direction to have the good things, the really good things, brought to Buffalo under such auspices. It means far more than a private enterprise, even granting that such attractions could be so secured, for it is significant of the higher development of the city when 40 of its residents join together in bringing the best that the country can supply, and putting it within the reach of almost everyone to hear and to enjoy. It is fostering the spirit in which the University of Buffalo is striving to achieve its arts department, for those who are back of this musical undertaking realize that as the city increases in size and in importance, its artistic growth should keep pace with its commercial strength and prosperity in order to have the best citizenship attained.

[25]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
rom ...TRATED ...PRESS
ddress ...
ate ...

A noteworthy addition to the faculty of the Chicago Musical College is Alexander von Fielitz, the German composer, who arrived in that city for the opening of the school fall term. The eminent musician is a native of Leipzig and music lovers are familiar with many of his famous compositions. He has written many original works for the piano and in his vocal compositions he exhibits an inexhaustible wealth of melodies. The music of some of his cycles is among the most beautiful that has emanated from any modern composer.

Since it was announced that Buffalo is to have two concerts the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several other cities have made requests that they may be visited about the same time the orchestra comes here in February. All these requests, however, have been denied for the very good reason that Buffalo was fortunate enough to get the one date on which the orchestra could in the midst of a busy season go so far from its home city.

The interest which has been aroused among the music lovers of this city by the announcement of the two concerts seems to increase each day. Numerous inquiries are being made regarding the subscription sale of seats for the two concerts. In reply to these the management announces that while the regular subscription sale will open on September 21st and continue for three days, mail orders for the subscription may be sent at any time to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, No. 26 Irving place. The orders must be accompanied by check or money order and they will be filed away in the order in which they are received, and when the time comes for allotting the seats they will be honored accordingly. This method of securing seats will be found most convenient and will assure good places. It looks now as if Convention Hall would be sold out for both concerts.

It is impossible at this time to make definite announcement concerning the programme of the first concert beyond the fact that Willy Hess will be the violin soloist. Mr. Gericke has been giving much time and thought to the programme and is not yet settled in his own mind concerning certain of the numbers. Of course, the principal number will be a symphony and the others will include some of the more brilliant works of the modern romantic school.

ADDRESS,
E," NEW YORK
NEW YORK
e First Established and Most Complete ppaper Cutting Bureau in the World

* * *

Buffalo has cause to congratulate itself in being the only city west of the Alleghanies which will have two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The interest which has been aroused by the announcement that the great Boston orchestra was coming to this city twice has aroused the keenest interest in musical circles and the prospects are that the greater part of the house will be sold by subscription.

It is well to recall that the first concert will be given in Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th, and the second concert at the same place on Monday evening, February 19th. In order to be sure to get the more desirable seats and at the same time take advantage of the reduction in price, it would be advisable to send in application for subscriptions at an early date. These, when accompanied by checks or money order, will be honored in the order in which they are received. They should be addressed to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, No. 26 Irving Place.

Preparations are making actively for the first concert, but it is not yet possible to make final announcement of the programme. It goes almost without saying that the many requests that are being made for special works cannot be granted, unless, indeed, it happens that some of them hit on works that have been chosen by Mr. Gericke. As the orchestra has been ordered to assemble much earlier than usual, ample time will be had for rehearsals. Mr. Gericke leaves nothing to chance. He believes that if a work is not played perfectly in rehearsal it will not be so played in a concert.

He has taken a special care in the choice of this programme for the first concert in Buffalo, and in making it as broken which has been with him an hitherto inviolable rule, which is to limit his concerts to a maximum of one hour and a half. He realizes the conditions are different in Buffalo from what they are in New York and Boston, where concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are the rule of a season rather than an exception.

* * *

...m ...
...ress ...
NEWS

Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 4.

In response to many inquiries that have been made regarding the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be given in Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, and Monday evening, Feb. 19, it is announced that mail orders for subscriptions for the two concerts will be received by Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, 26 Irving Place. The orders must be accompanied by checks or money orders, and they will be filed in the order in which they are received, so that in allotting the seats there will be absolute impartiality..

The interest already shown in the concerts is most gratifying to those who are undertaking to bring the great orchestra to Buffalo, and everything indicates that great houses will greet the musicians on both occasions. Certainly Buffalo is to be congratulated in having secured the Boston Orchestra. This is the only city west of the Alleghanies which will hear the orchestra twice during the season.

Many requests concerning the programme numbers are being received, and if all of them were granted the concert would last from sundown to sunup. It goes almost without saying that only such requests that happen to strike works chosen by Mr. Gericke can be granted. Mr. Gericke has given a great deal of time and thought to the first Buffalo programme and it may safely be promised that it will be one of great interest. It will, of course, contain a symphony and some of the highly modern music. The exact programme cannot be announced yet, as Mr. Gericke has not quite settled in his own mind concerning one or two of the numbers, and as it is not yet decided which violin concerto Willy Hess, the soloist, will play. Full details concerning the programme will be announced a little later.

As usual, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will furnish material for a string quartet this season, the quartet to be known as the Boston Symphony Quartet, and with one exception to be composed of the same instrumentalists who formed the quartet last season.

Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra and besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe he has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Prof. Willy Hess, concert-master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof. Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet in A minor by Sinding, op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert Etude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and a sextet for strings in M minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

Buys is a Dutchman of about 40 years. He has written much choral music and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam.

Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch, he is between 35 and 40 years old and has composed music in all forms.

Not the least interesting attraction of the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the soloist. It will be Professor Willy Hess' first appearance in Buffalo. Professor Hess is now beginning his second year as concert master of the Boston Orchestra, having given up most desirable positions and engagements in London and on the continent to do so. His success in America has been little short of sensational. As soloist he appeared last year with the orchestra before the very critical audiences of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and other of the larger cities of the East and everywhere he was proclaimed without a dissenting voice as one of the greatest violinists that had ever come to America.

Professor Hess rather regards himself as an American although his entire musical career has been spent in Europe. From 1865 to 1872 he lived in this country with his parents. In the latter year his father left America for Holland, taking his son with him, and his busy life in Europe prevented Professor Hess' return until last year.

Professor Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and like nearly all great violinists betrayed signs of his talent at a very early age. When his family returned to Holland in 1872 the boy, then 13, began his public appearances and on one occasion distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harfen Quartet. A year later his family removed to Heidelberg and the young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France and in Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad but conducted the orchestra for him at his first philharmonic concert there.

In the two years following 1876, Professor Hess worked with Joachim in Berlin, at the end of this time he received the valuable appointment of conductor of the Opera and Museum's Orchestra in Frankfurt-am-Main, where he worked for eight years in which time he did much teaching, founded a quartet and a famous trio of which the other members were Kwast and Hugo Becker.

In 1886 he accepted a post at the Conservatory in Rotterdam as professor and leader of the orchestra and also succeeded to the famous string quartet which had been led by Professor Wirth. Two years in Retterdam were followed by seven as concert master of the Halle Orchestra in Manchester. During this time he also was conductor of the Philharmonic Society in Liverpool and did a great deal of concert work as a virtuoso.

Professor Hess left England in 1895 to become the head of the Conservatory of Music in Cologne where he also became the leader of the famous Gurzenich Quartet. This post he held until 1903, when he was called to London to become professor in the Royal Academy of Music, which post he gave up to come to Boston.

In this country Mr. Hess has scored such a success that his permanent residence here has become necessary. Buffalo musicians may well rejoice over the prospect of hearing this great artist.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
rom ...
ddress ...

Most gratifying in every respect has been the subscription sale for the two concerts which will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall on October 4 and February 19. The sale demonstrates beyond peradventure that Buffalo will welcome most eagerly the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A large part of Convention Hall has been sold by subscription for the two concerts, and there is practically no doubt that the sale for the first concert which will begin next Tuesday morning will tax the capacity of the house.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. The following is the programme:

Overture, "Sea-calm and prosperous Voyage," Op. 27..Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte ....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
I Allegro moderato.
II Adagio.
III Finale: Allegro energico.
Italian Caprice, Op. 45 ...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61 .....Schumann
I Sostenuto assai; Allegro, ma non troppo.
II Scherzo; Allegro Vivace.
III Adagio Espressivo.
IV Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is noted in the world of music for one thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," one of the most beautiful compositions ever written for the violin. Melodious, graceful and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is a typical bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of an orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
rom ...
Address ...
Date ...

Gerardy, the great Belgian 'cellist, who arrives in this country on the steamer Touraine, Nov. 2, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there Nov. 6.

He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Philadelphia. He will be heard in New York Nov. 22, at Carnegie Hall; afterwards with the Boston Symphony, and with the Philharmonic, and in a joint recital with Marteau.

[25]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
ss ...

GOOD BOOST FOR THINGS MUSICAL

Buffalo People are quick to back Effort to bring Boston Symphony here.

SURPRISE AND A DELIGHT

Begins to look as if musical Interests were about to climb after Years of Inanition.

With a new music hall for Buffalo under discussion and the announcement made that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is coming here for two concerts this season, it certainly looks as if musical interests in the city were taking a climb after years of inanition.

When the statement was first made that the Boston Symphony Orchestra was coming here, everyone was surprised and delighted, for it is twelve years since this, the finest orchestra in America and one of the greatest in the world, could be lured to Buffalo under any consideration whatever, and everybody was guessing what inducement had been brought to bear upon the management to secure this change of policy.

The very nature of the explanation does away with any suspicion that such a change has taken place; for there has been no radical departure from the orchestra's old rule, and there is no general plan to give concerts outside Boston and the circumscribed circle where the big organization goes each season. Buffalo gets the concerts through the united efforts of 40 men and women, who feel that with the artistic development of the city, as exemplified in its new Albright Art Gallery and in the project for a new music hall, the time is ripe to bring to Buffalo a musical organization of the highest standard.

So they joined forces, with the result that the orchestra gives two concerts here, the first at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, the second on February 19th.

Here are the names of those who have backed the enterprise, a backing strong enough, it would seem, to satisfy the most exacting:

Fred C. M. Lautz, Hobart Weed, Edmund Hayes, George P. Sawyer, Charles R. Huntley, Willis O. Chapin, Charles W. Goodyear, George Bleistein, Dr. Roswell Park, William B. Hoyt, Dr. John Parmenter, Dr. M. D. Mann, J. J. Albright, Joseph P. Dudley, William A. Rogers, Charles L. Gurney, Mrs. Frederick H. Stevens, William H. Glenny, Mrs. William Hamlin, Spencer Kellogg, H. M. Gerrans, August C. Esenwein, George K. Birge, Frank H. Goodyear, Howard A. Forman, J. J. McWilliams, S. M. Clement, Edwin A. Bell, H. H. Hewitt, Frank S. McGraw, Robert W. Pomeroy, Dudley M. Irwin, W. H. Gratwick, Pendennis White, George L. Williams, John R. H. Richmond, Harry Yates, Carleton Sprague, W. Perry Taylor, J. Ambrose Butler.

It is a long stride in the right direction to have the good things, the really good things, brought to Buffalo under such auspices. It means far more than a private enterprise, even granting that such attractions could be so secured, for it is significant of the higher development of the city when 40 of its residents join together in bringing the best that the country can supply, and putting it within the reach of almost everyone to hear and to enjoy. It is fostering the spirit in which the University of Buffalo is striving to achieve its arts department, for those who are back of this musical undertaking realize that as the city increases in size and in importance, its artistic growth should keep pace with its commercial strength and prosperity in order to have the best citizenship attained.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
SEP 20 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA COMING

SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS WAS OPENED AT DENTON, COTTIER & DANIELS' THIS MORNING.

It isn't an easy thing to induce a big, prosperous organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra to leave its beloved city and undertake a road tour, and once that is arranged for it is even more difficult to induce the orchestra to return for a second concert; but this has been accomplished for Buffalo during the present season, and the reason why is now announced. The orchestra, the finest in America if not the finest in the world, comes here through the generosity of 40 prominent men and women of Buffalo.

Conjecture has been widespread all summer as to the inducements offered the orchestra this year, when it has refused for 12 years past to come to Buffalo; but now that the date for the first concert, to be held at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, is near, the explanation is made.

The names of the 40 men and women who have made possible the two concerts are as follows:

Fred C. M. Lautz, Hobart Weed, Edmund Hayes, George P. Sawyer, Charles R. Huntley, Willis O. Chapin, Charles W. Goodyear, George Bleistein, Dr. Roswell Park, William B. Hoyt, D. John Parmenter, Dr. M. D. Mann, J. J. Albright, Joseph P. Dudley, William A. Rogers, Charles L. Gurney, Mrs. Frederick H. Stevens, William H. Glenny, Mrs. William Hamlin, Spencer Kellogg, H. M. Gerrans, August C. Esenwein, George K. Birge, Frank H. Goodyear, Howard A. Forman, J. J. McWilliams, S. M. Clement, Edwin A. Bell, H. H. Hewitt, Frank S. McGraw, Robert W. Pomeroy, Dudley M. Irwin, W. H. Gratwick, Pendennis White, George L. Williams, John R. H. Richmond, Harry Yates, Carleton Sprague, W. Perry Taylor, J. Ambrose Butler. The subscription sale of seats will continue for three days.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the Wor
m
dress
SEP 17 1905

Something of the Boston Symphony.

A brilliant opening of the formal music season in Detroit this year will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke. This famous organization is unique in that it devotes its attention exclusively to concertising and is never heard with operatic performances or in the support of soloists. Its concerts are always symphony concerts, in which the soloist is merely an incident.

In the twenty-four years that have elapsed since its organization by Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, the orchestra has taken the highest place. Much of its success is due to the substantial support accorded by its founder, and Detroit may well envy Boston the advantage she possesses in having such a man as a citizen. More of its success is due to its quality as a musical organization. The men are engaged for their whole time, and they give loyal devotion to their conductor and their orchestra. The best men obtainable anywhere are imported and retained, with the results with which the whole world is familiar. The organization has given 2,289 concerts, each one of which has been a veritable artistic triumph. Mr. Gericke has at different periods been the conductor and the orchestra's greatest success dates from his first engagement in the fall of 1884.

The orchestra will play in Detroit at the armory on the evening of Thursday, October 5, with Willy Hess as soloist. Mr. Hess is concertmaster of the orchestra, and is one of the best violinists. He made his debut in Holland in 1872, when he was 13 years old, and since that time has advanced steadily in the esteem of lovers of music.

First Established and Most Complete
spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
SEP 16 1905

The coming of the Boston Symphony orchestra next month is an event of notable import to our musical public, since it affords us an opportunity to compare the methods of Gericke and Paur as directors. The former, as I recall him, represents the scholastic and somewhat pedantic style, while Paur is inclined to the emotional and sensational. Gericke is conservative in both his taste and methods, and does not lift the orchestra to such lofty emotional heights as did Nikisch or Paur—which latter he succeeded as director in 1898. It will be a fine opportunity to compare the Boston and Pittsburg orchestras.

interesting recitals this season. These two artists play with such fine ensemble that their work is of special interest.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PLAIN DEALER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
SEP 17 1905

Although it is over sixteen years since Wilhelm Gericke last appeared here as the conductor of the Smyphony orchestra, his name is still one to conjure with, for the influence spread by his authoritative readings of the great classics has increased rather than lessened with the flight of years. Those who knew him in years gone by will notice little change in the great conductor when they see him again. Time has touched him lightly. His hair is thinner and his beard is flecked with white, but these are the only signs of his sixty years. Mr. Gericki was never in appearance the typical musician of tradition. He never wore his hair long, so far as anybody ever knew, and carlessness of dress was never a hobby with him. His appearance is distinctly military; well built, of middle height, straight and broad shouldered, he stands squarely on both feet in the uncompromising attitude of a soldier. Closely cropped hair, a crisp grizzled beard parted in the middle with scrupulous exactness, a military moustache and a firm well modeled nose complete the illusion. But the musician is seen in the broad, white brow, and the wide eyes which, although they can snap fire when occasion demands, are customarily soft and mild. The exactitude and precision which characterize him are exemplified not only in his carriage but in his clothes. Unlike many great musicians, Mr. Gericke is a man faultlessly dressed. As a conductor Mr. Gericke has few traits which answer the popular idea of what the leader of the orchestra should be. He wastes no energy and strength in superfluous gestures. His beat is vigorous, exact, but never exaggerated. He rarely summons his left hand to aid his right and he lifts his orchestra to a mighty fortissimo with hardly an apparent effort. It is his belief that the chief work of the conductor is done in rehearsals and that the orchestra in concert should be so thoroughly rehearsed that the conductor is little more than a prompter. He is a rigid disciplinarian, which is one of the secrets of the astonishing work of the orchestra. Indefatigable in rehearsals, he keeps his men at work day after day until perfection is attained. It is on record that within the last year he spent the greater part of a whole rehearsal on certain passages of the "Eroica" which the orchestra has played under his direction at least a hundred times. With Gericke nothing which is "just as good" will answer. There is a certain way in which a certain phrase must be played and until it is played in that way he is not satisfied. He will leave nothing to chance. Mr. Gericke is a man of decided personal charms. His culture is broad and profound and his experience with the great men of his time has not only given him a great fund of reminiscence, but a deep insight into modern musical tendencies. While he regards with interest the new school of music of which Richard Strauss is the chief exponent, he has been convinced that the great men of the past have outlived their usefulness.

Wilhelm Gericke, Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
JOURNAL

Announcement is made of an interesting departure in the policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An invitation has been extended to M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer and conductor, to visit this country next winter and conduct the orchestra in a series of its regular concerts. M. d'Indy has accepted the invitation and will reach America in the end of November, so that he may conduct concerts in Boston and the December series in Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. His programme will be devoted entirely to modern French music, which will include some of his own compositions.

Vincent d'Indy is the leader of the group of composers known as "the younger Frenchmen," men for the most part followers and pupils of Cesar Franck, who have sought to restore absolute music to its proper place in France. He, in common with most of the other members of this school, has always been a most ardent disciple of the art and theories of Richard Wagner. Now in his 54th year, he has a long list of compositions to his credit, embracing all forms of music, symphonic, chamber, operatic and lyric. Many of the compositions in the larger forms have been performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his chamber music is rapidly coming to be well known in America.—Exchange.

First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
DRAMATIC MIRROR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two recitals here this season, the first taking place the first week in October.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
SEP 22 1905

Gerardy, the great Belgian cellist, who arrived in this country on the steamer Touraine, Nov. 2 will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there Nov. 6. He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Philadelphia. He will be first heard in New York Nov. 26 at Carnegie Hall, afterwards with the Boston Symphony, the Philharmonic, and in a joint recital with Marteau.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ILLUSTRATED
SEP 24 1905

MUSIC FOR BUFFALO.

Those who have been loyally as well as financially interested in the musical progress of Buffalo—so far as the coming of famous orchestras, artists and opera companies are concerned—are, with reason, congratulating themselves. Discouragements and disappointments of the past can now be forgotten. Liberal subscriptions which have made a guarantee fund possible, assure the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two concerts, with programs as interesting as they are sure to be artistic.

Those who have been loud in their lamentations at lack of interest in the days gone by, should now embrace this opportunity for a rally, by a generous and liberal support. The opportunity is open to all and with this onward step it should be made unalterably apparent that Buffalo can, will and insists, on the best of high class musical attractions.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

Musical Topics

The western tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which will bring that great organization to Detroit for a single concert, October 5, will include six cities—Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, and only a week will be used for the trip. William Gericke, who is now in his twelfth year as conductor of the orchestra, will accompany it, and the soloist will be Prof. Willy Hesse, the concert master and one of the great violinists of the day. The Boston Symphony is the only organization of its kind in the world which is devoted exclusively to the performance of symphonic music and in which its members are engaged for the year for this purpose. The famous orchestras of Vienna, Dresden, Berlin and Paris make their concerts supplementary to operatic work. The other great orchestras of the this country do more or less work outside of their regular schedule. The Boston Symphony, however, is an organization maintained exclusively for concert purposes.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA COMING

SALE OF SUBSCRIPTION SEATS WAS OPENED AT DENTON, COTTIER & DANIELS' THIS MORNING.

It isn't an easy thing to induce a big, prosperous organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra to leave its beloved city and undertake a road tour, and once that is arranged for it is even more difficult to induce the orchestra to return for a second concert; but this has been accomplished for Buffalo during the present season, and the reason why is now announced. The orchestra, the finest in America if not the finest in the world, comes here through the generosity of 40 prominent men and women of Buffalo.

Conjecture has been widespread all summer as to the inducements offered the orchestra this year, when it has refused for 12 years past to come to Buffalo; but now that the date for the first concert, to be held at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, is near, the explanation is made.

The names of the 40 men and women who have made possible the two concerts are as follows:

Fred C. M. Lantz, Hobart Weed, Edmund Hayes, George P. Sawyer, Charles R. Hunley, Willis O. Chapin, Charles W. Goodyear, George Bleistein, Dr. Roswell Park, William B. Hoyt, Dr. John Parmenter, Dr. M. D. Mann, J. J. Albright, Joseph P. Dudley, William A. Rogers, Charles L. Gurney, Mrs. Frederick H. Stevens, William H. Glenny, Mrs. William Hamlin, Spencer Kellogg, H. M. Gerrans, August C. Esenwein, George K. Birge, Frank H. Goodyear, Howard A. Forman, J. J. McWilliams, S. M. Clement, Edwin A. Bell, H. H. Hewitt, Frank S. McGraw, Robert W. Pomeroy, Dudley M. Irwin, W. H. Gratwick, Pendennis White, George L. Williams, John R. H. Richmond, Harry Yates, Carlton Sprague, W. Perry Taylor, J. Ambrose Butler. The subscription sale of seats will continue for three days.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

Announcement is made of an interesting departure in the policy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An invitation has been extended to M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer and conductor, to visit this country next winter and conduct the orchestra in a series of its regular concerts. M. d'Indy has accepted the invitation and will reach America in the end of November, so that he may conduct concerts in Boston and the December series in Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. His programme will be devoted entirely to modern French music, which will include some of his own compositions.

Vincent d'Indy is the leader of the group of composers known as "the younger Frenchmen," men for the most part followers and pupils of Cesar Franck, who have sought to restore absolute music to its proper place in France. He, in common with most of the other members of this school, has always been a most ardent disciple of the art and theories of Richard Wagner. Now in his 54th year, he has a long list of compositions to his credit, embracing all forms of music, symphonic, chamber, operatic and lyric. Many of the compositions in the larger forms have been performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his chamber music is rapidly coming to be well known in America.—Exchange.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
MUSICAL MIRROR

Something of the Boston Symphony.

A brilliant opening of the formal music season in Detroit this year will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke. This famous organization is unique in that it devotes its attention exclusively to concertizing and is never heard with operatic performances or in the support of soloists. Its concerts are always symphony concerts, in which the soloist is merely an incident.

In the twenty-four years that have elapsed since its organization by Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, the orchestra has taken the highest place. Much of its success is due to the substantial support accorded by its founder, and Detroit may well envy Boston the advantage she possesses in having such a man as a citizen. More of its success is due to its quality as a musical organization. The men are engaged for their whole time, and they give loyal devotion to their conductor and their orchestra. The best men obtainable anywhere are imported and retained, with the results with which the whole world is familiar. The organization has given 2,289 concerts, each one of which has been a veritable artistic triumph. Mr. Gericke has at different periods been the conductor and the orchestra's greatest success dates from his first engagement in the fall of 1884.

The orchestra will play in Detroit at the armory on the evening of Thursday, October 5, with Willy Hess as soloist. Mr. Hess is concertmaster of the orchestra, and is one of the best violinists. He made his debut in Holland in 1872, when he was 13 years old, and since that time has advanced steadily in the esteem of lovers of music.

First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

The coming of the Boston Symphony orchestra next month is an event of notable import to our musical public, since it affords us an opportunity to compare the methods of Gericke and Paur as directors. The former, as I recall him, represents the scholastic and somewhat pedantic style, while Paur is inclined to the emotional and sensational. Gericke is conservative in both his taste and methods, and does not lift the orchestra to such lofty emotional heights as did Nikisch or Paur—which latter he succeeded as director in 1898. It will be a fine opportunity to compare the Boston and Pittsburg orchestras.

Interesting recitals this season. These two artists play with such fine ensemble that their work is of special interest.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two recitals here this season, the first taking place the first week in October.

PLAIN DEALER

Although it is over sixteen years since Wilhelm Gericke last appeared here as the conductor of the Boston Smyphony orchestra, his name is still one to conjure with, for the influence spread by his authoritative readings of the great classics has increased rather than lessened with the flight of years. Those who knew him in years gone by will notice little change in the great conductor when they see him again. Time has touched him lightly. His hair is thinner and his beard is flecked with white, but these are the only signs of his sixty years. Mr. Gericki was never in appearance the typical musician of tradition. He never wore his hair long, so far as anybody ever knew, and carlessness of dress was never a hobby with him. His appearance is distinctly military; well built, of middle height, straight and broad shouldered, he stands squarely on both feet in the uncompromising attitude of a soldier. Closely cropped hair, a crisp grizzled beard parted in the middle with scrupulous exactness, a military moustache and a firm well modeled nose complete the illusion. But the musician is seen in the broad, white brow, and the wide eyes which, although they can snap fire when occasion demands, are customarily soft and mild. The exactitude and precision which characterize him are exemplified not only in his carriage but in his clothes. Unlike many great musicians, Mr. Gericke is a man faultlessly dressed. As a conductor Mr. Gericke has few traits which answer the popular idea of what the leader of the orchestra should be. He wastes no energy and strength in superfluous gestures. His beat is vigorous, exact, but never exaggerated. He rarely summons his left hand to aid his right and he lifts his orchestra to a mighty fortissimo with hardly an apparent effort. It is his belief that the chief work of the conductor is done in rehearsals and that the orchestra in concert should be so thoroughly rehearsed that the conductor is little more than a prompter. He is a rigid disciplinarian, which is one of the secrets of the astonishing work of the orchestra. Indefatigable in rehearsals, he keeps his men at work day after day until perfection is attained. It is on record that within the last year he spent the greater part of a whole rehearsal on certain passages of the "Eroica" which the orchestra has played under his direction at least a hundred times. With Gericke nothing which is "just as good" will answer. There is a certain way in which a certain phrase must be played and until it is played in that way he is not satisfied. He will leave nothing to chance. Mr. Gericke is a man of decided personal charms. His culture is broad and profound and his experience with the great men of his time has not only given him a great fund of reminiscence, but a deep insight into modern musical tendencies. While he regards with interest the new school of music of which Richard Strauss is the chief exponent, he has been convinced that the great men of the past have outlived their usefulness.

Wilhelm Gericke, Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ILLUSTRATED TIMES

MUSIC FOR BUFFALO.

Those who have been loyally as well as financially interested in the musical progress of Buffalo—so far as the coming of famous orchestras, artists and opera companies are concerned—are, with reason, congratulating themselves. Discouragements and disappointments of the past can now be forgotten. Liberal subscriptions which have made a guarantee fund possible, assure the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two concerts, with programs as interesting as they are sure to be artistic.

Those who have been loud in their lamentations at lack of interest in the days gone by, should now embrace this opportunity for a rally, by a generous and liberal support. The opportunity is open to all and with this onward step it should be made unalterably apparent that Buffalo can, will and insists, on the best of high class musical attractions.

Musical Topics

The western tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which will bring that great organization to Detroit for a single concert, October 5, will include six cities—Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, and only a week will be used for the trip. William Gericke, who is now in his twelfth year as conductor of the orchestra, will accompany it, and the soloist will be Prof. Willy Hesse, the concert master and one of the great violinists of the day. The Boston Symphony is the only organization of its kind in the world which is devoted exclusively to the performance of symphonic music and in which its members are engaged for the year for this purpose. The famous orchestras of Vienna, Dresden, Berlin and Paris make their concerts supplementary to operatic work. The other great orchestras of the this country do more or less work outside of their regular schedule. The Boston Symphony, however, is an organization maintained exclusively for concert purposes.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
SEP 22 1905

Gerardy, the great Belgian cellist, who arrived in this country on the steamer Touraine, Nov. 2, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there Nov. 6. He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Philadelphia. He will be first heard in New York Nov. 26 at Carnegie Hall, afterwards with the Boston Symphony, the Philharmonic, and in a joint recital with Marteau.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
CHRONICLE
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
SEP 1 1903

One of the most important events of many musical seasons in Rochester will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Baker Theater on the evening of Saturday, October 7th. This superb organization is famous not only in every part of the United States but throughout the world. Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe and possibly no equal; a very great admission from such eminent musicians as these. Mr. Gericke, the conductor, is the master who brought this orchestra up to its perfection in technic and brilliant coloring. He is a rigid disciplinarian, which is one of the secrets of the astonishing work of the orchestra. Indefatigable in rehearsals, he keeps his men at work day after day until prefection is attained. One would think that an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, which had been playing together for so many years under one man, would become so familiar with certain works in the repertory that rehearsals of these would hardly be necessary. Yet it is on record that within the last year he spent the greater part of a whole rehearsal on certain passages of the "Eroica," which the orchestra has played under him at least a hundred times. With Gericke nothing which is "just as good" will answer his purpose. There is a certain way in which a certain phrase must be played and until it is played in that way he is not satisfied. He will leave nothing to chance, to the "inspiration of the moment." Mr. Gericke is a man of all-comprehensive equipment. While he is an ardent worshiper at the shrine of classicism, he is a profound believer in the modern romantic schools of music. A liberal and attractive programme is promised for the coming concert.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Excellent Program Promised for the Concert at Baker Theater, October 7.

The great interest that has been aroused by the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Baker Theater on Saturday evening, October 7, is found in the number of letters which have been received in Boston by the management, requesting that certain works be placed on the program. Naturally, none of these requests can be granted unless they happen to hit upon a work already chosen. Mr. Gericke, whose reputation as a maker of programs is only less than that which he has won as a conductor, has spent much thought and care this summer on the programs for the Western trips. Final announcement of these cannot yet be made, as Professor Willie Hess, the soloist, has not yet decided what concerto he will play in Rochester, and as Mr. Gericke himself has not yet finally settled on one or two numbers.

The program, however, will be longer than those customarily played in Boston, New York and the large Eastern cities, where the concerts by the orchestra are annual fixtures. There the rule is to bring the program within an hour and a half, for experience has shown that in cities where there are from thirty to a hundred orchestral concerts each season, this length is sufficient. But for Rochester Mr. Gericke is calculating on a program which will play about two hours. It will, of course, include a symphony and be a finely balanced choice of classic and modern romantic works.

The orchestra will be assembled two weeks before the beginning of the tour and this time will be spent in constant rehearsal. Mr. Gericke scoffs at the "inspiration of the moment." His theory, which he has always lived up to, is that when the night of the concert has come the orchestra must be so thoroughly acquainted with the works on the program and with the wishes of the conductor that the latter's duty need be little more than that of a prompter, to signal the entrance of the various instruments and groups of instruments. This end is attained only by constant rehearsing and to this practice is due the fact that Mr. Gericke is not a showy or sensational conductor. His energetic gesticulations are confined to the rehearsals.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
POST EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
SEP 16 1903

In Musical Circles

The outlook for the musical season is distinctly encouraging. Of course local organizations like the Tuesday Musicale and the Dossenbach orchestra may be relied upon to make a solid contribution towards the musical entertainment of the public. Their work may fortunately be taken for granted. One new element of importance in local music will be the string quartette composed of Herman Dossenbach, Paul Verpoest, George Henricus and Felix Boucher, the last-named a cellist from the Metropolitan Opera. But it is to attractions outside the pale of regular society work that reference is here made. Kubelik is an assured visitor. The brilliant Bohemian violinist may also be supplemented by another Sevcik pupil, Miss Marie Hall. But Miss Hall's advent is not yet definitely decided upon. A third violinist to be heard in Rochester is Miss Marie Nichols, and it is probable that Timothee Adamowski, who has played here under private auspices will give a recital. The only pianist of eminence whose coming has so far been announced is Harold Bauer, the beloved of Boston. Lisst lovers cast longing eyes towards Reisenauer; but that great artist has not made the skyrocket kind of reputation which alone seems to justify entrepreneurs in bringing a locally untried artist into our midst. Among vocalists the most famous name is that of Calve, whose engagement is definitive. Miss Alice Neilson is a possibility and there is a golden hope that Charles Clark will make Rochester one of his stopping places. One organist of note, Clarence Eddy, will pay us a visit and one 'cellist, Miss Elsa Ruegger.

Whether we shall hear the Pittsburgh orchestra this season is uncertain; but the coming of the Boston Symphony next month is one of the events decided upon and dated. October seventh is the date of the concert and the Baker theater the place. Apropos of the concerts Mr. Gericke has decided, in view of the perplexing variety of requests that has already assailed him, that he will give a two hours programme, instead of the customary hour and a half. But he does not hold out any hopes that demands for the performance of particular works will be granted. The selection will comprise "a symphony and a contrasting mixture of classic and modern romantic music." Willy Hess will play a concerto with the orchestra but he has not yet decided which one.

POST EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Here is the programme for the concert to be given by the Boston symphony at Baker theater on October seventh. If Rochester music lovers had been consulted on the matter, they might have suggested something a little more striking. But the Boston Symphony is on a tour and a minimum amount of baggage in the way of scores will be carried, so probably the same programme will be used in each city. But if some numbers could be changed the alteration would please many Rochesterians, and the Boston Symphony would certainly not be a loser by the transaction. It is a pleasure to hear this great organization, of course, whatever the programme may be, but it is a pity that such a golden opportunity of hearing, say something of Richard Strauss, should be lost. The "Oberon" and the "Tannhauser" overtures have been heard many, many times and the Tschaikowsky symphony has been played locally on three occasions. Still the orchestra is the Boston Symphony. Willy Hess is a notable violinist, one whom the writer used to go and hear with pleasure in the old days of the Halle Orchestra in England. Here is the programme:

Overture to the Opera Oberon ..... Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich) ..... Bach
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G minor Op. 26 ..... Max Bruch
1. Allegro moderato (G minor)
2. Adagio (e-flat major)
3. Finale: Allegro energico (G major)
Symphony No. 6, Pathetic, in B minor, Op. 74 ..... Tschaikowsky
1. Adagio; Allegro non troppo
2. Allegro con grazia
3. Allegro Molto Vivace
4. Finale: Adagio lamentoso
Overture to Tannhauser ..... Wagner
Soloist ..... Willy Hess

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
SEP 22 1903

BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA

Symphony Organization of the Hub the Best in This Country.

HISTORY OF ITS GROWTH

It Will Be a Rare Treat for Musi Lovers of Rochester to Hear It Again.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here on October 7th at the Baker Theater, will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may here be used in its fullest significance because there is no orchestra in the world like the one which claims Boston as its home. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world-wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organized in 1881 by Mr. Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music, as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members are to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purposes than the giving of symphony concerts of the highest class.

Even Boston 24 years ago was compared with today living in musical darkness and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the very best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Since 1895 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinnati Orchestras, as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned, and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence, its personnel has constantly been strengthened, neither expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent in the world. For this reason it has often been called an "orchestra of virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that, sitting at the desks are violinists of highest rank.

It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its voilins. The principal violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal cellist, who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley; nor are the other departments lacking.

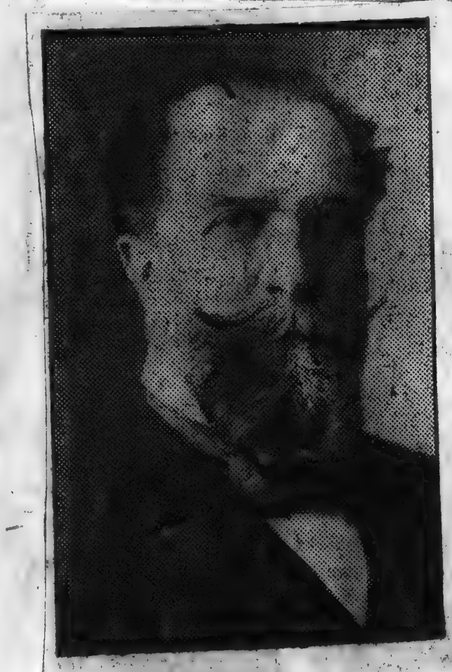
In Longy, the orchestra has an oboist who is, perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackerbarth and Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist, are all of them artists of the first rank and command the highest salaries of their several classes. By a system of selection and elimination the orchestra as it stands to-day is without an equal in the world.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ILLUSTRATED TIMES
BUFFALO, N.Y.
SEP 24 1903

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Buffalo this season for two concerts is an upward jump for musical interests such as this city has not experienced in years and for the subscription sale last week there was a big demand. The sale for the first concert on Wednesday evening, October 4th, begins on Tuesday morning, September 26th, at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store. It is 12 years since the orchestra was last here and during that time the big organization has steadily advanced. It is reckoned today the best orchestra in America and one of the finest in the world. The conductor, William Gericke, is one of the most distinguished of living musicians, and his orchestra includes many leading solo players.

Several times in the past have attempts been made to bring the orchestra to Buffalo, but all of them have failed, until this year, when 40 men and women of the city joined forces in making possible this great musical treat. The names of these men and women were published in THE TIMES last week, and scanning the list, it is easy to see why the orchestra consented to come, for the names of the 40 are ones to conjure with. At the Boston concerts a program of about an hour and a half is given by the orchestra, but for Buffalo, fairly starved for good orchestral music, a somewhat longer one has been arranged, one the like of which this city has never heard. Every number is a gem and the selections are varied and most interesting, combining beauty, strength and romance. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra and one of the great violinists of the world, will be the soloist at this first concert, playing Max Bruch's Concerto in G Minor. It is melodious, graceful and skilfully made, showing violinist and violin at their best. It demands the highest skill of execution, for it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and also contains a lovely slow movement, which displays the artist's mastery over his instrument. The program begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." But it seems unnecessary to go into detail when the program entire can be published, as follows:

Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27 ..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form, (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich) ..... Bach
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26. I. Allegro moderato (G minor). II. Adagio (E-flat major). III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major)..... Max Bruch
Italian Caprice, op. 45..Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61. I. Sostenuto assai; Allegra, mo non troppo. II. Scherzo; Allegro Vivace (Trio I. and Trio II.) III. Adagio Expressivo. IV. Allegro Molto Vivace..... Schumann
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.



WILLIAM GERICKE
Talented Director of the Boston Symphony, Which Will Give Concerts in Convention Hall October 4th and February 19[illegible]

...wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...ONICLE
om
dress
e

* * *

One of the most important events of many musical seasons in Rochester will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Baker Theater on the evening of Saturday, October 7th. This superb organization is famous not only in every part of the United States but throughout the world. Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernst von Schuch have not besitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe and possibly no equal; a very great admission from such eminent musicians as these. Mr. Gericke, the conductor, is the master who brought this orchestra up to its perfection in technic and brilliant coloring. He is a rigid disciplinarian, which is one of the secrets of the astonishing work of the orchestra. Indefatigable in rehearsals, he keeps his men at work day after day until prefection is attained. One would think that an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, which had been playing together for so many years under one man, would become so familiar with certain works in the repertory that rehearsals of these would hardly be necessary. Yet it is on record that within the last year he spent the greater part of a whole rehearsal on certain passages of the "Eroica," which the orchestra has played under him at least a hundred times. With Gericke nothing which is "just as good" will answer his purpose. There is a certain way in which a certain phrase must be played and until it is played in that way he is not satisfied. He will leave nothing to chance, to the "inspiration of the moment." Mr. Gericke is a man of all-comprehensive equipment. While he is an ardent worshiper at the shrine of classicism, he is a profound believer in the modern romantic schools of music. A liberal and attractive programme is promised for the coming concert.

* * *

...aper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Excellent Program Promised for the Concert at Baker Theater, October 7.

The great interest that has been aroused by the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Baker Theater on Saturday evening, October 7, is found in the number of letters which have been received in Boston by the management, requesting that certain works be placed on the program. Naturally, none of these requests can be granted unless they happen to hit upon a work already chosen. Mr. Gericke, whose reputation as a maker of programs is only lesss than that which he has won as a conductor, has spent much thought and care this summer on the programs for the Western trips. Final announcement of these can not yet be made, as Professor Willie Hess, the soloist, has not yet decided what concerto he will play in Rochester, and as Mr. Gericke himself has not yet finally settled on one or two numbers.

The program, however, will be longer than those customarily played in Boston, New York and the large Eastern cities, where the concerts by the orchestra are annual fixtures. There the rule is to bring the program within an hour and a half, for experience has shown that in cities where there are from thirty to a hundred orchestral concerts each season, this length is sufficient. But for Rochester Mr. Gericke is calculating on a program which will play about two hours. It will, of course, include a symphony and be a finely balanced choice of classic and modern romantic works.

The orchestra will be assembled two weeks before the beginning of the tour and this time will be spent in constant rehearsal. Mr. Gericke scoffs at the "inspiration of the moment." His theory, which he has always lived up to, is that when the night of the concert has come the orchestra must be so thoroughly acquainted with the works on the program and with the wishes of the conductor that the latter's duty need be little more than that of a prompter, to signal the entrance of the various instruments and groups of instruments. This end is attained only by constant rehearsing and to this practice is due the fact that Mr. Gericke is not a showy or sensational conductor. His energetic gesticulations are confined to the rehearsals.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
POST EXPRESS
ss

In Musical Circles

The outlook for the musical season is distinctly encouraging. Of course local organizations like the Tuesday Musicale and the Dossenbach orchestra may be relied upon to make a solid contribution towards the musical entertainment of the public. Their work may fortunately be taken for granted. One new element of importance in local music will be the string quartette composed of Herman Dossenbach, Paul Verpoest, George Henricus and Felix Boucher, the last-named a cellist from the Metropolitan Opera. But it is to attractions outside the pale of regular society work that reference is here made. Kubelik is an assured visitor. The brilliant Bohemian violinist may also be supplemented by another Sevcik pupil, Miss Marie Hall. But Miss Hall's advent is not yet definitely decided upon. A third violinist to be heard in Rochester is Miss Marie Nichols, and it is probable that Timothee Adamowski, who has played here under private auspices will give a recital. The only pianist of eminence whose coming has so far been announced is Harold Bauer, the beloved of Boston. Liszt lovers cast longing eyes towards Reisenauer; but that great artist has not made the skyrocket kind of reputation which alone seems to justify entrepreneurs in bringing a locally untried artist into our midst. Among vocalists the most famous name is that of Calve, whose engagement is definitive. Miss Alice Neilson is a possibility and there is a golden hope that Charles Clark will make Rochester one of his stopping places. One organist of note, Clarence Eddy, will pay us a visit and one 'cellist, Miss Elsa Ruegger.

Whether we shall hear the Pittsburgh orchestra this season is uncertain; but the coming of the Boston Symphony next month is one of the events decided upon and dated. October seventh is the date of the concert and the Baker theater the place. Apropos of the concerts Mr. Gericke has decided, in view of the perplexing variety of requests that has already assailed him, that he will give a two hours programme, instead of the customary hour and a half. But he does not hold out any hopes that demands for the performance of particular works will be granted. The selection will comprise "a symphony and a contrasting mixture of classic and modern romantic music." Willy Hess will play a concerto with the orchestra but he has not yet decided which one.

* *

POST EXPRESS
ess

* *

Here is the programme for the concert to be given by the Boston symphony at Baker theater on October seventh. If Rochester music lovers had been consulted on the matter, they might have suggested something a little more striking. But the Boston Symphony is on a tour and a minimum amount of baggage in the way of scores will be carried, so probably the same programme will be used in each city. But if some numbers could be changed the alteration would please many Rochesterians, and the Boston Symphony would certainly not be a loser by the transaction. It is a pleasure to hear this great organization, of course, whatever the programme may be, but it is a pity that such a golden opportunity of hearing, say something of Richard Strauss, should be lost. The "Oberon" and the "Tannhauser" overtures have been heard many, many times and the Tschaikowsky symphony has been played locally on three occasions. Still the orchestra is the Boston Symphony. Willy Hess is a notable violinist, one whom the writer used to go and hear with pleasure in the old days of the Halle Orchestra in England. Here is the programme:

Overture to the Opera Oberon ..... Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich) ..... Bach
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G minor Op. 26 ..... Max Bruch
1. Allegro moderato (G minor)
2. Adagio (e-flat major)
3. Finale: Allegro energico (G major)
Symphony No. 6, Pathetic, in B minor, Op. 74 ..... Tschaikowsky
1. Adagio; Allegro non troppo
2. Allegro con grazia
3. Allegro Molto Vivace
4. Finale: Adagio lamentoso
Overture to Tannhauser ..... Wagner
Soloist ..... Willy Hess

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
s

SEP 22 1905

BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA

Symphony Organization of the Hub the Best in This Country.

HISTORY OF ITS GROWTH

It Will Be a Rare Treat for Musi Lovers of Rochester to Hear It Again.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here on October 7th at the Baker Theater, will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may here be used in its fullest significance because there is no orchestra in the world like the one which claims Boston as its home. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world-wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organized in 1881 by Mr. Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music, as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members are to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purposes than the giving of symphony concerts of the highest class.

Even Boston 24 years ago was compared with today living in musical darkness and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the very best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Since 1895 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinnati Orchestras, as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned, and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence, its personnel has constantly been strengthened, neither expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent in the world. For this reason it has often been called an "orchestra of virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that, sitting at the desks are violinists of highest rank.

It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its voilins. The principal violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal cellist, who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley; nor are the other departments lacking.

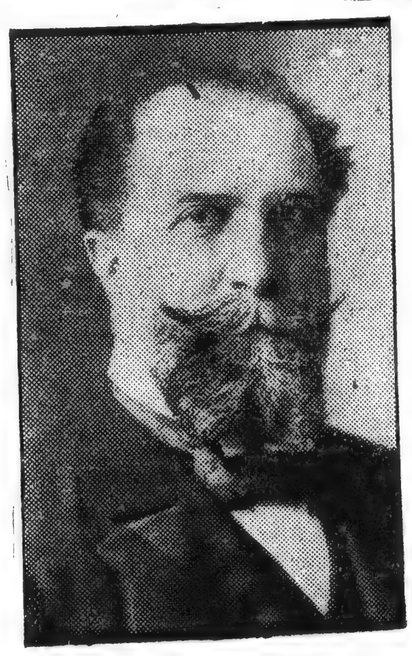
In Longy, the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Maquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackerbarth and Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist, are all of them artists of the first rank and command the highest salaries of their several classes. By a system of selection and elimination the orchestra as it stands to-day is without an equal in the world.

ILLUSTRATED TIMES
24 OCT

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Buffalo this season for two concerts is an upward jump for musical interests such as this city has not experienced in years and for the subscription sale last week there was a big demand. The sale for the first concert, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, begins on Tuesday morning, September 26th, at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store. It is 12 years since the orchestra was last here and during that time the big organization has steadily advanced. It is reckoned today the best orchestra in America and one of the finest in the world. The conductor, William Gericke, is one of the most distinguished of living musicians, and his orchestra includes many leading solo players.

Several times in the past have attempts been made to bring the orchestra to Buffalo, but all of them have failed, until this year, when 40 men and women of the city joined forces in making possible this great musical treat. The names of these men and women were published in THE TIMES last week, and scanning the list, it is easy to see why the orchestra consented to come, for the names of the 40 are ones to conjure with. At the Boston concerts a program of about an hour and a half is given by the orchestra, but for Buffalo, fairly starved for good orchestral music, a somewhat longer one has been arranged, one the like of which this city has never heard. Every number is a gem and the selections are varied and most interesting, combining beauty, strength and romance. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra and one of the great violinists of the world, will be the soloist at this first concert, playing Max Bruch's Concerto in G Minor. It is melodious, graceful and skillfully made, showing violinist and violin at their best. It demands the highest skill of execution, for it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and also contains a lovely slow movement, which displays the artist's mastery over his instrument. The program begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." But it seems unnecessary to go into detail when the program entire can be published, as follows:

Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27 ..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich) ..... Bach
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26. I. Allegro moderato (G minor). II. Adagio (E-flat major). III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major).....Max Bruch
Italian Caprice, op. 45...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61. I. Sostenuto assai; Allegra, mo non troppo. II. Scherzo; Allegro Vivace (Trio I. and Trio II.) III. Adagio Expressivo. IV. Allegro Molto Vivace.....Schumann
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.



WILLIAM GERICKE
Talented Director of the Boston Symphony, Which Will Give Concerts in Convention Hall October 4th and February 19th.

[27]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
ILLUSTRATED
dress

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin at the store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels, on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts which took place last week was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats left for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of great variety and attractiveness, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It reads as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, Op. 27 .....Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form .....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
Allegro moderato (G minor).
Adagio (E flat major).
Finale, Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.Schumann
Sostenuto assai; allegro, ma non troppo.
Scherzo; allegro vivace.
Trio I and trio II.
Adagio espressivo.
Allegro molto vivace.
Soloist, Willy Hess.

The Mendelssohn overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, inspired by Goethe, was written in the summer of 1833. His sister Fanny gives us the information that in this work he especially avoided the form of an overture with introduction, and wished the composition to stand as two companion pictures. It is a tone picture, painted with all the freshness and vigor of Mendelssohn's youthful genius.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra justly prides itself upon the remarkable quality of its string choir. In this department are included a dozen players who can rank with the notable violinists of the world. It is the policy of the orchestra to get the best men to be had, no matter what the cost, and in the entire string body there is not a poor instrument or an unworthy player. Wonderful results are, therefore, obtainable from the string orchestra, and the second number on the programme will be anticipated with the keenest interest. The Bach Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in rondo form have been arranged for the strings by Sigismund Bachrich, a Hungarian violinist and composer who is one of the professors in the Vienna Conservatory, and who was for twelve years a member of the famous Hellmesberger Quartette in Vienna. His arrangement is naturally most effective, and a test of the capabilities of the orchestra.

Max Bruch's first concerto for violin, in G minor, has been selected by Willy Hess, the eminent violinist, as his solo number. It is a grateful composition which gives the player full scope for his executive skill and is at the same time melodious and beautiful. It is a favorite number with both violinists and public.

Tschaikowsky's compositions all bear, more or less, the impress of his Slavonic temperament, "fiery exultation on a basis of languid melancholy," as one of his critics has written. In the Italian Caprice, which is a bravura work for orchestra, there are the bold modulations, the strong rhythms, the gorgeous effects of orchestration which characterize his writings.

Wilhelm Gericke is one of the orchestra conductors who excel in the interpretation of Schumann works. The great C major symphony, which he has selected for performance, was written during the six years of Schumann's life in Dresden, and is one of his noblest, brightest writings for orchestra.

The First Established and Most Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the
GLOBE

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held here in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its superior. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now when a distinguished musician reaches America almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony. One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans von Buelow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra, with the single exception of Richard Strauss, who, a year ago last spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitaion has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernest von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has so superior in Europe, and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such great men as these. The sale of seats for the concert of the orchestra in Massey Hall, on Oct. 3rd, will open at the hall on Tuesday morning.

Rochester Herald. Oct 1

FULL week of eight performances of extravaganza at the Lyceum will be followed by a breathing space, the house remaining dark until next Friday night, when B. C. Whitney's musical comedy, "Isle of Spice," begins an engagement of three performances. The following Monday night, October 9, E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe will appear in a sumptuous revival of "Taming of the Shrew."

The first important musical event of the season will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday night at the Baker Theater. That famous organization has not made a western tour in many years and, as but six cities are to be visited on its present trip, Rochester music lovers may well consider themselves exceedingly fortunate. The house should be thronged, for the season is likely to afford but few such privileges to those who appreciate the highest and best in music.

AT THE BAKER THEA

WILHELM GERNICKE.
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its equal. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now, when a distinguished musician reaches America, almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony.

One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans Von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss, who a year ago last spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such men as these. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing and not a small part of the reputation the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these.

The sale of seats for the concert of the orchestra next Saturday night will open at the Baker Theater Monday morning.

Rochester

THE POST EXPRESS: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER

In Musical Circles

Saturday evening the Boston symphony will pay one of its "few and far between" angel visits and everyone who takes an interest in music owes it to his artistic soul to be present. Beautiful compositions like the "Pathetic" Symphony can hardly be heard too often. Of course, all the world is familiar with the "Oberon" overture, also on the programme, but that fact will enable them to listen to the playing of the work by the Bostonians with all the more pleasure. The Bach prelude provides that jewel of exquisite form without which no programme is perfect. The soloist, Willy Hess, is a fine violinist, both technically and temperamentally and, as a leader, he is the embodiment of an authority which commands enthusiastic obedience.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ILLUSTRATED

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin at the store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels, on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts which took place last week was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats left for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of great variety and attractiveness, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It reads as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, Op. 27 ..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, Op. 26 ..... Max Bruch
Allegro moderato (G minor).
Adagio (E flat major).
Finale, Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45 ..... Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61. Schumann
Sostenuto assai; allegro, mo non troppo.
Scherzo; allegro vivace.
Trio I and trio II.
Adagio espressivo.
Allegro molto vivace.
Soloist, Willy Hess.

The Mendelssohn overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, inspired by Goethe, was written in the summer of 1838. His sister Fanny gives us the information that in this work he especially avoided the form of an overture with introduction, and wished the composition to stand as two companion pictures. It is a tone picture, painted with all the freshness and vigor of Mendelssohn's youthful genius.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra justly prides itself upon the remarkable quality of its string choir. In this department are included a dozen players who can rank with the notable violinists of the world. It is the policy of the orchestra to get the best men to be had, no matter what the cost, and in the entire string body there is not a poor instrument or an unworthy player. Wonderful results are, therefore, obtainable from the string orchestra, and the second number on the programme will be anticipated with the keenest interest. The Bach Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in rondo form have been arranged for the strings by Sigismund Bachrich, a Hungarian violinist and composer who is one of the professors in the Vienna Conservatory, and who was for twelve years a member of the famous Hellmesberger Quartette in Vienna. His arrangement is naturally most effective, and a test of the capabilities of the orchestra.

Max Bruch's first concerto for violin, in G minor, has been selected by Willy Hess, the eminent violinist, as his solo number. It is a grateful composition which gives the player full scope for his executive skill and is at the same time melodious and beautiful. It is a favorite number with both violinists and public.

Tschaikowsky's compositions all bear, more or less, the impress of his Slavonic temperament, "fiery exultation on a basis of languid melancholy," as one of his critics has written. In the Italian Caprice, which is a bravura work for orchestra, there are the bold modulations, the strong rhythms, the gorgeous effects of orchestration which characterize his writings.

Wilhelm Gericke is one of the orchestra conductors who excel in the interpretation of Schumann works. The great C major symphony, which he has selected for performance, was written during the six years of Schumann's life in Dresden, and is one of his noblest, brightest writings for orchestra.

The First Established and Most Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the
GLOBE

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held here in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its superior. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now when a distinguished musician reaches America almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony. One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans von Buelow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra, with the single exception of Richard Strauss, who, a year ago last spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitaion has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernest von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has so superior in Europe, and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such great men as these. The sale of seats for the concert of the orchestra in Massey Hall, on Oct. 3rd, will open at the hall on Tuesday morning.

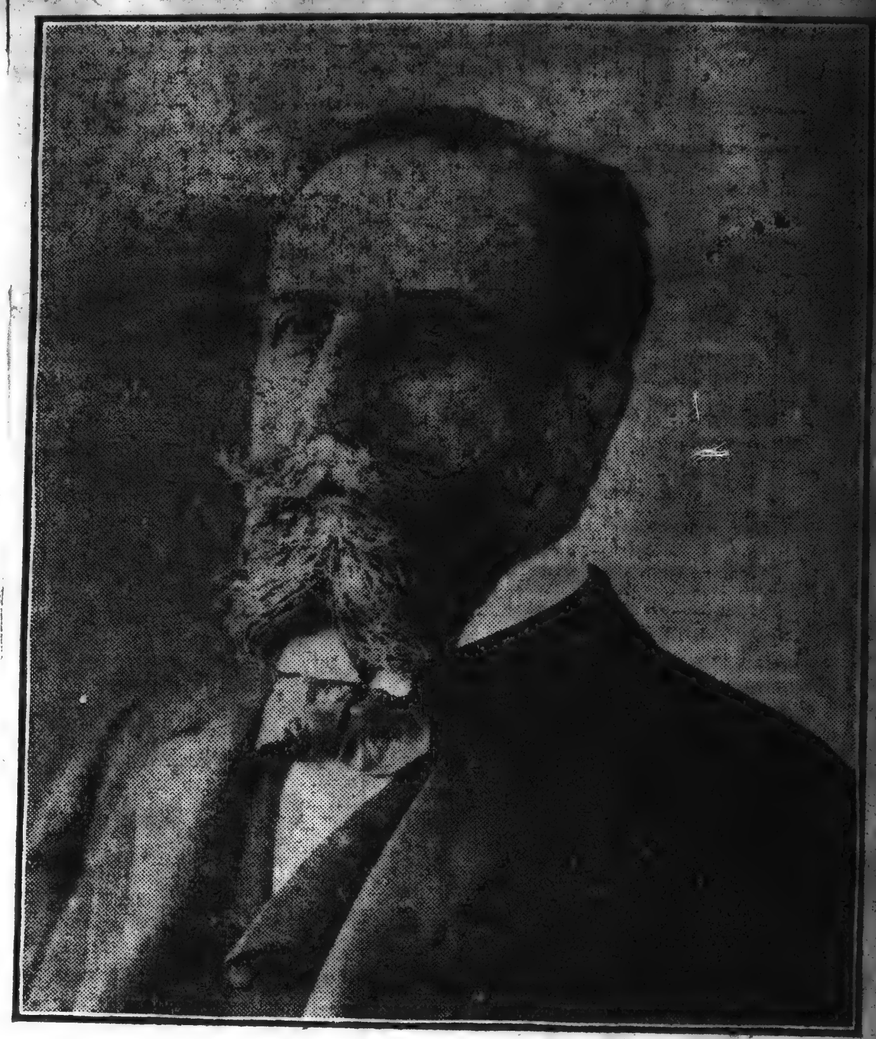
Rochester Herald. Oct 1,

A FULL week of eight performances of extravaganza at the Lyceum will be followed by a breathing space, the house remaining dark until next Friday night, when B. C. Whitney's musical comedy, "Isle of Spice," begins an engagement of three performances. The following Monday night, October 9, E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe will appear in a sumptuous revival of "Taming of the Shrew."

The first important musical event of the season will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday night at the Baker Theater. That famous organization has not made a western tour in many years and, as but six cities are to be visited on its present trip, Rochester music lovers may well consider themselves exceedingly fortunate. The house should be thronged, for the season is likely to afford but few such privileges to those who appreciate the highest and best in music.

EVENING TIMES, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1
R

FAMOUS BOSTON ORCHESTRA AT THE BAKER THEATER



WILHELM GERNICKE.
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its equal. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now, when a distinguished musician reaches America, almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony.

One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans Von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss, who, a year ago last spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such men as these. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing and not a small part of the reputation the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these.

The sale of seats for the concert of the orchestra next Saturday night will open at the Baker Theater Monday morning.

Rochester

In Musical Circles

Saturday evening the Boston symphony will pay one of its "few and far between" angel visits and everyone who takes an interest in music owes it to his artistic soul to be present. Beautiful compositions like the "Pathetic" Symphony can hardly be heard too often. Of course, all the world is familiar with the "Oberon" overture, also on the programme, but that fact will enable them to listen to the playing of the work by the Bostonians with all the more pleasure. The Bach prelude provides that jewel of exquisite form without which no programme is perfect. The soloist, Willy Hess, is a fine violinist, both technically and temperamentally and, as a leader, he is the embodiment of an authority which commands enthusiastic obedience.

[28]

Rochester Abendpost

Das Boston Symphony - Orchester. Eines der musikalischen Ereignisse der Saison 1905—1906 steht vor der Thür. Das Baker - Theater wird am nächsten Samstag eine neue Weihe erhalten, und in seinen Mauern eine Organisation von Musikern aufnehmen, leider nur für einen Abend, von denen jeder einzelne ein vollendeter Künstler; viele berühmte Virtuosen und alle zusammen ein Orchester bilden, von dem gesagt werden kann, daß es von keinem anderen der „Welt" übertroffen wird: Das Boston Symphony - Orchester.

Das Boston Symphony - Orchester feiert in diesem Jahre den 25. Jahrestag seiner Gründung und steht daher nicht nur der Qualität, sondern auch dem Alter nach an erster Stelle in Amerika.

Im Personal des Orchesters sind einige nicht unwesentliche Veränderungen vor sich gegangen. Der bisherige erste Cellist, Herr Kraaselt, hat sein Amt niedergelegt; er will sich der Kapellmeister - Laufbahn widmen. An seine Stelle trat Heinrich Warnke, der bisher erster Cellist des Münchener Kaim - Orchesters war. Aus dem Kölner Theater - Orchester hat man sich Herm. P. Sadony geholt, der die Stelle als erster Fagottist bekleiden wird. Ebenfalls vom Kaim - Orchester stammt Herr Max Heß, der mit Hackebarth als erster Hornbläser alternieren wird.

Als Dirigent des Orchesters fungirt seit zehn Jahren Wilhelm Gericke, ein Meister seines Faches, von dem leider das Gerücht umgeht, daß derselbe nach Schluß dieser Saison von seinem Posten zurücktreten wird.

Um nun unsere interessirten Leser nicht zu lange auf der Folterbank zu lassen, da es doch begreiflich ist, daß sie wissen wollen, was uns die Bostoner vorspielen werden, folge nachstehend das Programm:

Weber — Ouverture zur Oper „Oberon".

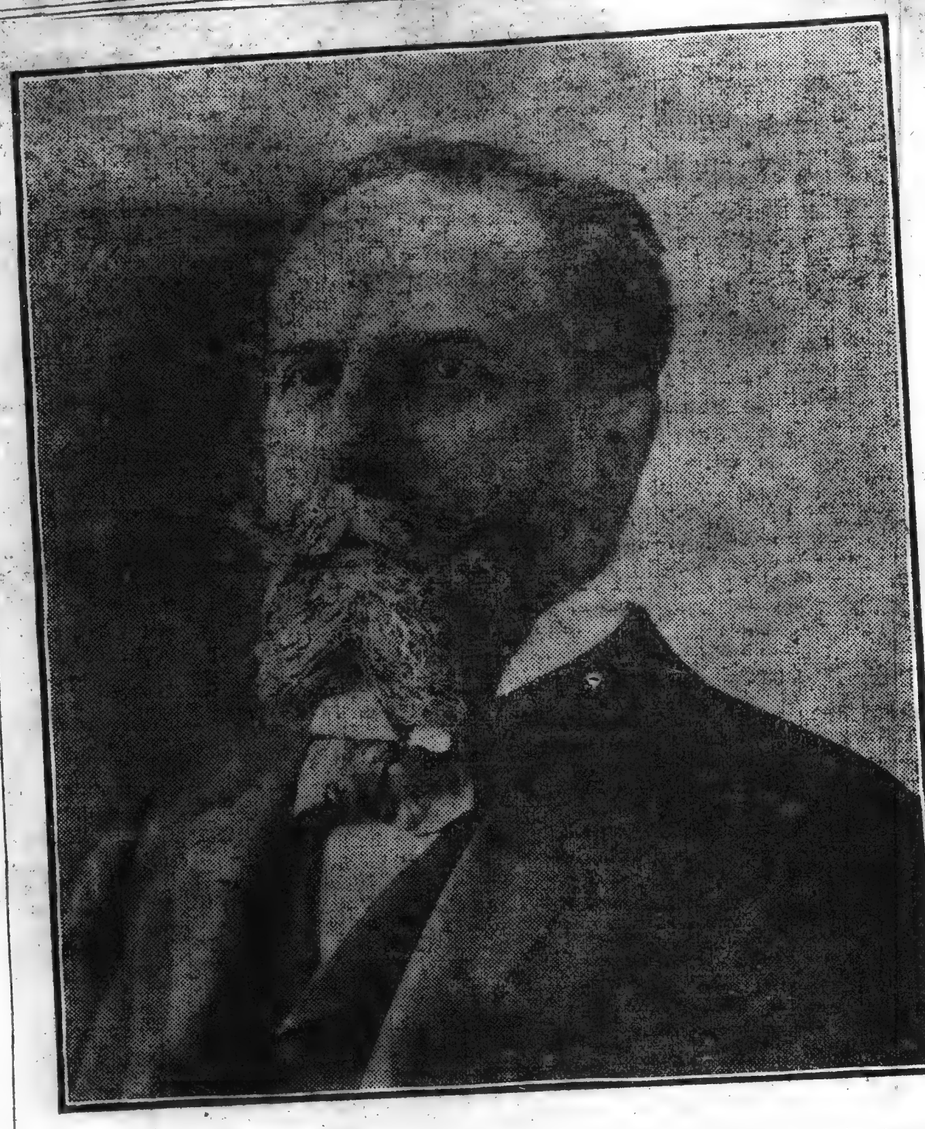
Bach — Prelude, Adagio und Gavotte in Rondo Form (arrang. für Streichmusik von Sigismund Bachrich).

Max Bruch — Concerto für Violine, No. 1, in G Minor Op. 26; 1. Allegro Moderato (G Minor); 2. Adagio (E-flat Maior); 3. Finale: Allegro Energico (G Major).

Tschaikowsky — Symphony No. 6, „Pathetic" in B Minor Op. 74; 1. Adagio, Allegro non Troppo; 2. Allegro con Grazia; 3. Allegro Molto Vivace; 4. Finale: Adagio Lamentoso.

Wagner — Overture aus „Tannhäuser" — Solist: Professor Willy Heß.

Der Vorverkauf für das Concert am Samstag beginnt am Montag Morgen um 9 Uhr an der Baker-Theaterkasse.



WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, AT THE BAKER THEATER NEXT SATURDAY NIGHT.

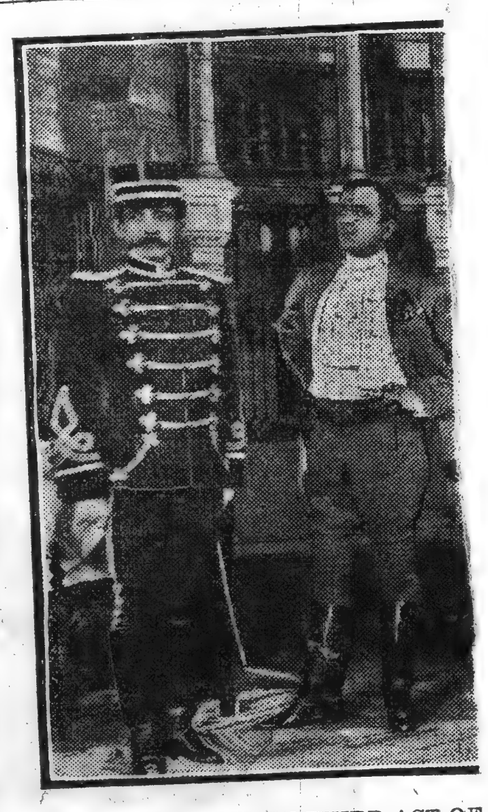
The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—this is its twenty-fifth season—but it has been run on a basis which has been possible in no other case known in the world. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony; and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results that have been obtained.

Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothe Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barbelin; among its viols such men as Ferir and Max Zach, and among its cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke. Keller, Joseph Adamowski, Eric Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and resonance of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind choirs, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists; and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Maquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary virtuosity; and the same is true of Grisez, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first bassoon, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist.

And when an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke, there is very little left for the musician or amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built upon his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns, Liszt, Berlioz and Richard Strauss.

The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, violinist, who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent and last year he made his first appearance in the East, with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in this part of the country.

It would be difficult to devise a more attractive programme than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Rochester. Beginning with Weber's brilliar "Oberon" overture, it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a Bach "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," Bruch's G Minor Concerto for violin. Tschaikokski's tremendous pathetic symphony and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.



SCENE IN THIRD ACT OF

Seats for the concert go on sale at the Baker Theater to-morrow morning.

The programme:

Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon."
Bach—Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Max Bruch—Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, Op. 26.
I. Allegro moderato (G minor).
II. Adagio (E flat major).
III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major).
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic" in B minor, Op. 74.
I. Adagio; allegro non troppo.
II. Allegro con grazia.
III. Allegro molto vivace.
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso.
Wagner—Overture to "Tannhauser."
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

Lecture on Irish Music.

An interesting feature of the lecture on Irish music to be given by James Red-

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Famous Orchestra To Be Heard Next Saturday at the Baker Theater.

A warm welcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert at the Baker Theater next Saturday evening will give an unusually brilliant opening to the local musical season. It is nearly thirteen years since the orchestra last played here, but in those days Rochester became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, the present conductor; and, while to-day it has many more opportunities to her orchestral music, nothing has quite filled the place of the Boston men.

ROCHESTER DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE.

SUNDAY. OCTOBER 1, 1905.

* * *

The sale of seats for the concert which the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in the Baker Theater on next Saturday evening, October 7th, will open at the box office of the theater to-morrow morning. This concert coming in October is as if the climax of the musical season came at the very beginning. Of all the events which have been scheduled for this season, this is the most interesting and the most important in many respects. It has been a matter of regret ever since 1893, when the last concert by the Boston band was given here that it made no more journeys so far west as Rochester. Rochester is not to-day so poverty stricken in lorchestral music as it was a dozen years ago, yet the concerts it has had seem to have served only to make keener the desire to hear once more the Boston symphony.

Mr. Gericke the conductor has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions about programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited to time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently, he has stretched a point for Rochester, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours. and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined.

It passes from Weber's greatest overture, the "Oberon," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form" most admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this will be followed by what is inappropriately called the swan song of Peter Tschaikowski, his pathetic symphony. To be sure, it was practically his last composition, and he conducted it shortly before the cholera claimed his as a victim, but such a mighty expression of profound woe is something more than a swan song. Rochester is especially fortunate in having this work put on the programme.

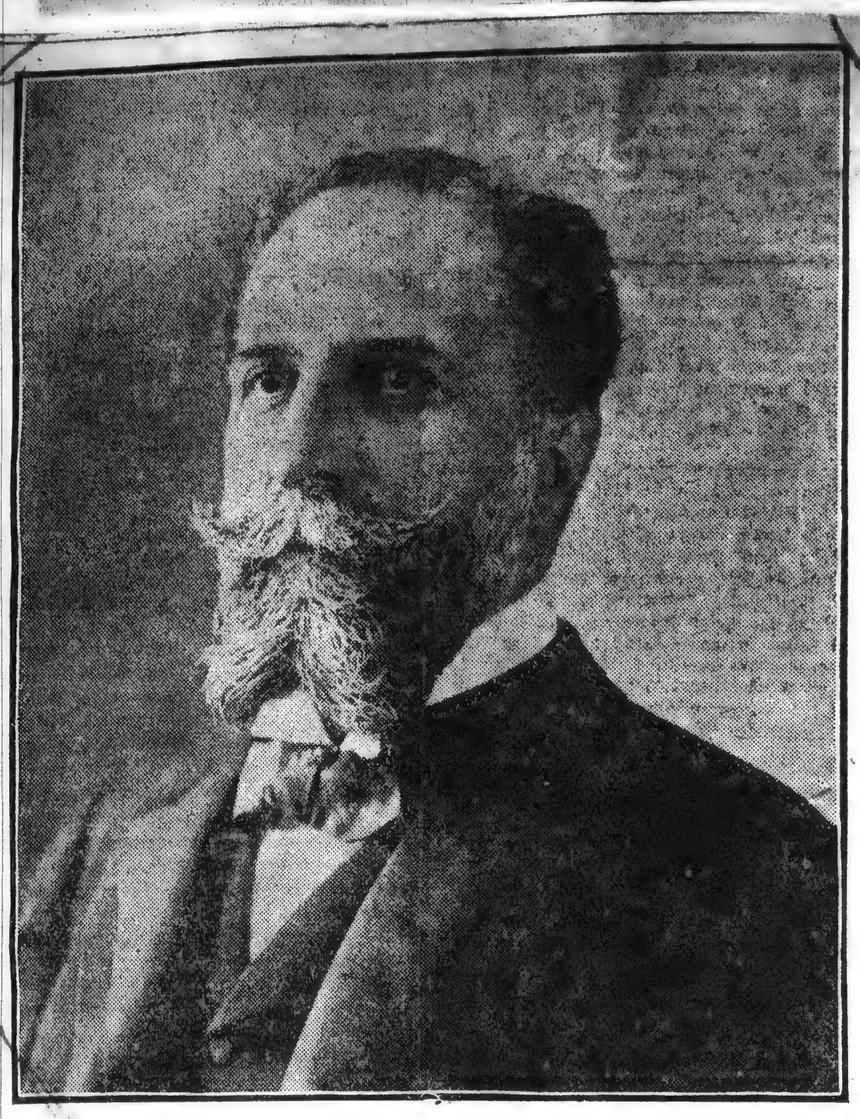
The final number will be the most popular of all overtures, that to Wagner's music drama "Tannahauser."

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Professor Willy Hess, whose appearance on Saturday evening will be his first in Rochester. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the orchestra in Boston and the other great cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that has ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice as soloist in one season, a most extraordinary event. His choice of the Bruch concerto has been a most wise one, for of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern, highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms—; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert; with equal authority he reveals the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski, and a Richard Strauss.

The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members a dozen years ago, but among the principals there have been some few changes, made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is to-day, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation. In the violins, besides Professor Willy Hess, the concert master, are such men as Timothee Adamowski, Bach, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben. The violas have such men as Ferir and Max Zach. In the 'cellos are men who carry such names as Heinrich Warnke, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Eric Loeffler, Nagle and Hadley. And it the strings are famous the world over, the wind-choirs are equally so. The first oboe is Georges Longy, the greatest artist on this instrument France ever produced. And it would be difficult to find the equals of such men as Maquarre, the first flute, Grisez, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first basso, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker the harpist. Certainly Mr. W. J. Henderson of the New York Sun was not far wrong when he called this "an orchestra of virtuosi." The concert will begin at 8:15 o'clock precisely.

[29]



WILHELM GERICKE,
Leader Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BAKER THEATER

SATURDAY EVENING, OCT. 7

First Appearance in This City in Twelve Years of the

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

A Permanent Orchestra, Organized and Maintained Solely for Concert Performances.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
Conductor

"An Orchestra of Virtuosi"
—New York Sun.

SOLOIST PROFESSOR WILLY HESS
(His First Appearance in Rochester)

PRICES - - - - - - $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00

Sale of Seats Opens Monday, Oct. 2. Local Management of J. E. Furlong FORTUNE,"

BOSTON SYMPHONY

For the First T me in Many Years Noted Organization is to be Heard Here — Will Appear at Baker.

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive programme than Mr. Wilhelm Gericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given in the Baker Theater on next Saturday evening, October 7th.

MAY BELLFORT,
At Cook Opera House.

The first number on the programme is Weber's overture to the opera "Oberon." Weber's operas have almost disappeared from the stage, but his three great overtures, "Oberon," "Euryanthe," and "De Freischuetz," remain, models of their kind, and are constantly played by the great orchestras of the world. Of these three, by common consent, the "Oberon" is the greatest, and it displays the virtuosity of the orchestra to its utmost.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has always been to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great artists of the world. It is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone, and the perfection of execution, have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's 'Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal it is made of.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's Concerto in G. minor. What Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G. minor Concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful and skillfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

The symphony, Tschaikowski's No. 6 in B minor, is one which the world regards with bated breath, for not only must it be regarded as the farewell message of one of the greatest composers of the nineteenth century, but as an expression of melancholy it has never been approached.

It is necessary to say little about the final work on the programme, the overture to "Tannhaeuser." Aside from being a tremendous introduction to a tremendous drama, it is one of the most effective concert pieces that was ever written. Seats for the concert will be on sale Monday at the Baker Theater.

[30]

REDUCTION

RATIO

13x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

LEADER

MUSICAL EVENTS

Thirteen years' absence seems merely to have whetted the desire of the Cleveland musical public to hear once more the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert is announced for the evening of October 6 in Grays' Armory. There was a report around town last week to the effect that the concert would have to be canceled because the armory, which has been undergoing considerable alterations this summer, would not be ready at that time. Immediately a dozen or more letters reached the management in Boston, protesting against cancellation of the date if it was possible in any way to find a place in which to give the concert. Happily, there was no need of any anxiety because the report was the result merely of a misunderstanding. The armory will be ready in time and the concert will be given, the seat sale opening at the store of the Burrows Bros. Company on next Monday week, October 2.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected for Cleveland is a model of what such programs should be. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more lovely than the overture which is entitled 'A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, from one of the violin sonatas, is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit as few transcriptions do. Professor Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G minor, one of the most graceful works ever written for a violin, for, while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his technique, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which has been arranged for concert use there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben" from the second act of "Siegfried"—that delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's in C minor, No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work is regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. His first movement is not like that of a celebrated conductor in Germany, of whom they are now telling a story. It was at a concert in Berlin last winter and this conductor was making his first appearance in that city in many years. Belonging to the passionate type, he put tremendous emphasis on the knocking of fate at the door. One of the great critics of Berlin remarked as he came out that fate not only rapped at the door, but smashed the whole blooming thing in.

The program in detail is as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, op. 27.....Mendelsohn
Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).....Bach
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26.....
(I.) Allegro moderato, G minor.....
(II.) Adagio, E flat major.....
(III.) Finale, allegro energico, G major .....Max Bruch
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried"..... Wagner
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67
(I.) Allegro con brio.....
(II.) Andante con moto.....
(III.) Allegro: Trio.....
(IV.) Allegro.....
Soloist, Professor Willy Hess.

Gerardy, the great Belgian cellist, who arrives in this country on the steamer Touraine November 2, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there November 6.

He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Philadelphia.

He will be first heard in New York city on November 26, at Carnegie Hall; afterwards with the Boston Symphony, the Philharmonic and in a joint recital with Marteau.

The Singers' Club will hold an examination for the admission of new members Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, at its rooms in the Rose building. Those wishing to join the club may present themselves at that time, each candidate being expected to bring a song.

Active rehearsals will begin October 3, with C. E. Clemens as conductor. Nearly all of the old members will be with the club the coming season.

Josephine Wellington, the dramatic soprano, will make a tour of this country the coming season. She will be heard in the leading cities of the country in oratorio and concert.

Mme. Wellington's first appearance in New York will take place December 3 at Carnegie Hall.

At the Hough Avenue Congregational Church preparatory examinations are being held for the Choral Society on Monday and Friday nights, at 7:30 o'clock. The need is felt for more tenors and basses to balance parts evenly. All that is necessary is the ability to read music and a fair voice.

An interesting program has been prepared for the coming term, comprising some splendid oratorios, cantatas and part songs.

The conductor, Harvey B. Gaul, is glad to consider voices at the trial nights, and give them impartial consideration.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here the evening of October 6 will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may [illegible] orchestra in the world like the one which claims Boston as its home. It is a public institution in that it serves the public of Boston and the larger cities of the East to the number of tens of thousands. But it is a private institution in that it is, so to say, the personal property of a private citien of Boston, Henry L. Higginson. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world-wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organied in 1881 by Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members were to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purpose than the giving of symphony concerts of the highest class.

Even Boston twenty-four years ago was, compared with to-day, living in musical darkness, and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Prophecies of failure have come to naught, for now, at the end of its first quarter century, it stands at the head of the orchestras of the world and has in the East a splendid clientele which regularly fills the halls to capacity wherever it plays. The orchestra at first constituted consisted of seventy men, and the first conductor was Georg Henschel. The first concert was given October 22, 1881. The last concert last season was numbered 2289. Under Mr. Henschel the orchestra did excellent work, but, excellent musician that he was, Mr. Henschel lacked experience as conductor, and the personnel of the orchestra left something to be desired. Accordingly, in the fall of 1884 Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who was Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera in Vienna and was conductor also of the Society of Friends of Music. With Mr. Gericke came much new blood in the way of young, talented and enthusiastic musicians, and from that day the orchestra has been accounted great. To Mr. Gericke is due chief credit for making the orchestra what it is. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technique and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends, he gave the orchestra its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity and its beauty of tone which are not to be equaled in the world.

At the end of the season of 1887 and 1888 Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna and he was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a brilliant career which now has placed him in the ranks of the leading conductors of the world. Mr. Nikisch was with the orchestra for three years when he returned to Europe, and was succeeded for the next five years by Emil Pauer. At the end of Mr. Pauer's term of five years Mr. Gericke again became the conductor, and was welcomed back with an enthusiasm rarely shown even to popular musicians. His success in the last seven years has been a duplicate of that won by him in his first term of service.

Since 1895 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinnati orchestras, as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned, and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence its personnel has constantly been strengthened, neither expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent. For this reason it has often been called an "Orchestra of Virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that sitting at the desks are violinists of the highest rank. It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its violins. The principle violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal cellist, who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadly, nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy, the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Marquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackerbarth and Hess, the first horns; and Schuecker, the harpist, are all of them artists of the first rank, and command the highest salaries of their several classes. By a system of selection and elmination the orchestra as it stands to-day is without its equal in the world.

Indeed, a great galaxy of artists will be heard in the United States this coming year. It seems as if their occupation in Europe was gone. Already London, Paris and Berlin and the other musical centers are feeling the hegira of some of the best known vocalists and instrumentalists to this country.

Marie Hall, the young English violinist, hardly out of her teens, is one of the first to be heard in New York. She will make her initial bow to an American audience in Carnegie Hall the evening of November 8, in a most attractive and pretentious program, playing two concertos, those of Tschaikowski and Paganini. Her tour will be under the direction of Henry Wolfsohn. Miss Hall is a pupil of the celebrated Prague masetr, Seycik, who boldly declares her one of the "greatest women violinists of the century and a genius such as he has rarely encountered."

Quite a pathetic story is wrought around Miss Hall's career, as years ago she assisted her father, who was a harpist, in playing in the hotels and social gatherings, glad to receive a few pennies for her youthful efforts. Now she is at the top of the ladder, and in England, Germany and other European countries plays to the capacities of the concert hall. She is a particular protegee of the Queen Alexandra of England and a ward in chancery of the British empire.

A public subscription is now on foot by the English nation to present their young countrywoman with a valuable Stradivarius violin.

Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, and pronounced interpreter of the charming music of Mozart, will again visit our shores, this being his third visit. He will give a series of piano recitals in Mendelssohn Hall November 14, 18 and 24. After these recitals Pugno will be heard with the different symphony orchestras in Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago and New York, and continue his tour to the Pacific coast, where he plays for the first time.

Other pianists who will be heard here in their recitals and with orchestra are Adele Aus. Der Ohe, from November until February, and Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, surnamed the "Bundle of Nerves," "The Bernhardt of the Piano," who will tour from February and only for twenty concerts.

A newcomer looking for pianistic honors is Minnie Coons, who appeared successfully in Berlin last year with the Philharmonic Orchestra, and who will make her debut here in her own orchestral concert in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, November 2.

Another great violinist who will revisit us is Hugo Heermann, who will be heard in this country from the middle of October until the middle of December. Of him one of the best known critics wrote when he played here two years ago: "He is sixty, looks like forty, and plays like twenty." The finished artistry, soft, pathetic tone and intense feeling of this grat violinist's interpretations of such masterworks as the Beethoven and Brahms concertos are still fresh in our memories. Heermann has been concertizing with enormous success in Australia this past summer, and he will open his tour in San Francisco October 12

Of the vocalists to be heard here, one of the most interesting figures will be Bessie Abott, the young American soprano, protegee of Jean de Reszke, and also his pupil, whose debut in the Grand Opera House in Paris a few years ago as Juliette made such a stir in the French capital. She will be heard in the beginning of December either in an orchestral concert or in the Metropolitan Opera House, as negotiations to that effect are now pending between Director Conried and Mr. Wolfsohn. Mme. Kirkby Lunn, the English contralto, with that voice of remarkable range, last season's Kundry of the English "Parsifal" performances, returns for a short tour during the months of December, January and February. She will give song recitals, one in New York, and appear in the leading orchestral and choral concerts. Her reappearance will be with the New York Oratorio Society, in the "Messiah" performances at Christmas time. She will sing the same work with the Apollo Club in Chicago also.

LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Muriel Foster, another eminent English contralto, will return in February and remain until May. She will begin her tour in San Francisco on February 4, and later come East to sing with the leading orchestras and New York Oratorio Society, when she will sing the part of Delilah in Saint-Saens' operatic oratorio, "Samson and Delilah," on April 3. Miss Foster has been re-engaged as leading contralto of the Cincinnati May festival, where she will sing Edgar's "Apostles" and his "Dream of Gerontius," under the composer's baton.

Giuseppe Campanari, the ever popular baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, made such a marked success last season on his concert tour that he will continue on the same lines this coming season. He will head his own company for a limited tour in October and part of November. He will open the Pittsburg series or symphony concerts, and will sing for the first time in New York in two years, with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conductor, on November 26 and 28. Campanari will include the Pacific coast in his itinerary this season.

Ben Davies, the Welsh tenor, best known in oratorio and song recitals, returns early in March and will remain until May singing in the leading festivals, as well as with the Pittsburg Orchestra, Boston Symphony, and Boston Handel and Haydn Society. His reentree in New York will be in a song recital.

Herbert Witherspoon, the American basso, whose sensational success in London last spring, the critics comparing him to Plancon, will be heard in a recital in New York early in November, repeating his London program. Mr. Witherspoon's tour will open at the coming Worcester festival, late this month, where he is engaged as leading basso for the third consecutive year. All the important choral societies have engaged this sterling artist for their "Messiah" performances, including the Chicago Apollo Club.

Other splendid American artists who will sing prominently in this coming season of music will be Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, whose star of success is rapidly traveling heavenward; Mrs. Hissem De Moss, one of our most artistic and conscientious sopranos, Janet Spencer, contralto; Edward Johnson, tenor; Theodore Van Yorx, tenor; Gwylim Miles, baritone; and Frank Croxton, basso, all of whom are under the sole management of Henry Wolfsohn, who is responsible for the success of the majority of the concert attractions, both American and European, that have been heard in this country in the last decade.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

After a lapse of seven years Washington is again this winter to have a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five in all will be given, on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13, at 4:30 o'clock, at the National Theater.

It is almost a work of supererogation to say much to Washingtonians about this famous orchestra. Now completing the first quarter century of its existence, its name stands as a motto for all that is best in music. In the full sense of the word, it is the parent permanent orchestra of America, for it is owing to the example set by it, and to the missionary work done by it in its early days, that the present time finds in the country so many orchestras of high standing, and such a splendid public that patronizes them loyally. To the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra more than to any other factor is due the high station that America to-day holds in the musical world.

For the Washington concerts the full strength of the orchestra will be used, varying from ninety to ninety-five men, as the case may be. Mr. Gericke will conduct, and a most attractive list of soloists is being arranged.

[31]

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

TIGHT BINDING

PLAIN DESIGN

SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will have the honor of opening the Grays' armory after the completion of the extensive alterations now under way. The work is being hurried and the changes will all have been completed when the concert is given Friday evening, Oct. 6. The work has been making slow progress and there was some talk of it interfering with the concert, but arrangements have been made for obviating any difficulty and the greatest orchestra of the land will first occupy the building when the workmen are through. The seat sale will begin Oct. 2, and from the many advance inquiries the outlook is the house will be speedily sold out. Director Gericke will have seventy-five men in the orchestra, the players being the same taken on all the trips the orchestra makes.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected is a model. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more lovely than the overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form from one of the violin sonatas, is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit, as very few transcriptions do. Prof. Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G minor, one of the most grateful works ever written for a violin, for while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his technique, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which have been arranged for concert use, there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben," from the second act of "Siegfried," that delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's in C minor No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work has been regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. The program in detail is as follows:

Overture—"Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," op. 27 (Mendelssohn).
Prelude—Odagio and gavotte in rondo form, arranged for strings by Sigismund Baehrich (Bach).
Concerto for violin No. 1 in G minor, op. 26. 1 Allegro moderato (G minor); 2 Adagio (E flat major); 3 Finale, allegro, energico (G major) (Max Bruch).
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried" (Wagner).
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67 1 Allegro con brio; 2 Andante con moto; 3 Allegro, trio; 4 Allegro (Beethoven).
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

EMPIRE.

At the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Convention Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, the public of Buffalo will have an opportunity to hear for the first time one of the most eminent violinists in the world, Prof. Willy Hess, who is now beginning his second year as concert-master of the orchestra. Prof. Hess's career of over thirty years has been crowded with incident and success. He made his debut as a soloist in Holland in 1872, when he was but 13 years old and what is still more remarkable, in the same season he won great distinction by his leading of the celebrated Harfen Quartette, one of the most famous chamber music organizations of its time. Boy violinists of great talent are not uncommon, but a boy of 13 who was successful as a leader of a string quartette must have been very richly endowed.

Prof. Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and at the age of 3 was brought to this country by his parents. In 1872, he was taken by his family to Holland, where he lived for a year and made his first reputation as a virtuoso. The following year his family moving to Heidelberg, the boy began to make tours of the Continent and in Paris made such a deep impression on the cognoscenti that the great Vieuxtemps volunteered to conduct the orchestra at one of his concerts.

In 1876 and 1877 Prof. Hess studied with Joachim, at the end of which time, although still under 20, he was appointed conductor of the opera at Frankfurt-am-Main, and of the Museum concerts in that city. This post he held for eight years, in which time he was thrown constantly in contact with the great musicians of the day, Liszt, Rubenstein, Brahms, Clara Schumann and Wagner. In 1886 he accepted the post of professor of violin in the Conservatory of Rotterdam and leader of the orchestra of that city. Likewise, he became leader of the famous Wirth String Quartette.

After two years in Rotterdam Sir Charles persuaded him to accept the post of concert manager of the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England, which he held for seven years, during which time he was the conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Liverpool, and did a great deal of concert work and teaching.

Prof. Hess left England in 1895 to become the head of the famous Conservatory of Cologne and leader of the celebrated Gurzenrich Quartette. This post he held until 1903, when he returned to England to become professor of violin in the Royal Academy of Music.

His success in America last season was little short of sensational, all the leading critics uniting in saying that he was one of the few really great violinists of the world.

The Most Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to give a single concert here in Massey Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 3rd, is the only organization of its kind in the world which is devoted exclusively to the performance of symphonic music, and in which its members are engaged for the year for this purpose. The famous orchestras of Vienna, Dresden, Berlin and Paris make their concerts supplementary to operatic work. The other great orchestras of this country do more or less work outside of their schedule. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is maintained exclusively for concert purposes. It cannot be secured for operatic performances, or to assist soloists. Its concerts are always symphony concert, in which the soloist is merely an incident. In this respect it is unique among all orchestras in the world.

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held here in America that Europe possesses no orchestra which surpasses it. One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the Orchestra was Hans von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss who, a year ago last Spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. Such men as Feliz Motti, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernest von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing and not a small part of the reputation which the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these. The sale of seats for the coming concert of the orchestra in Massey Hall, on Oct. 3rd, will open at the hall on Tuesday morning.

WILHELM GERICKE, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ADVERTISER

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Will Soon be Heard Here for First Time in Many Years—Many Noted Players With Organization.

"An orchestra of virtuosi" is a title which has been given the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose appearance here for the first time in over a dozen years is announced for October 7th at the Baker Theater. When Mr. William J. Henderson, the eminent music critic of the New York Sun, hit upon this happy phrase he knew whereof he spoke. Undoubtedly not a small part of the artistic perfection of the orchestra is due to the presence in its ranks of so many men who are accounted virtuosi. It was Ysaye who once said that he would rather play before any orchestra in the world than the Boston orchestra, and by the same token would rather play with that orchestra than any other.

"Among the violins," he said, "there are a dozen or more great artists and I know that when I appear with that orchestra I have to play before men who are practically in the same rank with me. If I play badly, they know as well as I do. But if I play well, none are so quick to recognize it, and when those men who have accompanied me applaud me at the end I feel that I have done myself and my art honor."

These great artists are not confined to the strings. They are found as well in the wood-winds and the brass. And as a result within the orchestra are several chamber music organizations which stand without rivals.

First comes the Boston Symphony Quartette which had its first season last year and laid the foundations of a most substantial clientele in the eastern cities. It comprises Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. E. Ferir, viola, and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cello. Prof. Hess is the concert master of the orchestra, and will be the soloist at the coming concert here. Mr. Roth occupies the second desk among the first violins of the orchestra. Mr. Ferir is the principal viola, and Mr. Warnke the principal 'cellist.

This quartet gives with great success a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington in addition to many concerts in the larger New England cities. It is a permanent organization and is undoubtedly destined to play an important part in the development of chamber music in the country.

Besides this there are no less than six other chamber music organizations within the orchestra. Next in importance, perhaps, is the Longy Club of which Mr. George Longy is the leader. Mr. Longy is perhaps the first soloist of the world and is, moreover, a most talented musician. For the past several years he has been the conductor of the Boston Orchestra Club, an amateur organization, the members of which are drawn from the highest society of Boston. The Longy Club is composed of the leading wood-wind and brass instruments of the orchestra and devotes itself to music written for these. It has become very popular in Boston, New York, and the eastern cities generally.

The Rameau Club, under the leadership of Mr. Andre Maquarre, the first flute of the orchestra, is a similar organization, except, as its name implies, it devotes its attention chiefly to the old chamber music and often calls in string instruments to assist.

The Adamowski Trio is composed of Timothy Adamowski, who shares the first desk of the orchestra with Professor Hess, his brother, Josef Adamowski, one of the 'cellists of the orchestra, and Mme. Szumowska, who is the wife of Josef Adamowski. This organization is well-known through the east. The Ondricek String quintet has for its leader Karl Ondricek, one of the first violins of the orchestra and the Hoffman Quartet has as its leader Jacques Hoffman, likewise one of the first violins. Both of these have all the engagements their duties with the orchestra allow them to fill.

Finally there is the Boston Symphony Horn Quartet, led by Mr. Hockebarth, the first horn of the orchestra, which is a unique organization.

No orchestra in the world has so many great artists who are able to shine equally as orchestral and chamber music musicians and as soloists. And this state is due to the fact that the world has been scoured to secure the best talent.

COMMERCIAL

That Buffalo is fully aroused to the fact that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after an absence of twelve years, is coming here for two concerts this season, was demonstrated at the opening of the subscription sale for the concerts, which began on Thursday morning at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store and closes this evening at 6 o'clock. A long line of buyers was waiting for the sale to open and the demand has kept up steadily ever since. The first concert takes place at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, the second on February 19th. The sale of seats for the first concert opens on Tuesday morning next at 9 o'clock, also at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels store. All speculation as to the inducement offered the Boston Symphony Orchestra to come here again was set at rest this week by the publication of the names of the 40 Buffalo men and women who are back of the enterprise and who have joined together to make possible this great musical treat. Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, once it was decided to come here, made up his mind to give Buffalo a symphony program, the equal of which has never been played in this city. It is longer than the usual program selected for the orchestra and it includes several exquisite numbers, opening with one of Mendelssohn's most beautiful overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." The extraordinary quality of the string choir of the orchestra is well known; every player is a master, and the beauty of the string orchestra will be fully demonstrated in Bach's Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form. Prof. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the first concert and will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," which demands the highest skill in execution, as it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping. Variety, beauty and romance are combined in the program arranged for the first Buffalo concert by the orchestra, which is as follows:

Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27.....Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo Form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G. minor, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
(1) Allegro moderator (G minor).
(2) Adagio (E flat major).
(3) Finale: Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.. ..... Schumann
(1) Sostenuto assai; Allegro, mo non troppo.
(2) Scherzo: Allegro Vivace. Trio I and Trio II.
(3) Adagio Espressivo.
(4) Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist, Professor Willy Hess.

NEWS

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Thirteen years' absence seems merely to have whetted the desire of the Cleveland musical public to hear once more the Boston Symphony orchestra, whose concert is announced for Friday evening, October 6, in Grays' armory. There was a report around town last week to the effect that the concert would have to be canceled because the armory, which has been undergoing considerable alterations this summer, would not be ready at that time. The armory will be ready in time, and the concert will be given, the seat sale opening at the store of the Burrows Brothers' Company on next Monday week, October 2.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected for Cleveland is a model of what such programs should be. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more pleasing than the overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in ronda form from one of the violin sonatas is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which have been arranged for concert use, there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben," from the second act of "Siegfried," that delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's, in C minor No. 5.

Gazette

No Grand Opera for Boston.

Mr. Conreid, of the Metropolitan Opera of New York, announced last week that Boston was not a grand opera town, and would get no opera this season unless it put up a guarantee. This was not at all surprising to anybody. No American city, and few European ones, have ever supported a great orchestra and a great operatic season at the same time. Boston, one city on the continent which possesses a great orchestra, has supported that orchestra nobly, enabling it to engage the best instruments of Europe and to retain the services of two of the world's greatest conductors, Paur, who left it some years ago, and was heard here last year, with the Pittsburg orchestra, and William Gericke, who will conduct the Boston Symphony here on Monday at the Victoria Rink.

[32]

Cutting from the World

BUFFALO, N. Y.

SEP 24 1905

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts, which took place last week, was most satisfying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." This work, the opus number of which is twenty-seven, shows the great composer in the full flush of his melodious youth. Without ostensibly being programme music its whole spirit breathes the meaning of the title.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well-known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equaled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's "Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for an orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal of which it is made.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's 'Concerto in G Minor." What Liszt's piano forte concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G minor concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful, and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time it contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

Tshaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is typically a bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of the orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

It is a curious fact that there are so few conductors who are in close sympathy with the lovely music written by Robert Schumann. There are many great Beethoven conductors, many great Wagner conductors, conductors who excel in the wonderfully brilliant works of modern romantic writers, but the conductors who reveal the homely heart of the great interpreter of Schumann in the world today, and, if only for this reason, the presence on the programme of Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony No. 2 would make the concert an event of more than ordinary importance. This symphony is one of the most characteristic works that came from Schumann's romantic genius. It has the brightness, the sunniness, the warmth that characterized the musician before the great misfortune overwhelmed him, and is one of those works which show to such a high degree that German quality which the Germans so expressively call "Gemuethlichkeit."

The sale of single seats for the first concert will begin at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' Tuesday morning, September 26th, at 9 o'clock.

Folowing is the programme:

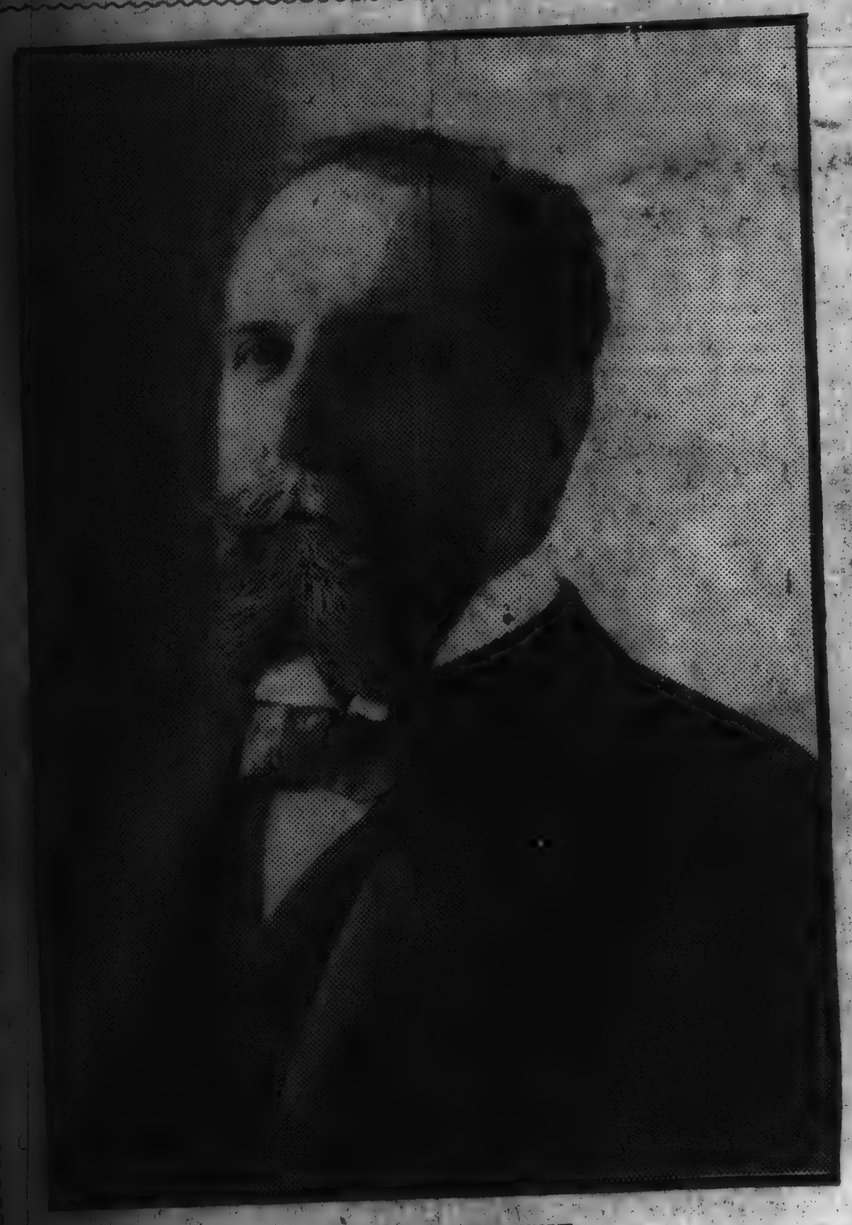
Mendelssohn—
Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage" Op. 27.

Bach—
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)

Max Bruch—
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor Op. 26.
I—Allegro moderato (G minor.)
II—Adagio (E flat major.)
III—Finale: Allegro energico (G major.)

Tschaikowsky—
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.

Schumann—
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.
I—Sostenuto assai; Allegro, ma non troppo.
II—Scherzo; Allegro Vivace. Trio I and Trio II.
III—Adagio Espressivo.
IV—Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.



WILHELM GERICKE.

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at Convention Hall on October 4th.

Free Press

Detroit, Mich.

SEP 24 1905

Detroit Orchestral Association Seat Sale.

The sale of season tickets for the concerts of the Detroit Orchestral Association, which has been so auspiciously inaugurated by Mr. F. K. Stearns, will open at Wright, Kay & Co.'s next Saturday morning, September 30. No single seats will be sold on this date, but tickets for the entire series only. The prices of season tickets will be $9, $7.50, $6, $4.50 and $3, according to location. A saving of $2.50 will be effected on the highest priced tickets over buying them singly for the various concerts. On account of the expense entailed in the engagement of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with its quota of seventy-five men, the price of single seats for that concert will be raised, with the exception of the 50-cent seats. This price will remain unchanged for the series. The scale of prices for single seats for the Boston orchestra will therefore be $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 and 50c. The advance subscription sale has been very large, several thousand dollars' worth of season tickets having already been taken. Those desiring to purchase season tickets may still take advantage of the advance subscription by mailing orders to the secretary, N. J. Corey, 39 Woodward Terrace.

PRESS

The forty-eighth annual festival of the Worcester County (Mass.) Musical Association will be held on September 25 to 28. Wallace Goodrich will again conduct the choral works, in which the Worcester festival chorus of 400 voices will be heard, and Franz Kneisel, the orchestral program, in which nearly sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear.

The program includes five concerts: Wednesday evening, September 27, Mozart's "Requiem" and portions of Franck's "The Beautitudes"; Thursday afternoon, symphony concert, with soloists; Thursday evening, Beethoven's "Ninth (Choral) Symphony" and Bruckner's "Te Deum"; Friday afternoon, symphony concert, with soloists; Friday evening, artists' night.

Among the soloists are: Inez Jolivet, Herbert Witherspoon, Mrs. Rider-Kelsey, Harold Bauer, Mme. Maconda, George Hamlin, Isabelle Bouton, Marie Kunkel Zimmerman, Harrison W. Bennett, Julian Walker, Corine Rider-Kelsey, Bertha Cushing Child and Helen Allen Hunt.

NEW YORK CITY.

SEP 27 1905

To Play Webber Symphony.

William Gerike of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming musical season. The work will have its first production in this country at the Boston concerts on Dec. 29 and 30. After the finish of the tour of Madame Emma Eames, with whom Mr. Webber will tour, on Dec. 17 Mr. Webber will go to Boston as the guest of the Boston Orchestra to be present at the rehearsals and its initial performance. The new symphony has been successfully performed, both in Warsaw and London, but he has never heard it. Mr. Webber's opera "Fiorella" was successfully produced at the New Waldorf Theatre in London last spring. He has written many beautiful songs, the best known of which is "La Premiere" and is one of the numbers which Madame Eames has included in her repertoire for her coming concert tour.

[33]

Newspaper Clipping Bureau in the World

STAR

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SEP 24 1905

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

RETURN OF THE ORGANIZATION TO THIS CITY.

After a lapse of seven years Washington is again this winter to have a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five in all will be given, on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13 at 4:30 o'clock.

It has always been a matter of great regret that the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra found it necessary to abandon the concerts in this city and no year has passed that efforts have not been made to renew the old arrangement. The concerts were given up because of the establishment in New York of a second series of five on Saturday afternoons, the demand for more concerts in that city having become absolutely imperative. As the orchestra has but one week each month in which it may leave Boston, some city had to be deprived of the concerts and unfortunately it was Washington that suffered.

Last spring renewed efforts were made to bring back the concerts which formed so important a part in the artistic and social life of the capitol, and through Mrs. Katie Wilson Green such inducements were offered the management that it was decided to abondon the second series of concerts in Philadelphia and place them in Washington. This is a matter of congratulation for all concerned.

It is almost a work of supererogation to say much to Washingtonians about this famous orchestra. Now completing the first quarter century of its existence, its name stands as a motto for all that is best in music. In the full sense of the word, it is the parent permanent orchestra of America, for it is owing to the example set by it and to the missionary work done by it in its early days that the present time finds in the country so many orchestras of high standing and such a splendid public that patronizes them so loyally. To the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra more than to any other factor is due the high station that America today holds in the musical world.

The first concert by the orchestra was given in the old Music Hall in Boston on October 22, 1881. It consisted then of seventy performers, most of them Boston musicians, under the conductorship of Georg Henchel, a most admirable musician. From the beginning there was no question of its success, but no city alone can give sufficient work to keep busy such an orchestra the whole year, for the basis of its organization was the employment of the musicians by the year and the exclusive use of their services in that time. As a result of this the work of the orchestra was soon extended.

In the fall of 1884 Wilhelm Gericke was brought to Boston to be the conductor, and from that time the extraordinarily brilliant career of the orchestra began. In the course of the next two or three years the orchestra was materially strengthened by the importation of fresh, new material and was increased in size, and in the next few years concerts became annual fixtures in the larger cities of the east. The gain of the orchestra in public favor, slow at first, because it was decidedly a new idea in music for this country, grew with extraordinary rapidity, until today, wherever the orchestra plays crowded houses are the rule.

Mr. Gericke's first term of five years was followed by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a career which was to place him before he left America in the topmost rank of conductors, and Mr. Nikisch was followed by Mr. Paur, who in turn gave way to Mr. Gericke, was received an extraordinarily warm welcome to this country in the fall of 1898.

Full Strength to Come Here.

For the Washington concerts the full strength of the orchestra will be used, varying from ninety to ninety-five men as the case may be. Mr. Gericke will conduct and a most attractive list of soloists is being arranged.

In the seven years that have passed since the last visit of the orchestra, several important changes have been made in the personnel. The concert master is now Prof. Willy Hess, an artist of great attainments, who has not only made a brilliant success in that difficult position, but has been hailed in this country as one of the greatest violin virtuosi ever heard here. Professor Hess is also the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which will give three recitals of chamber music here this winter.

This year there will also be a new principal 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the Kaim Orchestra in Munich, where he is reckoned one of the best men in Germany. And in the other departments of the orchestra [illegible] artists as Ferir, the principal [illegible] the first oboe; Grisez, the [illegible] and Sadony, the first bassoon, all of them artists of very highest rank, for when it comes to getting a man for any particular position, money, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is never a question.

Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts, which took place last week, was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." This work, the opus number of which is twenty-seven, shows the great composer in the full flush of his melodious youth. Without ostensibly being programme music its whole spirit breathes the meaning of the title.

WILHELM GERICKE.

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at Convention Hall on October 4th.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well-known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equaled even by the celebrated Philarmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's "Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for an orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal of which it is made.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's 'Concerto in G Minor." What Liszt's piano forte concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G minor concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful, and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time it contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

Tshaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is typically a bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of the orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most briliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

It is a curious fact that there are so few conductors who are in close sympathy with the lovely music written by Robert Schumann. There are many great Beethoven conductors, many great Wagner conductors, conductors who excel in the wonderfully brilliant works of modern romantic writers, but the conductors who reveal the homely heart of the great Schumann are so few that they may be counted on the fingers of one hand. It is not going too far to say that Wilhelm Gericke is the greatest interpreter of Schumann in the world today, and, if only for this reason, the presence on the programme of Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony No. 2 would make the concert an event of more than ordinary importance. This symphony is one of the most characteristic works that came from Schumann's romantic genius. It has the brightness, the sunniness, the warmth that characterized the musician before the great misfortune overwhelmed him, and is one of those works which show to such a high degree that German quality which the Germans so expressively call "Gemuethlichkeit."

The sale of single seats for the first concert will begin at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' Tuesday morning, September 26th, at 9 o'clock.

Folowing is the programme:

Mendelssohn—
Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage" Op. 27.

Bach—
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)

Max Bruch—
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor Op. 26.
I—Allegro moderato (G minor.)
II—Adagio (E flat major.)
III—Finale: Allegro energico (G major.)

Tschaikowsky—
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.

Schumann—
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.
I—Sostenuto assai; Allegro, mo non troppo.
II—Scherzo; Allegro Vivace. Trio I and Trio II.
III—Adagio Espressivo.
IV—Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

* * *

Detroit Orchestral Association Seat Sale.

The sale of season tickets for the concerts of the Detroit Orchestral Association, which has been so auspiciously inaugurated by Mr. F. K. Stearns, will open at Wright, Kay & Co.'s next Saturday morning, September 30. No single seats will be sold on this date, but tickets for the entire series only. The prices of season tickets will be $9, $7.50, $6, $4.50 and $3, according to location. A saving of $2.50 will be effected on the highest priced tickets over buying them singly for the various concerts. On account of the expense entailed in the engagement of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with its quota of seventy-five men, the price of single seats for that concert will be raised, with the exception of the 50-cent seats. This price will remain unchanged for the series. The scale of prices for single seats for the Boston orchestra will therefore be $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 and 50c. The advance subscription sale has been very large, several thousand dollars' worth of season tickets having already been taken. Those desiring to purchase season tickets may still take advantage of the advance subscription by mailing orders to the secretary, N. J. Corey, 39 Woodward Terrace.

* * *

The forty-eighth annual festival of the Worcester County (Mass.) Musical Association will be held on September 25 to 29. Wallace Goodrich will again conduct the choral works, in which the Worcester festival chorus of 400 voices will be heard, and Franz Kneisel, the orchestral program, in which nearly sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear.

The program includes five concerts: Wednesday evening, September 27, Mozart's "Requiem" and portions of Franck's "The Beautitudes"; Thursday afternoon, symphony concert, with soloists; Thursday evening, Beethoven's "Ninth (Choral) Symphony" and Bruckner's "Te Deum"; Friday afternoon, symphony concert, with soloists; Friday evening, artists' night.

Among the soloists are: Inez Jolivet, Herbert Witherspoon, Mrs. Rider-Kelsey, Harold Bauer, Mme. Maconda, George Hamlin, Isabelle Bouton, Marie Kunkel Zimmerman, Harrison W. Bennett, Julian Walker, Corine Rider-Kelsey, Bertha Cushing Child and Helen Allen Hunt.

* * *

To Play Webber Symphony.

William Gerike of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties for the coming musical season. The work will have its first production in this country at the Boston concerts on Dec. 29 and 30. After the finish of the tour of Madame Emma Eames, with whom Mr. Webber will tour, on Dec. 17 Mr. Webber will go to Boston as the guest of the Boston Orchestra to be present at the rehearsals and its initial performance. The new symphony has been successfully performed, both in Warsaw and London, but he has never heard it. Mr. Webber's opera "Fiorella" was successfully produced at the New Waldorf Theatre in London last spring. He has written many beautiful songs, the best known of which is "La Premibere" and is one of the numbers which Madame Eames has included in her repertoire for her coming concert tour.

[33]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR
m ress
e

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

RETURN OF THE ORGANIZATION TO THIS CITY.

After a lapse of seven years Washington is again this winter to have a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five in all will be given, on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13 at 4:30 o'clock.

It has always been a matter of great regret that the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra found it necessary to abandon the concerts in this city and no year has passed that efforts have not been made to renew the old arrangement. The concerts were given up because of the establishment in New York of a second series of five on Saturday afternoons, the demand for more concerts in that city having become absolutely imperative. As the orchestra has but one week each month in which it may leave Boston, some city had to be deprived of the concerts and unfortunately it was Washington that suffered.

Last spring renewed efforts were made to bring back the concerts which formed so important a part in the artistic and social life of the capitol, and through Mrs. Katie Wilson Green such inducements were offered the management that it was decided to abondon the second series of concerts in Philadelphia and place them in Washington. This is a matter of congratulation for all concerned.

It is almost a work of supererogation to say much to Washingtonians about this famous orchestra. Now completing the first quarter century of its existence, its name stands as a motto for all that is best in music. In the full sense of the word, it is the parent permanent orchestra of America, for it is owing to the example set by it and to the missionary work done by it in its early days that the present time finds in the country so many orchestras of high standing and such a splendid public that patronizes them so loyally. To the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra more than to any other factor is due the high station that America today holds in the musical world.

The first concert by the orchestra was given in the old Music Hall in Boston on October 22, 1881. It consisted then of seventy performers, most of them Boston musicians, under the conductorship of Georg Henchel, a most admirable musician. From the beginning there was no question of its success, but no city alone can give sufficient work to keep busy such an orchestra the whole year, for the basis of its organization was the employment of the musicians by the year and the exclusive use of their services in that time. As a result of this the work of the orchestra was soon extended.

In the fall of 1884 Wilhelm Gericke was brought to Boston to be the conductor, and from that time the extraordinarily brilliant career of the orchestra began. In the course of the next two or three years the orchestra was materially strengthened by the importation of fresh, new material and was increased in size, and in the next few years concerts became annual fixtures in the larger cities of the east. The gain of the orchestra in public favor, slow at first, because it was decidedly a new idea in music for this country, grew with extraordinary rapidity, until today, wherever the orchestra plays crowded houses are the rule.

Mr. Gericke's first term of five years was followed by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a career which was to place him before he left America in the topmost rank of conductors, and Mr. Nikisch was followed by Mr. Paur, who in turn gave way to Mr. Gericke, was received an extraordinarily warm welcome to this country in the fall of 1898.

Full Strength to Come Here.

For the Washington concerts the full strength of the orchestra will be used, varying from ninety to ninety-five men as the case may be. Mr. Gericke will conduct and a most attractive list of soloists is being arranged.

In the seven years that have passed since the last visit of the orchestra, several important changes have been made in the personnel. The concert master is now Prof. Willy Hess, an artist of great attainments, who has not only made a brilliant success in that difficult position, but has been hailed in this country as one of the greatest violin virtuosi ever heard here. Professor Hess is also the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which will give three recitals of chamber music here this winter.

This year there will also be a new principal 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the Kaim Orchestra in Munich, where he is reckoned one of the best men in Germany. And in the other departments of the orchestra artists as Ferir, the first oboe; Grisez, [illegible] and Sadony, the first bassoon, all of them artists of very highest rank, for when it comes to getting a man for any particular position, money, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is never a question.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
Gazette
From MONTREAL, CAN.
Address SEP 22 1905

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME.

Not only will the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at the Victoria Rink on Monday, October 2, in full strength of eighty of the best instrumentalists of the world, under William Gericke's baton, be by far the greatest orchestra that has ever visited Montreal, but also it will perform the one symphonic composition which occupies a unique place in musical literature and in the regard of musical people. The programme for the concert announced today. It is as varied as it could possibly be written, the limits of really great symphonic music; and its chief number will be the C minor symphony of Beethoven.

Lovers of the modern polyhonic style will have what is probably the most exquisite piece of descriptive music in the Wagner; while Prof. Willy Hess, pupil of Joachim and Wieniawski, and an incomparable exponent of the classic violin school, will give a Spohr concert in which that school is most brilliantly typified. The programme is as follows:—

Weber—Overture to the Opera "Oberon."
L. Spohr—Concerto for violin in D minor, No. 9.
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegrette.
Hector Berlioz—
(a) Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisp), from "The Damnation of Faust" Op. 2.
(b) Waltz of Sylphs.
(c) Rakoczy March.
Wagner—"Waldweben," from "Siegfried."
Beethoven—Symphony in C Minor, No. 5, Op. 67.
I Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

WILLEY HESS,
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

paper Cutting Bureau in the World
WORLD
SEP 9 1905

BOSTON'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Grand Pioneer in the Development of Music.

Altho distinctly an eastern product and maintained primarily for the benefit of Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose coming concert here will mark the opening of the musical season, has been one of the chief factors in the development of music in the middle west and that part of the United States owes a debt of gratitude to it that is hardly realized now. For many thousands of persons who now form a part of that magnificent public which is supporting the art of music so in the cities of the middle west the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first that enabled them to realize what orchestral music in the large and best sense of the term means.

Organized in 1881, its first concert having been given on Oct. 22 of that year, the first five years were devoted entirely to Boston and some of the surrounding cities of New England. With the arrival in America of Mr. Gericke in the fall of 1884 and with the rapid rise of the orchestra to perfection, the idea grew that there was a splendid field lying fallow in the west. At that time there were no good orchestras west of the Alleghanies—in fact, the only other regularly-constituted orchestra was the Philharmonic Society of New York, which never has traveled. What orchestral music was heard was given by organizations which now would be called "scratch bands," that is to say, orchestra of occasion, organized for a tour and to disband after it.

Manifestly artistic results could not be obtained from such means and from all parts of the west came requests that the Boston Symphony should give concerts in that part of the country. The problem was most difficult. To carry seventy-five or eighty men around the country is an expensive operation, but it was finally decided to make the attempt.

Accordingly, in the spring of 1886 a first tour of the middle west was made. The success was astonishing. No sops were thrown to the Cerberus of popular taste. The programs were like those played in Boston, for Mr. Gericke, who was then the conductor, knew no compromise between "good and almost as good." Yet the public responded in a manner which completely bewildered the skeptics, of whom there had been many. Everywhere the concerts were crowded with men and women eager to hear good music; who for the most part were hearing it adequately played for the first time in their lives.

The success of this tour was such, that similar tours were made in the spring of the next succeeding seven years, three under Gericke, three under Nikisch and one under Kneisel, and each year were found increasing evidence of the earnest desire of the public for good music.

Once awakened to the meaning of the orchestral music, the public began to start movements to have orchestras of their own. Directly to the influence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be traced the foundation and prosperity of such admirable organizations as the permanent orchestras of Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, as well as smaller local orchestras which for the past ten years have been doing missionary work in the cause. It was the Boston Symphony Orchestra which taught the public the possibility and desirability of maintaining such orchestras. It was the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who showed during the early days of that organization that the inevitable deficits were matters of minor moment compared with the other substantial results obtained.

The great Boston Orchestra will be at Massey Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 3.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will have the honor of opening the Grays armory after the completion of the extensive alterations now under way. The work is being hurried and the changes will all have been completed when the concert is given Friday evening, Oct. 6. The work has been making slow progress and there was some talk of it interfering with the concert, but arrangements have been made for obviating any difficulty and the greatest orchestra of the land will first occupy the building when the workmen are through. The seat sale will begin Oct. 2, and from the many advance inquiries the outlook is the house will be speedily sold out. Director Gericke will have seventy-five men in the orchestra, the players being the same taken on all the trips the orchestra makes.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected is a model. The names repre-

Want Health ?

In the first place, the stomach must be made strong so that the food will be properly digested, the bowels opened and the blood made pure. In the second place, we advise you to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters because it has proven time and again its wonderful value in all cases of Stomach troubles. It always cures Poor Appetite, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Biliousness and Malaria. Try a bottle to-day.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS

sented in the orchestra will be the same as those which have been heard in Montreal on former occasions. The program in detail is as follows:

Overture—"Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," op. 27 (Mendelssohn).
Prelude—Odagio and gavotte in rondo form, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich (Bach).
Concerto for violin No. 1 in G minor, op. 26. 1 Allegro moderato (G minor); 2 Adagio (E flat major); 3 Finale, allegro, energico (G major) (Max Bruch).
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried" (Wagner).
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67 1 Allegro con brio; 2 Andante con moto; 3 Allegro, trio; 4 Allegro (Beethoven).
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

Cleveland Plain Dealer
Sept 24

ROMEIKE, NEW YORK
The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
Gazette
From ... Montreal Can
Address ... Sept 9 1905

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME.

Not only will the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at the Victoria Rink on Monday, October 2, in full strength of eighty of the best instrumentalists of the world, under William Gericke's baton, be by far the greatest orchestra that has ever visited Montreal, but also it will perform the one symphonic composition which occupies a unique place in musical literature and in the regard of musical people. The programme for the concert is announced today. It is as varied as it could possibly be written, the limits of really great symphonic music; and its chief number will be the C minor symphony of Beethoven.

Lovers of the modern polyhonic style will have what is probably the most exquisite piece of descriptive music in the Wagner; while Prof. Willy Hess, pupil of Joachin and Wenlawski, and an incomparable exponent of the classic violin school, will give a Spohr concert in which that school is most brilliantly typified. The programme is as follows:—

Weber—Overture to the Opera "Oberon."
L. Spohr—Concerto for violin in D minor, No. 9.
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegrette.
Hector Berlioz—
(a) Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisp), from "The Damnation of Faust" Op. 2.
(b) Waltz of Sylphs.
(c) Rakoczy March.
Wagner—"Waldweben," from "Siegfried."
Beethoven—Symphony in C Minor, No. 5, Op. 67.
I Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

WILLEY HESS,
Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Paper Cutting Bureau in the World
Montreal

BOSTON'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A Grand Pioneer in the Development of Music.

Although distinctly an eastern product and maintained primarily for the benefit of Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose coming concert here will mark the opening of the musical season, has been one of the chief factors in the development of music in the middle west and that part of the United States owes a debt of gratitude to it that is hardly realized now. For many thousands of persons who now form a part of that magnificent public which is supporting the art of music so in the cities of the middle west the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first that enabled them to realize what orchestral music in the large and best sense of the term means.

Organized in 1881, its first concert having been given on Oct. 22 of that year, the first five years were devoted entirely to Boston and some of the surrounding cities of New England. With the arrival in America of Mr. Gericke in the fall of 1884 and with the rapid rise of the orchestra to perfection, the idea grew that there was a splendid field lying fallow in the west. At that time there were no good orchestras west of the Alleghanies—in fact, the only other regularly-constituted orchestra was the Philharmonic Society of New York, which never has traveled. What orchestral music was heard was given by organizations which now would be called "scratch bands," that is to say, orchestra of occasion, organized for a tour and to disband after it.

Manifestly artistic results could not be obtained from such means and from all parts of the west came requests that the Boston Symphony should give concerts in that part of the country. The problem was most difficult. To carry seventy-five or eighty men around the country is an expensive operation, but it was finally decided to make the attempt.

Accordingly, in the spring of 1886 a first tour of the middle west was made. The success was astonishing. No sops were thrown to the Cerberus of popular taste. The programs were like those played in Boston, for Mr. Gericke, who was then the conductor, knew no compromise between "good and almost as good." Yet the public responded in a manner which completely bewildered the skeptics, of whom there had been many. Everywhere the concerts were crowded with men and women eager to hear good music, who for the most part were hearing it adequately played for the first time in their lives.

The success of this tour was such, that similar tours were made in the spring of the next succeeding seven years, three under Gericke, three under Nikisch and one under Kneisel, and each year were found increasing evidence of the earnest desire of the public for good music.

Once awakened to the meaning of the orchestral music, the public began to start movements to have orchestras of their own. Directly to the influence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be traced the foundation and prosperity of such admirable organizations as the permanent orchestras of Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, as well as smaller local orchestras which for the past ten years have been doing missionary work in the cause. It was the Boston Symphony Orchestra which taught the public the possibility and desirability of maintaining such orchestras. It was the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who showed during the early days of that organization that the inevitable deficits were matters of minor moment compared with the other substantial results obtained.

The great Boston Orchestra will be at Massey Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 3.

any "pop" concerts here.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will have the honor of opening the Grays' armory after the completion of the extensive alterations now under way. The work is being hurried and the changes will all have been completed when the concert is given Friday evening, Oct. 6. The work has been making slow progress and there was some talk of it interfering with the concert, but arrangements have been made for obviating any difficulty and the greatest orchestra of the land will first occupy the building when the workmen are through. The seat sale will begin Oct. 2, and from the many advance inquiries the outlook is the house will be speedily sold out. Director Gericke will have seventy-five men in the orchestra, the players being the same taken on all the trips the orchestra makes.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected is a model. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more lovely than the overture, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form from one of the violin sonatas, is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit, as very few transcriptions do. Prof. Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G minor, one of the most grateful works ever written for a violin, for while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his techniche, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which have been arranged for concert use, there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben," from the second act of "Siegfried," that delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's in C minor No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work has been regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. The program in detail is as follows:

Overture—"Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," op. 27 (Mendelssohn).
Prelude—Odagio and gavotte in rondo form, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich (Bach).
Concerto for violin No. 1 in G minor, op. 26. 1 Allegro moderato (G minor); 2 Adagio (E flat major); 3 Finale, allegro, energico (G major) (Max Bruch).
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried" (Wagner).
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67 1 Allegro con brio; 2 Andante con moto; 3 Allegro, trio; 4 Allegro (Beethoven).
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

Want Health ?

In the first place, the stomach must be made strong so that the food will be properly digested, the bowels opened and the blood made pure. In the second place, we advise you to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters because it has proven time and again its wonderful value in all cases of Stomach troubles. It always cures Poor Appetite, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Biliousness and Malaria. Try a bottle to-day.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS

Cleveland Plain Dealer Sept 24

REDUCTION

RATIO

13x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

MUSICAL EVENTS

Thirteen years' absence seems merely to have whetted the desire of the Cleveland musical public to hear once more the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert is announced for the evening of October 6 in Grays' Armory. There was a report around town last week to the effect that the concert would have to be canceled because the armory, which has been undergoing considerable alterations this summer, would not be ready at that time. Immediately a dozen or more letters reached the management in Boston, protesting against cancellation of the date if it was possible in any way to find a place in which to give the concert. Happily, there was no need of any anxiety because the report was the result merely of a misunderstanding. The armory will be ready in time and the concert will be given, the seat sale opening at the store of the Burrows Bros. Company on next Monday week, October 2.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected for Cleveland is a model of what such programs should be. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more lovely than the overture which is entitled 'A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage,'' and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, from one of the violin sonatas, is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit as few transcriptions do. Professor Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G minor, one of the most graceful works ever written for a violin, for, while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his technique, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which has been arranged for concert use there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben" from the second act of "Siegfried"—that delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's in C minor, No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work is regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. His first movement is not like that of a celebrated conductor in Germany, of whom they are now telling a story. It was at a concert in Berlin last winter and this conductor was making his first appearance in that city in many years. Belonging to the passionate type, he put tremendous emphasis on the knocking of fate at the door. One of the great critics of Berlin remarked as he came out that fate not only rapped at the door, but smashed the whole blooming thing in.

The program in detail is as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, op. 27.....Mendelsohn
Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).....Bach
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26.....
(I.) Allegro moderato, G minor.....
(II.) Adagio, E flat major.....
(III.) Finale, allegro energico, G major .....Max Bruch
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried".....
..... Wagner
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67
(I.) Allegro con brio.....
(II.) Andante con moto.....
(III.) Allegro; Trio.....
(IV.) Allegro.....
Soloist, Professor Willy Hess.

Gerardy, the great Belgian cellist, who arrives in this country on the steamer Touraine November 2, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there November 6.

He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Philadelphia.

He will be first heard in New York city on November 26, at Carnegie Hall; afterwards with the Boston Symphony, the Philharmonic and in a joint recital with Marteau.

The Singers' Club will hold an examination for the admission of new members Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, at its rooms in the Rose building. Those wishing to join the club may present themselves at that time, each candidate being expected to bring a song.

Active rehearsals will begin October 3, with C. E. Clemens as conductor. Nearly all of the old members will be with the club the coming season.

Josephine Wellington, the dramatic soprano, will make a tour of this country the coming season. She will be heard in the leading cities of the country in oratorio and concert.

Mme. Wellington's first appearance in New York will take place December 3 at Carnegie Hall.

At the Hough Avenue Congregational Church preparatory examinations are being held for the Choral Society on Monday and Friday nights, at 7:30 o'clock. The need is felt for more tenors and basses to balance parts evenly. All that is necessary is the ability to read music and a fair voice.

An interesting program has been prepared for the coming term, comprising some splendid oratorios, cantatas and part songs.

The conductor, Harvey B. Gaul, is glad to consider voices at the trial nights, and give them impartial consideration.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here the evening of October 6 will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may here be used in its fullest significance because there is no orchestra in the world like the one which claims Boston as its home. It is a public institution in that it serves the public of Boston and the larger cities of the East to the number of tens of thousands. But it is a private institution in that it is, so to say, the personal property of a private citizen of Boston, Henry L. Higginson. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world-wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organized in 1881 by Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members were to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purpose than the giving of symphony concerts of the highest class.

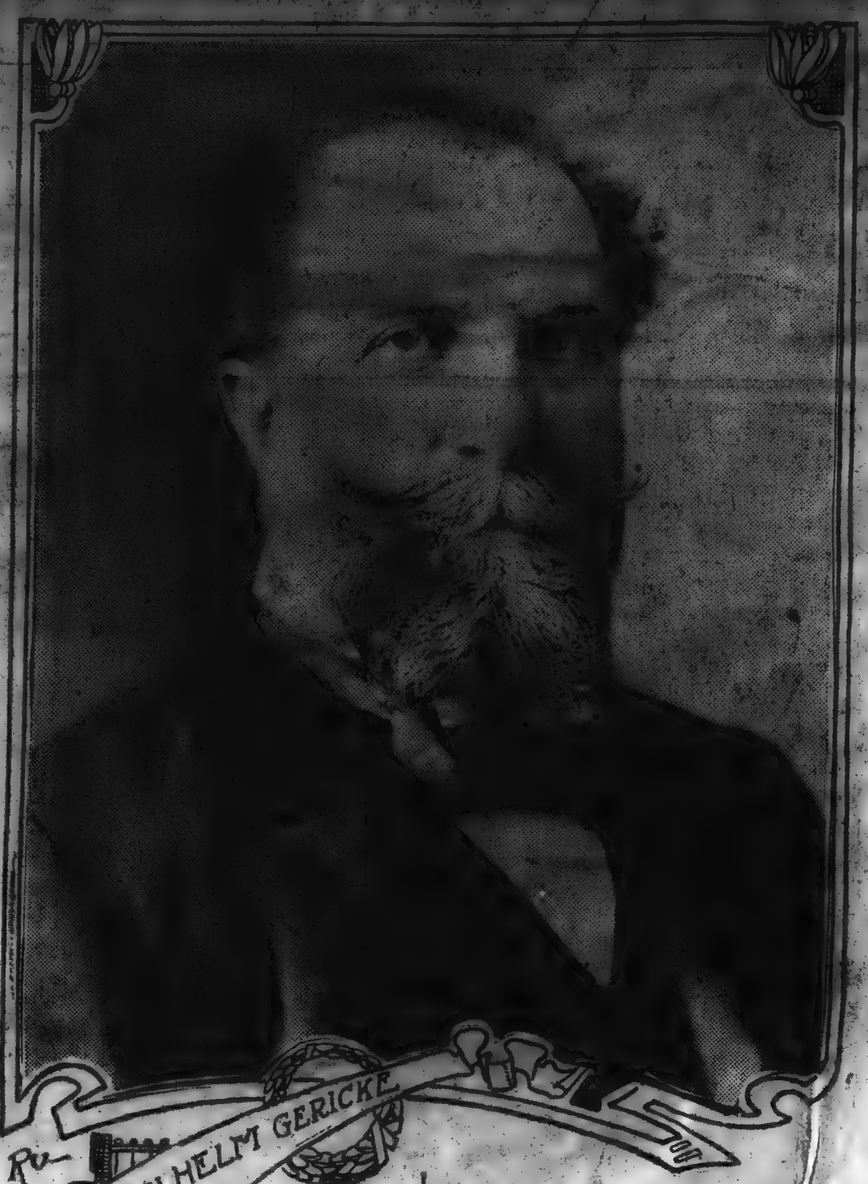
Even Boston twenty-four years ago was, compared with to-day, living in musical darkness, and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Prophecies of failure have come to naught, for now, at the end of its first quarter century, it stands at the head of the orchestras of the world and has in the city a splendid clientele which regularly fills the halls to capacity wherever it plays. The orchestra at first constituted consisted of seventy men, and the first conductor was Georg Henschel. The first concert was given October 22, 1881. The last concert last season was numbered 2289. Under Mr. Henschel the orchestra did excellent work, but, excellent musician that he was, Mr. Henschel lacked experience as conductor, and the personnel of the orchestra left something to be desired. Accordingly, in the fall of 1884 Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who was Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera in Vienna and was conductor also of the Society of Friends of Music. With Mr. Gericke came much new blood in the way of young, talented and enthusiastic musicians, and from that day the orchestra has been accounted great. To Mr. Gericke is due chief credit for making the orchestra what it is. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technique and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends, he gave the orchestra its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity and its beauty of tone which are not to be equaled in the world.

At the end of the season of 1887 and 1888 Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna and he was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a brilliant career which now has placed him in the ranks of the leading conductors of the world. Mr. Nikisch was with the orchestra for three years when he returned to Europe, and was succeeded for the next five years by Emil Pauer. At the end of Mr. Pauer's term of five years Mr. Gericke again became the conductor, and was welcomed back with an enthusiasm rarely shown even to popular musicians. His success in the last seven years has been a duplicate of that won by him in his first term of service.

Since 1895 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinnati orchestras, as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned, and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence its personnel has constantly been strengthened, neither expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent. For this reason it has often been called an "Orchestra of Virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that sitting at the desks are violinists of the highest rank. It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its violins. The principle violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal cellist, who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadly, nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy, the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Marquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackerbarth and Hess, the first horns; and Schuecker, the harpist, are all of them artists of the first rank, and command the highest salaries of their several classes. By a system of selection and elimination the orchestra as it stands to-day is without its equal in the world.

LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA



giving public renditions of the larger forms of sacred music represented by the oratorio. The work of this chorus in the past has been highly creditable, and it is expected that the two concerts to be given this season will be even better. Professor J. Powell

JOURNA

ss

SEP 30 1905

Musical Topics

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive program than Wilhelm Gericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which will be given in the Light Guard armory Thursday evening, Oct. 5, and which will mark the opening of the season of the six concerts arranged by the Detroit Orchestral association. Program making is one of the most difficult tasks that confronts the conductor of an orchestra. The tastes of the public are so varied and the demands are so exigent that, while it is an absolute impossibility to please everybody, it is almost an impossibility to find a golden mean. In his program for the Detroit concert Thursday night, which is printed below, Mr. Gericke seems to have successfully solved the problem. It is entirely romantic, with the exception of the violin concerto which Willy Hess will play, and this, Spohr's concerto in Do minor, No. 9, belongs to the great classics written for the violin. The program follows: Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon;" L. Spohr—Concerto for violin in D minor, No. 9, allegro, adagio, allegretto; Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, op. 74, adagio; alegro non troppo, allegro con grazia, alegro molto vivace, finale; adagio lamentoso; Hector Berlioz—(a) minuet of Will-o'-Wisps, (b) Waltz of Sylphs, from "The Damnation of Faust," op. 24; Richard Wagner—Prelude and "Love-Death" from "Tristan and Isolde;" soloist, Prof. Willy Hess.

JOURNA

DETROIT, MICH

SEP 1905

Detroit has responded in a remarkable manner to the opportunity offered by the new Orchestral association to hear the very best of the symphony orchestras of this country during the winter. Secretary N. J. Corey reported Tuesday that more than $5,000 worth of tickets for the series of six concerts had already been sold, yet the sale to the general public does not open until Saturday. It would seem, therefore, that the move which was fathered by Frederick Stearns is to result in an overwhelming success. The first concert will be given October 5 by the Boston Symphony orchestra, 75 strong, an organization whose merits are recognized abroad as fully as at home. Wilhelm Gericke is the conductor.

WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Which Will Open the Season of Orchestra Concerts in Detroit October 5.

Cleveland Leader Sept 24

MUSICAL EVENTS

Thirteen years' absence seems merely to have whetted the desire of the Cleveland musical public to hear once more the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert is announced for the evening of October 6 in Grays' Armory. There was a report around town last week to the effect that the concert would have to be canceled because the armory, which has been undergoing considerable alterations this summer, would not be ready at that time. Immediately a dozen or more letters reached the management in Boston, protesting against cancellation of the date if it was possible in any way to find a place in which to give the concert. Happily, there was no need of any anxiety because the report was the result merely of a misunderstanding. The armory will be ready in time and the concert will be given, the seat sale opening at the store of the Burrows Bros. Company on next Monday week, October 2.

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected for Cleveland is a model of what such programs should be. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more lovely than the overture which is entitled 'A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form, from one of the violin sonatas, is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit as few transcriptions do. Professor Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G minor, one of the most graceful works ever written for a violin, for, while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his technique, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which has been arranged for concert use there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben" from the second act of "Siegfried"—that delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird. The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's in C minor, No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work is regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. His first movement is not like that of a celebrated conductor in Germany, of whom they are now telling a story. It was at a concert in Berlin last winter and this conductor was making his first appearance in that city in many years. Belonging to the passionate type, he put tremendous emphasis on the knocking of fate at the door. One of the great critics of Berlin remarked as he came out that fate not only rapped at the door, but smashed the whole blooming thing in.

The program in detail is as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, op. 27.....Mendelsohn
Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form (arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).....Bach
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26.....
(I.) Allegro moderato, G minor.....
(II.) Adagio, E flat major.....
(III.) Finale, allegro energico, G major .....Max Bruch
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried".....
.....Wagner
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, op. 67
(I.) Allegro con brio.....
(II.) Andante con moto.....
(III.) Allegro: Trio.....
(IV.) Allegro.....
Soloist, Professor Willy Hess.

Gerardy, the great Belgian cellist, who arrives in this country on the steamer Touraine November 2, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season there November 6.

He will afterwards visit St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Philadelphia.

He will be first heard in New York city on November 26, at Carnegie Hall; afterwards with the Boston Symphony, the Philharmonic and in a joint recital with Marteau.

The Singers' Club will hold an examination for the admission of new members Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, at its rooms in the Rose building. Those wishing to join the club may present themselves at that time, each candidate being expected to bring a song.

Active rehearsals will begin October 3, with C. E. Clemens as conductor. Nearly all of the old members will be with the club the coming season.

Josephine Wellington, the dramatic soprano, will make a tour of this country the coming season. She will be heard in the leading cities of the country in oratorio and concert.

Mme. Wellington's first appearance in New York will take place December 3 at Carnegie Hall.

At the Hough Avenue Congregational Church preparatory examinations are being held for the Choral Society on Monday and Friday nights, at 7:30 o'clock. The need is felt for more tenors and basses to balance parts evenly. All that is necessary is the ability to read music and a fair voice.

An interesting program has been prepared for the coming term, comprising some splendid oratorios, cantatas and part songs.

The conductor, Harvey B. Gaul, is glad to consider voices at the trial nights, and give them impartial consideration.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert here the evening of October 6 will mark the opening of the coming musical season, is a unique organization. This much used word may here be used in its fullest significance because there is no orchestra in the world like the one which claims Boston as its home. It is a public institution in that it serves the public of Boston and the larger cities of the East to the number of tens of thousands. But it is a private institution in that it is, so to say, the personal property of a private citien of Boston, Henry L. Higginson. When the history of music in America in the last quarter century shall have been written it will be found that chief credit for its extraordinary development must be given to that remarkable assemblage of musicians which has gained world-wide reputation as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was organied in 1881 by Henry L. Higginson, a musician and a lover of music as well as a man of wealth and social standing, with the idea of giving Boston a permanent orchestra which would stand on the same level as the great orchestras of Europe. Its members were to be engaged by the year and give their services exclusively to it. It was to be used for no other purpose than the giving of symphony concerts of the highest class.

Even Boston twenty-four years ago was, compared with to-day, living in musical darkness, and such a bold project as this was greeted throughout the country with general skepticism. It seemed impossible that any one man would bear the burden and responsibilities that such an undertaking would involve, all the more so since the founder of the orchestra demanded that none but the best orchestral talent in the world should be obtained. Prophecies of failure have come to naught, for now, at the end of its first quarter century, it stands at the head of the orchestras of the world and has in the East a splendid clientele which regularly fills the halls to capacity wherever it plays. The orchestra at first constituted consisted of seventy men, and the first conductor was Georg Henschel. The first concert was given October 22, 1881. The last concert last season was numbered 2239. Under Mr. Henschel the orchestra did excellent work, but, excellent musician that he was, Mr. Henschel lacked experience as conductor, and the personnel of the orchestra left something to be desired. Accordingly, in the fall of 1884 Mr. Henschel was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke, who was Hans Richter's colleague at the Imperial Opera in Vienna and was conductor also of the Society of Friends of Music. With Mr. Gericke came much new blood in the way of young, talented and enthusiastic musicians, and from that day the orchestra has been accounted great. To Mr. Gericke is due chief credit for making the orchestra what it is. Keen, alert, of imperious and overmastering will, with all the technique and routine of the difficult art of conducting at his fingers' ends, he gave the orchestra its perfection of ensemble, its brilliancy, its plasticity and its beauty of tone which are not to be equaled in the world.

At the end of the season of 1887 and 1888 Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna and he was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, then at the beginning of a brilliant career which now has placed him in the ranks of the leading conductors of the world. Mr. Nikisch was with the orchestra for three years when he returned to Europe, and was succeeded for the next five years by Emil Fauer. At the end of Mr. Fauer's term of five years Mr. Gericke again became the conductor, and was welcomed back with an enthusiasm rarely shown even to popular musicians. His success in the last seven years has been a duplicate of that won by him in his first term of service.

Since 1895 the work of the orchestra has been confined to Boston and the larger cities of the East. Previous to that year and for several seasons tours of the Middle West were made, and directly to these may be traced the extraordinary growth of orchestral music in that part of the country and the formation of such excellent institutions as the Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinnati orchestras, as well as the almost innumerable smaller bands which are doing such good work. The demands in the East, however, became so great that the Western trips had to be abandoned, and now for the first time in twelve years the orchestra is traveling again.

In the twenty-four years of its existence its personnel has constantly been strengthened, neither expense nor effort having been spared to secure the best orchestral talent. For this reason it has often been called an "Orchestra of Virtuosi." It is well known that every violinist that comes to this country looks forward with dread to his first appearance with the orchestra, for he knows that sitting at the desks are violinists of the highest rank. It may safely be said that no orchestra in the world commands the services of such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Back, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben among its violins. The principle violas are played by such men as Ferir and Sach. Among the cellists are such men as Warnke, the new principal cellist, who comes from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadly, nor are the other departments lacking. In Longy, the orchestra has an oboist who is perhaps without equal in the world, and the same is true of Marquarre, the first flute. Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Hackerbarth and Hess, the first horns; and Schuecker, the harpist, are all of them artists of the first rank, and command the highest salaries of their several classes. By a system of selection and elimination the orchestra as it stands to-day is without its equal in the world.

LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

giving public renditions of the larger forms of sacred music represented by the oratorio. The work of this chorus in the past has been highly creditable, and it is expected that the two concerts to be given this season will be even better. Professor J. Powell

JOURNAL

SEP 30 1902

Musical Topics

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive program than Wilhelm Gericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which will be given in the Light Guard armory Thursday evening, Oct. 5, and which will mark the opening of the season of the six concerts arranged by the Detroit Orchestral association. Program making is one of the most difficult tasks that confronts the conductor of an orchestra. The tastes of the public are so varied and the demands are so exigent that, while it is an absolute impossibility to please everybody, it is almost an impossibility to find a golden mean. In his program for the Detroit concert Thursday night, which is printed below, Mr. Gericke seems to have successfully solved the problem. It is entirely romantic, with the exception of the violin concerto which Willy Hess will play, and this, Spohr's concerto in D minor, No. 9, belongs to the great classics written for the violin. The program follows: Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon;" L. Spohr—Concerto for violin in D minor, No. 9, allegro, adagio, allegretto; Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," in B minor, op. 74, adagio; allegro non troppo, allegro con grazia, allegro molto vivace, finale; adagio lamentoso; Hector Berlioz—(a) minuet of Will-o'-Wisps, (b) Waltz of Sylphs, from "The Damnation of Faust," op. 24; Richard Wagner—Prelude and "Love-Death" from "Tristan and Isolde;" soloist, Prof. Willy Hess.

Detroit has responded in a remarkable manner to the opportunity offered by the new Orchestral association to hear the very best of the symphony orchestras of this country during the winter. Secretary N. J. Corey reported Tuesday that more than $5,000 worth of tickets for the series of six concerts had already been sold, yet the sale to the general public does not open until Saturday. It would seem, therefore, that the move which was fathered by Frederick Stearns is to result in an overwhelming success. The first concert will be given October 5 by the Boston Symphony orchestra, 75 strong, an organization whose merits are recognized abroad as fully as at home. Wilhelm Gericke is the conductor.

WILLIAM GERICKE,

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Which Will Open the Season of Orchestra Concerts in Detroit October 5.

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

Town Topics

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES.

Owing to the extensive alterations which have been made in the Grays' Armory this summer, it was doubtful for a time whether the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on Friday evening, October 6th, could be given. Happily, such progress has lately been made in the work that there is no question now about Boston's great orchestra opening the renovated building. The sale of seats will begin at the Burrows Brothers' Company on Monday, October second. The number of inquiries that have been made gives evidence of the great interest that has been aroused by the return of the orchestra after so many years absence. There seems to be little doubt now that the full capacity of the armory will be used.

MADAME WILCZEK
With the Fadettes Orchestra at Keith's next week

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected for Cleveland is a model of what such programs should be. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner, and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more beautiful than the overture which is entitled "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form from one of the violin sonatas is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit, as very few transcriptions do. Professor Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G Minor, one of the most grateful works ever written for a violin, for while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his technique, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which have been arranged for concert use, there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben" from the second act of Siegfried. That delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's In C Minor No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work is regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. His first movement is not like that of a celebrated conductor in Germany, of whom they are now telling a story. It was at a concert in Berlin last winter and this conductor was making his first appearance in that city in many years. Belonging to the passionate type, he put tremendous emphasis on the knocking of fate at the door. One of the great critics of Berlin remarked as he came out that fate not only wrapped at the door, but smashed the whole blooming thing in.

The program in detail is as follows:

Overture—"Sea—Calm and Prosperous Voyage." Op. 27..Mendelssohn
Prelude—Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form.....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G Minor, Op. 26.....Max Bruch
I. Allegro moderato (G Minor).
II. Adagio (E-flat Major).
III. Finale: Allegro, energico (G Major).
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried".....Wagner
Symphony, in C Minor, No. 5, Op. 67.....Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Soloist: Professor Willy Hess.

The coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Grays' Armory on October sixth will be the two thousand two hundred and ninety-fourth concert since the orchestra was organized on October twenty-second, 1881, with seventy men, by Mr. Higgison, of Boston, the owner. It was organized and gave its first concert in Music Hall, Boston, under Georg Henschel, conductor. In 1884 Mr. Higgison went to Vienna and secured Gericke, the present conductor, who was second conductor of the Imperial Opera House at Vienna under Richter. In 1886 the orchestra made its first trip West. Gericke conducted from 1886 to 1889 and then Arthur Nickisch took the baton, stayed with the orchestra until 1893. From 1893 to 1898 Emil Paur had charge of the orchestra, and in 1898 Gericke was again conductor and has been ever since. Of the 2,294 concerts given 1,100 were played in Boston alone.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL.
Date SEP 21 1905

CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, O., September 16, 1905.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in this city on October 6. It has been some time since this orchestra was last heard here. I believe it was back in 1893 in Cleveland's old music hall—which has since been destroyed by fire—that the orchestra gave its last concert here. In those days we did have a music hall, that did very good service from a musical standpoint, although the building would never have won a prize for its architectural beauty. The Boston Orchestra came at that time as one of the attractions in the star course, which was given for several years under the management of Mr. and Mrs. N. Coe Stewart. Musical lovers are naturally awaiting the coming of this famous orchestra with much interest.

William B. Colson, organist at the "Old Stone" Church, will give a series of "twilight" organ recitals during October. The recitals will be given every Tuesday during the month.

A concert will be given by the choir of Emmanuel Episcopal Church in the parish hall, on September 28. The choir will be assisted by Miss Virginia Kline, reader, and William Robinson, violinist. The programme will include several numbers written by the choirmaster, H. B. Gaul.

Another new song by Charles Burnham is just out. It is a setting to the well known poem, "The Night has a Thousand Eyes." Mr. Burnham has given his song the title of "At Dusk."

Mrs. Charles Orchard, who has been organist at the East Cleveland Baptist Church for some time, and who is well known in musical circles here, moved to Chicago this week.

FREDERICK A. WILLIAMS.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address ILL.
Date 1905

Brooklyn Institute Plans.

The plans of the Brooklyn Institute for the season of 1905-06 are just at hand through the magnificent prospectus which the directors issue every year and it is safe to assert that never within the history of this institution have they arranged anything more elaborate and more satisfying if we may judge from the programme, what will be the carrying out, and since so many of the artists are not unknown quantities, one is reasonably sure that Brooklyn will enjoy itself musically this season. The opening concert will be given October 20 at Association Hall with Marie Nichols, violin, and David Bispham as attractions. The orchestral concerts promised include a season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as usual, with Bauer, Reisenauer and Pugno as announced soloists, these concerts will be preceded by lectures by Krehbiel, Finck, Henderson, Elson and Charles M. Skinner of the Brooklyn Eagle. There will be two concerts by the New York Symphony Orchestra, the first under direction of Weingartner, February 8, and Walter Damrosch will direct the second, March 1, with Joseffy as soloist upon this occasion. A few of the names that appear in the season offerings include Gadski, Van Hoose, Emma Eames, Marie Hall Kubelik, Maud Powell, Ben Davies and others. Of course there will be a series of chamber concerts by the Kneisel Quartet and some others.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, N. Y., September 23, 1905.

Opening of Season.

The musical season opened last Tuesday, the 19, with two concerts by Sousa and his great military band. It was a hot day, one of the hottest of the season, but the Buffalo public knows what it wants, and notwithstanding strong counter attractions at the theaters, Convention Hall was crowded. The soloists were Miss Elizabeth Schiller, soprano; Miss Jessie Straus, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist. A plenitude of encores was in form, though there was nothing in it for Dionysos, as the Athenians used to say.

Symphony Concerts.

That we are to have two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—one in October and the other in February, is practically an established fact, thanks to the energy and enterprise of Mrs. Mai Davis Smith.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address ILL.
Date

Ellison Van Hoose.

It is announced that Ellison Van Hoose, the well known tenor, is now under the sole management of Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York. A most promising season is scheduled, opening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Boston, November 3 and 4, followed by engagements with the same orchestra in Philadelphia, November 6; Baltimore, November 8, and New York, November 11. Mr. Van Hoose is also engaged by the Cecelia Society, of Boston, to sing, in conjunction with Mme. Melba, at the first performance in this country of Saint-Saens' opera, "Paris and Helene," December 11 and 12. December 9 he sings Beethoven's "Mass in D" with the New York Oratorio Society. Besides numerous song recitals, Mr. Van Hoose is booked for an extensive tour through the South.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL.
Date SEP 14 1905

Emilio Gogorza, the New York baritone, assisted by players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave a musicale at Bar Harbor, early last week. There was also one given by Ernest Schelling, who likewise had the assistance of Symphony men.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL.
Date SEP 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet.

The second season of the Quartet opens propitiously. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Symphony Orchestra. The leader of the Quartet is still Prof. Willy Hess; Otto Roth, second violin; E. Ferir, violinist.

Prof. Hess has spent the past summer in Europe, looking up new and highly interesting works for the Quartet's winter's work, among which are a new string quartet, by Sinding, in A minor, Op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, Op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute, in D major, by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer, whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, Op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor, by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor, by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

New Members of the Symphony Orchestra.

The annual sale of seats for the Symphony Orchestra rehearsals and concerts, being held in Symphony Hall on October 2, 3, 5 and 6, by auction, brings to mind that with so large a body of men only three new faces will greet the old symphony goers. These are a principal 'cello, a new first bassoon and a new alternate first horn; all being engaged in Europe the past summer. The chief 'cellist is Heinrich Warnke, from Munich, where he has been for the past eight years the principal 'cellist of the famous Kaim Orchestra, and was Mr. Krasselt's first teacher. Peter Sadony, the new bassoon player, comes from Cologne, where he has been a teacher of this instrument in the conservatory. Max Hess comes as player of first horn, and is also from Munich; he is only twenty-seven, and is reputed as being one of the best horn-players in Germany. The fact that so few new players appear in the orchestra from year to year is almost remarkable, but testifies strongly to the statement that Boston makes of its pet organization, namely that it combines throughout excellent performers with faithful students. This is as good a reason as any that could be offered for its continuous unity.

D'Indy as Lecturer.

Vincent D'Indy, the leader of the young French School, who is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra here as well as in other cities, will devote part of his time to lectures. Arrangements are being made to have him lecture at several of the large universities. M. D'Indy has the talent characteristic of the French literateur, of well ordered thought and felicitous diction. He will arrive on November 25 and will be heard in Philadelphia on December 11.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

FREE LIST SUSPENDED. We understand that the "free ticket" business will not be worked to death this season in New York City, as it has been many times in the past, since it would seem as though the great orchestral concerts have at last achieved such followings as to be able to sell all tickets to all concerts. Long ago the Chicago managers vetoed all free ticket propositions, but the practice has been rampant in New York. Nobody who attended the concerts of the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, the New York Symphony, the Kneisel Quartet, the Oratorio and Musical Art Societies last season will believe that many microbes in the shape of free tickets will be floating around in the air. It is amusing to see the use that the "free ticket" line is put to, but the "free tickets" are not usually forthcoming, except for such concerts as belong to the must series, i. e., concerts given by those who must have a New York appearance, no matter what they may have to pay the people for attending. For these people this free distribution of tickets is a godsend and the habit is one that should be commended, but as far as the leading events are concerned the musical profession should be no more exempt from paying its admission than any other portion of the public.

Town Topics

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER ILL.
Address
Date

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES.

Owing to the extensive alterations which have been made in the Grays' Armory this summer, it was doubtful for a time whether the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on Friday evening, October 6th, might be given. Happily, such progress has lately been made in the work that there is no question now about Boston's great orchestra opening the season in the armory building. The sale of seats will begin at the Burrows Brothers' Company on Monday, October second. The number of inquiries that have been made gives evidence of the great interest that has been aroused by the return of the orchestra after so many years absence. There seems to be little doubt that the full capacity of the armory will be used.

MADAME WILCZEK
With the Fadettes Orchestra at Keith's next week

The program which Mr. Gericke has selected for Cleveland is a model of what such programs should be. The names represented on it are Mendelssohn, Bach, Bruch, Wagner, and Beethoven. Mendelssohn has never written anything more beautiful than the overture which is entitled "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," and Sigismund Bachrich's transcription for string orchestra of a prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form from one of the violin sonatas is one of the most successful works of its kind that has ever been made, for it preserves the Bach spirit, as very few transcriptions do. Professor Willy Hess will play Bruch's brilliant concerto in G Minor, one of the most grateful works ever written for a violin, for while it gives ample opportunity to the solo artist to display his technique, it contains solid musical substance, enough at any rate to make it one of the great classics. Of the dozen or so excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" which have been arranged for concert use, there is none of more appealing beauty than the "Waldweben" from the second act of Siegfried. That delicious episode wherein the youthful hero communes with the forest bird.

The symphony which ends the program will be Beethoven's In C Minor No. 5. Mr. Gericke's reading of this noble work is regarded in the musical world as being one of final authority. His first movement is not like that of a celebrated conductor in Germany, of whom they are now telling a story. It was at a concert in Berlin last winter and this conductor was making his first appearance in that city in many years. Belonging to the passionate type, he put tremendous emphasis on the knocking of fate at the door. One of the great critics of Berlin remarked as he came out that fate not only knocked at the door, but smashed the whole blooming thing in.

The program in detail is as follows:

Overture "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage." Op. 27..Mendelssohn

Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form.....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).

Concerto for Violin No. 1, in G Minor, Op. 26.....Max Bruch
I. Allegro moderato (G Minor).
II. Adagio (E-flat Major).
III. Finale: Allegro energico (G Major).

"Waldweben," from "Siegfried".....Wagner

Symphony in C Minor No. 5, Op. 67.....Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Soloist: Professor Willy Hess.

The coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Grays' Armory on October sixth will be the two thousand two hundred and ninety-fourth concert since the orchestra was organized on October twenty-second, 1881, with seventy men, by Mr. Higgison, of Boston, the owner. It was organized and gave its first concert in Music Hall, Boston, under George Henschel, conductor. In 1884 Mr. Higgison went to Vienna and secured Gericke, the present conductor, who was second conductor of the Imperial Opera House at Vienna under Richter. In 1886 the orchestra made its first trip West. Gericke conducted from 1886 to 1889 and then Arthur Nikisch took the baton, stayed with the orchestra until 1893. From 1893 to 1898 Emil Paur had charge of the orchestra, and in 1898 Gericke was again called on and has been ever since. Of the 2,294 concerts given 1,100 were played in Boston alone.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, N. Y., September 23, 1905.

Opening of Season.

The musical season opened last Tuesday, the 19, with two concerts by Sousa and his great military band. It was a hot day, one of the hottest of the season, but the Buffalo public knows what it wants, and notwithstanding strong counter attractions at the theaters, Convention Hall was crowded. The soloists were Miss Elizabeth Schiller, soprano; Miss Jessie Straus, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist. A plenitude of encores was in form, though there was nothing in it for Dionysos, as the Athenians used to say.

Symphony Concerts.

That we are to have two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—one in October and the other in February, is practically an established fact, thanks to the energy and enterprise of Mrs. Mai Davis Smith.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, O., September 16, 1905.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in this city on October 6. It has been some time since this orchestra was last heard here. I believe it was back in 1893 in Cleveland's old music hall—which has since been destroyed by fire—that the orchestra gave its last concert here. In those days we did have a music hall, that did very good service from a musical standpoint, although the building would never have won a prize for its architectural beauty. The Boston Orchestra came at that time as one of the attractions in the star course, which was given for several years under the management of Mr. and Mrs. N. Coe Stewart. Musical lovers are naturally awaiting the coming of this famous orchestra with much interest.

William B. Colson, organist at the "Old Stone" Church, will give a series of "twilight" organ recitals during October. The recitals will be given every Tuesday during the month.

A concert will be given by the choir of Emmanuel Episcopal Church in the parish hall, on September 28. The choir will be assisted by Miss Virginia Kline, reader, and William Robinson, violinist. The programme will include several numbers written by the choirmaster, H. B. Gaul.

Another new song by Charles Burnham is just out. It is a setting to the well known poem, "The Night has a Thousand Eyes." Mr. Burnham has given his song the title of "At Dusk."

Mrs. Charles Orchard, who has been organist at the East Cleveland Baptist Church for some time, and who is well known in musical circles here, moved to Chicago this week.

FREDERICK A. WILLIAMS.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

Brooklyn Institute Plans.

The plans of the Brooklyn Institute for the season of 1905-06 are just at hand through the magnificent prospectus which the directors issue every year and it is safe to assert that never within the history of this institution have they arranged anything more elaborate and more satisfying if we may judge from the programme, what will be the carrying out, and since so many of the artists are not unknown quantities, one is reasonably sure that Brooklyn will enjoy itself musically this season. The opening concert will be given October 20 at Association Hall with Marie Nichols, violin, and David Bispham as attractions. The orchestral concerts promised include a season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as usual, with Bauer, Reisenauer and Pugno as announced soloists, these concerts will be preceded by lectures by Krehbiel, Finck, Henderson, Elson and Charles M. Skinner of the Brooklyn Eagle. There will be two concerts by the New York Symphony Orchestra, the first under direction of Weingartner, February 8, and Walter Damrosch will direct the second, March 1, with Joseffy as soloist upon this occasion. A few of the names that appear in the season offerings include Gadski, Van Hoose, Emma Eames, Marie Hall Kubelik, Maud Powell, Ben Davies and others. Of course there will be a series of chamber concerts by the Kneisel Quartet and some others.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

Ellison Van Hoose.

It is announced that Ellison Van Hoose, the well known tenor, is now under the sole management of Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York. A most promising season is scheduled, opening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Boston, November 3 and 4, followed by engagements with the same orchestra in Philadelphia, November 6; Baltimore, November 8, and New York, November 11. Mr. Van Hoose is also engaged by the Cecelia Society, of Boston, to sing, in conjunction with Mme. Melba, at the first performance in this country of Saint-Saens' opera, "Paris and Helene," December 11 and 12. December 9 he sings Beethoven's "Mass in D" with the New York Oratorio Society. Besides numerous song recitals, Mr. Van Hoose is booked for an extensive tour through the South.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER ILL.
Address
Date SEP 14

The Boston Symphony Quartet.

The second season of the Quartet opens propitiously Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Symphony Orchestra. The leader of the Quartet is still Prof. Willy Hess; Otto Roth, second violin; E. Ferir, violinist.

Prof. Hess has spent the past summer in Europe, looking up new and highly interesting works for the Quartet's winter's work, among which are a new string quartet, by Sinding, in A minor, Op. 70; five novellettes for string quartet, Op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute, in D major, by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer, whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, Op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor, by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor, by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

New Members of the Symphony Orchestra.

The annual sale of seats for the Symphony Orchestra rehearsals and concerts, being held in Symphony Hall on October 2, 3, 5 and 6, by auction, brings to mind that with so large a body of men only three new faces will greet the old symphony goers. These are a principal 'cello, a new first bassoon and a new alternate first horn; all being engaged in Europe the past summer. The chief 'cellist is Heinrich Warnke, from Munich, where he has been for the past eight years the principal 'cellist of the famous Kaim Orchestra, and was Mr. Krasselt's first teacher. Peter Sadony, the new bassoon player, comes from Cologne, where he has been a teacher of this instrument in the conservatory. Max Hess comes as player of first horn, and is also from Munich; he is only twenty-seven, and is reputed as being one of the best horn-players in Germany. The fact that so few new players appear in the orchestra from year to year is almost remarkable, but testifies strongly to the statement that Boston makes of its pet organization, namely that it combines throughout excellent performers with faithful students. This is as good a reason as any that could be offered for its continuous unity.

D'Indy as Lecturer.

Vincent D'Indy, the leader of the young French School, who is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra here as well as in other cities, will devote part of his time to lectures. Arrangements are being made to have him lecture at several of the large universities. M. D'Indy has the talent characteristic of the French literateur, of well ordered thought and felicitous diction. He will arrive on November 25 and will be heard in Philadelphia on December 11.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

FREE LIST SUSPENDED.

We understand that the "free ticket" business will not be worked to death this season in New York City, as it has been many times in the past, since it would seem as though the great orchestral concerts have at last achieved such followings as to be able to sell all tickets to all concerts. Long ago the Chicago managers vetoed all free ticket propositions, but the practice has been rampant in New York. Nobody who attended the concerts of the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, the New York Symphony, the Kneisel Quartet, the Oratorio and Musical Art Societies last season will believe that many microbes in the shape of free tickets will be floating around in the air. It is amusing to see the use that the "free ticket" line is put to, but the "free tickets" are not usually forthcoming, except for such concerts as belong to the must series, i. e., concerts given by those who must have a New York appearance, no matter what they may have to pay the people for attending. For these people this free distribution of tickets is a godsend and the habit is one that should be commended, but as far as the leading events are concerned the musical profession should be no more exempt from paying its admission than any other portion of the public.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER ILL.
Address
Date SEP 14

Emilio Gogorza, the New York baritone, assisted by players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave a musicale at Bar Harbor, early last week. There was also one given by Ernest Schelling, who likewise had the assistance of Symphony men.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL.
Date SEP 21 1905

The Symphony Orchestra's Announcement.

An invitation has been extented to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to visit America this season and conduct a series of the regular concerts. M. d'Indy has accepted and will arrive in Boston in November for several weeks' stay. Since M. d'Indy's works are generally admired by music lovers, and his name has appeared on many concert programmes give here, especially by local performers, his arrival will be welcomed with keen interest. This comparatively young composer has, it is stated, been one of those who have sought to restore music to its proper place in France, and although only fifty-four years of age, he is composer of a generous list, which includes music of all kinds, and is one of the founders of the Schola Cantorum in Paris, and now director of same.

The Orchestra also announces that it will make a brief western tour this fall for the first time since 1898. Six cities will be visited. Mr. Gericke will accompany the orchestra as its conductor and Prof. Willy Hess will be the soloist.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From EAGLE
Address BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Date SEP 30 1905

William Gericke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has selected the new Symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties, for the coming season. The work will have its first performance in this country at the Boston concerts on December 29 and 30. Mr. Webber, who is to be one of the assisting artists with Mme Eames, on her concert tour, will go to Boston to be present at the final rehearsals of his work, and for its first performance, as he has never heard it played in public, though it has been performed in Warsaw, and also in London, by the Henry J. Wood orchestra. Mr. Webber has written many successful compositions, principally songs, the most popular of which is "La Premiere," which Mme Eames has included in her repertoire for her coming tour. His new opera, "Fiorella," was successfully produced at the new Waldorf Theater, in London, last spring.

AMERICAN
BALTIMORE, MD
OCT 1 - 1905

MISS ELSA RAU

Miss Elsa Rau, the pianist, who represented the Baltimore American at Munich the past summer, has just returned [illegible] European tour. She spent the [illegible]r time in Munich and near by [illegible]me Erdmannsdoerfer, her [illegible]er. Later she visited Paris, [illegible]rd Wagner's German opera, [illegible]," sung in French. The [illegible] Rau says, were generally [illegible] their vocalization, although the [illegible]ounded strange, as it is hard to [illegible] the style of Wagner's peculiar [illegible]r expression and yet present good [illegible]ic French.

[illegible] Rau [illegible] much preparation going on [illegible] festivals to be given in Euro[illegible] of the [illegible] composer's [illegible]ich [illegible] hundred and [illegible]rs [illegible]on the 27th of [illegible] Baltimore will [illegible]es of Europe in [illegible]riend of Mr. Fritz [illegible]cellist, just imported from Munich to take the [illegible]cipal in the Boston Sym[illegible] and Quartet. Miss Rau a[illegible] have given concerts toge[illegible] and may be heard in a [illegible] in this city, especially if [illegible] lovers of music should get [illegible] music festival. This wou[illegible] feasible, as it would not [illegible] enlist a good chorus from [illegible] part in the Saengerfest a[illegible] Endeavor conventions.

Mozart's choral mus[illegible] Twelfth Mass, the Re[illegible] works, contains some [illegible] terial ever written fo[illegible] would be wonderfully ef[illegible] masses of singers. His [illegible] also concertos of all kinds, [illegible] chestra, nothing surpasses [illegible] symphony in C major. T[illegible] ally and Baltimore in [illegible] not be allowed to forg[illegible] which Mozart did for t[illegible] for all time.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL.
Date SEP 14 1905

Vincent D'Indy, the famous French composer, will pay visit to America next November. He comes by invitation of Mr. Higginson, Mr. Gericke and the Boston Orchestra. He will conduct at several of the concerts in Boston, and at a pair of concerts that the band will give here in its December series. His own music and the music of other Paris men will make his programmes. Never before has Gericke resigned his orchestra to another conductor for a series of concerts, and never before has one of the "advanced" French composers come to America to spread a knowledge and liking of their music.

From NEWS
Address BALTIMORE, MD.
Date SEP 30 1905

SERIES OF NOVELTIES

Works On List Of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture entitled "In the South" and two small works entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Caesar Franck, and the overture, "Libussa," an unknown work, by Smetana. The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; John K. Paine's Prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes (which has never been played by the Orchestra), and Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From TIMES
Address Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date SEP 30 1905

The Boston Smyphony Quartet enters on its second season with bright prospects. The work done by this organization last year left a deep impression on the minds of all who heard it.

One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist, will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim orchestra, and besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe, has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof. Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From AMERICAN
Address BALTIMORE, MD
Date OCT 1 - 1905

Novelties of the Boston Symphony.

An unusually interesting lot of novelties have been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture entitled "In the South" and two small works, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cesar Franck, and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

Other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferruccio Busoni, "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharniachte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse.

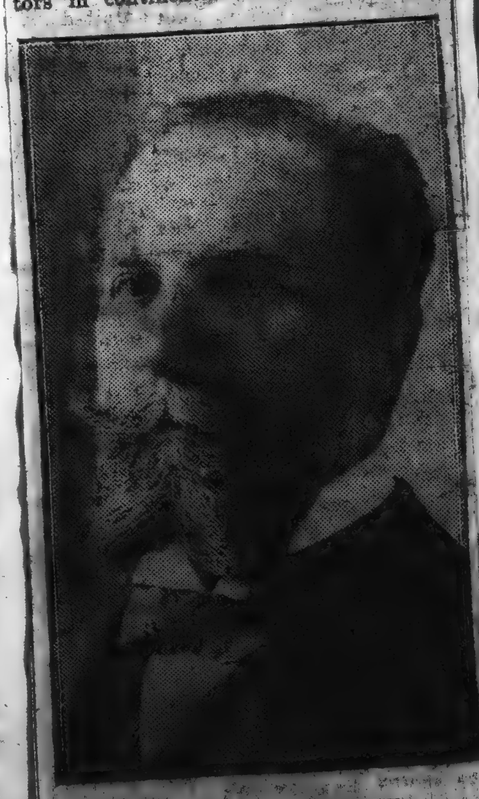
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From WITNESS
Address MONTREAL, CAN.
Date SEP 30 1905

leading instrumentalists, in the Victoria Rink, in a programme calculated to develop its powers in every aspect of genuine orchestral music.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From HERALD
Address MONTREAL, CAN.
Date SEP 30 1905

BOSTON ORCHESTRA MONDAY.

Gericke, Nikisch, Emil Paur, Gericke—such is the peculiar record of the conductor's desk of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in Montreal for the first time on Monday. Paur has always been a name to conjure with here. Nikisch is the name of one of the most universally famous conductors in continental Europe and Great



MR. WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Britain. Gericke has been less in the limelight than either; the full significance of his position is seen when it is noted that he was the first great conductor to work on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and that he brought it for the first time to the rank of a first-class orchestra. The orchestra to-day is greater than under Paur. Montrealers will have a chance to judge it at its best, in all sections, and with all its

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From GAZETTE
Address MONTREAL, CAN.
Date SEP 30 1905

SYMPHONY CONCERT MONDAY.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra of Nikisch, of Emil Paur, and now once more of William Gericke, the only purely symphonic organization on this continent, starts tomorrow from Boston, where it has been rehearsing for three weeks past, for a tour of six concerts before its regular season, and by great good fortune Montreal will be the first city which it will visit. The Victoria Rink concert on Monday night will be the most brilliant event of the kind, both musically and socially, in a decade of Montreal's history. Boston has long been the Mecca of the musical culture of Montreal, and local society, which is so cautious in accepting artists merely on the recommendations of others, has in a sense always regarded Paur, Gericke, and the Boston Symphony as its intimate friends. Thus it is not surprising that the demand for the best seats for Monday evening should have been almost as great as for the cheaper ones, nor that their purchasers should include already almost all the leading names of cultured Montreal society—two facts which certainly justify the prediction of a unique brilliance for the coming event. A number of the leading instrumentalists, including the Adamowskies, Prof. Willy Hess and the members of his quartette, and many others, have personal friends in Montreal society. The programme announced last Saturday has received general approval.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From TIMES
Address Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date SEP 30 1905

It is rather more than likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the recognized authorities on the aesthetics of music. Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsals and concerts in Boston on December 1st and 2nd, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the first week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 24th.

[illegible] the Belgian 'cellist, who arrives [illegible] country on the steamer Touraine on [illegible]d, will leave at once for Indian[illegible] opening his season in that city on [illegible]th. He will be first heard in this [illegible] November 26th, at Carnegie Hall; [illegible]on at the same place, with the [illegible] Society, the Boston Symphony [illegible] joint recital with Marteau.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From AMERICAN
Address BALTIMORE, MD
Date OCT 1 - 1905

PROF. WILLY HESS (Soloist, Boston Symphony)

[37]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

The Symphony Orchestra's Announcement.

An invitation has been extented to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to visit America this season and conduct a series of the regular concerts. M. d'Indy has accepted and will arrive in Boston in November for several weeks' stay. Since M. d'Indy's works are generally admired by music lovers, and his name has appeared on many concert programmes give here, especially by local performers, his arrival will be welcomed with keen interest. This comparatively young composer has, it is stated, been one of those who have sought to restore music to its proper place in France, and although only fifty four years of age, he is composer of a generous list, which includes music of all kinds, and is one of the founders of the Schola Cantorum in Paris, and now director of same.

The Orchestra also announces that it will make a brief western tour this fall for the first time since 1893. Six cities will be visited. Mr. Gericke will accompany the orchestra as its conductor and Prof. Willy Hess will be the soloist.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

Vincent D'Indy, the famous French composer, will pay visit to America next November. He comes by invitation of Mr. Higginson, Mr. Gericke and the Boston Orchestra. He will conduct at several of the concerts in Boston, and at a pair of concerts that the band will give here in its December series. His own music and the music of other Paris men will make his programmes. Never before has Gericke resigned his orchestra to another conductor for a series of concerts, and never before has one of the "advanced" French composers come to America to spread a knowledge and liking of their music.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

The Boston Smyphony Quartet enters on its second season with bright prospects. The work done by this organization last year left a deep impression on the minds of all who heard it.

One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist, will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim orchestra, and besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe, has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof. Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

It is rather more than likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is one of the recognized authorities on the aesthetics of music. Although his stay in America will be brief and will be largely occupied by his work with the Boston Symphony-Orchestra, it is not improbable that arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsals and concerts in Boston on December 1st and 2d, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on November 24th.

Gerardy, the Belgian 'cellist, who arrives in this country on the steamer Touraine on November 2d, will leave at once for Indianapolis, opening his season in that city on November 8th. He will be first heard in this city on November 28th, at Carnegie Hall; afterwards at the same place, with the Philharmonic Society, the Boston Symphony and in a joint recital with Marteau.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From NEWS
Address
Date

William Gericke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has selected the new Symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestral novelties, for the coming season. The work will have its first performance in this country at the Boston concerts, on December 29 and 30. Mr. Webber, who is to be one of the assisting artists with Mme Eames, on her concert tour, will go to Boston to be present at the final rehearsals of his work, and for its first performance, as he has never heard it played in public, though it has been performed in Warsaw, and also in London, by the Henry J. Wood orchestra. Mr. Webber has written many successful compositions, principally songs, the most popular of which is "La Premiere," which Mme Eames has included in her repertoire for her coming tour. His new opera, "Fiorella," was successfully produced at the new Waldorf Theater, in London, last spring.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

SERIES OF NOVELTIES

Works On List Of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture entitled "In the South" and two small works entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Caesar Franck, and the overture, "Libussa," an unknown work, by Smetana. The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; John K. Paine's Prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes (which has never been played by the Orchestra), and Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From AMERICA
Address
Date

Novelties of the Boston Symphony.

An unusually interesting lot of novelties have been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture entitled "In the South" and two small works, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cesar Franck, and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

Other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferrucio Busoni, "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From AMERICA
Address
Date

MISS ELSA RAU

Miss Elsa Rau, the pianist, who represented the Baltimore American at Munich the past summer, has just returned from a European tour. She spent the greater time in Munich and near by Schlachtensee, Erdmannsdoerfer, her instructor. Later she visited Paris, where she heard Wagner's German opera, "Lohengrin," sung in French. The impressions Miss Rau says, were generally disappointing, there vocalization, although the French sounded strange, as it is hard to imagine the style of Wagner's peculiar dramatic expression and yet present good singing in French.

Miss Rau says much preparation going on for the festivals to be given in Europe during the year of the composer's birth. Beethoven's one hundred and fiftieth birthday falls on the 27th of December. Baltimore will not be the only one of Europe in friend of Mr. Fritz Kreisler, violinist, just imported from Munich to take the cipal in the Boston Sym and Quartet. Miss Rau a have given concerts toge and may be heard in a in this city, especially if lovers of music should get music festival. This wou feasible, as it would not enlist a good chorus from part in the Saengerfest a Endeavor conventions.

Mozart's choral mus Twelfth Mass, the Re works, contains some terial ever written fo would be wonderfully ef masses of singers. His also concertos of all kinds, chestra, nothing surpasses symphony in C major. T ally and Baltimore is not be allowed to forg which Mozart did for t for all time.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From WORLD DAILY.
Address
Date SEP 20 1903

leading instrumentalists, in the Victoria Rink, in a programme calculated to develop its powers in every aspect of genuine orchestral music.

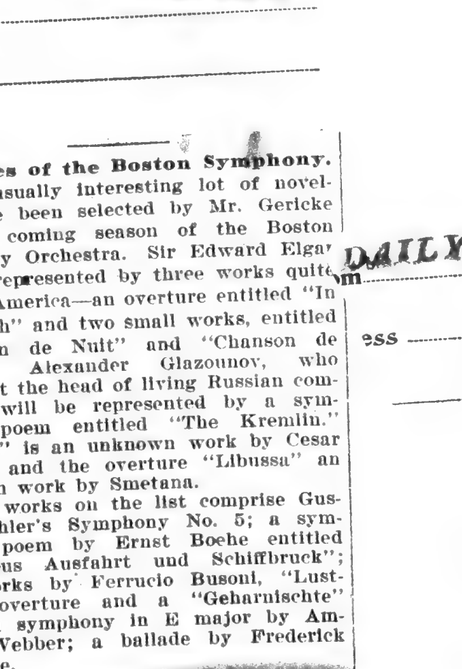
BOSTON ORCHESTRA MONDAY.

Gericke, Nikisch, Emil Paur, Gericke—such is the peculiar record of the conductor's desk of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in Montreal for the first time on Monday. Paur has always been a name to conjure with here. Nikisch is the name of one of the most universally famous conductors in continental Europe and Great

MR. WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Britain. Gericke has been less in the limelight than either; the full significance of his position is seen when it is noted that he was the first great conductor to work on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and that he brought it for the first time to the rank of a first-class orchestra. The orchestra to-day is greater than under Paur. Montrealers will have a chance to judge it at its best, in full strength, and with all its

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From HERALD
Address
Date



PROF. WILLY HESS (Soloist, Boston Symphony)

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From GAZETTE
Address
Date

SYMPHONY CONCERT MONDAY.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra of Nikisch, of Emil Paur, and now once more of William Gericke, the only purely symphonic organization on this continent, starts tomorrow from Boston, where it has been rehearsing for three weeks past, for a tour of six concerts before its regular season, and by great good fortune Montreal will be the first city which it will visit. The Victoria Rink concert on Monday night will be the most brilliant event of the kind, both musically and socially, in a decade of Montreal's history. Boston has long been the Mecca of the musical culture of Montreal, and local society, which is so cautious in accepting artists merely on the recommendations of others, has in a sense always regarded Paur, Gericke, and the Boston Symphony as its intimate friends. Thus it is not surprising that the demand for the best seats for Monday evening should have been almost as great as for the cheaper ones, nor that their purchasers should include already almost all the leading names of cultured Montreal society—two facts which certainly justify the prediction of a unique brilliance for the coming event. A number of the leading instrumentalists, including the Adamowskies, Prof. Willy Hess and the members of his quartette, and many others, have personal friends in Montreal society. The programme announced last Saturday has received general approval.

[37]

STAR
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 30 1905

Gericke and His Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under William Gericke, at the Victoria Rink:

PROGRAMME.

Weber...Overture to the Opera "Oberon"
Spohr .....
Concerto for Violin, in D Minor, No. 9
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegretto.
Hector Berlioz—
(a) Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisps.
(b) Waltz of Sylphs.
(c) Rakoczy March.
(From "The Damnation of Faust," Op. 24).
Wagner..."Waldweben," from "Siegfried"
Beethoven—
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

If Montreal's musical season is to be up to the standard of its inauguration last night, there need be no pilgrimages to other and more famous centres. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, its soloists, Herr Gericke, and a well-chosen programme, singly and together, added another memorable incident to the history of musical development here and one from which, it is to be hoped, some profitable lessons will be drawn.

It would have been difficult to devise weather less suited for fostering musical enthusiasm, but the Victoria Rink was well filled when Gericke's baton, sharp on the appointed minute, rose for the Oberon overture. Among other excellent dispositions planned by Mr. Veitch was the detention of late comers until the first number was ended. Unfortunately, it was successfully applied to the body of the house, which was floored with sawdust and practically noiseless, but not to the gallery, where the bare boards made the moving of every chair audible. In theory, however, the arrangement was excellent enough to stand serious imitation. Then, through the whole course of the concert, the rain drummed a steady though not always an offensive accompaniment. Poor Hess, during the second movement of his concerto, looked once or twice as if he were inclined to yield to the inevitable and sacrifice interpretation to acoustic necessities, for it is doubtful if some of his pianissimo passages were heard ten rows from the conductor's stand, but the heavy down-pour was soon over and Hess had not ceased to be the great violinist.

Aside from the noise of the rain, however, the arrangements were not such as to benefit any soloist, although they suited the orchestral numbers admirably. The orchestra was stationed on a fairly high stand, possibly three-quarters of the way down the rink, and the individual instrument, lacking anything to give it resonance, seemed thin and lacking in volume; when the seventy or any fair proportion of the seventy instruments were utilized, the result was probably more satisfactory than anyone not familiar with the rink as a concert hall would have thought possible.

Concerning the programme and its interpretation, both were what the traditions of the former symphonic organization of America demanded. Gericke was at his best in the Beethoven number, holding his men better in hand and modulating his seventy instruments as though he were projecting his personal intelligence into the mind of each individual player. To many, his interpretation was nothing less than a revelation, and those who had come to endure Beethoven remained to applaud. The "Waldweben," however, was equally beautiful and the orchestral accompaniment to the Spohr concerto was a veritable marvel of continence.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
WITNESS
MONTREAL, CAN.
OCT 3 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

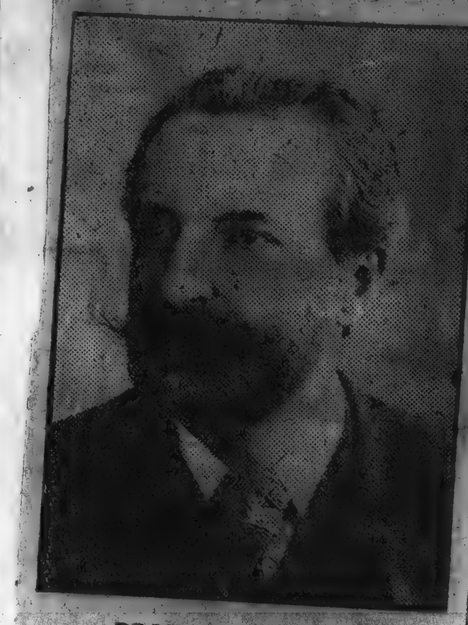
The only two faults that could be found with the Boston Symphony performance in the Victoria Rink last evening were secondary ones, and concerned the place where the performance was given and the weather. Unfortunately, it 'rained cats and dogs' all the evening—and the Victoria Rink is not weather-proof. Fifty reasons might easily be found to prove that the Victoria Rink is undesirable for concert purposes, and it would be a somewhat arduous task to find a single 'vice versa,' or on the other hand.' At its best, for concert purposes, it resembles in several particulars what we have read of the 'tap rooms' of English inns, only in an English inn the sawdust is not described as being quite so thickly laid on the floor, and the wooden chairs, one should think, must be more comfortable. Such surroundings are eminently not those in which the aesthetic plant is apt to bud and flower, and it did not bud and flower last evening, that is, 'to any great extent.' To experience very much, or, indeed, any aesthetic pleasure one must be in the mood, must decree an exodus of all vexatious feelings, and try to emulate Marcus Aurelius, who was the crown and flower of stoicism. But how few have been able to educate themselves to such a pitch of stoicism that they can placidly sit under a sieve while it is raining hard, or enjoy the sound of violins to the accompaniment of a patter, patter, patter on a big tin roof? It may further be said about the hall that it took some of the crowd quite half an hour to get in and quite half an hour to get out, and there was much jostling and crushing. Only one door was open, and the conditions of entrance and exit resembled those of the Monument National the night that Ysaye played. If a fire had occurred last evening there would certainly have been a holocaust. That the Boston Symphony is 'a splendid aggregation of all the talents' may be accepted as largely true, but those who were sitting in distant parts of the rink had to more or less take the advance agent's word for it. Even those who sat comparatively close to the platform fancied at times they were listening to muted strings, so great seemed the escape of sound, and the musicians themselves could not be at their aesthetic best under such conditions. The programme was a somewhat fossiliferous one, with only one small contribution from Wagner, and none from Richard Strauss or Dr. Elgar. Instead, we looked upon 'those old familiar faces,' Weber's overture to 'Oberon,' Spohr's No. 9 D minor concerto for violin, Berlioz's 'Damnation,' and Beethoven Symphony in C minor. All the legato, lyrical work of these numbers was excellently rendered, but the staccato work seemed to lack emphasis and expression, and there was little seeming attempt to impart poignancy or the dramatic into anything. Wilhelm Gericke conducts correctly, but he has to consult his score and sees a composer in single notes rather than in sound masses. Emil Paur is his opposite, and that is why the Pittsburg Orchestra can perform 1812 in an unforgetable fashion, while there was nothing in the performance last evening that will 'bite into the brain.' It was correct and excellent, but not unique.

HERALD
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 29 1905

The Boston Musicians.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at the Victoria Rink on Monday, will arrive in this city on Sunday evening in its own special train direct from Boston, and leave again for Toronto immediately after the performance Monday night. There is some disappointment that two rush programmes will prevent any social entertainment of the conductor and members, but it is necessary in order to fill engagements. The sale indicates a record-breaking audience for this first concert in Montreal by one of the world's leading orchestras.

STAR
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 30 1905



PROF. WILLY HESS,
Solo Violinist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ace, giving the arguments for and against the consideration of Indian tunes as American folk-music in any true sense, and admitting the difficulty of employing them in artistic elaboration without sacrificing all their original quality. There is also a tabular list of the thematic material used, which the composer has endeavored to employ in such a way as to preserve as nearly as possible the sentiments the Indians attached to it. It is chiefly from the collection made by Prof. Putnam and Miss Fletcher of Harvard University. It is to be feared, however, that the results only go to confirm what has just been said. There are a few effective passages, but the music and the whole effect is monotonous, hard, and dreary to a degree, seldom truly expressive of the text. It is a valiant attempt, and as such it is to be praised; but it is not a convincing addition to the list of "American" compositions on "American" themes.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 30 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra of Mikisch and of Emil Paur, and now once more of William Gericke, the only purely symphonic organization on this Continent, starts to-morrow from Boston, where it has been rehearsing for three weeks past, for a tour of six concerts before its regular season, and Montreal will be the first city which it will visit. Boston has long been the Mecca of the musical culture of Montreal, and local musicians always cautious in accepting artists merely on the recommendation of others, have, in a sense, regarded Paur, Gericke and the Boston Symphony as intimate friends. It is not surprising that the demand for the best seats for Monday evening should have been almost as great as for the cheaper ones, now that their purchasers should include Montreal society—two facts which certainly justify the prediction of a unique brilliance for the coming event. A number of the leading instrumentalists, including the Adamowskis, Prof. Willy Hess and the members of his quartette, and many others have personal friends in Montreal. The programme announced last Saturday has received general approval, and still more general has been the appreciation of the central location chosen for the concert.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 30 1905

It is likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is an authority on the aesthetics of music. Already inquiries have been received from colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer, and arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on Dec. 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on Nov. 25.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 27 1905

Victoria Rink.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the concert season in Montreal on Monday evening, October 2nd. The concert which will be held in the Victoria Rink, is awakening much interest in musical circles.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
HERALD
MONTREAL, CAN.
OCT 3 1905

PROGRAMME FOR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive programme than Mr. Wilhelm Hericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony Ochestra which will be given in the Victoria Rink on Monday evening, October 2nd. The first number is Weber's overture to the opera "Oberon." Weber's operas have almost disappeared from the stage, but his three great overtures, "Oberon," "Euryanthe" and "Der Freischeutz" remain models of their kind and are played by the great orchestras of the world constantly. Of these three, by common consent, the "Oberon" is the greatest, and it displays the virtuosity of an orchestra to its utmost.

The Spohr's violin concerto, which is the second number on the programme is a peculiarly grateful work to a violinist. It is melodious and graceful, and while it does not go to the gymnastic extremes of some similar works, it gives the soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, ample opportunity to exhibit his skill and dexterity in bravura.

Hector Berlioz is the next name on the programme and is represented by three excerpts from his "The Damnation of Faust": the "Minuet of the Will-of-Wisps" the "Waltz of the Sylphs" and the "Rakoczy March." The first two are probably the most exquisitely graceful dance movements that have ever been written. The "Rakoczy March" needs no introduction. The national song of Hungary, it embodies the wild rhythmic passion of that fiery race. It will be remembered that Berlioz incorporated this march into his great work in gratitude to the favor with which Budapest received him when his own country had almost cast him out, and it will also be remembered how fairly insane with enthusiasm the Hungarians went over the first performance despite the fact that no nation is so jealous of its national music as Hungary is of this.

Wagner will be represented by the "Waldweben" from Siegfried, that lovely forest episode from the second act when the youthful hero lying on a mossy couch first hears amid the rustling of the leaves the song of the bird which is to direct him to his future greatness.

For the symphony, Mr. Gericke has chosen the greatest of all, Beethoven's in C Minor, No. 5. Montreal is particularly fortunate in being able to hear the symphony played by the Boston orchestra. Mr. Gericke is one of the greatest living authorities on the interpretation of Beethoven, and is ranked in the same class with the great Von Buelow. More than that, Mr. Gericke's interpretation of the so called "Fate" symphony is recognized throughout the world as being of the highest authority.

The concert will commence sharp at 8.15.

HERALD
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 30 1905

An uneventful week locally—for "Raffles" cannot be considered remarkable in any respect except the excellent showing it has made in the box-office receipts—will be followed by one of the liveliest of the season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra would alone stamp next week with the red letter of exceptional brilliancy, for no orchestra of quite the same repute has ever appeared in Montreal. But beside this there will be at His Majesty's Theatre the most beloved to Montrealers of all the English exponents of refined melodrama (and sometimes of something a little better) in one new characterization and several of his old favorite roles; there will be the Montreal debut of a Parisian actress of apparently higher artistic standing and larger experience than any of her talented predecessors; and there will be an important and careful production at another French theatre of a classic Canadian drama by a noted Canadian poet and author. It is emphatically a big week.

First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
MONTREAL, CAN.
SEP 28 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, numbering eighty in the party, who give the opening concert of the regular Massey Hall season on Tuesday evening next, will arrive from Montreal by special train on Tuesday morning. The entire orchestra will stay at the King Edward Hotel. The management of the Boston Symphony never spare expense in taking care of the comforts and interests of the musicians. No other orchestra in the world is composed of such high-class individual virtuosi. Among the violins there are a dozen or more great artists. They are found as well in the wood-wind as the strings. There are no less than six well-known chamber music organizations within the orchestra, including the Boston Symphony quartet, the Longy Club, composed of the leading wood-wind and brass instruments, the Rameau Club, devoted to old chamber music, the Adamowski trio, the Ondricek string quartet, and the Boston Symphony horn quartet. The sale of seats is progressing rapidly at Massey Hall, where subscribers can also enter their names for the Emma Eames festival concert on October 12.

* * *

[38]

STAR

Gericke and His Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under William Gericke, at the Victoria Rink:

PROGRAMME.

Weber...Overture to the Opera "Oberon"

L. Spohr .....
Concerto for Violin, in D Minor, No. 9
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegretto.

Hector Berlioz—
(a) Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisps.
(b) Waltz of Sylphs.
(c) Rakoczy March.
(From "The Damnation of Faust," Op. 24).

Wagner..."Waldweben," from "Siegfried"

Beethoven—
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67
I Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.

Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

If Montreal's musical season is to be up to the standard of its inauguration last night, there need be no pilgrimages to other and more famous centres. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, its soloists, Herr Gericke, and a well-chosen programme, singly and together, added another memorable incident to the history of musical development here and one from which, it is to be hoped, some profitable lessons will be drawn.

It would have been difficult to devise weather less suited for fostering musical enthusiasm, but the Victoria Rink was well filled when Gericke's baton, sharp on the appointed minute, rose for the Oberon overture. Among other excellent dispositions planned by Mr. Veitch was the detention of late comers until the first number was ended. Unfortunately, it was successfully applied to the body of the house, which was floored with sawdust and practically noiseless, but not to the gallery, where the bare boards made the moving of every chair audible. In theory, however, the arrangement was excellent enough to stand serious imitation. Then, through the whole course of the concert, the rain drummed a steady though not always an offensive accompaniment. Poor Hess, during the second movement of his concerto, looked once or twice as if he were inclined to yield to the inevitable and sacrifice interpretation to acoustic necessities, for it is doubtful if some of his pianissimo passages were heard ten rows from the conductor's stand, but the heavy down-pour was soon over and Hess had not ceased to be the great violinist.

Aside from the noise of the rain, however, the arrangements were not such as to benefit any soloist, although they suited the orchestral numbers admirably. The orchestra was stationed on a fairly high stand, possibly three-quarters of the way down the rink, and the individual instrument, lacking anything to give it resonance, seemed thin and lacking in volume; when the seventy or any fair proportion of the seventy instruments were utilized, the result was probably more satisfactory than anyone not familiar with the rink as a concert hall would have thought possible.

Concerning the programme and its interpretation, both were what the traditions of the former symphonic organization of America demanded. Gericke was at his best in the Beethoven number, holding his men better in hand and modulating his seventy instruments as though he were projecting his personal intelligence into the mind of each individual player. To many, his interpretation was nothing less than a revelation, and those who had come to endure Beethoven remained to applaud. The "Waldweben," however, was equally beautiful and the orchestral accompaniment to the Spohr concerto was a veritable marvel of continence.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

WITNESS.

ess .....

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The only two faults that could be found with the Boston Symphony performance in the Victoria Rink last evening were secondary ones, and concerned the place where the performance was given and the weather. Unfortunately, it 'rained cats and dogs' all the evening—and the Victoria Rink is not weather-proof. Fifty reasons might easily be found to prove that the Victoria Rink is undesirable for concert purposes, and it would be a somewhat arduous task to find a single 'vice versa,' or 'on the other hand.' At its best, for concert purposes, it resembles in several particulars what we have read of the 'tap rooms' of English inns, only in an English inn the sawdust is not described as being quite so thickly laid on the floor, and the wooden chairs, one should think, must be more comfortable. Such surroundings are eminently not those in which the aesthetic plant is apt to bud and flower, and it did not bud and flower last evening, that is, 'to any great extent.' To experience very much, or, indeed, any aesthetic pleasure one must be in the mood, must decree an exodus of all vexatious feelings, and try to emulate Marcus Aurelius, who was the crown and flower of stoicism. But how few have been able to educate themselves to such a pitch of stoicism that they can placidly sit under a sieve while it is raining hard, or enjoy the sound of violins to the accompaniment of a patter, patter, patter on a big tin roof? It may further be said about the hall that it took some of the crowd quite half an hour to get in and quite half an hour to get out, and there was much jostling and crushing. Only one door was open, and the conditions of entrance and exit resembled those of the Monument National the night that Ysaye played. If a fire had occurred last evening there would certainly have been a holocaust. That the Boston Symphony is 'a splendid aggregation of all the talents' may be accepted as largely true, but those who were sitting in distant parts of the rink had to more or less take the advance agent's word for it. Even those who sat comparatively close to the platform fancied at times they were listening to muted strings, so great seemed the escape of sound, and the musicians themselves could not be at their aesthetic best under such conditions. The programme was a somewhat fossiliferous one, with only one small contribution from Wagner, and none from Richard Strauss or Dr. Elgar. Instead, we looked upon 'those old familiar faces,' Weber's overture to 'Oberon,' Spohr's No. 9 D minor concerto for violin, Berlioz's 'Daunation,' and Beethoven Symphony in C minor. All the legato, lyrical work of these numbers was excellently rendered, but the staccato work seemed to lack emphasis and expression, and there was little seeming attempt to impart poignancy or the dramatic into anything. Wilhelm Gericke conducts correctly, but he has to consult his score and sees a composer in single notes rather than in sound masses. Emil Paur is his opposite, and that is why the Pittsburg Orchestra can perform 1812 in an unforgetable fashion, while there was nothing in the performance last evening that will 'bite into the brain.' It was correct and excellent, but not unique.

HERALD

SEP 29 1905

The Boston Musicians.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at the Victoria Rink on Monday, will arrive in this city on Sunday evening in its own special train direct from Boston, and leave again for Toronto immediately after the performance Monday night. There is some disappointment that two rush programmes will prevent any social entertainment of the conductor and members, but it is necessary in order to fill engagements. The sale indicates a record-breaking audience for this first concert in Montreal by one of the world's leading orchestras.

STAR.

30 1905

Some enthusiastic American musicians are busy experimenting with Indian folk-song as material for artistic music that shall be purely "American," says the New York Evening Post. The material, it must be confessed, is pretty gnarled, and has generally proved rather refractory in the hands of even skilful manipulators. Saidee Knowland Coe now attempts to use Indian tunes in a setting of parts of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" as a melodrama—that is, for recreation by the spoken voice to the accompaniment of the piano. She has a very sensible pref-

PROF. WILLY HESS,
Solo Violinist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ace, giving the arguments for and against the consideration of Indian tunes as American folk-music in any true sense, and admitting the difficulty of employing them in artistic elaboration without sacrificing all their original quality. There is also a tabular list of the thematic material used, which the composer has endeavored to employ in such a way as to preserve as nearly as possible the sentiments the Indians attached to it. It is chiefly from the collection made by Prof. Putnam and Miss Fletcher of Harvard University. It is to be feared, however, that the results only go to confirm what has just been said. There are a few effective passages, but the music and the whole effect is monotonous, hard, and dreary to a degree, seldom truly expressive of the text. It is a valiant attempt, and as such it is to be praised; but it is not a convincing addition to the list of "American" compositions on "American" themes.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

STAR.

rom .....

ddress .....

SEP 30 1905

ate .....

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra of Mikisch and of Emil Paur, and now once more of William Gericke, the only purely symphonic organization on this Continent, starts to-morrow from Boston, where it has been rehearsing for three weeks past, for a tour of six concerts before its regular season, and Montreal will be the first city which it will visit. Boston has long been the Mecca of the musical culture of Montreal, and local musicians always cautious in accepting artists merely on the recommendation of others, have, in a sense, regarded Paur, Gericke and the Boston Symphony as intimate friends. It is not surprising that the demand for the best seats for Monday evening should have been almost as great as for the cheaper ones, now that their purchasers should include Montreal society—two facts which certainly justify the prediction of a unique brilliance for the coming event. A number of the leading instrumentalists, including the Adamowskis, Prof. Willy Hess and the members of his quartette, and many others have personal friends in Montreal. The programme announced last Saturday has received general approval, and still more general has been the appreciation of the central location chosen for the concert.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

STAR.

m .....

dress .....

30 1905

It is likely that M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer and conductor, who has been invited to conduct a series of the Boston Symphony concerts in December, will deliver some lectures while he is in America. M. d'Indy is an authority on the aesthetics of music. Already inquiries have been received from colleges regarding the possibility of securing M. d'Indy as a lecturer, and arrangements may be made for a few lectures at the larger universities in the East. M. d'Indy will conduct the public rehearsal and concert in Boston on Dec. 1 and 2, respectively, and the series in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington the next week. He is expected to arrive in this country on Nov. 25.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

HERALD.

ess .....

PROGRAMME FOR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive programme than Mr. Wilhelm Hericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony Ochestra which will be given in the Victoria Rink on Monday evening, October 2nd. The first number is Weber's overture to the opera "Oberon." Weber's operas have almost disappeared from the stage, but his three great overtures, "Oberon," "Euryanthe" and "Der Freischeutz" remain models of their kind and are played by the great orchestras of the world constantly. Of these three, by common consent, the "Oberon" is the greatest, and it displays the virtuosity of an orchestra to its utmost.

The Spohr's violin concerto, which is the second number on the programme, is a peculiarly grateful work to a violinist. It is melodious and graceful, and while it does not go to the gymnastic extremes of some similar works, it gives the soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, ample opportunity to exhibit his skill and dexterity in bravura.

Hector Berlioz is the next name on the programme and is represented by three excerpts from his "The Damnation of Faust"; the "Minuet of the Will-of-Wisps" the "Waltz of the Sylphs" and the "Rakoczy March." The first two are probably the most exquisitely graceful dance movements that have ever been written. The "Rakoczy March" needs no introduction. The national song of Hungary, it embodies the wild rhythmic passion of that fiery race. It will be remembered that Berlioz incorporated this march into his great work in gratitude to the favor with which Budapest received him when his own country had almost cast him out, and it will also be remembered how fairly insane with enthusiasm the Hungarians went over the first performance despite the fact that no nation is so jealous of its national music as Hungary is of this.

Wagner will be represented by the "Waldweben" from Siegfried, that lovely forest episode from the second act when the youthful hero lying on a mossy couch first hears amid the rustling of the leaves the song of the bird which is to direct him to his future greatness.

For the symphony, Mr. Gericke has chosen the greatest of all, Beethoven's in C Minor, No. 5. Montreal is particularly fortunate in being able to hear the symphony played by the Boston orchestra. Mr. Gericke is one of the greatest living authorities on the interpretation of Beethoven, and is ranked in the same class with the great Von Buelow. More than that, Mr. Gericke's interpretation of the so called "Fate" symphony is recognized throughout the world as being of the highest authority.

The concert will commence sharp at 8.15.

First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

STAR.

SEP 28 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, numbering eighty in the party, who give the opening concert of the regular Massey Hall season on Tuesday evening next, will arrive from Montreal by special train on Tuesday morning. The entire orchestra will stay at the King Edward Hotel. The management of the Boston Symphony never spare expense in taking care of the comforts and interests of the musicians. No other orchestra in the world is composed of such high-class individual virtuosi. Among the violins there are a dozen or more great artists. They are found as well in the wood-wind as the strings. There are no less than six well-known chamber music organizations within the orchestra, including the Boston Symphony quartet, the Longy Club, composed of the leading wood-wind and brass instruments, the Rameau Club, devoted to old chamber music, the Adamowski trio, the Ondricek string quartet, and the Boston Symphony horn quartet. The sale of seats is progressing rapidly at Massey Hall, where subscribers can also enter their names for the Emma Eames festival concert on October 13.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

STAR.

From .....

Address .....

SEP 27 1905

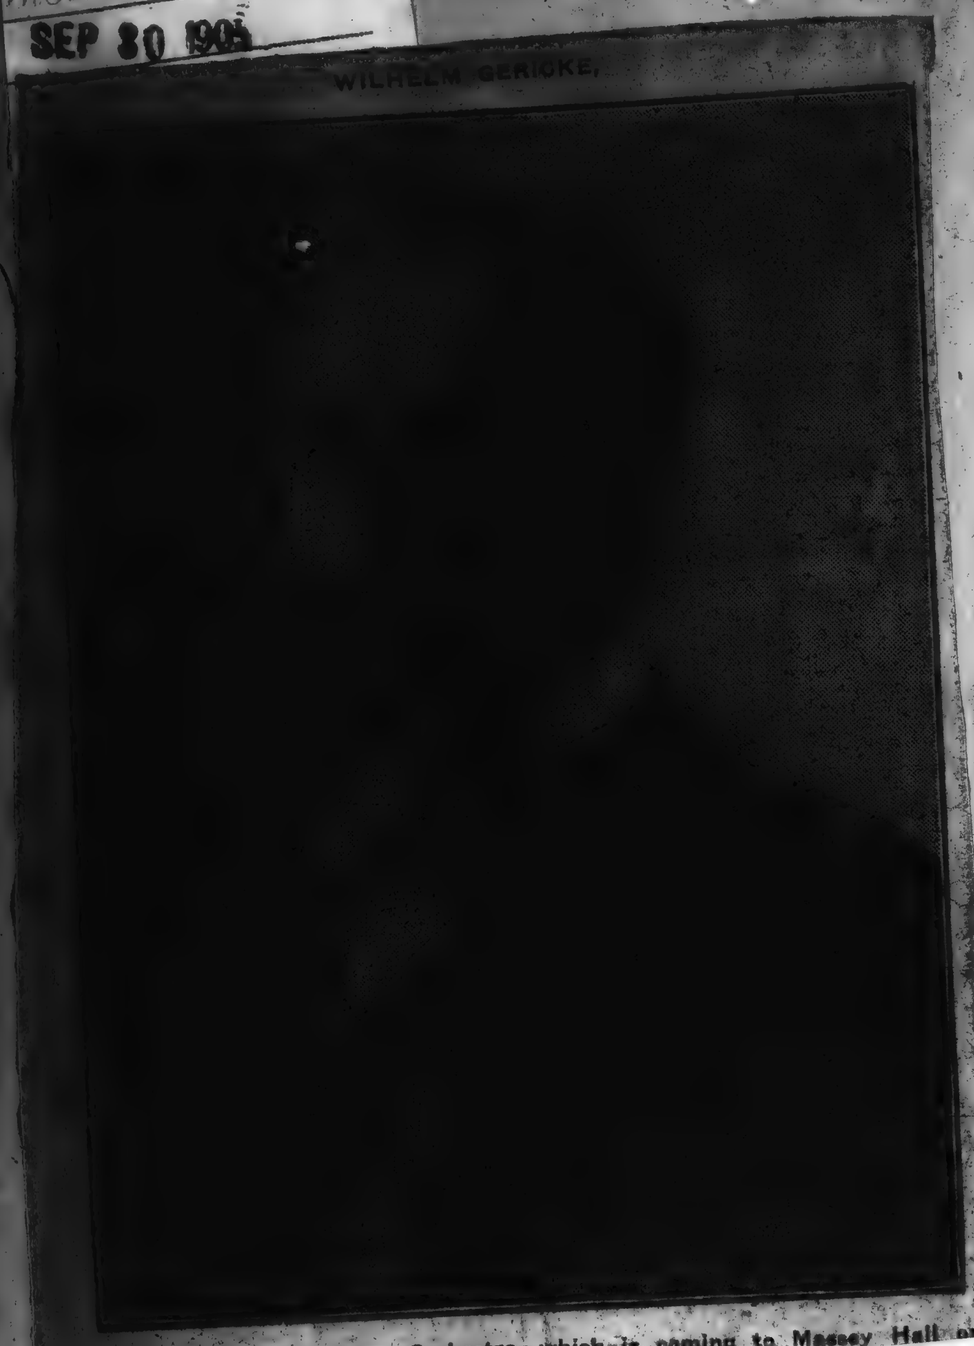
Date .....

Victoria Rink.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the concert season in Montreal on Monday evening, October 2nd. The concert which will be held in the Victoria Rink, is awakening much interest in musical circles.

An uneventful week locally—for "Raffles" cannot be considered remarkable in any respect except the excellent showing it has made in the box-office receipts—will be followed by one of the liveliest of the season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra would alone stamp next week with the red letter of exceptional brilliancy, for no orchestra of quite the same repute has ever appeared in Montreal. But beside this there will be at His Majesty's Theatre the most beloved to Montrealers of all the English exponents of refined melodrama (and sometimes of something a little better) in one new characterization and several of his old favorite roles; there will be the Montreal debut of a Parisian actress of apparently higher artistic standing and larger experience than any of her talented predecessors; and there will be an important and careful production at another French theatre of a classic Canadian drama by a noted Canadian poet and author. It is emphatically a big week.

STAR.
TORONTO, CAN.
SEP 30 1905



WILHELM GERICKE,

Of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming to Massey Hall on Tuesday next.

MR. WILLY HESS,

Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at Massey Hall on Tuesday Evening Next.

The analytical programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Tuesday evening next, have been mailed to a large number, and are now in the hands of the people in advance, so that they will be able to advise themselves of the character of the music to be heard on this occasion, which is an historic one from a musical viewpoint. In addition to the Schumann's Symphony, which will be a great delight to all music lovers, the less cultivated ear will be greatly pleased with Webber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, and the famous Tannhauser Overture. While there may be a little disappointment among music lovers that some less known overture is not played by the orchestra, the Tannhauser Overture is so very intimately associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and their rendition of it is considered so perfect, that Mr. Gericke likes to play it as an object lesson. The other great number will be the concerto for violin and orchestra in D minor by Spohr. It was composed in 1820, and it achieved immediate success. In the allegro, the entrance of the solo violin is preceded by an effective tutti, in which the principal subjects of the movement are, as usual, partly utilized, and partly foreshadowed. The solo violin enters by means of a quick chromatic scale into its principal subject. The habitual bravura group soon follows:

The second subject leads off with a melody in F major. This is succeeded by some very brilliant Spohrish bravura passages for the violin, with which the first portion of the movement comes to a full close in F. After an interesting short tutti, the solo violin begins the usual development movement with the subject No. 1 transferred to the key of A flat. The course of the modulations in this section by means of frequent enharmonic changes, so natural to Spohr's genius, is very interesting. The usual repetitions of the first and second subjects, transferred to closely related keys, form the chief items in the remainder of this movement.

The Adagio is one of the most popular of Spohr's movements. There are two principal melodies, which are interwoven with the most elegant and graceful bravura phrases, and partly reintroduced in varied forms. The sentiment of a gentle, but warm, heart always the whole Adagio.

The Rondo is in the major of the key.

The many passages in double stops, and the frequent very difficult bravura phrases with which this Rondo abounds, have probably been the cause of its frequent omission when the other two movements are brought forward by various violinists, for its merits as a violin solo, with orchestra, are in no way inferior to the best Spohr has produced.

GLOBE
TORONTO, CAN.
ess
SEP 30 1905

If the musical public of Toronto thoroughly realizes what a magnificent musical organization the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Massey Hall will be packed to the utmost capacity at its concert on Tuesday evening. Under its present conductor, Mr. Gericke, the Boston Orchestra is universally acknowledged to have reached the perfection of technical excellence. The only rival that it has ever had in America was the Chicago Orchestra, when under the direction of the late Theodore Thomas. It has cost Boston music lovers hundreds of thousands of dollars to maintain this orchestra since its foundation in 1880, and it is unnecessary to say that such an organization numbering eighty highly-skilled musicians, cannot give concerts on tour at popular prices. The cost of transportation alone of so numerous a body is enough to make an impresario shiver. How well balanced the orchestra is may be understood from the following list, which represents it when at home, and which, it is understood, will not be departed from materially in Toronto: First violins, 16; second, 14; violas, 10; violoncellos, 10; double basses, 8; flutes, 3; oboes, 2; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bassoons, 3; trumpets, 4; horns, 4; trombones, 3; tenor tubas, 2; bass tubas, 2; contrabass tuba, 1; harp, 1, and instruments of percussion. The additional instruments are of course only used in cases where they are called for by the compositions. Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," for instance, which is one of the works announced for the Toronto concert, does not require tubas. With regard to the programme, many musicians regret that some work of Beethoven was not included in the scheme. "Comparisons are odorous," but it is human to make comparisons, and music lovers would have liked to be able to compare the rendering of a Beethoven symphony or of the "Leonora" overture No. 3, with the interpretations already given us by the Thomas Orchestra or the Damrosch Orchestra. The Schuman symphony in C major, which is announced for performance, is, however, a fine work, full of imagination, and bright with color. With regard to the "Tannhauser" overture, while its performance may triumphantly demonstrate the transcendental execution and beauty of tone of the orchestra, there is really not the range of interpretation possible to it that is offered in the representative works of Beethoven. As "Tannhauser" has been played by every orchestra and brass band that has visited Toronto for [illegible] must be instructive [illegible]

MAIL EMPIRE.
ess
SEP 30 1905

MUSIC.

The analytical programmes for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Tuesday evening next have been mailed to a large number and are now in the hands of the people in advance, so that they will be able to advise themselves of the character of the music to be heard on this occasion, which is an historic one from a musical viewpoint. In addition to the Schumann Symphony, which will be a great delight to all music lovers, the less cultivated ear will be greatly pleased with Webber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, and the famous Tannhauser Overture. While there may be a little disappointment among music lovers that some less known overture is not played by the Orchestra, the Tannhauser Overture is so very intimately associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their rendition of it is considered so perfect that Mr. Gericke likes to play it as an object lesson.

Another great number will be the concert for violin and orchestra in D minor by Spohr, which will be played by Mr. Willie Hess, and it was composed in 1820 and it achieved immediate success. In the Allegro the entrance of the solo violin is preceded by an effective tutti, in which the principal subjects of the movement are, as usual, partly utilized and party foreshadowed. The solo violin enters by means of a quick cromatic scale into its principal subject. The habitual bravura group soon follows. The second subject leads off with a melody in F major. This is succeeded by some very brilliant Spohrish bravura passages for the violin, with which the first portion of the movement comes to a full close in F. After an interesting short tutti the solo violin begins the usual development movement with the subject No. 1 transferred to the key of A flat. The course of the modulations in this section by means of frequent enharmonic changes, so natural to Spohr's genuis, is very interesting. The usual repetitions of the first and second subjects, transferred to closely related keys, form the chief items in the remainder of this movement. The Adagio is one of the most popular of Spohr's movements. There are two principal melodies, which are interwoven with the most elegant and graceful bravura phrases and partly reintroduced in varied forms. The sentiment of a gentle but warm heart aways the whole Adagio. The Rondo is in the major of the key. The many passages in double stops and the frequent very difficult bravura phrases with which this Rondo abounds have probably been the cause of its frequent omission when the other two movements are brought forward by various violinists, for its merits as a violin solo with orchestra are in no way inferior to the best Spohr has produced.

NEWS

GERICKE, the present conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which comes to Cleveland next Friday evening, was the leader of that famous organization during its earlier visits to the city. Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube, and Barleben; among its violas, such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists, such men as Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, who comes from the Kaim orchestra of Munich, Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eric Loeffler Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and resonance of its strings.

And when an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke, there is very little left for the musician or amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built on his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns: Liszt, Berlioz and Richard Strauss.

The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent.

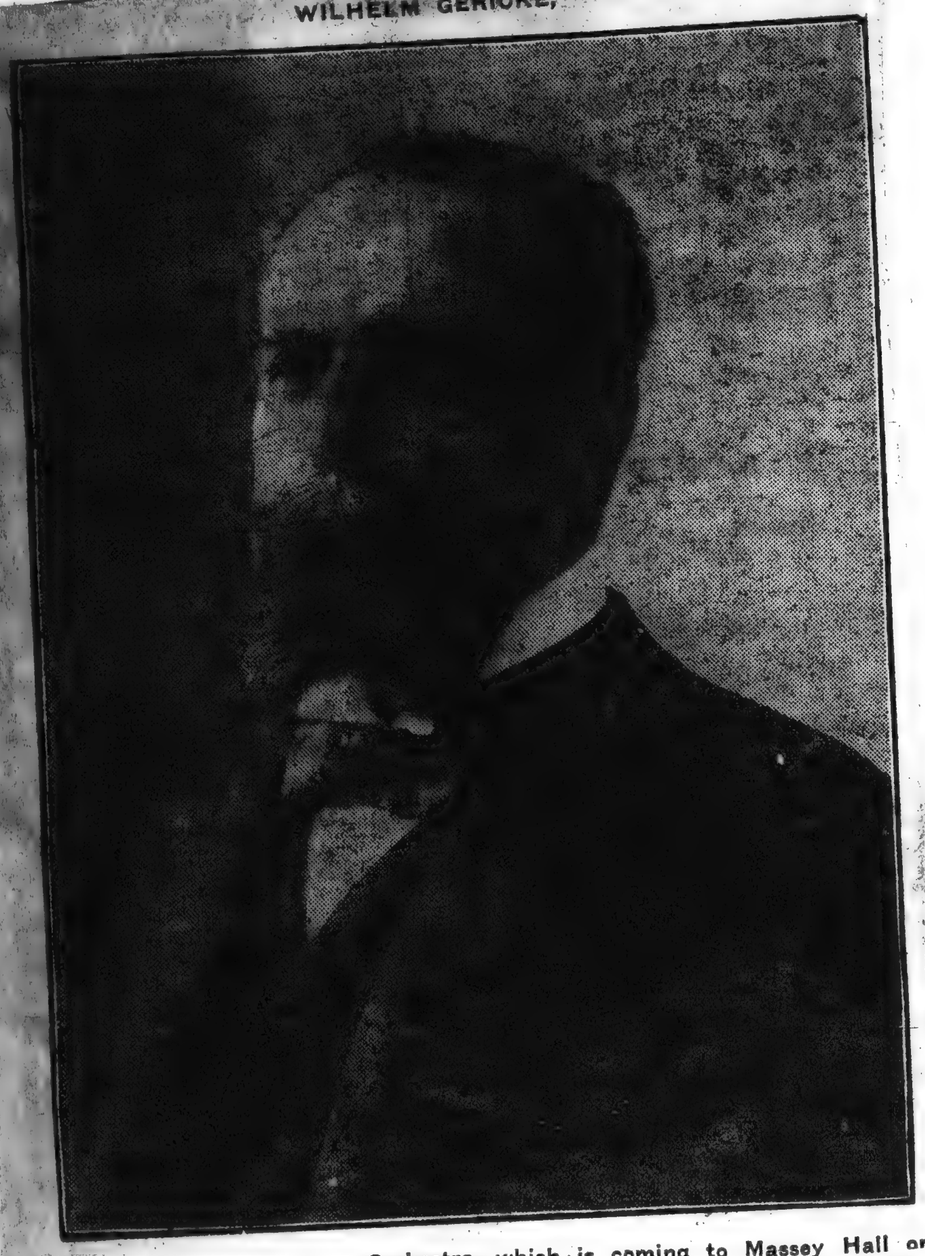
PRESS
n
ress
OCT 2 - 1905

Orchestra Begins Tour.

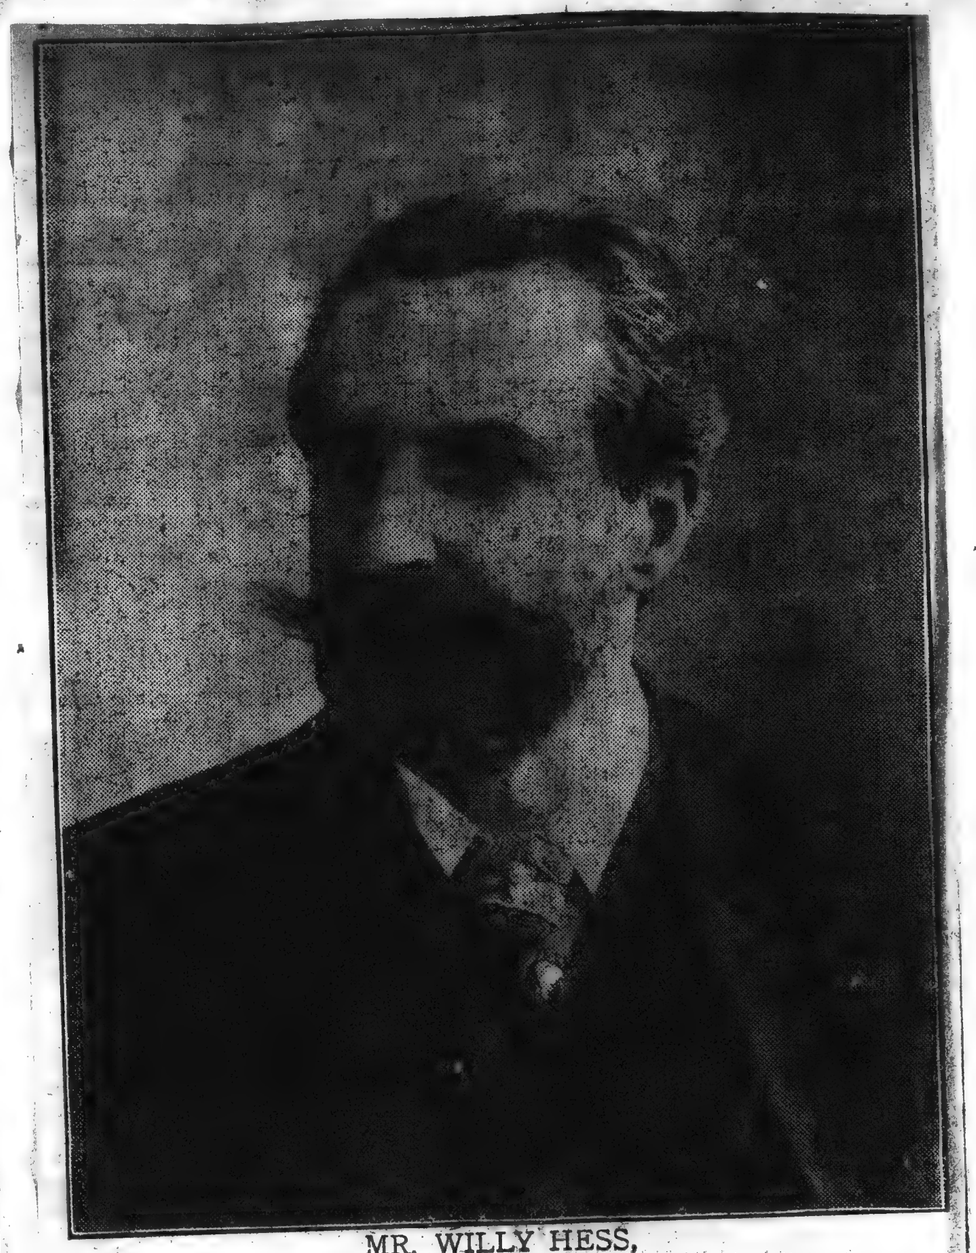
The Boston Symphony orchestra, 75 strong, left Boston last evening for Montreal, where it gives the first concert of its tour Monday night. The organization will do most of its traveling by special train. It will reach Cleveland from Detroit Friday afternoon. The sale of seats for the concert in Grays' armory Friday evening opened at Burrows Bros. Monday morning.

STAR
SEP 30 1905

WILHELM GERICKE,



Of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming to Massey Hall on Tuesday next.



MR. WILLY HESS,
Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at Massey Hall on Tuesday Evening Next.

GLOBE MAIL EMPIRE NEWS

The analytical programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Tuesday evening next, have been mailed to a large number, and are now in the hands of the people in advance, so that they will be able to advise themselves of the character of the music to be heard on this occasion, which is an historic one from a musical viewpoint. In addition to the Schumann's Symphony, which will be a great delight to all music lovers, the less cultivated ear will be greatly pleased with Webber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, and the famous Tannhauser Overture. While there may be a little disappointment among music lovers that some less known overture is not played by the orchestra, the Tannhauser Overture is so very intimately associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and their rendition of it is considered so perfect, that Mr. Gericke likes to play it as an object lessson. The other great number will be the concerto for violin and orchestra in D minor by Spohr. It was composed in 1820, and it achieved immediate success. In the allegro, the entrance of the solo violin is preceded by an effective tutti, in which the principal subjects of the movement are, as usual, partly utilized, and partly foreshadowed. The solo violin enters by means of a quick chromatic scale into its principal subject. The habitual bravura group soon follows:

The second subject leads off with a melody in F major. This is succeeded by some very brilliant Spohrish bravura passages for the violin, with which the first portion of the movement comes to a full close in F. After an interesting short tutti, the solo violin begins the usual development movement with the subject No. 1 transferred to the key of A flat. The course of the modulations in this section by means of frequent enharmonic changes, so natural to Spohr's genius, is very interesting. The usual repetitions of the first and second subjects, transferred to closely related keys, form the chief items in the remainder of this movement.

The Adagio is one of the most popular of Spohr's movements. There are two principal melodies, which are interwoven with the most elegant and graceful bravura phrases, and partly reintroduced in varied forms. The sentiment of a gentle, but warm, heart sways the whole Adagio.

The Rondo is in the major of the key.

The many passages in double stops, and the frequent very difficult bravura phrases with which this Rondo abounds, have probably been the cause of its frequent omission when the other two movements are brought forward by various violinists, for its merits as a violin solo, with orchestra, are in no way inferior to the best Spohr has produced.

ess

SEP 30 1905

If the musical public of Toronto thoroughly realizes what a magnificent musical organization the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Massey Hall will be packed to the utmost capacity at its concert on Tuesday evening. Under its present conductor, Mr. Gericke, the Boston Orchestra is universally acknowledged to have reached the perfection of technical excellence. The only rival that it has ever had in America was the Chicago Orchestra, when under the direction of the late Theodore Thomas. It has cost Boston music lovers hundreds of thousands of dollars to maintain this orchestra since its foundation in 1880, and it is unnecessary to say that such an organization numbering eighty highly-skilled musicians, cannot give concerts on tour at popular prices. The cost of transportation alone of so numerous a body is enough to make an impresario shiver. How well balanced the orchestra is may be understood from the following list, which represents it when at home, and which, it is understood, will not be departed from materially in Toronto: First violins, 16; second, 14; violas, 10; violoncellos, 10; double basses, 8; flutes, 3; oboes, 2; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bassoons, 3; trumpets, 4; horns, 4; trombones, 3; tenor tubas, 2; bass tubas, 2; contrabass tuba, 1; harp, 1; and instruments of percussion. The additional instruments are of course only used in cases where they are called for by the compositions. Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," for instance, which is one of the works announced for the Toronto concert, does not require tubas. With regard to the programme, many musicians regret that some work of Beethoven was not included in the scheme. "Comparisons are odorous," but it is human to make comparisons, and music lovers would have liked to be able to compare the rendering of a Beethoven symphony or of the "Leonora" overture No. 3, with the interpretations already given us by the Thomas Orchestra, or the Damrosch Orchestra. The Schuman symphony in C major, which is announced for performance, is, however, a fine work, full of imagination, and bright with color. With regard to the "Tannhauser" overture, while its performance may triumphantly demonstrate the transcendental execution and beauty of tone of the orchestra, there is really not the range of interpretation possible to it that is offered in the representative works of Beethoven. As "Tannhauser" has been played by every orchestra and brass band that has visited Toronto for years, there will at least be instructive opportunities for comparison in this instance.

ss

30 1905

MUSIC.

The analytical programmes for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Tuesday evening next have been mailed to a large number and are now in the hands of the people in advance, so that they will be able to advise themselves of the character of the music to be heard on this occasion, which is an historic one from a musical viewpoint. In addition to the Schumann Symphony, which will be a great delight to all music lovers, the less cultivated ear will be greatly pleased with Webber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, and the famous Tannhauser Overture. While there may be a little disappointment among music lovers that some less known overture is not played by the Orchestra, the Tannhauser Overture is so very intimately associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their rendition of it is considered so perfect that Mr. Gericke likes to play it as an object lesson.

Another great number will be the concert for violin and orchestra in D minor by Spohr, which will be played by Mr. Willie Hess, and it was composed in 1820 and it achieved immediate success. In the Allegro the entrance of the solo violin is preceded by an effective tutti, in which the principal subjects of the movement are, as usual, partly utilized and party foreshadowed. The solo violin enters by means of a quick cromatic scale into its principal subject. The habitual bravura group soon follows. The second subject leads off with a melody in F major. This is succeeded by some very brilliant Spohrish bravura passages for the violin, with which the first portion of the movement comes to a full close in F. After an interesting short tutti the solo violin begins the usual development movement with the subject No. 1 transferred to the key of A flat. The course of the modulations in this section by means of frequent enharmonic changes, so natural to Spohr's genuis, is very interesting. The usual repetitions of the first and second subjects, transferred to closely related keys, form the chief items in the remainder of this movement. The Adagio is one of the most popular of Spohr's movements. There are two principal melodies, which are interwoven with the most elegant and graceful bravura phrases and partly reintroduced in varied forms. The sentiment of a gentle but warm heart sways the whole Adagio. The Rondo is in the major of the key. The many passages in double stops and the frequent very difficult bravura phrases with which this Rondo abounds have probably been the cause of its frequent omission when the other two movements are brought forward by various violinists, for its merits as a violin solo with orchestra are in no way inferior to the best Spohr has produced.

GERICKE, the present conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which comes to Cleveland next Friday evening, was the leader of that famous organization during its earlier visits to the city. Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube, and Barleben; among its violas, such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists, such men as Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, who comes from the Kaim orchestra of Munich, Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eric Loeffler Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and resonance of its strings.

And when an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke, there is very little left for the musician or amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built on his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns: Liszt, Berlioz, and Richard Strauss.

The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent.

PL

n

ress OCT 2 - 1905

Orchestra Begins Tour.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, 75 strong, left Boston last evening for Montreal, where it gives the first concert of its tour Monday night. The organization will do most of its traveling by special train. It will reach Cleveland from Detroit Friday afternoon. The sale of seats for the concert in Grays' armory Friday evening opened at Burrows Bros. Monday morning.

[39]

STAR

SEP 30 1904

WILHELM GERICKE,

Of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming to Massey Hall on Tuesday next.

GLOBE

* * *

The analytical programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Tuesday evening next, have been mailed to a large number, and are now in the hands of the people in advance, so that they will be able to advise themselves of the character of the music to be heard on this occasion, which is an historic one from a musical viewpoint. In addition to the Schumann's Symphony, which will be a great delight to all music lovers, the less cultivated ear will be greatly pleased with Webber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, and the famous Tannhauser Overture. While there may be a little disappointment among music lovers that some less known overture is not played by the orchestra, the Tannhauser Overture is so very intimately associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and their rendition of it is considered so perfect, that Mr. Gericke likes to play it as an object lesson. The other great number will be the concerto for violin and orchestra in D minor by Spohr. It was composed in 1820, and it achieved immediate success. In the allegro, the entrance of the solo violin is preceded by an effective tutti, in which the principal subjects of the movement are, as usual, partly utilized, and partly foreshadowed. The solo violin enters by means of a quick chromatic scale into its principal subject. The habitual bravura group soon follows:

The second subject leads off with a melody in F major. This is succeeded by some very brilliant Spohrish bravura passages for the violin, with which the first portion of the movement comes to a full close in F. After an interesting short tutti, the solo violin begins the usual development movement with the subject No. 1 transferred to the key of A flat. The course of the modulations in this section by means of frequent enharmonic changes, so natural to Spohr's genius, is very interesting. The usual repetitions of the first and second subjects, transferred to closely related keys, form the chief items in the remainder of this movement.

The Adagio is one of the most popular of Spohr's movements. There are two principal melodies, which are interwoven with the most elegant and graceful bravura phrases, and partly re-introduced in varied forms. The sentiment of a gentle, but warm, heart sways the whole Adagio.

The Rondo is in the major of the key.

The many passages in double stops, and the frequent very difficult bravura phrases with which this Rondo abounds, have probably been the cause of its frequent omission when the other two movements are brought forward by various violinists, for its merits as a violin solo, with orchestra, are in no way inferior to the best Spohr has produced.

ess

SEP 30 1904

If the musical public of Toronto thoroughly realizes what a magnificent musical organization the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Massey Hall will be packed to the utmost capacity at its concert on Tuesday evening. Under its present conductor, Mr. Gericke, the Boston Orchestra is universally acknowledged to have reached the perfection of technical excellence. The only rival that it has ever had in America was the Chicago Orchestra, when under the direction of the late Theodore Thomas. It has cost Boston music lovers hundreds of thousands of dollars to maintain this orchestra since its foundation in 1880, and it is unnecessary to say that such an organization numbering eighty highly-skilled musicians, cannot give concerts on tour at popular prices. The cost of transportation alone of so numerous a body is enough to make an impresario shiver. How well balanced the orchestra is may be understood from the following list, which represents it when at home, and which, it is understood, will not be departed from materially in Toronto: First violins, 16; second, 14; violas, 10; violoncellos, 10; double basses, 8; flutes, 3; oboes, 2; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bassoons, 3; trumpets, 4; horns, 4; trombones, 3; tenor tubas, 2; bass tubas, 2; contrabass tuba, 1; harp, 1, and instruments of percussion. The additional instruments are of course only used in cases where they are called for by the compositions. Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," for instance, which is one of the works announced for the Toronto concert, does not require tubas. With regard to the programme, many musicians regret that some work of Beethoven was not included in the scheme. "Comparisons are odorous," but it is human to make comparisons, and music lovers would have liked to be able to compare the rendering of a Beethoven symphony or of the "Leonora" overture No. 3, with the interpretations already given us by the Thomas Orchestra, or the Damrosch Orchestra. The Schuman symphony in C major, which is announced for performance, is, however, a fine work, full of imagination, and bright with color. With regard to the "Tannhauser" overture, while its performance may triumphantly demonstrate the transcendental execution and beauty of tone of the orchestra, there is really not the range of interpretation possible to it that is offered in the representative works of Beethoven. As "Tannhauser" has been played by every orchestra and brass band that has visited Toronto for years, there will at least be instructive opportunities for comparison in this instance.

MR. WILLY HESS,

Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at Massey Hall on Tuesday Evening Next.

Selling Bureau in the World

EMPIRE

ss

OCT

MUSIC.

The analytical programmes for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Tuesday evening next have been mailed to a large number and are now in the hands of the people in advance, so that they will be able to advise themselves of the character of the music to be heard on this occasion, which is an historic one from a musical viewpoint. In addition to the Schumann Symphony, which will be a great delight to all music lovers, the less cultivated ear will be greatly pleased with Webber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice, and the famous Tannhauser Overture. While there may be a little disappointment among music lovers that some less known overture is not played by the Orchestra, the Tannhauser Overture is so very intimately associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and their rendition of it is considered so perfect that Mr. Gericke likes to play it as an object lesson.

Another great number will be the concert for violin and orchestra in D minor by Spohr, which will be played by Mr. Willie Hess, and it was composed in 1820 and it achieved immediate success. In the Allegro the entrance of the solo violin is preceded by an effective tutti, in which the principal subjects of the movement are, as usual, partly utilized and party foreshadowed. The solo violin enters by means of a quick cromatic scale into its principal subject. The habitual bravura group soon follows. The second subject leads off with a melody in F major. This is succeeded by some very brilliant Spohrish bravura passages for the violin, with which the first portion of the movement comes to a full close in F. After an interesting short tutti the solo violin begins the usual development movement with the subject No. 1 transferred to the key of A flat. The course of the modulations in this section by means of frequent enharmonic changes, so natural to Spohr's genuis, is very interesting. The usual repetitions of the first and second subjects, transferred to closely related keys, form the chief items in the remainder of this movement. The Adagio is one of the most popular of Spohr's movements. There are two principal melodies, which are interwoven with the most elegant and graceful bravura phrases and partly reintroduced in varied forms. The sentiment of a gentle but warm heart sways the whole Adagio. The Rondo is in the major of the key. The many passages in double stops and the frequent very difficult bravura phrases with which this Rondo abounds have probably been the cause of its frequent omission when the other two movements are brought forward by various violinists, for its merits as a violin solo with orchestra are in no way inferior to the best Spohr has produced.

GERICKE, the present conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which comes to Cleveland next Friday evening, was the leader of that famous organization during its earlier visits to the city. Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube, and Barleben; among its violas, such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists, such men as Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, who comes from the Kaim orchestra of Munich, Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eric Loeffler Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and resonance of its strings.

And when an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke, there is very little left for the musician or amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built on his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns: Liszt, Berlioz, and Richard Strauss.

The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite solo[illegible] in England and on the continent.

n

ress

OCT

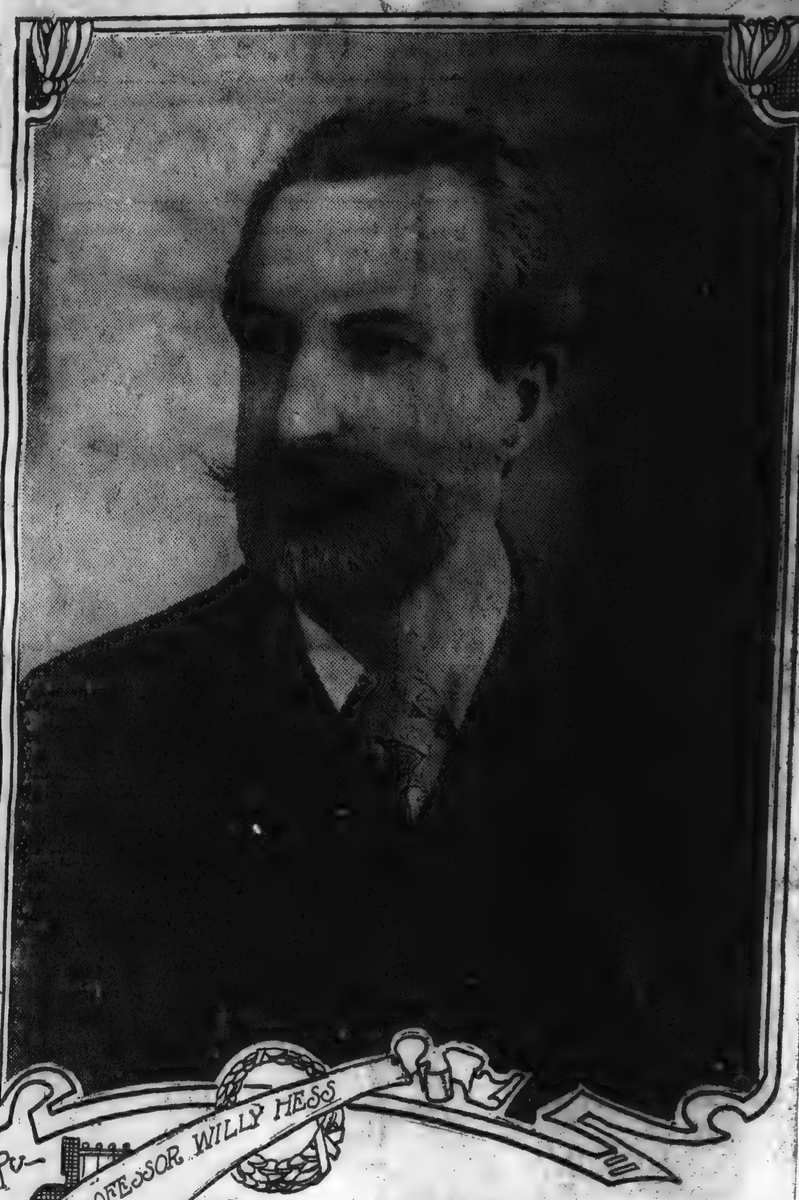
Orchestra Begins Tour.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, 75 strong, left Boston last evening for Montreal, where it gives the first concert of its tour Monday night. The organization will do most of its traveling by special train. It will reach Cleveland from Detroit Friday afternoon. The sale of seats for the concert in Grays' armory Friday evening opened at Burrows Bros. Monday morning.

[39]

LEADER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
SEP 29 1905

CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA



Despite the energetic attempts of a certain school of musicians to ignore the solos in a symphony concert, that factor, with the public at least, still remains most important. Not the least item of interest in the program of the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the first appearance in this city of Professor Willy Hess, the famous violin virtuoso. Professor Hess is now beginning his second year as concert master of the orchestra, having given up most desirable positions and engagements in London and on the continent to do so. His success in America has been little short of sensational. As soloist he appeared last year with the orchestra before the critical audiences of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and other of the larger cities of the East, and everywhere he was proclaimed without a dissenting voice as one of the greatest violinists that had ever come to America.

Professor Hess rather regards himself as an American, although his entire musical career has been spent in Europe. From 1865 to 1872 he lived in this country with his parents. In the latter year his father left America for Holland, taking his son with him, and his busy life in Europe prevented Professor Hess' return until last year.

He was born in Mannheim, Germany in 1859, and, like nearly all great violinists, betrayed signs of his talent at an early age. When his family returned to Holland in 1872 the boy, then thirteen, began his public appearances, and on one occasion distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harsen Quartet. A year later his family removed to Heidelberg, and the young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France, and in Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first philharmonic concert there.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TOWN TOPICS.
From
Address

No more brilliant opening for Cleveland's musical season could be hoped for than the concert by the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be given in the Grays' Armory on Friday evening, October 6th. By all odds and common admission the greatest orchestra in America, it stands on a plane of artistic efficiency reached by only two or three orchestras of Europe. In fact, it is a grave question whether there is any orchestra in the world that can stand comparison with this superb body of musicians which is now entering the twenty-fifth year of its existence. Unfortunately in the past twelve years it has been impossible for the orchestra to make any western tours. The last concert in Cleveland was given in the old Music Hall on May 8th, 1893, when Mr. Kneisel, in the absence of Mr. Nikisch was the acting conductor. After that year, the demands on the time of the orchestra in Boston and the larger eastern cities became so many and so great that a western tour was out of the question. But no year has passed without almost innumerable requests for concerts from the Middle West. These finally became so insistent that last spring the management decided to assemble the men much earlier than usual and make a short tour of one week. The cities finally selected were Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit and Rochester. Mr. Gericke, who is now beginning his twelfth season as conductor of the orchestra, will of course accompany it. He needs no introduction to the Cleveland public, for in his first term of service he conducted several concerts in this city. He is most enthusiastic about this western trip and has taken care unusual, even for him, in the selection of a program. The soloist will be Mr. Willy Hess, who will make his debut to the public of this city. Mr. Hess, after many years residence in Europe, returned to America last year to become the concert master of the orchestra. With the orchestra he appeared as soloist in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and the other large eastern cities and the success he won fully sustained the reputation he brought from Europe as one of the leading violinists of the world.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
CLEVELAND, OHIO
SEP 29 1905

FATHER HAS PASSED GIFT TO DAUGHTER

YOUNG PIANIST, APPEARING NOW IN VAUDEVILLE, AN ARTIST OF ABILITY.

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Be Heard Here Next Week.

The program of the Boston Symphony orchestra includes—as could be expected—some attractive numbers. Mendelssohn's delightful overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," an arrangement for strings of a Bach "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte," Wagner's "Waldweben" and "Siegfried" excerpt, the climax being Beethoven's 5th symphony in C minor. Concertmeister Willy Hess will play Bruch's G minor violin concerto. The concert occurs Friday evening of next week.

PLAIN DEALER

Music.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The musical event of the week and one of the most interesting of the season will be the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Grays' armory, Friday evening. For years the Boston Symphony has been the greatest of American orchestras and one of the greatest formed anywhere. It's long absence from the city has served to whet public interest very greatly and the indications point to an audience worthy of the event. Since it was here in 1893 Cleveland has heard much that was good in symphony programs and is prepared to appreciate the program prepared. There will be the added interest caused by timely alterations at the armory, the changes being planned for the purpose of making the armory more suitable for musical events, changes that should appeal strongly to the public.

Mr. Gericke has decided opinions about programs and their making. The regular programs of the orchestra in the east are limited to an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Cleveland, because the program he has arranged for this city will play about two hours. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn as found in his overture "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage" to the serene beauty of the mighty master, Jonann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form" admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach student, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes the brilliant work for the violin, "Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1," and this is followed by the delicious forest episode in the second act of Richard Wagner's "Siegfried," which is so appropriately called "Waldweben." Finally the program has "Beethoven's C Minr Symphony No. 5," which despite the preference shown by many for the choral symphony, still remains the greatest work of its kind that has yet been written.

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Will Hess, whose appearance on Friday night will be his first in Cleveland. Cleveland knows of the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the east last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston, New York and the other cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that had ever appeared there. His choice of the Bruch concerto should prove a most wise one, for, of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is considered the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. The last concert he conducted in Cleveland was in the spring of 1899, just before he returned to Vienna. He is the same strong, virile interpreter he was in those days, solid, substantial, authoritative. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. The concert opens at 8:15.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
LEADER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
OCT 3- 1905

FIRST CONCERT HERE IN YEARS

Boston Symphony Orchestra, to Play Friday Evening, Has Not Been in Cleveland for More Than Decade.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its first concert in Cleveland in nearly thirteen years in the Grays' Armory Friday evening, brings with it from its Western concerts seventy-five men, excluding the soloist and conductor. The orchestra is regarded as an ideal orchestra for all the works except those stupenduous things by men like Richard Strauss and Gustav Mahler, none of which are on any of the trip programs. All the famous members of the orchestra will be at their desks at this concert. In order to get hold of some in time for the preliminary rehearsals it was necessary to spend a considerable sum in cable toll, for a majority of them spend their summers in Europe and usually seek retired spots in which to rest up after an arduous season and it is not always easy to reach them.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 4- 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall Tonight.

At 8.15 o'clock this evening, at Convention Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its first concert in Buffalo for nearly thirteen years. The programme, under Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, will be of unusual beauty. The soloist will be Professor Willy Hess, concert-master of the orchestra and one of the greatest of modern violinists.

As perfect quiet is essential to the enjoyment of the programme, it is hoped that everyone will make an effort to be early, for no one will be seated after the concert has begun until the end of the opening number. It is Buffalo's first chance in many years to hear the finest orchestra in America.

NEWS
OCT 3 1905

WELCOME NEWS FOR MUSIC LOVERS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give the first of its two concerts in Buffalo tomorrow evening in Convention Hall, will reach this city from Toronto, where it plays tonight in the Massey Music Hall, about noon. The sale of seats which has been in progress for both concerts and for this first one during the last two weeks has been very large and a full house is practically assured. This will be welcome news to the music lovers of Buffalo, for such an earnest effort is being made to have the Boston Symphony give at least two concerts here every winter that really the artistic credit of the city is involved. Happily there sems no doubt that the most sanguine hopes of the ladies and gentlemen who are behind the project will be fully realized.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 3 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Buffalo Tomorrow Night

At noon tomorrow the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 75 strong, headed by the famous conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, arrives in Buffalo for its first concert here in twelve years, which takes place at Convention Hall tomorrow night, with Willy Hess, concertmeister of the orchestra, as soloist. The sale of seats has been very large, and the utmost enthusiasm is exhibited over this, the great musical event of the season.

The concert begins promptly at 8.15 and everyone is asked to be in his seat on time, as no one will be seated during the numbers. The programme is without exception the most beautiful selection of orchestral music ever played in this city.

Tonight the orchestra is playing in Toronto. It is making a brief autumn tour, in which Buffalo is included, but for the concert here in February, a special trip will be made from Boston, as this is the only city, except New York, which will have more than one concert this season.

CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Despite the energetic attempts of a certain school of musicians to ignore the solos in a symphony concert, that factor, with the public at least, still remains most important. Not the least item of interest in the program of the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the first appearance in this city of Professor Willy Hess, the famous violin virtuoso. Professor Hess is now beginning his second year as concert master of the orchestra, having given up most desirable positions and engagements in London and on the continent to do so. His success in America has been little short of sensational. As soloist he appeared last year with the orchestra before the critical audiences of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and other of the larger cities of the East, and everywhere he was proclaimed without a dissenting voice as one of the greatest violinists that had ever come to America.

Professor Hess rather regards himself as an American, although his entire musical career has been spent in Europe. From 1865 to 1872 he lived in this country with his parents. In the latter year his father left America for Holland, taking his son with him, and his busy life in Europe prevented Professor Hess' return until last year.

He was born in Mannheim, Germany in 1859, and, like nearly all great violinists, betrayed signs of his talent at an early age. When his family returned to Holland in 1872 the boy, then thirteen, began his public appearances, and on one occasion distinguished himself by leading the celebrated Harsen Quartet. A year later his family removed to Heidelberg, and the young violinist toured extensively through Germany, Holland, Belgium and France, and in Paris he was fortunate enough to attract the notice of Vieuxtemps, who not only interested himself in the lad, but conducted the orchestra for him at his first philharmonic concert there.

Newspaper [illegible]

Address [illegible]

[illegible] for Cleveland's musical season could be [illegible] the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] Armory on Friday evening, October 6th. [illegible] on the greatest orchestra in America, it [illegible] reached by only two or three orches-

[illegible] rave question whether there is any [illegible] comparison with this superb body of [illegible] twenty-fifth year of its existence. [illegible] years it has been impossible for the [illegible] western tours. The last concert in Cleveland was [illegible] May 8th, 1893, when Mr. Kneisel, in the [illegible] acting conductor. After that year, the [illegible] orchestra in Boston and the larger eastern [illegible] year that a western tour was out of the [illegible] without almost innumerable requests for [illegible] from the middle West. These finally became so insistent that last [illegible] engagement decided to assemble the men much earlier than usual and make a short tour of one week. The cities finally selected were Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit and Rochester. Mr. Gericke, who is now beginning his twelfth season as conductor of the orchestra, will of course accompany it. He needs no introduction to the Cleveland public, for in his first term of service he conducted several concerts in this city. He is most enthusiastic about this western trip and has taken care unusual, even for him, in the selection of a program. The soloist will be Mr. Willy Hess, who will make his debut to the public of this city. Mr. Hess, after many years residence in Europe, returned to America last year to become the concert master of the orchestra. With the orchestra he appeared as soloist in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and the other large eastern cities and the success he won fully sustained the reputation he brought from Europe as one of the leading violinists of the world.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau PRESS

[illegible]

ess [illegible]

SEP 29 1905

FATHER HAS PASSED GIFT TO DAUGHTER

YOUNG PIANIST, APPEARING NOW IN VAUDEVILLE, AN ARTIST OF ABILITY.

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Be Heard Here Next Week.

The program of the Boston Symphony orchestra includes—as could be expected—some attractive numbers. Mendelssohn's delightful overture, "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," an arrangement for strings of a Bach "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte," Wagner's "Waldweben" and "Siegfried" excerpt, the climax being Beethoven's 5th symphony in G minor. Concertmeister Willy Hess will play Bruch's G minor violin concerto. The concert occurs Friday evening of next week.

m PLAIN DEALER

lress [illegible]

te [illegible]

Music.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT.

The musical event of the week and one of the most interesting of the season will be the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Grays' armory, Friday evening. For years the Boston Symphony has been the greatest of American orchestras and one of the greatest formed anywhere. It's long absence from the city has served to whet public interest very greatly and the indications point to an audience worthy of the event. Since it was here in 1893 Cleveland has heard much that was good in symphony programs and is prepared to appreciate the program prepared. There will be the added interest caused by timely alterations at the armory, the changes being planned for the purpose of making the armory more suitable for musical events, changes that should appeal strongly to the public.

Mr. Gericke has decided opinions about programs and their making. The regular programs of the orchestra in the east are limited to an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Cleveland, because the program he has arranged for this city will play about two hours. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn as found in his overture "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage" to the serene beauty of the mighty master, Jonann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form" admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach student, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes the brilliant work for the violin, "Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1," and this is followed by the delicious forest episode in the second act of Richard Wagner's "Siegfried," which is so appropriately called "Waldweben." Finally the program has "Beethoven's C Minr Symphony No. 5," which despite the preference shown by many for the choral symphony, still remains the greatest work of its kind that has yet been written.

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Will Hess, whose appearance on Friday night will be his first in Cleveland. Cleveland knows of the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the east last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston, New York and the other cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that had ever appeared there. His choice of the Bruch concerto should prove a most wise one, for, of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is considered the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. The last concert he conducted in Cleveland was in the spring of 1899, just before he returned to Vienna. He is the same strong, virile interpreter he was in those days, solid, substantial, authoritative. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. The concert opens at 8:15.

[40]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

n LEADER

ess [illegible]

OCT 3 - 1905

FIRST CONCERT HERE IN YEARS

Boston Symphony Orchestra, to Play Friday Evening, Has Not Been in Cleveland for More Than Decade.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its first concert in Cleveland in nearly thirteen years in the Grays' Armory Friday evening, brings with it from its Western concerts seventy-five men, excluding the soloist and conductor. The orchestra is regarded as an ideal orchestra for all the works except those stupenduous things by men like Richard Strauss and Gustav Mahler, none of which are on any of the trip programs. All the famous members of the orchestra will be at their desks at this concert. In order to get hold of some in time for the preliminary rehearsals it was necessary to spend a considerable sum in cable toll, for a majority of them spend their summers in Europe and usually seek retired spots in which to rest up after an arduous season and it is not always easy to reach them.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

EXPRESS

[illegible]

ess [illegible]

OCT 4 - 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall Tonight.

At 8.15 o'clock this evening, at Convention Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its first concert in Buffalo for nearly thirteen years. The programme, under Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, will be of unusual beauty. The soloist will be Professor Willy Hess, concert-master of the orchestra and one of the greatest of modern violinists.

As perfect quiet is essential to the enjoyment of the programme, it is hoped that everyone will make an effort to be early, for no one will be seated after the concert has begun until the end of the opening number. It is Buffalo's first chance in many years to hear the finest orchestra in America.

NEWS

WELCOME NEWS FOR MUSIC LOVERS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give the first of its two concerts in Buffalo tomorrow evening in Convention Hall, will reach this city from Toronto, where it plays tonight in the Massey Music Hall, about noon. The sale of seats which has been in progress for both concerts and for this first one during the last two weeks has been very large and a full house is practically assured. This will be welcome news to the music lovers of Buffalo, for such an earnest effort is being made to have the Boston Symphony give at least two concerts here every winter that really the artistic credit of the city is involved. Happily there sems no doubt that the most sanguine hopes of the ladies and gentlemen who are behind the project will be fully realized.

[illegible] Bureau in the World

EXPRESS

[illegible]

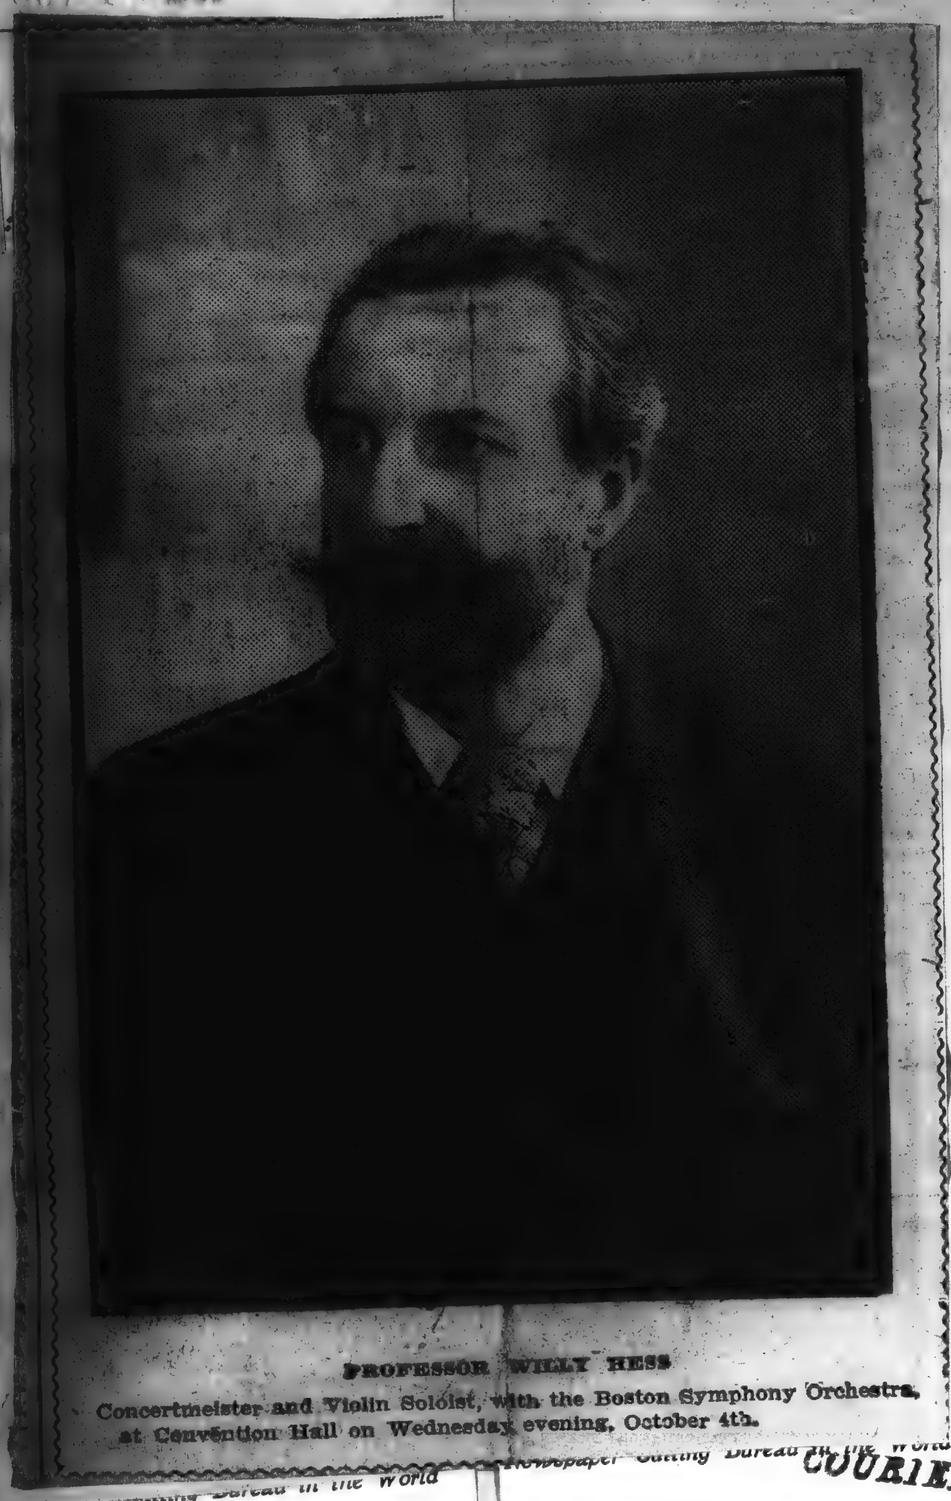
Boston Symphony Orchestra in Buffalo Tomorrow Night.

At noon tomorrow the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 75 strong, headed by the famous conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, arrives in Buffalo for its first concert here in twelve years, which takes place at Convention Hall tomorrow night, with Willy Hess, concertmeister of the orchestra, as soloist. The sale of seats has been very large, and the utmost enthusiasm is exhibited over this, the great musical event of the season.

The concert begins promptly at 8.15 and everyone is asked to be in his seat on time, as no one will be seated during the numbers. The programme is without exception the most beautiful selection of orchestral music ever played in this city.

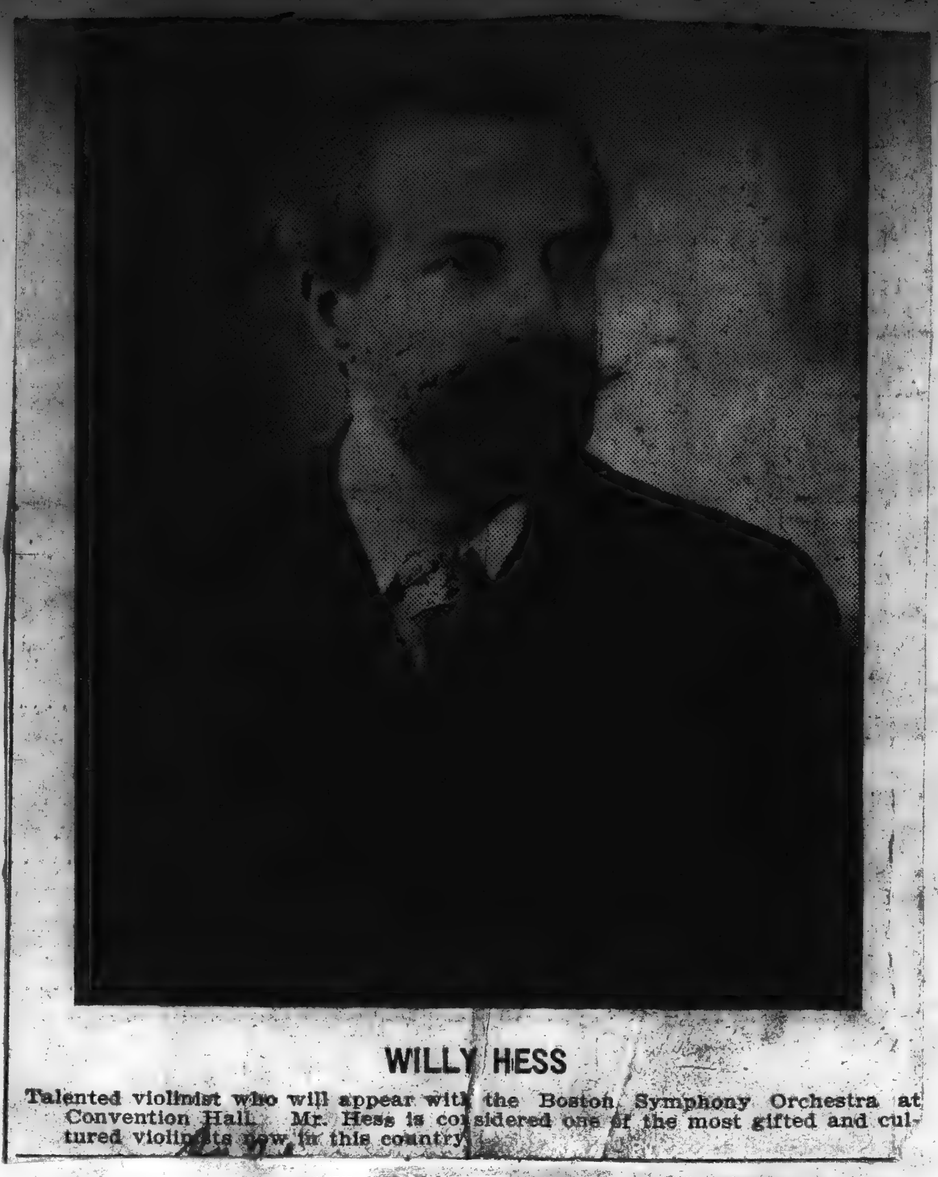
Tonight the orchestra is playing in Toronto. It is making a brief autumn tour, in which Buffalo is included, but for the concert here in February, a special trip will be made from Boston, as this is the only city, except New York, which will have more than one concert this season.

spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER
OCT 1 - 1905



PROFESSOR WILLY HESS

Concertmeister and Violin Soloist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th.



WILLY HESS

Talented violinist who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall. Mr. Hess is considered one of the most gifted and cultured violinists now in this country.

COURIER
OCT 1 - 1905

Radiant in health and spirits, Mme. Emma Eames, the grand opera prima donna, arrived in New York last week from her summer in Europe and this week begins her concert tour of the United States, her engagements including a concert at Convention Hall, Buffalo, on Wednesday evening, November 22d. The tour begins on Wednesday night in Bangor, Me., the date of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Buffalo, and during her stay in Maine Mme. Eames will be given a reception by the Governor of the State. Amherst Webber, pianist, who is with Mme. Eames this season for her brief concert tour, will at the conclusion of this engagement with the prima donna, go to Boston, where he will attend the final rehearsals and witness the initial performance in this country of his new symphony, which has been accepted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will be played by it the first time on the evening of December 29th.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COMMERCIAL
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 1 - 1905

BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Sale of Tickets for Its Concerts Here Has Been Large.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays in Convention Hall in this city on Wednesday evening of this week, plays in Montreal this evening and in Toronto tomorrow evening. The orchestra left Boston last evening. It will get here from Toronto on Wednesday at noon. The orchestra travels in a private special cars and has one car for baggage.

The sale of seats for Wednesday evening's concert and for the one to be given in February has been large. The concert will be a success from a musical point of view and all signs indicate that it will be satisfactory financially.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 2 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE WEDNESDAY

SPLENDID MUSICAL ORGANIZATION, SEVENTY-FIVE STRONG, WILL ARRIVE AT NOON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five strong, left Boston last evening for Montreal, where it gives the first concert of its tour tonight in the Victoria Rink. The famous organization will do most of its traveling by special trains, as it requires three of the largest size Pullmans and one large baggage car to transport its members and their luggage. It will reach Buffalo from Toronto about noon on Wednesday.

The sale of seats not only for the first concert on Wednesday evening, October 4th, in Convention Hall, but for the second in February, has been most gratifying. The prospects are for very large audiences at both events.

All the famous members of the orchestra will be at their desks at the concert on Wednesday evening. In order to get hold of some of them for the preliminary rehearsals it was necessary to spend a very considerable sum in cable tolls, for a majority of them spend their summers in Europe and usually seek retired spots in which to rest after an arduous season and it is not always easy to reach them. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, reached Boston from Munich the first of last week.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
OCT 2 - 1905

PROFESSOR HESS HONORED BY KAISER.

A great deal of curiosity has been aroused in Buffalo concerning the title of professor which the soloist at the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall on Wednesday, evening, Oct. 4, always uses. Prof. Willy Hess is a professor in a sense not often found in this country and rarely found among musicians in any land. The title was given to him by the German Emperor, the German of it being "Konigliches Professor der Musik." This he received when he was the professor of violin in the celebrated Cologne Conservatory of Music and later was confirmed, so to say, by his appointment to the professorship of violin in the Royal Academy of Music in London. This

ILLUSTRATED TIMES
om
dress BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 1 - 1905
te

A warm welcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first concert in the Convention Hall on next Wednesday evening will give an unusually brilliant opening of the local musical season.

It is twelve and a half years since Buffalo last had an opportunity of hearing this band. In those days, Buffalo became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, and, while it has today many more opportunities to hear orchestra music than it had a dozen years ago, it is only fair to say that nothing has quite filled the place left vacant by the Boston men. The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—for this is its 25th season, but it has been run on a basis which has been possible in no other case known in the world. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which always confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world, the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony, and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results which have been obtained. Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben; among its violas such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke, Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eris Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who have made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestra work, can justify glory in the beauty, brilliancy, and sonority of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind-choir, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago, with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists, and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Maquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary merit, and the same is true of Gresiz, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first bassoon, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist. The soloist, Professor Willy Hess, is a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent. Last year he made his first appearance in the east with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in Buffalo. It would be difficult to devise a more attractive program than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Buffalo. Beginning with Mendelssohn's charming overture "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form" by Bach, Bruch's G. Minor Concerto for violin, Tschalkowski's stunning Italian Caprice, and the loveliest of all of Schumann's Symphonies, that in C Major No. 2.

The First Establish
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER
ess
1905

With the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Convention Hall next Wednesday evening, the musical season in Buffalo has a brilliant opening, indeed it seems as if the greatest attraction was the first, long and interesting as is the list of musical engagements for the city this season.

It is twelve years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra visited Buffalo and each season greater and greater has grown the demand for its return. The sale of seats for the first concert has been very large and interest in the event is constantly growing. The second concert of the series comes on February 19th.

Wednesday night's concert will begin promptly at 8.15 o'clock and everyone is asked to be on time, to avoid noise and confusion during the opening number. While in Boston the orchestra limits its concerts to an hour and a half, the time has been extended for Buffalo, fairly starved for good orchestra music, and the program will occupy two hours.

Such a program! Its equal has never been heard here, for Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the orchestra, has devoted an unusual amount of time and thought to its arrangement and has made a most beautiful selection, opening with Mendelssohn's charming overture, A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage. Also on the program are Tschaikowski's superb Italian Caprice and the loveliest of the Schumann symphonies, that in C Major, No. 2.

Professor Willy Hess, concert-meister of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the first concert. He received his title of professor from the German Emperor and is reckoned among the greatest of living violinists. He has long been a tremendous favorite on the other side of the water. This will be his first appearance in Buffalo.

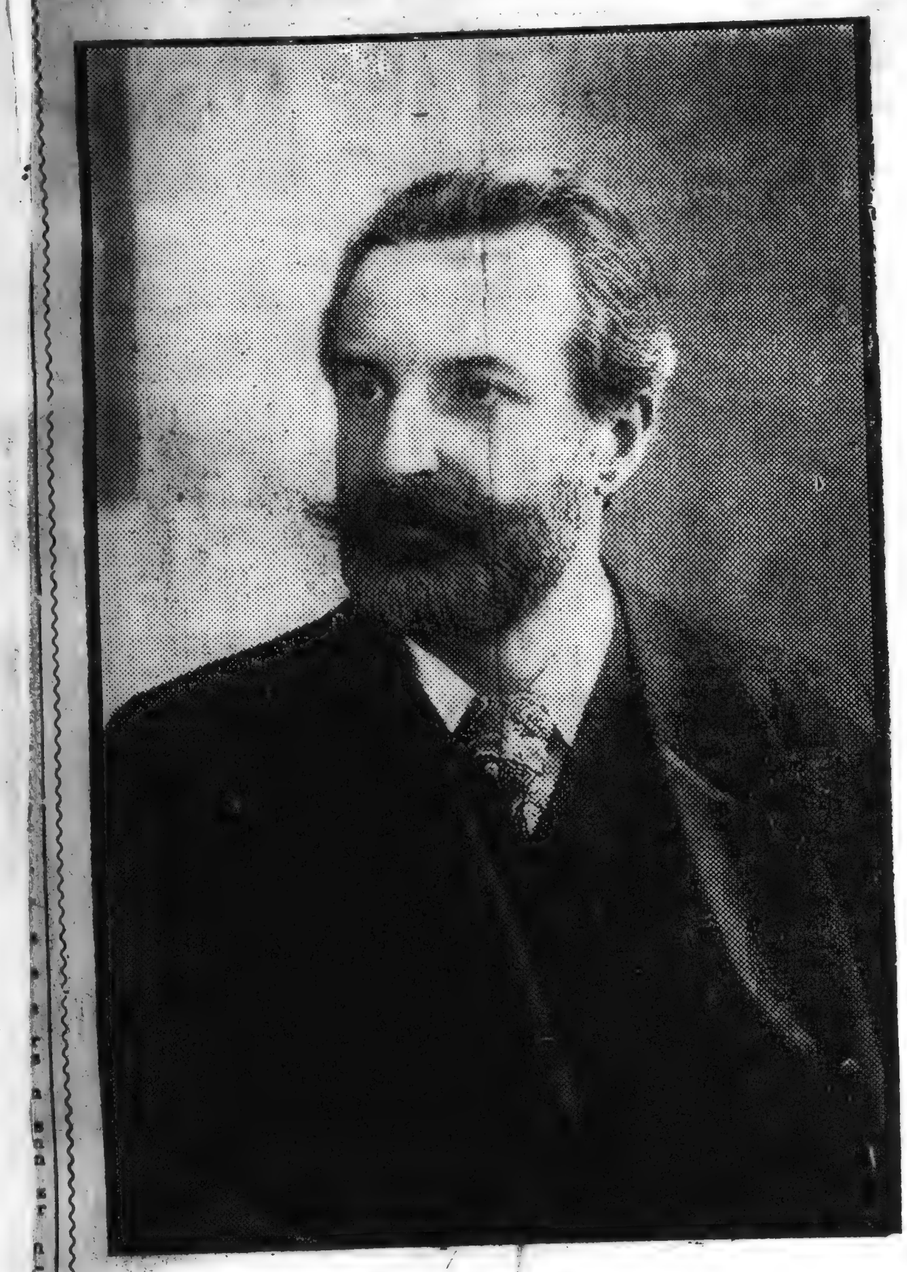
The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now opening its 25th season and it has never been in such superb condition, numbering, as it does, many distinguished solo players. The question of money never enters into the assembling of this orchestra; many of the men have been with the organization these thirteen years; the aim is ever to get the best, without regard to cost, and that is why the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands where it does today, at the top, pre-eminently the best in America, one of the first great ones in the world.

It was a venture for the 40 men and women back of the enterprise to bring the orchestra to Buffalo, but the public has responded to the generous spirit they evinced by buying the seats with avidity, so that the indications are for an overwhelming house next Wednesday evening. If the venture can be made a financial as well as an artistic success, much will be gained, especially in the encouragement it will offer for future efforts of a like kind and in the broadening and ennobling influence that hearing such music perfectly played will have upon the audience.

Next Wednesday will be a red letter night in Buffalo's musical annals and Convention Hall should be filled to the doors.

[41]

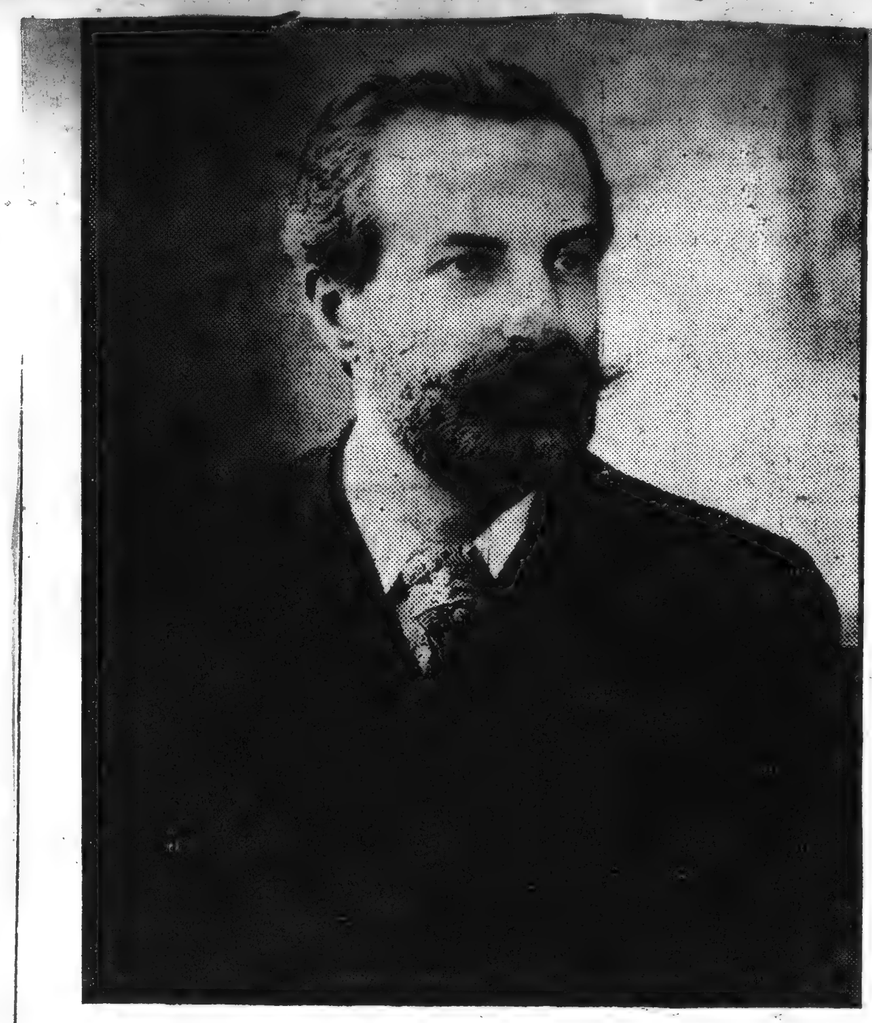
spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
OURIER



PROFESSOR WILLY HESS

Concertmeister and Violin Soloist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Convention Hall on Wednesday evening, October 4th.

COURIER



WILLY HESS

Talented violinist who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall. Mr. Hess is considered one of the most gifted and cultured violinists now in this country.

ILLUSTRATED TIMES
BUFFALO, N.Y.

Radiant in health and spirits, Mme. Emma Eames, the grand opera prima donna, arrived in New York last week from her summer in Europe and this week begins her concert tour of the United States, her engagements including a concert at Convention Hall, Buffalo, on Wednesday evening, November 22d. The tour begins on Wednesday night in Bangor, Me., the date of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Buffalo, and during her stay in Maine Mme. Eames will be given a reception by the Governor of the State. Amherst Webber, pianist, who is with Mme. Eames this season for her brief concert tour, will at the conclusion of his engagement with the prima donna, go to Boston, where he will attend the final rehearsals and witness the initial performance in this country of his new symphony, which has been accepted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will be played by it the first time on the evening of December 29th.

* * *

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the
COMMERCIAL

BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Sale of Tickets for Its Concerts Here Has Been Large.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays in Convention Hall in this city on Wednesday evening of this week, plays in Montreal this evening and in Toronto tomorrow evening. The orchestra left Boston last evening. It will get here from Toronto on Wednesday at noon. The orchestra travels in three special cars and has one car for its baggage.

The sale of seats for Wednesday evening's concert and for the one to be given in February has been large. The concerts will be a success from a musical point of view and all signs indicate that they are to be satisfactory financially.

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE WEDNESDAY

SPLENDID MUSICAL ORGANIZATION, SEVENTY-FIVE STRONG, WILL ARRIVE AT NOON.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five strong, left Boston last evening for Montreal, where it gives the first concert of its tour tonight in the Victoria Rink. The famous organization will do most of its traveling by special trains, as it requires three of the largest size Pullmans and one large baggage car to transport its members and their luggage. It will reach Buffalo from Toronto about noon on Wednesday.

The sale of seats not only for the first concert on Wednesday evening, October 4th, in Convention Hall, but for the second in February, has been most gratifying. The prospects are for very large audiences at both events.

All the famous members of the orchestra will be at their desks at the concert on Wednesday evening. In order to get hold of some of them for the preliminary rehearsals it was necessary to spend a very considerable sum in cable tolls, for a majority of them spend their summers in Europe and usually seek retired spots in which to rest after an arduous season and it is not always easy to reach them. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, reached Boston from Munich the first of last week.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS

PROFESSOR HESS HONORED BY KAISER.

A great deal of curiosity has been aroused in Buffalo concerning the title of professor which the soloist at the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall on Wednesday, evening, Oct. 4, always uses. Prof. Willy Hess is a professor in a sense not often found in this country and rarely found among musicians in any land. The title was given to him by the German Emperor, the German of it being "Konigliches Professor der Musik." This he received when he was the professor of violin in the celebrated Cologne Conservatory of Music and later was confirmed, so to say, by his appointment to the professorship of violin in the Royal Academy of Music in London. This last is one of the most enviable posts that can fall to the lot of a violinist and Prof. Hess gave it up to become a member of the Boston orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COMMERCIAL

A warm welcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first concert in the Convention Hall on next Wednesday evening will give an unusually brilliant opening of the local musical season.

It is twelve and a half years since Buffalo last had an opportunity of hearing this band. In those days, Buffalo became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, and, while it has today many more opportunities to hear orchestra music than it had a dozen years ago, it is only fair to say that nothing has quite filled the place left vacant by the Boston men. The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—for this is its 25th season, but it has been run on a basis which has been possible in no other case known in the world. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which always confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world, the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony, and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results which have been obtained. Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben; among its violas such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke, Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eris Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who have made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestra work, can justify glory in the beauty, brilliancy, and sonority of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind-choir, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago, with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists, and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Maquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary merit, and the same is true of Gresiz, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first bassoon, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist. The soloist, Professor Willy Hess, is a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent. Last year he made his first appearance in the east with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in Buffalo. It would be difficult to devise a more attractive program than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Buffalo. Beginning with Mendelssohn's charming overture "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form" by Bach, Bruch's G. Minor Concerto for violin, Tschalkowski's stunning Italian Caprice, and the loveliest of all of Schumann's Symphonies, that in C Major No. 2.

The First Established
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COMMERCIAL

With the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Convention Hall next Wednesday evening, the musical season in Buffalo has a brilliant opening, indeed it seems as if the greatest attraction was the first, long and interesting as is the list of musical engagements for the city this season.

It is twelve years since the Boston Symphony Orchestra visited Buffalo and each season greater and greater has grown the demand for its return. The sale of seats for the first concert has been very large and interest in the event is constantly growing. The second concert of the series comes on February 19th.

Wednesday night's concert will begin promptly at 8.15 o'clock and everyone is asked to be on time, to avoid noise and confusion during the opening number. While in Boston the orchestra limits its concerts to an hour and a half, the time has been extended for Buffalo, fairly starved for good orchestra music, and the program will occupy two hours.

Such a program! Its equal has never been heard here, for Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the orchestra, has devoted an unusual amount of time and thought to its arrangement and has made a most beautiful selection, opening with Mendelssohn's charming overture, A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage. Also on the program are Tschaikowski's superb Italian Caprice and the loveliest of the Schumann symphonies, that in C Major, No. 2.

Professor Willy Hess, concert-meister of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the first concert. He received his title of professor from the German Emperor and is reckoned among the greatest of living violinists. He has long been a tremendous favorite on the other side of the water. This will be his first appearance in Buffalo.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now opening its 25th season and it has never been in such superb condition, numbering, as it does, many distinguished solo players. The question of money never enters into the assembling of this orchestra; many of the men have been with the organization these thirteen years; the aim is ever to get the best, without regard to cost, and that is why the Boston Symphony Orchestra stands where it does today, at the top, pre-eminently the best in America, one of the first great ones in the world.

It was a venture for the 40 men and women back of the enterprise to bring the orchestra to Buffalo, but the public has responded to the generous spirit they evinced by buying the seats with avidity, so that the indications are for an overwhelming house next Wednesday evening. If the venture can be made a financial as well as an artistic success, much will be gained, especially in the encouragement it will offer for future efforts of a like kind and in the broadening and ennobling influence that hearing such music perfectly played will have upon the audience.

Next Wednesday will be a red letter night in Buffalo's musical annals and Convention Hall should be filled to the doors.

PASSING OF THE RAIL FENCE.

[41]

er Cutting Bureau in the
COURIER
N. Y.

The splendid sale of seats for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has quite vindicated the judgment aud courage of those who have arranged to bring that famous organization to Convention Hall twice this winter. The first concert takes place on Wednesday evening next, October 4th, at 8:15 o'clock.

Coming at this time, it is as if the climax of the musical season came at the very beginning. For of all the events which have been scheduled, this is by far the most interesting and most important. It has always been a matter of regret that the orchestra ceased coming as far west as Buffalo, and yet, while this city is not so poverty stricken today in orchestral music as it was a dozen years ago, the concerts it has had seem to have served only to make keener the desire for the Boston band.

Mr. Gericke has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions concerning programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited in time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Buffalo, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn as found in his charming overture, "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," most effectively arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this is followed by Tschaikowski's gorgeous Italian Caprice. The final number will be Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony. A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, whose appearance on Wednesday night will be his first in Buffalo. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression that Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston and the other leading cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that has ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice in one season as soloist, which is nearly, if not quite, unprecedented. His choice of the Bruch Concerto has been a most wise one, for of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Those who have not heard the orchestra in the East during the past seven seasons, when he has again been its conductor, will find him the same strong, virile interpreter that he was in those days. Solid, substantial and authoritative, he plays on his orchestra with the ease that a great pianist plays on his instrument. Moreover, passing years have not left him standing still. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly-colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "Bs"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert, with equal authority, he reveals the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski and a Richard Strauss.

The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members thirteen years ago, but among the principals there have been some changes made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is today, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation.

* * *

Although it is over sixteen years since Wilhelm Gericke last appeared here as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his name is still one to conjure with for the influence spread by his authoritative readings of the great classics has increased rather than lessened with the flight of years. Those who knew him in years gone by will notice little change in the great conductor when they see him again at the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Time has touched him lightly. His hair is thinner and his beard is flecked with white, but these are the only signs of his sixty years.

Mr. Gericke was never in appearance the typical musician of tradition. He never wore his hair long, so far as anybody ever knew. Carelessness of dress was never a hobby with him. Slovenliness of every kind and description, whether mental or physical, has always been one of his chief abhorrences.

It has been said of Mr. Gericke that if he had not been a great musician and a great conductor, he would have been a great soldier. His appearance is distinctly military. A well-built man of middle height, straight and broad shouldered, giving the impression of being taller than he really is, he stands squarely on both feet in the uncompromising attitude of a soldier. Closely cropped hair, a crisp, grizzled beard parted in the middle with scrupulous exactness, a military moustache and a firm, well-modeled nose complete the illusion. But the musician is seen in the broad, white brow, and the wide eyes which although they can snap with fire when occasion demands, are customarily soft and mild.

Gericke is a man of [illegible] ways be truthfully said that he is faultlessly dressed. Not only do his clothes always betray a fine conservative taste, but they are always obviously the work of a good tailor.

As a conductor Mr. Gericke has few traits which answer the popular idea of what the leader of the orchestra should be. He walks to the rostrum with short, quick, decisive steps. He wastes no energy and strength in superfluous gestures. His beat is vigorous and exact and never exaggerated. He rarely summons his left hand to aid his right, and he lifts his orchestra up to a mighty fortissimo without hardly any apparent effort. The "grand stand" does not exist for him. It is his belief that the chief work of the conductor is done in rehearsals and that the orchestra in concert should be so thoroughly rehearsed that the conductor is little more than a prompter.

He is a rigid disciplinarian which is one of the secrets of the astonishing work of the orchestra. Indefatigable in rehearsals, he keeps his men at work day after day until perfection is attained. One would think that with an orchestra like the Boston Symphony which had been playing together for so many years under one man would become so familiar with certain works in the repertory that rehearsals of these would hardly be necessary. Yet it is on record that within the last year he spent the greater part of a whole rehearsal on certain passages of the "Eroica," which the orchestra has played under him at least a hundred times. With Gericke nothing which is "just as good" will answer his purpose. There is a certain way in which a certain phrase must be played and until it is played in that way he is not satisfied. He will leave nothing to chance, to the "inspiration of the moment." As Liszt once said that the secret of piano playing was "Technique! Technique!! Technique!!! so one of Gericke's fundamental beliefs is that the secret of orchestra playing is "Drill! Drill!! Drill!!!"

Mr. Gericke is a man of decided personal charm. His culture is broad and profound and his experience with the great men of his time has not only given him a great fund of reminiscence but a deep insight into modern musical tendencies. While he regards with interest the new school of music of which Richard Strauss is the chief exponent he has not been convinced that the great men of the past have outlived their usefulness. His musical creed is found in an interview published shortly after his return to this country in 1898.

"To my mind music should be clear comprehensive, as varied and as difficult, as formal or as original as you wish, but always clear and full of the meaning the composer intends to convey. In other words, music should be so written that the listener will be sure of what the composer is saying.

"To me the great inspired musician was Bach. Think of his work, its abundance and grandeur. Merely to have written what he did would have required extraordinary ease and facility. Then there was Beethoven who sets the standard in symphonies, Mozart and Schumann. Nowadays the work is disappointing. All the writers of music are laboring industriously but as a rule what they do is not always satisfactory. It may be that they write too fast, or with too little care.

Yet all these younger men are well represented on the Symphony programmes and the list of new work performed each year embraces about all that are worth trouble of preparation. While Mr. Gericke is an ardent worshipper at the shrine of classicism he is a profound believer in the policy of giving new men a chance to be heard.

NEWS
[illegible]

FOR CONVENIENCE OF OUT-OF-TOWN MUSIC LOVERS

Tickets Can Be Ordered by Mail and Forwarded or Held at Box Office.

After an absence of twelve years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is again to visit Buffalo, giving two concerts at Convention Hall this season, the first to take place on Wednesday evening, October 4.

The sale of seats is now on at the music store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels, but for the convenience of out-of-town buyers, orders by mail will be taken care of by sending checks or postoffice orders to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, 26 Irving Place. These will be filled as fast as they are received and the tickets will either be mailed or left at the box office at Convention Hall, to be called for on the evening of the performance, this to be at the option of the purchaser. Such orders, however, must be accompanied by the money. The price of reserved seats for the first concert is $1.50 and $2, according to location.

The advance sale of seats has been most encouraging to those instrumental in bringing the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Buffalo, but Convention Hall is an immense place and there are many desirable seats left.

EXPRESS
BUFFALO, N. Y
OCT 5 1903

BOSTON SYMPHONY WAS A SYMPHONY

Concert at Convention Hall auspiciously opens Buffalo musical Season.

ORCHESTRA EXCELLED

Superlative Programme in every Number and Criticism is difficult. Fine Leadership.

The concert given in Convention Hall last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, was an auspicious opening of the Buffalo musical season, which promises so many fine attractions. It is several years since Buffalonians have had the good fortune to hear in their own city so celebrated an orchestra and they proved their appreciation, both in numbers and in enthusiasm. The superb programme presented was followed with rapt attention and was heartily applauded. It included the Mendelssohn overture, A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; a Bach prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in rondo form, arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich; concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, by Max Bruch; Italian Caprice, Tschaikowsky; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

In a programme of this character, where every number is of superlative excellence, it is difficult to discriminate or differentiate as to the value of any particular composition. The French have a proverb which says: "Art is difficult, criticism is easy." With the memory of this orchestra's perfect work vividly before one, one feels that the proverb should be turned about thus: "Art is easy, criticism is difficult," for it is not possible to hear a more perfect instrumental ensemble.

The Mendelssohn number was given a beautiful reading by Mr. Gericke and the blending of the instruments through the majestic measures of the first tone picture was admirable. The second tone picture, superb in its lights and shades, and in which every significant passage was finely wrought out, was brought to a magnificent climax.

Sigismund Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach music is beautiful. Its lightness and delicacy are wonderfully adapted to the stringed instruments, and it was played with a daintiness and rhythmic charm truly delightful.

The Bruch G minor for violin introduced a violinist new to the Buffalo public, Professor Willy Hess, who is concertmeister of the organization. The intricacies and difficulties which this composition presents to the soloist are many, but Professor Hess handled them in a masterly way. His technique is remarkable, and he makes his instrument sing so that its beautiful, mellow tone stands out in fine and solid relief against the orchestra. There may be differences of opinion as regards the temperamental side of playing, but certainly there can be none as regards his scholarly reading and interpretation of this concerto. He was admirably accompanied by the orchestra.

Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice is a typical bit of writing, but does not show him at his best. It will always be an interesting programme number, but will appeal only to the few. It is rich in tone color, fitful in mood and scored in his well-known style. It was finely interpreted by the orchestra.

The playing of the Schumann C major symphony, No. 2, showed Mr. Gericke at his best. It is doubtful if any orchestral leader could bring out with more subtlety or musical intelligence the intricate beauty of this great score. Mr. Gericke's grasp of the subject in hand was marvelous as was also his control of the musicians under his leadership. It is true that the personnel of his orchestra is of the first order, but great as each musician is in his line, it is due to their leader that their work is so remarkable. Mr. Gericke ranks as one of the world's few great orchestra conductors and he richly merits this title.

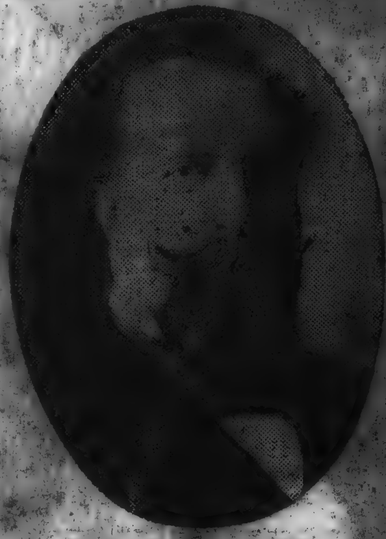
An interesting feature of the printed programmes were the explanatory notes of each number. They touched briefly the biographical data of each composer and, in the case of Mendelssohn, described the inspiration of his overture. They gave also detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this, the notes were so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

It seems only fitting in closing this review of last evening's performance to refer to the guarantors whose generosity and public spirit have made it possible for Buffalonians to hear this splendid orchestra, second to none in the world, as is generally admitted. Through their generous efforts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here again in February.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS TRIBUNE
DETROIT, MICH
OCT 1 1903

The formal opening of the local musical season will occur Thursday evening of this week in the Light Guard armory, when the Boston Symphony orchestra will play in Detroit for the first time in upwards of a dozen years. The appearance of the orchestra will also inaugurate the series of orchestra concerts arranged by the Detroit Orchestral association, which organization is composed of representative men and women of the city who have banded together for the purpose of placing within the reach of the masses of Detroit the best orchestras of the country at a nominal price of admission. The association members hope that the present season's efforts will result in a deep-rooted desire on the part of the local public to make such endeavors a permanent part of the city's life; to build a suitable concert hall and to make possible the maintenance of an orchestra similar to those of Pittsburg, Chicago, Boston and the other cities whose orchestras will visit Detroit this winter in the series arranged.

1884



WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, to play in Detroit Thursday, Oct. 5, in Light Guard armory.

That the social and musical population of the city are interested in the movement is already assured in the large advance sale of subscription single and book season tickets, and there seems little doubt from the response on the part of the general public Saturday, when the general seats were placed on sale that the guarantors of the series will be called upon at any time to meet a deficiency.

If Detroit is ever to be recognized as a musical center by the rest of the world, now is the accepted time for her citizens to build their strongest claims in supporting the orchestral association during the present season, and in whatever it may undertake in the cause of music in the future.

The program arranged by Conductor Gericke for the Boston Symphony's concert could not be excelled in point of attractiveness, while keeping to the highest standards. The first number will be Weber's overture to "Oberon," followed by Tschaikowsky's beautiful Pathetique symphony, the minute of the Will o' Wisps and Valse of the Sylphs, from "The Damnation of Faust," and the magnificent prelude and Love Death from "Tristan und Isolde." Between the first and second orchestral numbers Willy Hess, violin soloist of the orchestra, will play Spohr's concerto for violin in D minor.

There will undoubtedly be a very large and brilliant audience to greet the Boston organization, and as there will be no seating during the numbers and the concert is scheduled to commence promptly at 3 o'clock, it will be necessary for seat holders to be promptly in their places. The plan of seats of the armory is on view at Wright, Kay & Co.'s.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
om
BUFFALO, N. Y
dress
OCT 27 1903
te

Rush to get Seats for the Boston Symphony's Concert.

The sale of seats for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened yesterday with a rush at the store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels. This concert takes place next Wednesday evening at Convention Hall and the demand for seats was almost equal to that for the subscription sale.

Many orders from out-of-town came in and the indications are that the orchestra, which has not been heard in Buffalo for twelve years, will play to a capacity house.

er Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER

The splendid sale of seats for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has quite vindicated the judgment and courage of those who have arranged to bring that famous organization to Convention Hall twice this winter. The first concert takes place on Wednesday evening next, October 4th, at 8:15 o'clock.

Coming at this time, it is as if the climax of the musical season came at the very beginning. For of all the events which have been scheduled, this is by far the most interesting and most important. It has always been a matter of regret that the orchestra ceased coming as far west as Buffalo, and yet, while this city is not so poverty stricken today in orchestral music as it was a dozen years ago, the concerts it has had seem to have served only to make keener the desire for the Boston band.

Mr. Gericke has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions concerning programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited in time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Buffalo, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn as found in his charming overture, "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," most effectively arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this is followed by Tschaikowski's gorgeous Italian Caprice. The final number will be Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony. A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, whose appearance on Wednesday night will be his first in Buffalo. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression that Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston and the other leading cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that has ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice in one season as soloist, which is nearly, if not quite, unprecedented. His choice of the Bruch Concerto has been a most wise one, for of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Those who have not heard the orchestra in the East during the past seven seasons, when he has again been its conductor, will find him the same strong, virile interpreter that he was in those days. Solid, substantial and authoritative, he plays on his orchestra with the ease that a great pianist plays on his instrument. Moreover, passing years have not left him standing still. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly-colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "Bs"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert, with equal authority, he reveals the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski, and a Richard Strauss.

The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members thirteen years ago, but among the principals there have been some changes made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is today, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation.

* * *

Although it is over sixteen years since Wilhelm Gericke last appeared here as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his name is still one to conjure with for the influence spread by his authoritative readings of the great classics has increased rather than lessened with the flight of years. Those who knew him in years gone by will notice little change in the great conductor when they see him again at the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Time has touched him lightly. His hair is thinner and his beard is flecked with white, but these are the only signs of his sixty years.

Mr. Gericke was never in appearance the typical musician of tradition. He never wore his hair long, so far as anybody ever knew. Carelessness of dress was never a hobby with him. Slovenliness of every kind and description, whether mental or physical, has always been one of his chief abhorrences.

It has been said of Mr. Gericke that if he had not been a great musician and a great conductor, he would have been a great soldier. His appearance is distinctly military. A well-built man of middle height, straight and broad shouldered, giving the impression of being taller than he really is, he stands squarely on both feet in the uncompromising attitude of a soldier. Closely cropped hair, a crisp, grizzled beard parted in the middle with scrupulous exactness, a military moustache and a firm, well-modeled nose complete the illusion. But the musician is seen in the broad, white brow, and the wide eyes which although they can snap with fire when occasion demands, are customarily soft and mild.

...characterize him are exemplified not only in his carriage, but in his clothes. Unlike many great musicians, Mr. Gericke is a man of whom it may always be truthfully said that he is faultlessly dressed. Not only do his clothes always betray a fine conservative taste, but they are always obviously the work of a good tailor.

As a conductor Mr. Gericke has few traits which answer the popular idea of what the leader of the orchestra should be. He walks to the rostrum with short, quick, decisive steps. He wastes no energy and strength in superfluous gestures. His beat is vigorous and exact and never exaggerated. He rarely summons his left hand to aid his right, and he lifts his orchestra up to a mighty fortissimo without hardly any apparent effort. The "grand stand" does not exist for him. It is his belief that the chief work of the conductor is done in rehearsals and that the orchestra in concert should be so thoroughly rehearsed that the conductor is little more than a prompter.

He is a rigid disciplinarian which is one of the secrets of the astonishing work of the orchestra. Indefatigable in rehearsals, he keeps his men at work day after day until perfection is attained. One would think that with an orchestra like the Boston Symphony which had been playing together for so many years under one man would become so familiar with certain works in the repertory that rehearsals of these would hardly be necessary. Yet it is on record that within the last year he spent the greater part of a whole rehearsal on certain passages of the "Eroica," which the orchestra has played under him at least a hundred times. With Gericke nothing which is "just as good" will answer his purpose. There is a certain way in which a certain phrase must be played and until it is played in that way he is not satisfied. He will leave nothing to chance, to the "inspiration of the moment." As Liszt once said that the secret of piano playing was "Technique! Technique!! Technique!!! so one of Gericke's fundamental beliefs is that the secret of orchestra playing is "Drill! Drill!! Drill!!!"

Mr. Gericke is a man of decided personal charm. His culture is broad and profound and his experience with the great men of his time has not only given him a great fund of reminiscence but a deep insight into modern musical tendencies. While he regards with interest the new school of music of which Richard Strauss is the chief exponent he has not been convinced that the great men of the past have outlived their usefulness. His musical creed is found in an interview published shortly after his return to this country in 1898.

"To my mind music should be clear, comprehensive, as varied and as difficult, as formal or as original as you wish, but always clear and full of the meaning the composer intends to convey. In other words, music should be so written that the listener will be sure of what the composer is saying.

"To me the great inspired musician was Bach. Think of his work, its abundance and grandeur. Merely to have written what he did would have required extraordinary ease and facility. Then there was Beethoven who sets the standard in symphonies, Mozart and Schumann. Nowadays the work is disappointing. All the writers of music are laboring industriously but as a rule what they do is not always satisfactory. It may be that they write too fast, or with too little care."

Yet all these younger men are well represented on the Symphony programmes and the list of new works performed each year embraces about all that are worth trouble of preparation. While Mr. Gericke is an ardent worshipper at the shrine of classicism, he is a profound believer in the policy of giving new men a chance to be heard.

NEWS

FOR CONVENIENCE OF OUT-OF-TOWN MUSIC LOVERS

Tickets Can Be Ordered by Mail and Forwarded or Held at Box Office.

After an absence of twelve years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is again to visit Buffalo, giving two concerts at Convention Hall this season, the first to take place on Wednesday evening, October 4.

The sale of seats is now on at the music store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels, but for the convenience of out-of-town buyers, orders by mail will be taken care of by sending checks or postoffice orders to Mrs. Mai Davis Smith, 26 Irving Place. These will be filled as fast as they are received and the tickets will either be mailed or left at the box office at Convention Hall, to be called for on the evening of the performance, this to be at the option of the purchaser. Such orders, however, must be accompanied by the money. The price of reserved seats for the first concert is $1.50 and $2, according to location.

The advance sale of seats has been most encouraging to those instrumental in bringing the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Buffalo, but Convention Hall is an immense place and there are many desirable seats left.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
5 DEC

BOSTON SYMPHONY WAS A SYMPHONY

Concert at Convention Hall auspiciously opens Buffalo musical Season.

ORCHESTRA EXCELLED

Superlative Programme in every Number and Criticism is difficult. Fine Leadership.

The concert given in Convention Hall last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, was an auspicious opening of the Buffalo musical season, which promises so many fine attractions. It is several years since Buffalonians have had the good fortune to hear in their own city so celebrated an orchestra and they proved their appreciation, both in numbers and in enthusiasm. The superb programme presented was followed with rapt attention and was heartily applauded. It included the Mendelssohn overture, A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; a Bach prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in rondo form, arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich; concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, by Max Bruch; Italian Caprice, Tschaikowsky; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

In a programme of this character, where every number is of superlative excellence, it is difficult to discriminate or differentiate as to the value of any particular composition. The French have a proverb which says: "Art is difficult, criticism is easy." With the memory of this orchestra's perfect work vividly before one, one feels that the proverb should be turned about thus: "Art is easy, criticism is difficult," for it is not possible to hear a more perfect instrumental ensemble.

The Mendelssohn number was given a beautiful reading by Mr. Gericke and the blending of the instruments through the majestic measures of the first tone picture was admirable. The second tone picture, superb in its lights and shades, and in which every significant passage was finely wrought out, was brought to a magnificent climax.

Sigismund Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach music is beautiful. Its lightness and delicacy are wonderfully adapted to the stringed instruments, and it was played with a daintiness and rhythmic charm truly delightful.

The Bruch G minor for violin introduced a violinist new to the Buffalo public, Professor Willy Hess, who is concertmeister of the organization. The intricacies and difficulties which this composition presents to the soloist are many, but Professor Hess handled them in a masterly way. His technique is remarkable, and he makes his instrument sing so that its beautiful, mellow tone stands out in fine and solid relief against the orchestra. There may be differences of opinion as regards the temperamental side of playing, but certainly there can be none as regards his scholarly reading and interpretation of this concerto. He was admirably accompanied by the orchestra.

Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice is a typical bit of writing, but does not show him at his best. It will always be an interesting programme number, but will appeal only to the few. It is rich in tone color, fitful in mood and scored in his well-known style. It was finely interpreted by the orchestra.

The playing of the Schumann C major symphony, No. 2, showed Mr. Gericke at his best. It is doubtful if any orchestral leader could bring out with more subtlety or musical intelligence the intricate beauty of this great score. Mr. Gericke's grasp of the subject in hand was marvelous as was also his control of the musicians under his leadership. It is true that the personnel of his orchestra is of the first order, but great as each musician is in his line, it is due to their leader that their work is so remarkable. Mr. Gericke ranks as one of the world's few great orchestra conductors and he richly merits this title.

An interesting feature of the printed programmes were the explanatory notes of each number. They touched briefly the biographical data of each composer and, in the case of Mendelssohn, described the inspiration of his overture. They gave also detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this, the notes were so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

It seems only fitting in closing this review of last evening's performance to refer to the guarantors whose generosity and public spirit have made it possible for Buffalonians to hear this splendid orchestra, second to none in the world, as is generally admitted. Through their generous efforts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here again in February.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS TRIBUNE
ess

The formal opening of the local musical season will occur Thursday evening of this week in the Light Guard armory, when the Boston Symphony orchestra will play in Detroit for the first time in upwards of a dozen years. The appearance of the orchestra will also inaugurate the series of orchestra concerts arranged by the Detroit Orchestral association, which organization is composed of representative men and women of the city who have banded together for the purpose of placing within the reach of the masses of Detroit the best orchestras of the country at a nominal price of a ticket. The association members hope that the present season's efforts will result in a deep-rooted desire on the part of the local public to make such endeavors a permanent part of the city's life; to build a suitable concert hall and to make possible the maintenance of an orchestra similar to those of Pittsburg, Chicago, Boston and the other cities whose orchestras will visit Detroit this winter in the series arranged. 1884

WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, to play in Detroit Thursday, Oct. 5, in Light Guard armory.

That the social and musical population of the city are interested in the movement is already assured in the large advance sale of subscription single and book season tickets, and there seems little doubt from the response on the part of the general public Saturday, when the general seats were placed on sale, that the guarantors of the series will be called upon at any time to meet a deficiency.

If Detroit is ever to be recognized as a musical center by the rest of the world, now is the accepted time for her citizens to build their strongest claims in supporting the orchestral association during the present season, and in whatever it may undertake in the cause of music in the future.

The program arranged by Conductor Gericke for the Boston Symphony's concert could not be excelled in point of attractiveness, while keeping to the highest standards. The first number will be Weber's overture to "Oberon," followed by Tschaikowsky's beautiful Pathetique symphony, the minute of the Will o' Wisps and Valse of the Sylphs, from "The Damnation of Faust," and the magnificent prelude and Love Death from "Tristan und Isolde." Between the first and second orchestral numbers Willy Hess, violin soloist of the orchestra, will play Spohr's concerto for violin in D minor.

There will undoubtedly be a very large and brilliant audience to greet the Boston organization, and as there will be no seating during the numbers and the concert is scheduled to commence promptly at 8 o'clock, it will be necessary for seat holders to be promptly in their places. The plan of seats of the armory is on view at Wright, Kay & Co.'s.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
om
dress
te
05

Rush to get Seats for the Boston Symphony's Concert.

The sale of seats for the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened yesterday with a rush at the store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels. This concert takes place next Wednesday evening at Convention Hall and the demand for seats was almost equal to that for the subscription sale.

Many orders from out-of-town came in and the indications are that the orchestra, which has not been heard in Buffalo for twelve years, will play to a capacity house.

FREE PRESS
DETROIT, MICH.
OCT 1 1905

...the series of orchestral con-
...given this season by the ...orchestral society to note the ...ll interest and support that
...ve had from music-lovers.
...ets for the course opens
...Wright, Kay & Co.'s
...was a very general demand
...The series opens at the ...next Thursday night, when
...Symphony orchestra, un-
...sical Gericke, will give its
...ert in Detroit for thirteen
...should be an auspicious oc-
...thanks to the liberality of ...tizens, Mr. Higginson has
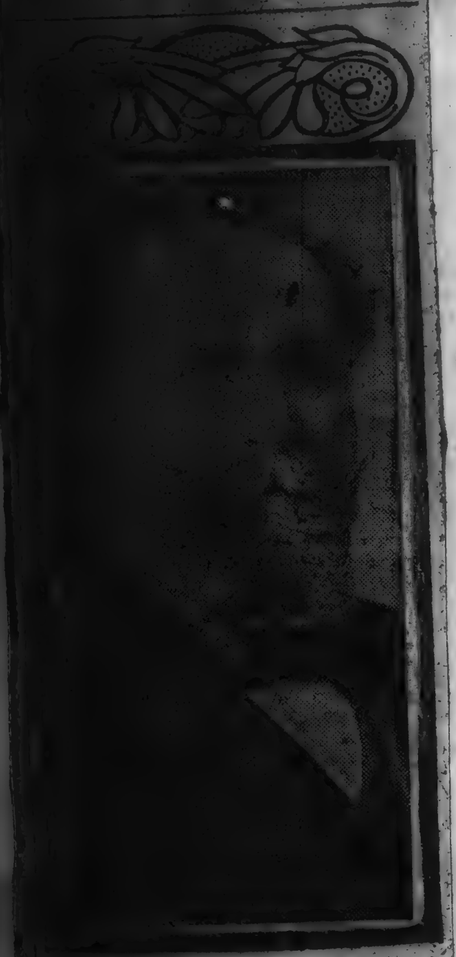
...to see his pet activity as-
...ure proportions.
...ying the solidarity that exists



Wilhelm Gericke.

...in the orchestra is the fact that this ...year only three new members are to ...be noted at the desks. The chief
...flist, who succeeds Schroeder, is
...Heinrich Warnke, from Munich, for ...eight years principal in the famous
...Kaim orchestra. Peter Sadony, bass-
...soon, comes from Cologne, where he ...was on the faculty of the conservatory.
...Max Hess, new first horn, is from ...Munich; at twenty-seven he is reputed
...to be one of the best horn-players
...in Germany. An orchestra in which ...the members remain year after year
...is bound to have an ensemble that
...is gratifying. Boston's
...lode is noted for this most desir-
...able characteristic.
...With the orchestra as soloist is Willy
...Hess, the concertmaster. Mr. Hess
...has been a prominent figure in the musical world ever since he was a very young man, and he is now at the zenith of his powers as an artist.
All the boxes have been taken for the season and the boxholders include
...w of Detroit's best known people.
...list is as follows: Mesdames E.
...Butler, T. D. Buhl, William Rob-
...Don M. Campbell, George Hendrie,
...B. Warren, Joseph Boyer, Lem W.
...n, F. G. Smith, Jr., Philip H. Mc-
...g, George H. Barbour, Franklin
...Walker, Frank B. Walker, Helen
...berry, H. B. Joy, F. K. Stearns,
...M. Dyar, R. Adlington Newman, D.
...Ferry, John T. Nichols, Allen W.
...Atterbury, DeWitt Loomis, F. M.
...Alger, E. Y. Swift, N. J. Corey, C. D.
...Waterman, E. Leydon Ford, A. E. F.
...Willis, S. L. Smith, George B. Fowler,
...C. Baldwin, S. Olin Johnson and

The First Established and Most Widely Circulated
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
ILLUSTRATED
From BUFFALO, N. Y.
Address
OCT 1 1905

A warm welcome awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first concert in Convention Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, will give an unusually brilliant opening to the local musical season.

It is 12½ years since Buffalo last had an opportunity of hearing this band. In those days, Buffalo became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, and, while it has today many more opportunities to hear orchestral music than it had a dozen years ago, it is only fair to say that nothing has ever filled the place left vacant by the Boston men.

The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—for this is its 25th season, but it has been run on a basis which is possible in no other case now known. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which always confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world, the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony, and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results which have been obtained.

Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube, and Barleben; among its violas such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke, Keller, Josef Adamowski, Eric Loenfer, Nagel, and Hadley, all of them artists who have made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and sonority of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind-choir, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago, with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists, and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Marquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary merit, and the same is true of Gresis, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first basson, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist.

When an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke there is very little left for a musician or an amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built on his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelsshon, Schumann and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns, such as Liszt, Berlioz, Tschaikowski and Richard Strauss.

The soloist, Willy Hess, is a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent. Last year he made his first appearance in the East with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in Buffalo.

It would be difficult to devise a more atractive programme than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Buffalo. Beginning with Mendelsshon's charming overture, A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage, it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form by Bach, Bruch's G minor concerto for violin, Tschaikowski's Italian Caprice, and the loveliest of all of Schumann's Symphonies, No. 2, in C major.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
BUFFALO, N. Y.
Address
OCT 1 1905

Nothing illustrates more keenly the enormous strides that have been made in the interpretation of music than the modern development of the conductor. The modern conductor is a growth of less than one hundred years. Through the whole of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the conductor was little more than a time-beater. Gradually, instead of standing before his orchestra, baton in hand, he sat at a harpsichord, indicating the bass and occasionally beating time with his right hand. But with the advent of Beethoven and his followers in modern music, the conductor gradually assumed a position of greater importance. He became not only a beater of time but an interpreter according to his own lights of the wishes and intent of the composer.

A conductor whose personality attained significant proportions was a Frenchman, Pasdeloup, who for a half century was an absolute master and tyrant in the musical world of Paris. Immediately after him and contemporary with him were the great German conductors, such men as Liszt, von Bulow, Wagner and later still Levi and Richter. Gradually and almost imperceptibly the position of the conductor increased in importance until during the last ten or fifteen years a great conductor is as much of a "star" as a prima donna, a great tenor, a great pianist or violinist. It has come to be that as the singer has his voice as an instrument, a pianist his piano and a violinist his violin, so the conductor has his orchestra as his instrument. He travels as a "star" from city to city conducting various orchestras. Critics discuss this man's Beethoven and that man's Wagner. His earnings compare now with those of other great virtuosos and today it is a safe statement to make that four or five great conductors are the most important personages in the world of music.

Among these is placed by common consent Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra whose approaching concert here has caused such great interest in musical circles. Mr. Gericke is now beginning his thirteenth year of service with the orchestra and his name has become in this country a tower of strength.

Mr. Gericke has always been a conductor. Born in Gratz, Austria, on April 18, 1845, at the age of 15 he entered the Vienna Conservatory of Music. His success there was so great that on his graduation he was appointed one of the three conductors of the Imperial Opera, Vienna. It was at a performance of "Aida" that Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, first heard his work. He was so impressed with it that two days later he had concluded an arrangement by which Mr. Gericke became the conductor of the orchestra.

During the first year of his stay in Boston, his success made his name famous throughout America. The next year he was given free hand to build up the orchestra and then it may be said that the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its present form began to exist. He brought over young and talented musicians from Europe and made the band the finest in the world.

At the end of five years of service Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna. His farewell concert in the old Boston Music Hall was a memorable occasion. The chief works on the programme were the Introduction and Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Quoting from one of the Boston papers:

"The scene of the entrance of Mr. Gericke, when orchestra, chorus and audience rose in his honor, was more than equaled by that which followed the finale of the symphony. The audience rose to its feet and applauded the conductor to the echo."

At the end of Mr. Paur's term of service in 1898, Mr. Gericke was induced to return aand under his leadership the orchestra is known as one of the few great ones of the world.

NEWS
Address
BUFFALO, N. Y.

The splendid sale of seats for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has quite vindicated the judgment and courage of those who have arranged to bring that famous organization to Convention Hall twice this winter. The first concert takes place on Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, at 8:15.

Coming at this time, it is as if the climax of the musical season came at the very beginning. For, of all the events which have been scheduled, this is by far the most interesting and most important.

Mr. Gericke has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions concerning programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited in time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Buffalo, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn, as found in his charming overture, "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," most effectively arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this is followed by Tschaikowska's gorgeous Italian Caprice. The final number will be Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
SEP 30 1905

BAKER THEATER

"Soldiers of Fortune" Will be Presented by the Moore-Stock Company All Next Week.

The Moore stock company will appear at the Baker Theater all next week in a complete and elaborate production of "Soldiers of Fortune," the play in which Robert Edeson made a pronounced hit but a few seasons ago, having a run of 150 nights at the Savoy Theater in New York. This play is in strong contrast to the two bills already presented by the company since its opening at the Baker and will be a welcome change to the regular patrons of the theater.

"Soldiers of Fortune" is a dramatization of Richard Harding Davis's novel of the same name. The stage version is by Augustus Thomas, who also furnished the play presented during the past week, "Alabama." Mr. Thomas has had considerable experience in the American war drama, and it has stood him well in hand in "Soldiers of Fortune." He has injected just enough military ginger and spirit to make the play an admirable and entertaining one. It keeps the audience in an air of expectancy all the time, keyed up in anticipation of each climax. There is a sort of a finger-on-the-trigger dash, go and life about the play that makes it very exciting. The dramatic scenes are intense, the action brilliant and the comedy and rapid-fire repartee strong and effective, making a well balanced play of pleasing surprises and contrasts. Literally the play is a stage production of a South American revolution. It follows the story of the book pretty closely, the hero being a young civil engineer, who is superintendent of some iron mines in a small South American republic. The millionaire owner of the mine, Mr. Langham, and his two daughters, Hope and Alice, of New York are visiting the country when a professional revolutionist and filibuster arouses the cupidity of the native neighbors, and naturally—a revolution.

The American engineer takes charge and so adroitly manages things in defending his property and the ladies of the party that he finds himself in the last act dictator of the republic with the girl of his heart won by his valor and in spite of the opposition of her father and sister. It can readily be seen that Bert Lytell as the civil engineer, a resourceful American and man of action, has a role suited to his virile personality and natural method of expression and one well calculated to increase his hold on the popular regard. As Hope Langham, in love with him, Miss Adair has more and better opportunities than she has yet had here, and they follow lines she has shown a particular liking for. Their love making scenes are brilliant with repartee throughout, while there is intense interest back of them, caused by the momentarily expected denouement, which is delayed until the very last moment. While the love scenes are brilliant with comedy the part also has a stronger side, as Hope Langham exposes herself to the fire of the enemy and risks her life to draw attention from her lover during an attack on the revolutionists. Taken all in all it will make a rousing and interesting dramatic offering in the hands of the stock company.

The scenes are all laid in the picturesque environment of Olancho, South America. Another big opportunity is given to make a magnificent scenic production, on a level with the standard already established by the Moore Stock Company. The original photographs and drawings made in South America for Robert Edeson's production have been used in mounting the play at the Baker, and it is expected to be another triumph for Stage Director Baker and Scenic Artist Martin Butler. It will have the true suggestion of tropical beauty. Matinees will be given as usual on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, but no performance will be given on Saturday night, as the Boston Symphony Orchestra is booked to play the Baker that night.

For the week beginning October 9th Bronson Howard's pretty society drama, "Young Mrs. Winthrop," will be presented.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
SEP 30 1905

SALE OF SEATS FOR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IS LARGE

The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is being conducted at Denton, Cottier & Daniels is large and it is predicted that this splendid organization will be greeted by an immense audience. It is a long time since the Boston Symphony Orchestra has appeared in Buffalo and that is one reason why it is doubly welcome. There should not be a vacant seat in [illegible] the night of the [illegible] ess ... DEC.

FREE PRESS

It must be gratifying to the promoters of the series of orchestral concerts to be given this season by the Detroit Orchestral society to note the very general interest and support that the project has had from music-lovers. The sale of seats for the course opened yesterday at Wright, Kay & Co.'s and there was a very general demand for tickets. The series opens at the armory next Thursday night, when the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the classical Gericke, will give its first concert in Detroit for thirteen years. It should be an auspicous occasion, for thanks to the liberality of Boston citizens, Mr. Higginson has been able to see his pet activity assume large proportions.

Typifying the solidarity that exists in the orchestra is the fact that this year only three new members are to be noted at the desks. The chief 'cellist, who succeeds Schroeder, is Heinrich Warnke, from Munich, for eight years principal in the famous Kaim orchestra. Peter Sadony, bassoon, comes from Cologne, where he was on the faculty of the conservatory, and Max Hess, new first horn, is from Munich; at twenty-seven he is reputed to be one of the best horn-players in Germany. An orchestra in which the members remain year after year is bound to have an ensemble that is gratifying elestic, and Boston's pride is noted for this most desirable characteristic.

Wilhelm Gericke.

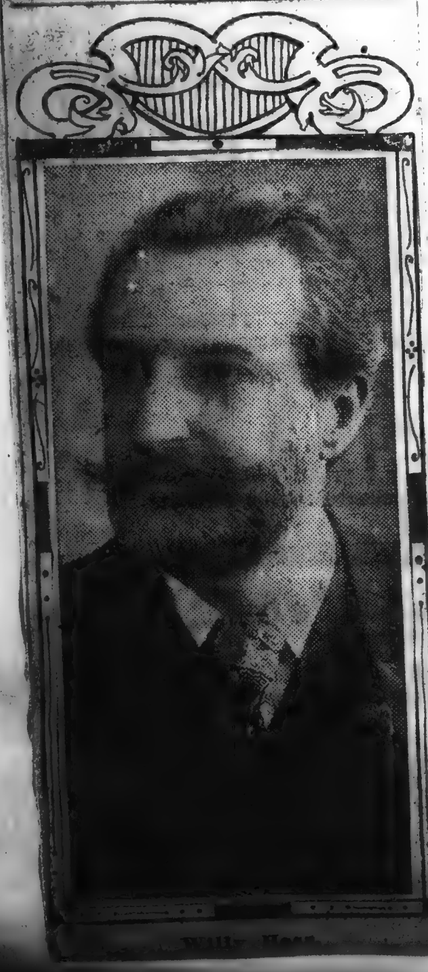
With the orchestra as soloist is Willy Hess, the concertmaster. Mr. Hess has been a prominent figure in the musical world ever since he was a very young man, and he is now at the zenith of his powers as an artist.

All the boxes have been taken for the season and the boxholders include some of Detroit's best known people. The list is as follows: Mesdames E. H. Butler, T. D. Buhl, William Robins, Don M. Campbell, George Hendrie, C. B. Warren, Joseph Boyer, Lem W. Bowen, F. G. Smith, Jr., Philip H. McMillan, George H. Barbour, Franklin H. Walker, Frank B. Walker, Helen Newberry, H. B. Joy, F. K. Stearns, R. M. Dyar, R. Adlington Newman, D. M. Ferry, John T. Nichols, Allen W. Atterbury, DeWitt Loomis, F. M. Alger, E. Y. Swift, N. J. Corey, C. D. Waterman, E. Leydon Ford, A. E. F. White, S. L. Smith, George B. Fowler, F. C. Baldwin, S. Olin Johnson and



Willy Hess.

Mrs. A. Livingstone and Mrs. Louis J lase.

Thursday evening's program by the Boston Symphony will be the following:

Overture to "Oberon" (Weber); concerto for violin, D minor No. 9 (Spohr), Mr. Willy Hess; symphony, No. 6 ("Pathetique"), B minor, Op. 74 (Tschaikowsky); "Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Waltz of the Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust," Op. 24 (Berlioz); prelude and "Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde" (Wagner).

The sale of single seats for Thursday evening's concert will open at Wright, Kay & Co.'s tomorrow morning.

The First Established and Most Com
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ILLUSTRATED EXPRESS
From BUFFALO, N. Y.
ddress
OCT 1 1904
te

A warm welcome awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose first concert in Convention Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, will give an unusually brilliant opening to the local musical season.

It is 12½ years since Buffalo last had an opportunity of hearing this band. In those days, Buffalo became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, and, while it has today many more opportunities to hear orchestral music than it had a dozen years ago, it is only fair to say that nothing has ever filled the place left vacant by the Boston men.

The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—for this is its 25th season, but it has been run on a basis which is possible in no other case now known. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which always confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world, the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony, and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results which have been obtained.

Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Bak, Ondrieck, Roth, Strube, and Barleben; among its violas such men as Ferir and Max Zach; and among its 'cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke, Keller, Josef Adamoswki, Eric Loeffler, Nagel, and Hadley, all of them artists who have made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and sonority of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind-choir, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago, with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists, and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Marquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary merit, and the same is true of Gresiz, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first basson, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist.

When an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke there is very little left for a musician or anamateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built on his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelsshon, Schumann and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns, such as Liszt, Berlioz, Tschaikowski and Richard Strauss.

The soloist, Willy Hess, is a violinist who stands in the very first rank of his branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent. Last year he made his first appearance in the East with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in Buffalo.

It would be difficult to devise a more atractive programme than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Buffalo. Beginning with Mendelsshon's charming overture, A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage, it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form by Bach, Bruch's G minor concerto for violin. Tschaikowski's Italian Caprice, and the lovellest of all of Schumann's Symphonies, No. 2, in C major.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
ess

Nothing illustrates more keenly the enormous strides that have been made in the interpretation of music than the modern development of the conductor. The modern conductor is a growth of less than one hundred years. Through the whole of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the conductor was little more than a time-beater. Gradually, instead of standing before his orchestra, baton in hand, he sat at a harpsichord, indicating the bass and occasionally beating time with his right hand. But with the advent of Beethoven and his followers in modern music, the conductor gradually assumed a position of greater importance. He became not only a beater of time but an interpreter according to his own lights of the wishes and intent of the composer.

A conductor whose personality attained significant proportions was a Frenchman, Pasdeloup, who for a half century was an absolute master and tyrant in the musical world of Paris. Immediately after him and contemporary with him were the great German conductors, such men as Liszt, von Bulow, Wagner and later still Levi and Richter. Gradually and almost imperceptibly the position of the conductor increased in importance until during the last ten or fifteen years a great conductor is as much of a "star" as a prima donna, a great tenor, a great pianist or violinist. It has come to be that as the singer has his voice as an instrument, a pianist his piano and a violinist his violin, so the conductor has his orchestra as his instrument. He travels as a "star" from city to city conducting various orchestras. Critics discuss this man's Beethoven and that man's Wagner. His earnings compare now with those of other great virtuosos and today it is a safe statement to make that four or five great conductors are the most important personages in the world of music.

Among these is placed by common consent Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra whose approaching concert here has caused such great interest in musical circles. Mr. Gericke is now beginning his thirteenth year of service with the orchestra and his name has become in this country a tower of strength.

Mr. Gericke has always been a conductor. Born in Gratz, Austria, on April 18, 1845, at the age of 15 he entered the Vienna Conservatory of Music. His success there was so great that on his graduation he was appointed one of the three conductors of the Imperial Opera, Vienna. It was at a performance of "Aida" that Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, first heard his work. He was so impressed with it that two days later he had concluded an arrangement by which Mr. Gericke became the conductor of the orchestra.

During the first year of his stay in Boston, his success made his name famous throughout America. The next year he was given free hand to build up the orchestra and then it may be said that the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its present form began to exist. He brought over young and talented musicians from Europe and made the band the finest in the world.

At the end of five years of service Mr. Gericke decided to return to Vienna. His farewell concert in the old Boston Music Hall was a memorable occasion. The chief works on the programme were the Introduction and Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Quoting from one of the Boston papers:

"The scene of the entrance of Mr. Gericke, when orchestra, chorus and audience rose in his honor, was more than equaled by that which followed the finale of the symphony. The audience rose to its feet and applauded the conductor to the echo."

At the end of Mr. Paur's term of service in 1898, Mr. Gericke was induced to return aand under his leadership the orchestra is known as one of the few great ones of the world.

NEWS
iress

The splendid sale of seats for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has quite vindicated the judgment and courage of those who have arranged to bring that famous organization to Convention Hall twice this winter. The first concert takes place on Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, at 8:15.

Coming at this time, it is as if the climax of the musical season came at the very beginning. For, of all the events which have been scheduled, this is by far the most interesting and most important.

Mr. Gericke has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions concerning programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited in time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently he has stretched a point for Buffalo, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined. It passes from the gently romantic spirit of Mendelssohn, as found in his charming overture, "A Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," most effectively arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this is followed by Tschaikowska's gorgeous Italian Caprice. The final number will be Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER N. Y.
ess
SEP 3 1904

BAKER THEATER

"Soldiers of Fortune" Will be Presented by the Moore Stock Company All Next Week.

The Moore stock company will appear at the Baker Theater all next week in a complete and elaborate production of "Soldiers of Fortune," the play in which Robert Edeson made a pronounced hit but a few seasons ago, having a run of 150 nights at the Savoy Theater in New York. This play is in strong contrast to the two bills already presented by this company since its opening at the Baker and will be a welcome change to the regular patrons of the theater.

"Soldiers of Fortune" is a dramatization of Richard Harding Davis's novel of the same name. The stage version is by Augustus Thomas, who also furnished the play presented during the past week, "Alabama." Mr. Thomas has had considerable experience in the American war drama, and it has stood him well in hand in "Soldiers of Fortune." He has injected just enough military ginger and spirit to make the play an admirable and entertaining one. It keeps the audience in an air of expectancy all the time, keyed up in anticipation of each climax. There is a sort of a finger-on-the-trigger dash, go and life about the play that makes it very exciting. The dramatic scenes are intense, the action brilliant and the comedy and rapid-fire repartee strong and effective, making a well balanced play of pleasing surprises and contrasts. Literally the play is a stage production of a South American revolution. It follows the story of the book pretty closely, the hero being a young civil engineer, who is superintendent of some iron mines in a small South American republic. The millionaire owner of the mine, Mr. Langham, and his two daughters, Hope and Alice, of New York are visiting the country when a professional revolutionist and filibuster arouses the cupidity of the native neighbors, and naturally—a revolution.

The American engineer takes charge and so adroitly manages things in defending his property and the ladies of the party that he finds himself in the last act dictator of the republic with the girl of his heart won by his valor and in spite of the opposition of her father and sister. It can readily be seen that Bert Lytell as the civil engineer, a resourceful American and man of action, has a role suited to his virile personality and natural method of expression and one well calculated to increase his hold on the popular regard. As Hope Langham, in love with him, Miss Adair has more and better opportunities than she has yet had here, and they follow lines she has shown a particular liking for. Their love making scenes are brilliant with repartee throughout, while there is intense interest back of them, caused by the momentarily expected denouement, which is delayed until the very last moment. While the love scenes are brilliant with comedy the part also has a stronger side, as Hope Langham exposes herself to the fire of the enemy and risks her life to draw attention from her lover during an attack on the revolutionists. Taken all in all it will make a rousing and interesting dramatic offering in the hands of the stock company.

The scenes are all laid in the picturesque environment of Olancho, South America. Another big opportunity is given to make a magnificent scenic production, on a level with the standard already established by the Moore Stock Company. The original photographs and drawings made in South America for Robert Edeson's production have been used in mounting the play at the Baker, and it is expected to be another triumph for Stage Director Baker and Scenic Artist Martin Butler. It will have the true suggestion of tropical beauty. Matinees will be given as usual on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, but no performance will be given on Saturday night, as the Boston Symphony Orchestra is booked to play the Baker that night.

For the week beginning October 9th Bronson Howard's pretty society drama, "Young Mrs. Winthrop," will be presented.

spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES

SALE OF SEATS FOR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IS LARGE

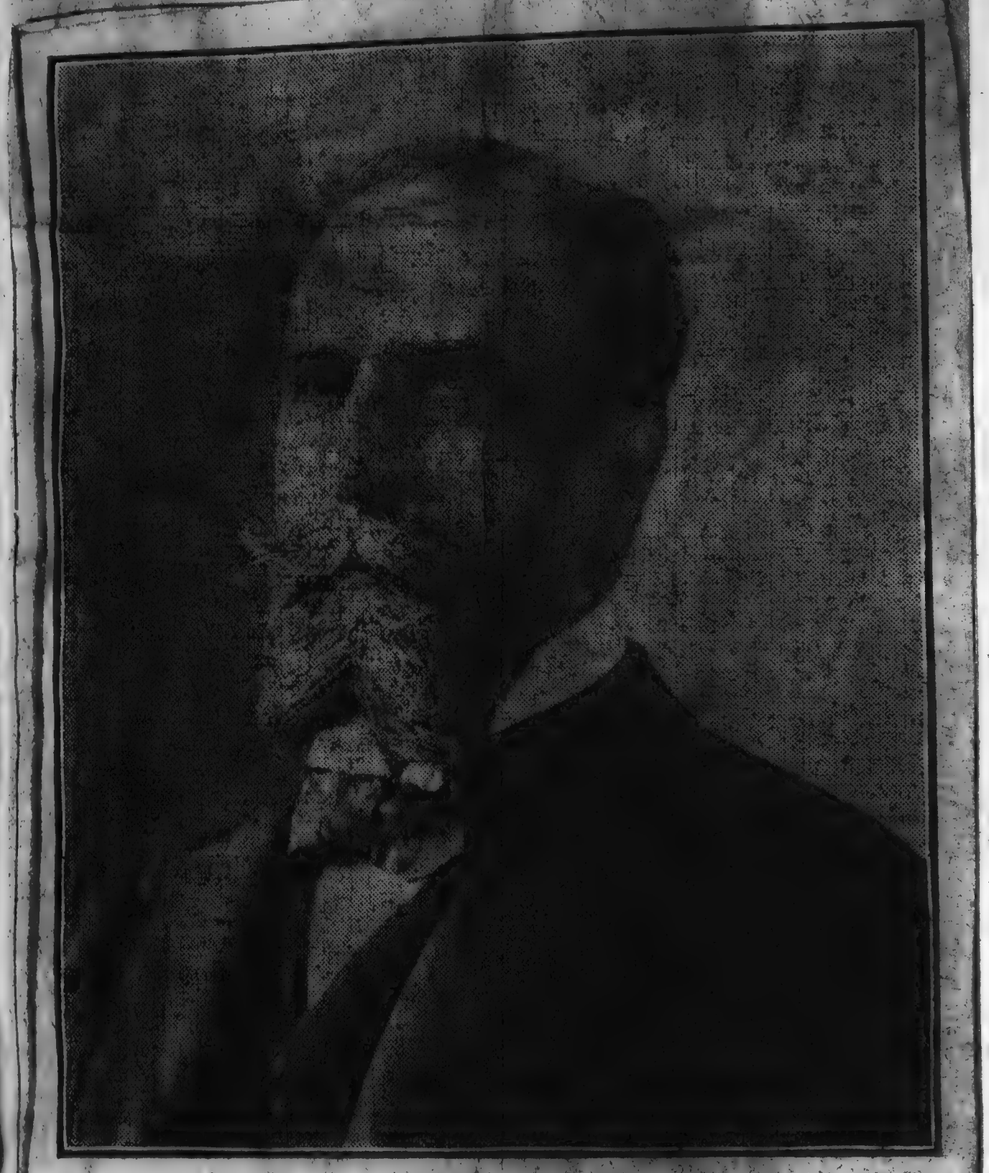
The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is being conducted at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' is large and it is predicted that this splendid organization will be greeted by an immense audience. It is a long time since the Boston Symphony Orchestra has appeared in Buffalo and that is one reason why it is doubly welcome. There should not be a vacant seat in Convention Hall the night of the first concert.

HERALD
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 5 1905

Famous Orchestra To Be Heard Next Saturday at the Baker Theater.

A warm welcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert at the Baker Theater next Saturday evening will give an unusually brilliant opening to the local musical season. It is nearly thirteen years since the orchestra last played here, but in those days Rochester became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, the present conductor; and, while to-day it has many more opportunities to her orchestral music, nothing has quite filled the place of the Boston men.

On the present tour of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming west for the first time since 1893, but six cities are to be visited, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, for only a week can possibly be spared for this purpose. Wilhelm Gericke, who is now in his twelfth year as conductor of the orchestra, accompanies it; and the soloist will be Professor Willy Hess, the concert master, who is regarded as one of the greatest violinists of the day. The Rochester concert will be given Saturday night at the Baker Theater.



WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, AT THE BAKER THEATER NEXT SATURDAY NIGHT.

The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—this is its twenty-fifth season—but it has been run on a basis which has been possible in no other case known in the world. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony; and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results that have been obtained.

Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothe Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barbelin; among its viols such men as Ferir and Max Zach, and among its cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke, Keller, Joseph Adamowski, Eric Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and resonance of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind choirs, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists; and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Maquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary virtuosity; and the same is true of Grisez, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first bassoon, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist.

And when an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke, there is very little left for the musician or amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built upon his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns, Liszt, Berlioz and Richard Strauss.

The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, violinist of the very first rank of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the late Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent; and last year he made his first appearance in the East, with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in this part of the country.

It would be difficult to devise a more attractive programme than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Rochester. Beginning with Weber's brilliant "Oberon" overture, it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a Bach "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," Bruch's G Minor Concerto for violin, Tschaikokski's tremendous pathetic symphony and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

SCENE IN THIRD ACT

Seats for the concert go on sale at the Baker Theater to-morrow morning.

The programme:

Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon."
Bach—Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Max Bruch—Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, Op. 26.
I. Allegro moderato (G minor).
II. Adagio (E flat major).
III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major).
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic" in B minor, Op. 74.
I. Adagio; allegro non troppo.
II. Allegro con grazia.
III. Allegro molto vivace.
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso.
Wagner—Overture to "Tannhaeuser."

ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
SEP 30 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY

For the First Time in Many Years Noted Organization is to be Heard Here—Will Appear at Baker.

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive programme than Mr. Wilhelm Gericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given in the Baker Theater on next Saturday evening, October 7th.

The first number on the programme is Weber's overture to the opera "Oberon." Weber's operas have almost disappeared from the stage, but his three great overtures, "Oberon," "Euryanthe," and "Der Freischuetz," remain, models of their kind, and are constantly played by the great orchestras of the world. Of these three, by common consent, the "Oberon" is the greatest, and it displays the virtuosity of the orchestra to its utmost.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has always been to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great artists of the world. It is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone, and the perfection of execution, have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's 'Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal it is made of.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's Concerto in G. minor. What Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G. minor Concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful and skillfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

The symphony, Tschaikowski's No. 6 in B minor, is one which the world regards with bated breath, for not only must it be regarded as the farewell message of one of the greatest composers of the nineteenth century, but as an expression of melancholy it has never been approached.

It is necessary to say little about the final work on the programme, the overture to "Tannhaeuser." Aside from being a tremendous introduction to a tremendous drama, it is one of the most effective concert pieces that was ever written. Seats for the concert will be on sale Monday at the Baker Theater.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From EVENING EXPRESS
Address
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 3 1905

A clergyman who had accepted an invitation to officiate at Sunday services in a neighboring town entrusted his new curate with the performance of his own duties. On returning home he asked his wife what she thought of the curate's sermon.

"It was the poorest one I ever heard," she replied, promptly—"nothing in it at all."

Later in the day the clergyman, meeting his curate, asked him how he had got on.

"Oh, very well," was the reply. "I didn't have time to prepare anything, so I preached one of your unused sermons."—"Harper's Weekly."

[44]

Newspaper Clipping
DEMOCRAT CHRONICLE
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 1 - 1905

The sale of seats for the concert which the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in the Baker Theater on next Saturday evening, October 7th, will open at the box office of the theater to-morrow morning. This concert coming in October is as if the climax of the musical season 84 came at the very beginning. Of all the events which have been scheduled for this season, this is the most interesting and the most important in many respects. It has been a matter of regret ever since 1893, when the last concert by the Boston band was given here that it made no more journeys so far west as Rochester. Rochester is not to-day so poverty stricken in orchestral music as it was a dozen years ago, yet the concerts it has had seem to have served only to make keener the desire to hear once more the Boston symphony.

Mr. Gericke the conductor has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions about programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited to time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently, he has stretched a point for Rochester, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined.

It passes from Weber's greatest overture, the "Oberon," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form" most admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this will be followed by what is inappropriately called the swan song of Peter Tschaikowski, his pathetic symphony. To be sure, it was practically his last composition, and he conducted it shortly before the cholera claimed his as a victim, but such a mighty expression of profound woe is something more than a swan song. Rochester is especially fortunate in having this work put on the programme.

The final number will be the most popular of all overtures, that to Wagner's music drama "Tannahauser."

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Professor Willy Hess, whose appearance on Saturday evening will be his first in Rochester. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the orchestra in Boston and the other great cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that has ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice as soloist in one season, a most extraordinary event. His choice of the Bruch concerto has been a most wise one, for of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern, highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms—; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert; with equal authority he reveals the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski, and a Richard Strauss.

The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members a dozen years ago, but among the principals there have been some few changes, made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is to-day, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation. In the violins, besides Professor Willy Hess, the concert master, are such men as Timothee Adamowski, Bach, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben. The violas have such men as Ferir and Max Zach. In the 'cellos are men who carry such names as Heinrich Warnke, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Eric Loeffler, Nagle and Hadley. And in the strings are famous the world over, the wind-choirs are equally so. The first oboe is Georges Longy, the greatest artist on this instrument France ever produced. And it would be difficult to find the equals of such men as Maquarre, the first flute, Grisez, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first basso, Hackebarth and Max Heas, the first horns, and Schuecker the harpist. Certainly Mr. W. J. Henderson, of the New York Sun was not far wrong when he called this "an orchestra of virtuosi." The concert will begin at 8:15 o'clock precisely.

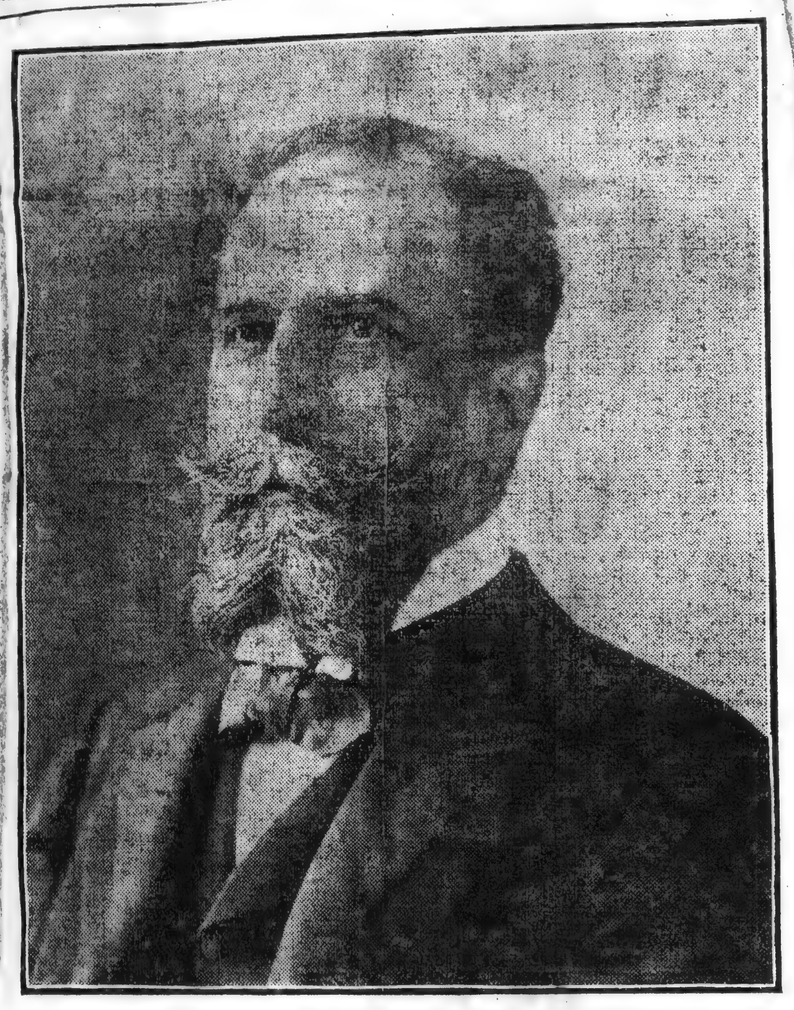
HERALD
N. Y.
05

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Famous Orchestra To Be Heard Next Saturday at the Baker Theater.

A warm welcome undoubtedly awaits the coming of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose concert at the Baker Theater next Saturday evening will give an unusually brilliant opening to the local musical season. It is nearly thirteen years since the orchestra last played here, but in those days Rochester became well acquainted with Mr. Gericke, the present conductor; and, while to-day it has many more opportunities to her orchestral music, nothing has quite filled the place of the Boston men.

On the present tour of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming west for the first time since 1893, but six cities are to be visited, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, for only a week can possibly be spared for this purpose. Wilhelm Gericke, who is now in his twelfth year as conductor of the orchestra, accompanies it; and the soloist will be Professor Willy Hess, the concert master, who is regarded as one of the greatest violinists of the day. The Rochester concert will be given Saturday night at the Baker Theater.



WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, AT THE BAKER THEATER NEXT SATURDAY NIGHT.

The reason for this is not hard to find. Not only is the Boston Symphony Orchestra the oldest organization of its kind in this country—this is its twenty-fifth season—but it has been run on a basis which has been possible in no other case known in the world. Even in the days when its work was almost purely of missionary character, not only in the West, but in the East, and when great deficits were a yearly occurrence, the question of money never entered into the problem which confronted its management—to get the finest personnel to be had in the world. There is no orchestra in the world the yearly expenditures of which are comparable with those of the Boston Symphony; and that this has been a wise policy to pursue finds proof in the results that have been obtained.

Truly an orchestra which counts among its violins such men as Willy Hess, Timothe Adamowski, Bak, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barbelin; among its viols such men as Ferir and Max Zach, and among its cellists such men as Heinrich Warnke, Keller, Joseph Adamowski, Eric Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley, all of them artists who had made reputations as virtuosi before they ever undertook orchestral work, can justly glory in the beauty, brilliancy and resonance of its strings. And if the quality of the strings has no equal in the world, the same is true of the wind choirs, for the same policy which dictated the engagement of such men in the strings has brought into the orchestra equally great artists in the other departments. Georges Longy, the first oboe, came to this country several years ago with the reputation of being the finest oboist in France, where the greatest school for wood wind instruments exists; and this reputation has been more than confirmed by the work he has done in America. In Maquarre, the first flute, is another artist of extraordinary virtuosity; and the same is true of Grisez, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first bassoon, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker, the harpist.

And when an orchestra composed of men who stand on such a high artistic plane is under the direction of a Gericke, there is very little left for the musician or amateur to desire. While Gericke's reputation was built upon his interpretation of the great classics, the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann and Schubert, he has won equal renown as an interpreter of the romantic moderns, Liszt, Berlioz and Richard Strauss.

The soloist who will appear at the concert is Professor Willy Hess, violinist, who stands in the very first rank of this branch of the art. Professor Hess, whose title was bestowed upon him by the German Emperor, has long been one of the favorite soloists in England and on the continent and last year he made his first appearance in the East, with really sensational success. His present appearance will be his first in this part of the country.

It would be difficult to devise a more attractive programme than that which Mr. Gericke has chosen for Rochester. Beginning with Weber's brilliar "Oberon" overture, it includes Bachrich's most effective arrangement for strings of a Bach "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," Bruch's G Minor Concerto for violin. Tschaikokski's tremendous pathetic symphony and the "Tannhaeuser" overture.

SCENE IN THIRD ACT O

Seats for the concert go on sale a the Baker Theater to-morrow morning.

The programme:

Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon."
Bach—Prelude, adagio and gavotte i rondo form. (Arranged for strings b Sigismund Bachrich.)
Max Bruch—Concerto for violin, No. 1, i G minor, Op. 26.
I. Allegro moderato (G minor).
II. Adagio (E flat major).
III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major)
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pa thetic" in B minor, Op. 74.
I. Adagio; allegro non troppo.
II. Allegro con grazia.
III. Allegro molto vivace.
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso.
Wagner—Overture to "Tannhauser."
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
SEP 3 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY

For the First T me in Many Years Noted Organization is to be Heard Here— Will Appear at Baker.

It would be difficult indeed to devise a more attractive programme than Mr. Wilhelm Gericke has arranged for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given in the Baker Theater on next Saturday evening, October 7th.

The first number on the programme is Weber's overture to the opera "Oberon." Weber's operas have almost disappeared from the stage, but his three great overtures, "Oberon," "Euryanthe," and "Der Freischuetz," remain, models of their kind, and are constantly played by the great orchestras of the world. Of these three, by common consent, the "Oberon" is the greatest, and it displays the virtuosity of the orchestra to its utmost.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has always been to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great artists of the world. It is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone, and the perfection of execution, have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's 'Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal it is made of.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's Concerto in G. minor. What Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G. minor Concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful and skillfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

The symphony, Tschaikowski's No. 6 in B minor, is one which the world regards with bated breath, for not only must it be regarded as the farewell message of one of the greatest composers of the nineteenth century, but as an expression of melancholy it has never been approached.

It is necessary to say little about the final work on the programme, the overture to "Tannhaeuser." Aside from being a tremendous introduction to a tremendous drama, it is one of the most effective concert pieces that was ever written. Seats for the concert will be on sale Monday at the Baker Theater.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From EVE EXPRESS
Address
Date

A clergyman who had accepted an invitation to officiate at Sunday services in a neighboring town entrusted his new curate with the performance of his own duties. On returning home he asked his wife what she thouht of the curate's sermon.

"It was the poorest one I ever heard," she replied, promptly—"nothing in it at all."

Later in the day the clergyman, meeting his curate, asked him how he had got on.

"Oh, very well," was the reply. "I didn't have time to prepare anything, so I preached one of your unused sermons."—"Harper's Weekly."

[44]

DEMOCRAT CHRONICLE
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 1 1905

The sale of seats for the concert which the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give in the Baker Theater on next Saturday evening, October 7th, will open at the box office of the theater to-morrow morning. This concert coming in October is as if the climax of the musical season came at the very beginning. Of all the events which have been scheduled for this season, this is the most interesting and the most important in many respects. It has been a matter of regret ever since 1893, when the last concert by the Boston band was given here that it made no more journeys so far west as Rochester. Rochester is not to-day so poverty stricken in Iorchestral music as it was a dozen years ago, yet the concerts it has had seem to have served only to make keener the desire to hear once more the Boston symphony.

Mr. Gericke the conductor has the reputation of having his own very decided opinions about programmes and their making. It is well known that the regular programmes of the orchestra in the East are limited to time to a maximum of an hour and a half. Evidently, he has stretched a point for Rochester, because the programme he has arranged for this city will play about two hours, and a more delightful one could hardly be imagined.

It passes from Weoer's greatest overture, the "Oberon," to the serene beauty of the mightiest master of them all, Johann Sebastian Bach, who is represented by a "Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form" most admirably arranged for strings by the great Bach scholar, Sigismund Bachrich. Then comes one of the most brilliant works ever written for the violin, Bruch's G Minor Concerto No. 1, and this will be followed by what is inappropriately called the swan song of Peter Tschaikowski, his pathetic symphony. To be sure, it was practically his last composition, and he conducted it shortly before the cholera claimed his as a victim, but such a mighty expression of profound woe is something more than a swan song. Rochester is especially fortunate in having this work put on the programme.

The final number will be the most popular of all overtures, that to Wagner's music drama "Tannahauser."

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Professor Willy Hess, whose appearance on Saturday evening will be his first in Rochester. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the orchestra in Boston and the other great cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that has ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice as soloist in one season, a most extraordinary event. His choice of the Bruch concerto has been a most wise one, for of all the works that have been written for that instrument, it is the most grateful to the violinist, not even excepting the Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern, highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms—; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert; with equal authority he reveals the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowski, and a Richard Strauss.

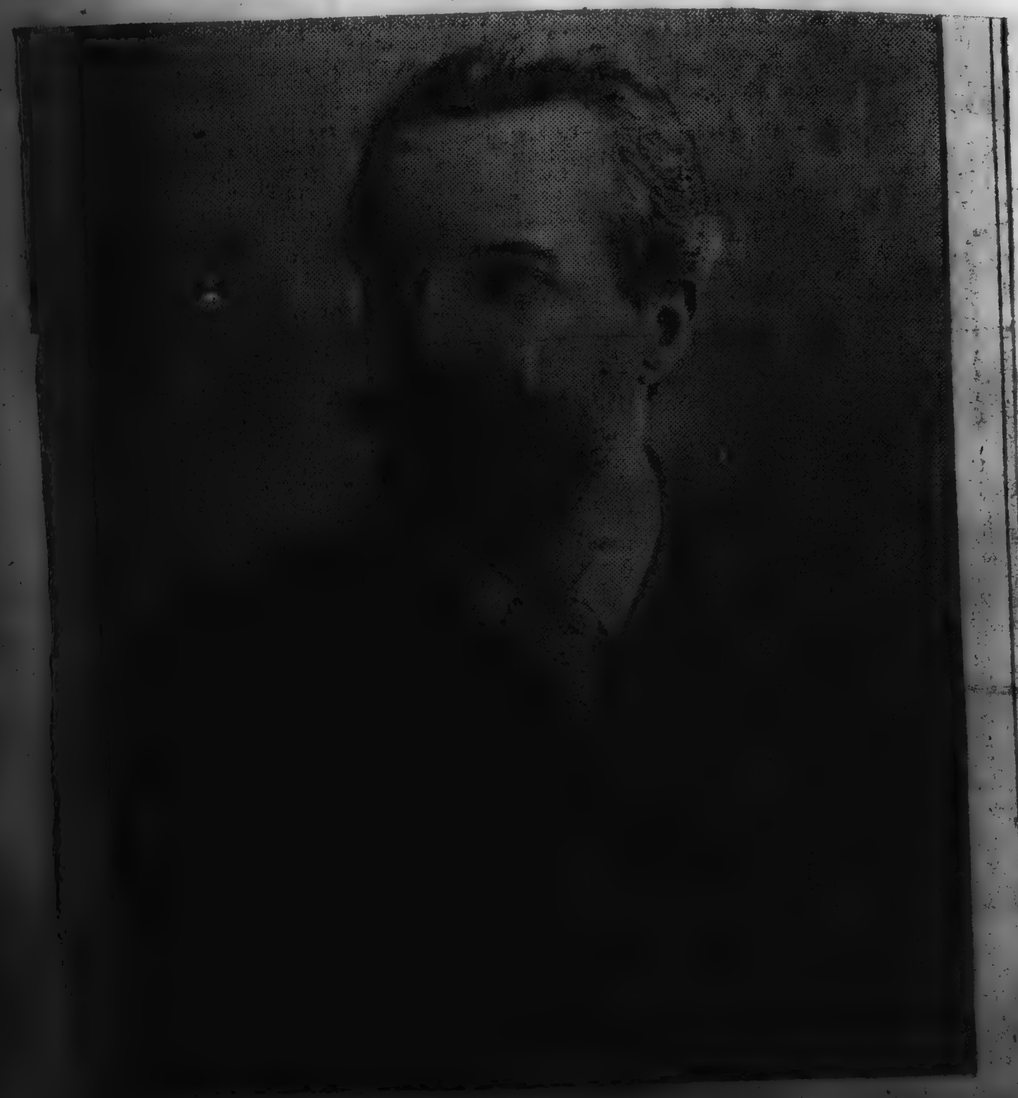
The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members a dozen years ago, but among the principals there have been some few changes, made necessary in some cases by death, and in some by the musician seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is to-day, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation. In the violins, besides Professor Willy Hess, the concert master, are such men as Timothee Adamowski, Bach, Ondricek, Roth, Strube and Barleben. The violas have such men as Ferir and Max Zach. In the 'cellos are men who carry such names as Heinrich Warnke, Josef Adamowski, Keller, Eric Loeffler, Nagle and Hadley. And it the strings are famous the world over, the wind-choirs are equally so. The first oboe is Georges Longy, the greatest artist on this instrument France ever produced. And it would be difficult to find the equals of such men as Maquarre, the first flute, Grisez, the first clarinet, Sadony, the first basso, Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, and Schuecker the harpist. Certainly Mr. W. J. Henderson of the New York Sun was not far wrong when he called this "an orchestra of virtuosi." The concert will begin at 8:15 o'clock precisely.

EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 3 - 1905

WILLIAM GERICKE.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays at the Baker theater on Saturday night, it will be under the direction of William Gericke, who is one of the recognized leaders of the art of conducting. He is not only a man of immense technical knowledge and broad musical sympathies, but a born leader of men. The orchestra Mr. Gericke brings with him will comprise seventy-five men. This, of course, is rather a smaller band than is used in Boston for the regular concerts there, for on the western trip none of the vast works of modern masters like Richard Strauss and Gustav Mahler will be given. For these it is necessary to enlarge the orchestra to 95 or 100 men, for the scores demand an extra number of wind instruments and to balance these, more strings are required. Seventy-five men, however, is regarded as an ideal number for symphonic work, for then true and equal balance is maintained between the string instruments and the wind. And this is the number which is used by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for most of its concerts outside of Boston. The composition of the orchestra will be as follows: first violins, 13; second violins, 12; violas, 8; 'celli, 7; contrabasses, 6; flutes, 2; piccolo, 1; oboes, 2; English horn, 1; clarinets 2; bass clarinets, 1; bassoons, 3; horns, 4; trumpets, 2; cornets, 2; trombones, 3; tuba, 1; tympani, 1; triangle and tambour, 1; cymbals, 1; bass drum, 1; and harp, 1.

The personnel of the Orchestra will include all of its many celebrated players, men, all of them, who have won their spurs as solo artists before they began orchestral work. Sitting at the desks of the violins will be, among others, Timothee Adamowsky, Otto Roth, Bak, Ondricek, Barleben, Strube, Bak and Hofmann, all regular solo artists at the Boston concerts. The leading violas will be Ferir and Zach, notable artists both of them; among the 'celli will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist who ha just come from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Keller, Eirk Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. The first oboe is George Longy, the most famous player of this most difficult instrument in the world. Grisez, the first clarinet, and Maquarre, the first flute, are artists of equal fame, while in the front ranks of their classe are Debuchy, the first bassoon and Hackebarth, the first horn. As for Schuecker, the harpist, there is certainly not his equal in this country, if there is in the world.



Willy Hess, the Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Soloist for Next Wednesday's Concert in Convention Hall.

[45]

EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT - 1905

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, whose appearance on Wednesday night will be his first in Buffalo. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression that Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston and the other leading cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that have ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, one of the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice in one season as soloist, which is nearly, if not quite, unprecedented. His choice of the Bruch Concerto has been a most wise one. It is one of the most exquisite works in the repertory of violin music.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Those who have not heard the orchestra in the East during the past seven seasons will find him the same strong, virile interpreter that he was; solid, substantial and autheritative, he plays on his orchestra with the ease that a great pianist plays on his instrument. Moreover, passing years have not left him standing still. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert, with equal authority, he reveals the pulsating heart of a Lizst, a Tschaikowsky and a Richard Strauss.

The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members 13 years ago, but among the principals there have been some changes made necessary in some cases by death and in some by the musicians seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is today, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
HERALD
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT

FULL week of eight performances of extravaganza at the Lyceum will be followed by a breathing space, the house remaining dark until next Friday night, when B. C. Whitney's musical comedy, "Isle of Spice," begins an engagement of three performances. The following Monday night, October 9, E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe will appear in a sumptuous revival of "Taming of the Shrew."

The first important musical event of the season will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday night at the Baker Theater. That famous organization has not made a western tour in many years and, as but six cities are to be visited on its present trip, Rochester music lovers may well consider themselves exceedingly fortunate. The house should be thronged, for the season is likely to afford but few such privileges to those who appreciate the highest and best in music.

At the National Theater all this week Elsie Janis will appear in her success of several years ago, "Little Duchess." Little Miss Janis has always been popular in Rochester and her success in New York last summer has materially strengthened her hold on the theatergoing public. She is unquestionably one of the cleverest imitators on the American stage.

"Soldiers of Fortune" will be the bill for the third week of the Moore Stock Company at the Baker Theater. It is an interesting play and Mr. Lytell should win new admirers in the role originally played by Robert Edeson.

Cook Opera House offers a new bill of varieties in which comedy is said to be the predominating element.

At the Corinthian Theater this week the attraction will be the Casino Girls Burlesquers.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
POST EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
SEP 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra pays a visit to Rochester on Saturday October 7th, and will play at Baker theater. This is the first visit of the famous organization in a long term of years.

HERALD
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 4 1905
THEATERS

"Isle of Spice" Sale of Seats Begins To-day at the Lyceum.

Seats will go on sale this morning at the Lyceum box office for the engagement Friday and Saturday of "Isle of Spice," B. C. Whitney's musical comedy. This is the first musical comedy booking of the Lyceum season which comes with the stamp of metropolitan approval. The piece is claimed to possess all the qualities that make for jolly good entertainment. The music is said to be good, the comedy good and the chorus smarter and prettier than any seen heretofore this season. Miss Leslie Leigh heads the feminine part of the company. She is a soprano. Joseph Herbert is the principal funmaker.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will come here with its full membership of 75 musicians for the concert to be given Saturday night at the Baker Theater. This splendid organization of artists contains more players of note and is more expensive to maintain than any similar body in the world. It is stated that the sale of seats, now in progress, has been very satisfactory.

The presentation by Charles Frohman, of E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe in "Taming of the Shrew" at the Lyceum next Monday evening cannot fail to be one of the most notable events of the season. Both Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe are players of strong individuality and much that is unhackneyed may be expected of them in their new roles. Mr. Sothern is said to present Petruchio as a whimsical but willful master of knotty problems, a man with a mission, so to speak, with never a hint of braggadocio and never a moment of animal supremacy. Even when most tempestuous in his progress to conquest his work is charged with an underlying playful spirit vastly delightful. Miss Marlowe makes Katherine a creature of high breeding who before her first meeting with Petruchio is seen as a pampered, feared and very trying woman. Beginning with her opening scene with Petruchio a sharp change takes place in her manner and the virago in her develops until she becomes a perfect whirlwind of shrewish passion. It is said that nothing more appealingly mirthful in the way of high comedy, than her gradual retreat once she recognizes Petruchio's mastery, has been seen on the stage in many a day.

"Little Duchess" is the attraction this week at the National Theater, with Elsie Janis in the stellar role. The part of the Duchess, who goes disguised to fashionable Ostend and meets with many merry adventures suits Miss Janis admirably. There will be matinee performances to-morrow and Saturday.

Charles E. Grapewin in "It's Up to You, John Henry," will be seen at the National Theater next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday matinees. It is described as a farce comedy done to music, with bright lines, humorous situations and mirthful climaxes. Seats go on sale Friday morning.

"Soldiers of Fortune," by the Moore Stock Company at the Baker Theater, is proving the best drawing play the company has yet produced. A matinee will be given to-day. The theater will be turned over to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night, but there will be a matinee on that day as usual. Next week "Young Mrs. Winthrop" will be presented.

HERALD
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
SEP

THEY GOT A PERMIT.

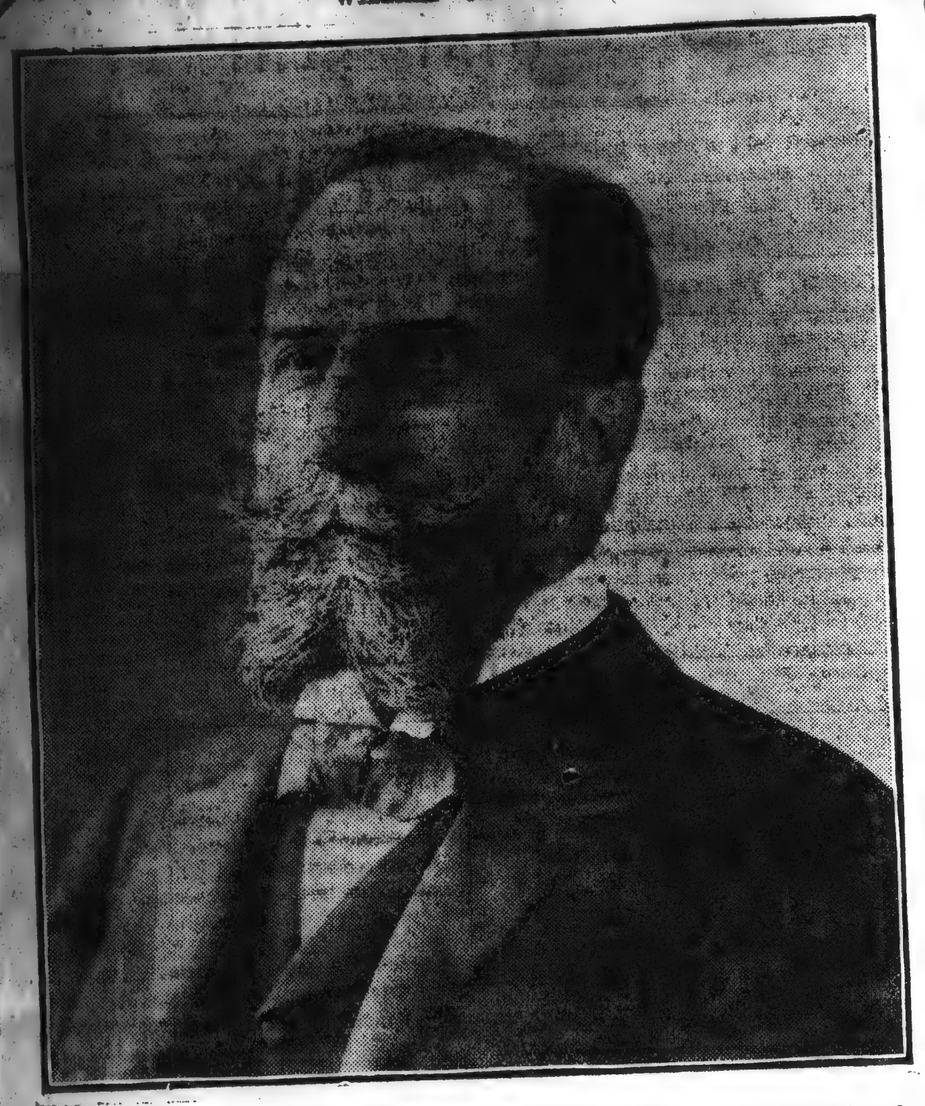
Two Boys Started To Distribute Circulars in City Hall and Were Held Up.

Two small boys wandered into the City Hall yesterday afternoon to distribute circulars for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert to be given at the Baker Theater. As they started through the various rooms of the building, Officer Martin, who stands guard in the lower corridor, held up the boys and demanded to see their permit. The lads had no permit, and for a minute visions of a police cell frightened them.

The officer conducted the boys into the Mayor's office, where they stated their business and a permit was issued to them without charge. Thus the city ordinance was upheld and the boys escaped a term of imprisonment or a heavy fine for violation of the city ordinances. They were somewhat relieved, however, after they had departed.

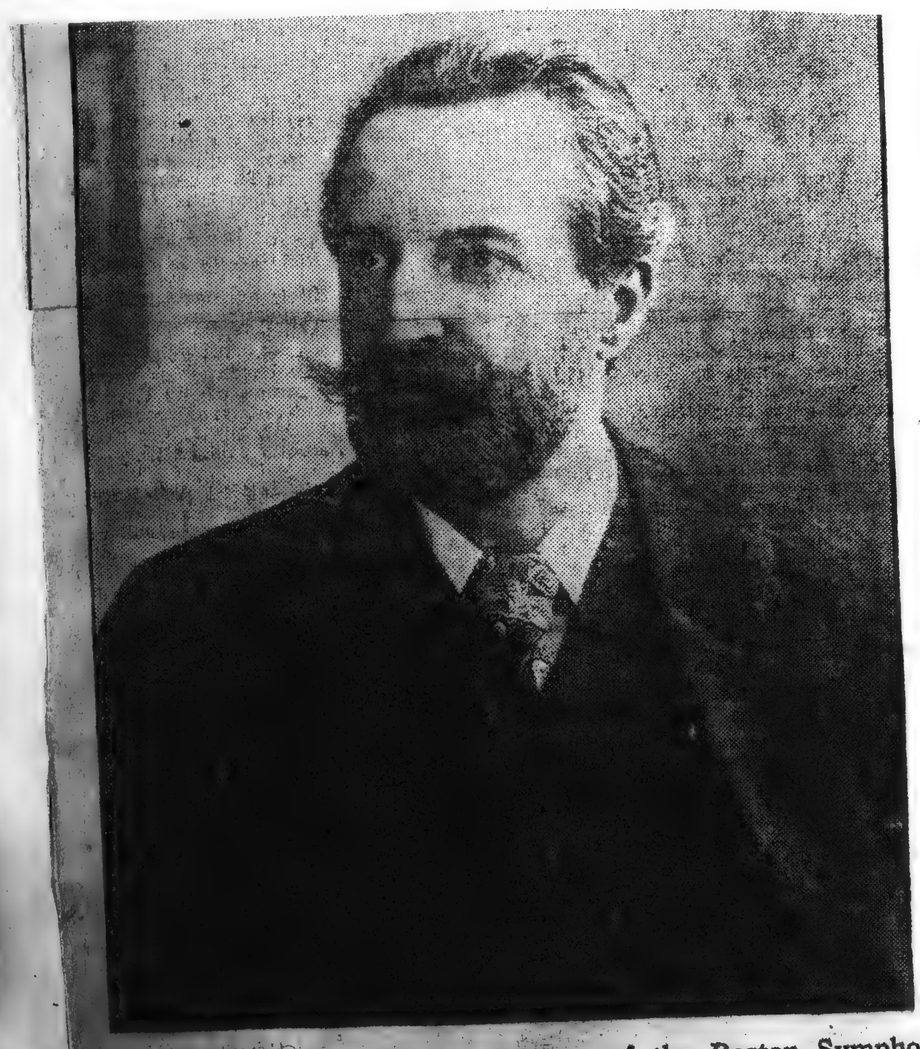
EXPRESS

WILLIAM GERICKE.



When the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays at the Baker theater on Saturday night, it will be under the direction of William Gericke, who is one of the recognized leaders of the art of conducting. He is not only a man of immense technical knowledge and broad musical sympathies, but a born leader of men. The orchestra Mr. Gericke brings with him will comprise seventy-five men. This, of course, is rather a smaller band than is used in Boston for the regular concerts there, for on the western trip none of the vast works of modern masters like Richard Strauss and Gustav Mahler will be given. For these it is necessary to enlarge the orchestra to 95 or 100 men, for the scores demand an extra number of wind instruments and to balance these, more strings are required. Seventy-five men, however, is regarded as an ideal number for symphonic work, for then true and equal balance is maintained between the string instruments and the wind. And this is the number which is used by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for most of its concerts outside of Boston. The composition of the orchestra will be as follows: first violins, 13; second violins, 12; violas, 8; 'celli, 7; contrabasses, 6; flutes, 2; piccolo, 1; oboes, 2; English horn, 1; clarinets 2; bass clarinets, 1; bassoons, 3; horns, 4; trumpets, 2; cornets, 2; trombones, 3; tuba, 1; tympani, 1; triangle and tambour, 1; cymbals, 1; bass drum, 1; and harp, 1.

The personnel of the Orchestra will include all of its many celebrated players, men, all of them. who have won their spurs as solo articts before they began orchestral work. Sitting at the desks of the violins will be, among others, Timothee Adamowsky, Otto Roth, Bak, Ondricek, Barleben, Strube, Bak and Hofmann, all regular solo artists at the Boston concerts. The leading violas will be Ferir and Zach, notable artists both of them; among the 'celli will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist who ha just come from the famous Kaim Orchestra of Munich; Keller, Erik Loeffler, Nagel and Hadley. The first oboe is George Longy, the most famous player of this most difficult instrument in the world. Grisez, the first clarinet, and Maquarre, the first flute, are artists of equal fame, while in the front ranks of their classe are Debuchy, the first bassoon and Hackebarth, the first horn. As for Schuecker, the harpist, there is certainly not his equal in this country, if there is in the world.



Prof. Willy Hess, the Concert Master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Soloist for Next Wednesday's Concert at Convention Hall.

[45]

EWS

A vast amount of curiosity is being exhibited concerning the soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, whose appearance on Wednesday night will be his first in Buffalo. Those who follow musical news closely will remember the profound impression that Mr. Hess made in the East last winter when, as soloist, he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston and the other leading cities. He was pronounced at once one of the greatest artists that have ever appeared there, and so substantial was his success in Boston, one of the most critical of all musical publics, that there he appeared twice in one season as soloist, which is nearly, if not quite, unprecedented. His choice of the Bruch Concerto has been a most wise one. It is one of the most exquisite works in the repertory of violin music.

Mr. Gericke is certain of a warm greeting by the many friends and admirers he made here years ago. Those who have not heard the orchestra in the East during the past seven seasons will find him the same strong, virile interpreter that he was; solid, substantial and authoritative, he plays on his orchestra with the ease that a great pianist plays on his instrument. Moreover, passing years have not left him standing still. Always one of the greatest interpreters of the classics, the past few years have placed him in the front rank of those who have made a specialty of the modern highly colored and romantic music. As great as ever in the three great "B's"—Bach, Beethoven and Brahms; as sympathetic with the homelier and more intimate genius of Robert Schumann and the melodious Schubert, with equal authority, he reveals the pulsating heart of a Liszt, a Tschaikowsky and a Richard Strauss.

The vast majority of the men in the orchestra were members 13 years ago, but among the principals there have been some changes made necessary in some cases by death and in some by the musicians seeking other fields of activity. The orchestra has never been in such perfection of condition as it is today, and has never contained so many individual musicians of high reputation.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

HERALD

ESS

FULL week of eight performances of extravaganza at the Lyceum will be followed by a breathing space, the house remaining dark until next Friday night, when B. C. Whitney's musical comedy, "Isle of Spice," begins an engagement of three performances. The following Monday night, October 9, E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe will appear in a sumptuous revival of "Taming of the Shrew."

The first important musical event of the season will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Saturday night at the Baker Theater. That famous organization has not made a western tour in many years and, as but six cities are to be visited on its present trip, Rochester music lovers may well consider themselves exceedingly fortunate. The house should be thronged, for the season is likely to afford but few such privileges to those who appreciate the highest and best in music.

At the National Theater all this week Elsie Janis will appear in Anna Held's success of several years ago, "Little Duchess." Little Miss Janis has always been popular in Rochester and her success in New York last summer has materially strengthened her hold on the theatergoing public. She is unquestionably one of the cleverest imitators on the American stage.

"Soldiers of Fortune" will be the bill for the third week of the Moore Stock Company at the Baker Theater. It is an interesting play and Mr. Lytell should win new admirers in the role originally played by Robert Edeson.

Cook Opera House offers a new bill of varieties in which comedy is said to be the predominating element.

At the Corinthian Theater this week the attraction will be the Casino Girls' Burlesquers.

Newspaper Cutting

EXPRESS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra pays a visit to Rochester on Saturday October 7th, and will play at Baker theater. This is the first visit of the famous organization in a long term of years.

HERALD

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THEATERS.

"Isle of Spice" Sale of Seats Begins To-day at the Lyceum.

Seats will go on sale this morning at the Lyceum box office for the engagement Friday and Saturday of "Isle of Spice," B. C. Whitney's musical comedy. This is the first musical comedy booking of the Lyceum season which comes with the stamp of metropolitan approval. The piece is claimed to possess all the qualities that make for jolly good entertainment. The music is said to be good, the comedy good and the chorus smarter and prettier than any seen heretofore this season. Miss Leslie Leigh heads the feminine part of the company. She is a soprano. Joseph Herbert is the principal funmaker.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will come here with its full membership of 75 musicians for the concert to be given Saturday night at the Baker Theater. This splendid organization of artists contains more players of note and is more expensive to maintain than any similar body in the world. It is stated that the sale of seats, now in progress, has been very satisfactory.

The presentation by Charles Frohman, of E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe in "Taming of the Shrew" at the Lyceum next Monday evening cannot fail to be one of the most notable events of the season. Both Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe are players of strong individuality and much that is unhackneyed may be expected of them in their new roles. Mr. Sothern is said to present Petruchio as a whimsical but willful master of knotty problems, a man with a mission, so to speak, with never a hint of braggadocio and never a moment of animal supremacy. Even when most tempestuous in his progress to conquest his work is charged with an underlying playful spirit vastly delightful. Miss Marlowe makes Katherine a creature of high breeding who before her first meeting with Petruchio is seen as a pampered, feared and very trying woman. Beginning with her opening scene with Petruchio a sharp change takes place in her manner and the virago in her develops until she becomes a perfect whirlwind of shrewish passion. It is said that nothing more appealingly mirthful in the way of high comedy, than her gradual retreat once she recognizes Petruchio's mastery, has been seen on the stage in many a day.

"Little Duchess" is the attraction this week at the National Theater, with Elsie Janis in the stellar role. The part of the Duchess, who goes disguised to fashionable Ostend and meets with many merry adventures suits Miss Janis admirably. There will be matinee performances to-morrow and Saturday.

Charles E. Grapewin in "It's Up to You, John Henry," will be seen at the National Theater next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday matinees. It is described as a farce comedy done to music, with bright lines, humorous situations and mirthful climaxes. Seats go on sale Friday morning.

"Soldiers of Fortune," by the Moore Stock Company at the Baker Theater, is proving the best drawing play the company has yet produced. A matinee will be given to-day. The theater will be turned over to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night, but there will be a matinee on that day as usual. Next week "Young Mrs. Winthrop" will be presented.

HERALD

om

ldress

ate

THEY GOT A PERMIT.

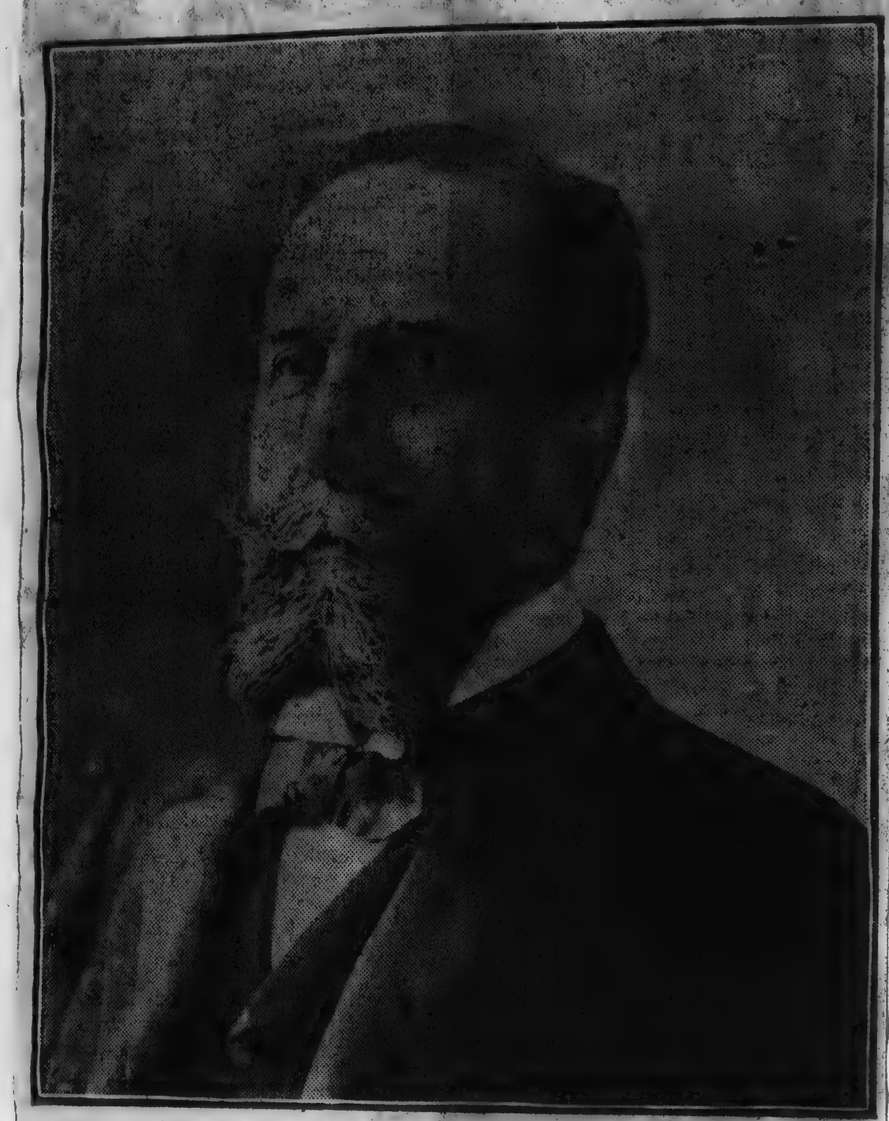
Two Boys Started To Distribute Circulars in City Hall and Were Held Up.

Two small boys wandered into the City Hall yesterday afternoon to distribute circulars for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert to be given at the Baker Theater. As they started through the various rooms of the building, Officer Martin, who stands guard in the lower corridor, held up the boys and demanded to see their permit. The lads had no permit, and for a minute visions of a police cell frightened them.

The officer conducted the boys into the Mayor's office, where they stated their business and a permit was issued to them without charge. Thus the city ordinance was upheld and the boys escaped a term of imprisonment or a heavy fine for violation of the city ordinances. They were somewhat relieved, however, after they had departed.

Clipping Bureau in the World
TIMES
SEP 3 0

FAMOUS BOSTON ORCHESTRA AT THE BAKER THEATER



WILHELM GERNICKE.
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its equal. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now, when a distinguished musician reaches America, almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony.

One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans Von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss, who a year ago last spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such men as these. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing and not a small part of the reputation the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these.

The sale of seats for the concert of the orchestra next Saturday night will open at the Baker Theater Monday morning.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
UNION EXPRESS
Address
Date

THEATER NOTES.

Seats went on sale this morning for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker theater next Saturday night. To-days sale was very satisfactory and points to a large gathering. The famous organization has not made a tour as far west as Rochester in many years.

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 3 1905

"The Isle of Spice" will be the attraction at the Lyceum Friday and Saturday. Seats for the engagement will be on sale tomorrow.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its brief tour in Montreal last night before a crowded audience. The orchestra's engagement in Rochester is for next Saturday evening at the Baker Theater. The sale of seats, now going on, indicates a large audience. Following is the programme to be given:

Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon."
Bach—Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Max Bruch—Concerto for violin, No. 1 in G minor, Op. 26.
I. Allegro moderato (G minor.)
II. Adagio (E-flat major.)
III. Finale; Allegro energico (G major.)
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic" in B minor, Op. 74.
I. Adagio; allegro non troppo.
II. Allegro con grazia.
III. Allegro molto vivace.
IV. Finale; Adagio lamentoso.
Wagner—Overture to "Tannhauser."
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

Protest Against Stench

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 4 1905

AMUSEMENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to Rochester seventy-five men strong for Saturday night's concert at the Baker Theater. The organization contains more players of note and is more expensive to maintain than any similar body, either in this country or in Europe. Seats for the concert are on sale.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
From POST
Address

The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony concert at the Baker theater on Saturday evening, opened at the box office of the theater yesterday. The sale was a large and steady one and it looks now as if the house would be well sold out before the end of the week. The Orchestra gave its first concert in Montreal last night to a huge audience which completely filled Victoria Rink, one of the largest auditoriums in Canada. Tonight the Orchestra will play in Massey Music hall in Toronto, where another great audience is assured.

POST EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
SEP 30 1905

Saturday evening the Boston symphony will pay one of its "few and far between" angel visits and everyone who takes an interest in music owes it to his artistic soul to be present. Beautiful compositions like the "Pathetic" Symphony can hardly be heard too often. Of course, all the world is familiar with the "Oberon" overture, also on the programme, but that fact will enable them to listen to the playing of the work by the Bostonians with all the more pleasure. The Bach prelude provides that jewel of exquisite form without which no programme is perfect. The soloist, Willy Hess, is a fine violinist, both technically and temperamentally and, as a leader, he is the embodiment of an authority which commands enthusiastic obedience.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
UNION ADVERTISER
From
Address N. Y.
Date OCT 2 1905

—Seats for the Boston Symphony concert next Saturday night went on sale this morning at the Baker Theater. The demand for tickets indicates a very successful engagement. Opportunities for hearing the noted Boston band in Rochester are rare events and if Saturday night's audience is at all in keeping with the importance of the occasion the theater will be filled.

TIMES
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its tour in Montreal last night before an audience which, according to a telegram from the Canadian city, completely filled the Victoria Rink, one of the largest auditoriums in Canada. The orchestra will play at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Seats for the concert are now selling.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
From
Address ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 4 1905
Date

Seventy-five musicians will play at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

COMMERCIAL
NEW YORK CITY
OCT 2 - 1905

What the Boston Symphony Will Play.

Among the novelties to be presented here this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be three new works by Sir Edward Elgar—an overture entitled "In the South," and two small works—"Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" Alexander Glazounov, the Russian composer will be represented by his symphonic poem, "The Kremlin." Caesar Franck's "Psyche" is another unknown work, as is the overture "Libussa" by Smetana.

Others on the list are Gustav Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, "Odysseus' Ausfahrt and Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture, and a Geharnischte" suite, Amhurst Webber's symphony in E major, a ballad by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfefertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

There are to be still other novelties of the modern French school, played under the direction of Vincent D'Indy.

Clipping Bureau in the World
MAIL
New York City
SEP 30 1905

Vincent D'Indy's visit as guest conductor for a set of Boston symphony orchestra concerts in December will break a precedent of that organization and promises to add interest to the season. D'Indy is recognized a good conductor in Paris and Brussels; he and Ysaye used to replace each other in that capacity when necessary. This is stated to be the last year of Mr. Gericke's present contract as conductor of the Boston band. Is D'Indy an experiment with this in view? Anyway, he will offer modern French music worth the hearing.

New York dates for the Boston concerts will be Thursday evenings and Saturday matinees as follows: November 9 and 11, December 7 and 9, January 11 and 13, February 15 and 17 and March 15 and 17.

The Boston orchestra will have a new first 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, instead of Rudolph Krasselt. He comes from the Kaim orchestra, Munich. Peter Sadony, from Cologne, will be a new bassoon player. Max Hess, alternate first horn, comes also from the Kaim orchestra. The Boston band will play 104 concerts this winter.

Novelties for the Boston season, of which the best will be heard in New York, will include three by Sir Edward Elgar, his overture, "In the South," and two small works, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" a symphonic poem by Alexander Glazounov, "The Kremlin;" "Psyche," by Cesar Franck; an overture, "Libussa," by Smetana; Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schillings's overture, "Der Pfeifertag;" John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include those to be played under Vincent D'Indy. The Dvorak piece was played here several summers ago by Franz Kaltenborn.

N. Y. EVG. TELEGRAM
OCT 2 - 1905

Novelties of the Boston Symphony Season.

AN unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire subjoined list will be played in Boston, and from this list will be chosen the new works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in the various cities it visits—New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Brooklyn and the like.

Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture, entitled "In the South," and two small works, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem, entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cecar Franck and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

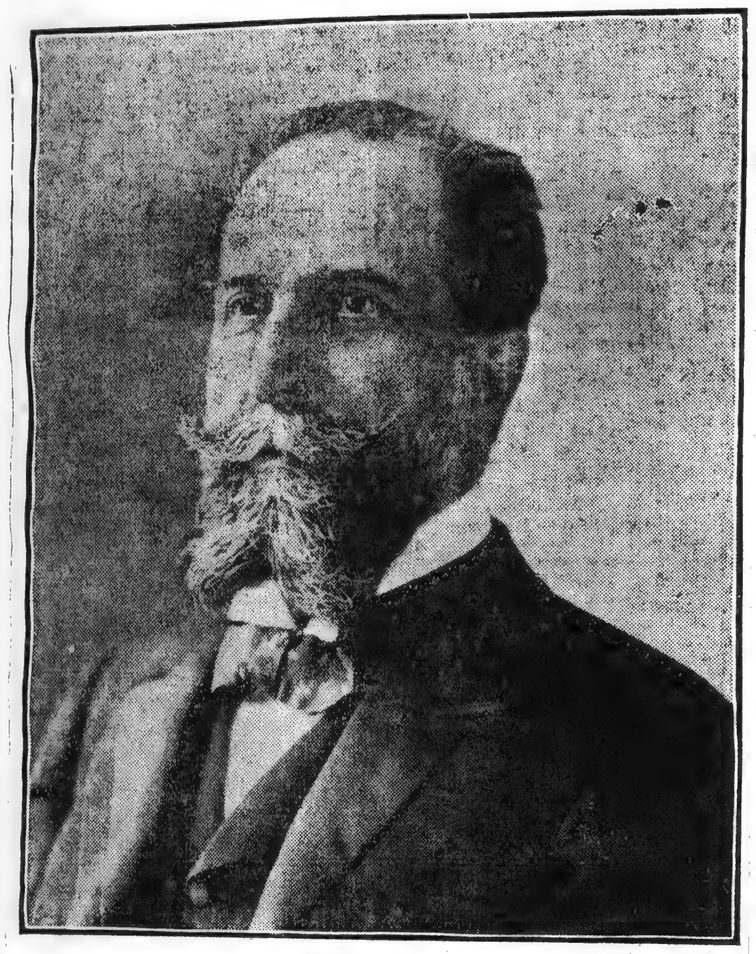
The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahlers Symphony No. 5, an ode by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" two works by Ferrusio Busoni, a "Lustspiel' overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber, a ballad by Frederick Converse; Max Schillings's overture, "Der Pfeifertag;" John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes (which has never been played by the Orchestra); Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube;" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include certain interesting novelties of the modern French school, which will be played under the leadership of M. Vincent d'Indy.

[46]

Cutting Bureau in the World

FAMOUS BOSTON ORCHESTRA AT THE BAKER THEATER



WILHELM GERNICKE.
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tributes paid to the artistic perfection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the great European conductors who have heard it are most significant in that without exception they confirm the opinion held in America that Europe possesses no band which may be called its equal. Despite the influx of European musicians and virtuosi who justly regard America as Golconda, and despite the stories they take home with them, the general attitude in Europe towards music in America is one of skepticism. But the leaven has so worked in the past ten years that now, when a distinguished musician reaches America, almost his first question is when he can hear the Boston Symphony.

One of the first of the great visiting conductors to hear the orchestra was Hans Von Bulow, whose enthusiastic opinion of it is recorded in several letters he wrote to Europe after his visit to Boston. Up to the present year no visiting conductor has ever been invited to lead the orchestra with the single exception of Richard Strauss, who a year ago last spring, conducted one of the pension fund concerts. This year, however, an invitation has been extended to the distinguished French composer and conductor, Vincent d'Indy, to conduct a series of concerts in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

Such men as Felix Mottl, Felix Weingartner, Edouard Colonne and Ernst von Schuch have not hesitated to say that the Boston Symphony has no superior in Europe and possibly no equal, a very great admission from such men as these. They all of them were anxious to have a chance to conduct the orchestra, had the policy of the management admitted of such a thing and not a small part of the reputation the orchestra enjoys in Europe is due to the reports carried home by such men as these.

The sale of seats for the concert of the orchestra next Saturday night will open at the Baker Theater Monday morning.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From ANNUAL ADVERTISER

Address

Date

THEATER NOTES.

Seats went on sale this morning for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker theater next Saturday night. To-days sale was very satisfactory and points to a large gathering. The famous organization has not made a tour as far west as Rochester in many years.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its tour in Montreal last night before an audience which, according to a telegram from the Canadian city, completely filled the Victoria Rink, one of the largest auditoriums in Canada. The orchestra will play at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Seats for the concert are now selling.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. CHRONICLE

OCT 3 1905

"The Isle of Spice" will be the attraction at the Lyceum Friday and Saturday. Seats for the engagement will be on sale tomorrow.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert of its brief tour in Montreal last night before a crowded audience. The orchestra's engagement in Rochester is for next Saturday evening at the Baker Theater. The sale of seats, now going on, indicates a large audience. Following is the programme to be given:

Weber—Overture to the opera "Oberon."
Bach—Prelude, adagio and gavotte in rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Max Bruch—Concerto for violin, No. 1 in G minor, Op. 26.
1. Allegro moderato (G minor.)
II. Adagio (E-flat major.)
III. Finale; Allegro energico (G major.)
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic" in B minor, Op. 74.
I. Adagio; allegro non troppo.
II. Allegro con grazia.
III. Allegro molto vivace.
IV. Finale; Adagio lamentoso.
Wagner—Overture to "Tannhauser."
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

Protest Against Stench

ROCHESTER, N. Y. CHRONICLE

OCT 4 1905

AMUSEMENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to Rochester seventy-five men strong for Saturday night's concert at the Baker Theater. The organization contains more players of note and is more expensive to maintain than any similar body, either in this country or in Europe. Seats for the concert are on sale.

Cutting Bureau in the World EXPRESS

From U.S.

Address

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

SEP 23 1905

The sale of seats for the Boston Symphony concert at the Baker theater on Saturday evening, opened at the box office of the theater yesterday. The sale was a large and steady one and it looks now as if the house would be well sold out before the end of the week. The Orchestra gave its first concert in Montreal last night to a huge audience which completely filled Victoria Rink, one of the largest auditoriums in Canada. Tonight the Orchestra will play in Massey Music hall in Toronto, where another great audience is assured.

Saturday evening the Boston symphony will pay one of its "few and far between" angel visits and everyone who takes an interest in music owes it to his artistic soul to be present. Beautiful compositions like the "Pathetic" Symphony can hardly be heard too often. Of course, all the world is familiar with the "Oberon" overture, also on the programme, but that fact will enable them to listen to the playing of the work by the Bostonians with all the more pleasure. The Bach prelude provides that jewel of exquisite form without which no programme is perfect. The soloist, Willy Hess, is a fine violinist, both technically and temperamentally and, as a leader, he is the embodiment of an authority which commands enthusiastic obedience.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date

—Seats for the Boston Symphony concert next Saturday night went on sale this morning at the Baker Theater. The demand for tickets indicates a very successful engagement. Opportunities for hearing the noted Boston band in Rochester are rare events and if Saturday night's audience is at all in keeping with the importance of the occasion the theater will be filled.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to Rochester seventy-five musicians strong for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

COMMERCIAL NEW YORK CITY

OCT 2 - 1905

What the Boston Symphony Will Play.

Among the novelties to be presented here this year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be three new works by Sir Edward Elgar—an overture entitled "In the South," and two small works—"Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounev, the Russian composer will be represented by his symphonic poem, "The Kremlin." Caesar Frank's "Psyche" is another unknown work, as is the overture "Libussa" by Smetana.

Others on the list are Gustav Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, "Odysseus' Ausfahrt and Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture, and a Geharnischte" suite, Amhurst Webber's symphony in E major, a ballad by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfefertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

There are to be still other novelties of the modern French school, played under the direction of Vincent D'Indy.

Cutting Bureau in the World

MAIL

Vincent D'Indy's visit as guest conductor for a set of Boston symphony orchestra concerts in December will break a precedent that organization and promises to interest to the season. D'Indy is reckoned a good conductor in Paris and Brussels; he and Ysaye used to replace each other in that capacity when necessary. This is stated to be the last year of Mr. Gericke's present contract as conductor of the Boston band. Is D'Indy an experiment with this in view? Anyway, he will offer modern French music worth the hearing.

New York dates for the Boston concerts will be Thursday evenings and Saturday matinees as follows: November 9 and 11, December 7 and 9, January 11 and 13, February 15 and 17 and March 15 and 17.

The Boston orchestra will have a new first 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, instead of Rudolph Krasselt. He comes from the Kaim orchestra, Munich. Peter Sadony, from Cologne, will be a new bassoon player. Max Hess, alternate first horn, comes also from the Kaim orchestra. The Boston band will play 104 concerts this winter.

Novelties for the Boston season, of which the best will be heard in New York, will include three by Sir Edward Elgar, his overture, "In the South," and two small works, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" a symphonic poem by Alexander Glazounov, "The Kremlin;" "Psyche," by Cesar Franck; an overture, "Libussa," by Smetana; Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schillings's overture, "Der Pfeifertag;" John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Wildtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include those to be played under Vincent D'Indy. The Dvorak piece was played here several summers ago by Franz Kaltenborn.

Novelties of the Boston Symphony Season.

AN unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire subjoined list will be played in Boston, and from this list will be chosen the new works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in the various cities it visits—New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Brooklyn and the like.

Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture, entitled "In the South," and two small works, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem, entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cecar Franck and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahlers Symphony No. 5, ap oem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" two works by Ferrusio Busoni, a "Lustspiel' overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber, a ballads by Frederick Conve- ax Schilling's overture, "Der Pfeifertag;" John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" or Aristophanes (which has never been played by the orchestra); Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include certain very interesting novelties of the modern French school, which will be played under the leadership of M. Vincent d'Indy.

[46]

MAIL
OCT 7 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Henri Marteau and Prof. Willy Hess.

NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 1 1905

Novelties are promised by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Elgar will be represented by three works new to America—an overture, "In the South," and two small works, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glasounov's symphonic poem, "The Kremlin," will be played. "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cesar Franck and the overture "Libussa" is an unknown work by Smetana. Other works comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernest Boehe, "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite by Ferrucio Busoni; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture, "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, "Le Tasse."

From NEW YORK EV'G POST
Address
SEP 30 1905
Date

Brooklyn hears a great deal more of good music than the overweening Manhattanites suppose. The chief desideratum is a good auditorium, and that will be supplied by the new Academy of Music. In the meantime, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences continues to supply its patrons with opportunities to hear the best that happens to be available, at the Baptist Temple and Association Hall. At the head of the list there will be, as usual, five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and five by the Kneisel Quartet. These everybody claiming musical respectability must attend. Students can get tickets at special rates for the orchestral evenings. Among the song recitals, those of Emma Eames, Johanna Gadsky, and Ben Davis are prominent; among the violin recitals those of Marie Hall, Jan Kubelik, Henri Marteau (with Geranz as 'cellist), and Maud Powell Weingartner, and Walter Damrosch (with Joseffy) will give two orchestral concerts, while chamber music will be represented also by the Adamowski Trio and the Olive Meade String Quartet. There will be oratorios, Tyrolean Alpine singers, the Hiawatha Music Drama (Frederick Burton and a company of Ojibway Indians), concerts by the Saengerbund and the Arion Society, and a large number of entertainments of a partly educational aspect.

From N. Y. TRIBUNE
Address
Date OCT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Subscribers for last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their seats by sending their applications to C. A. Ellis, box office, Carnegie Hall, but these applications must be accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis. The regular sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23, at the box office, Carnegie Hall; at Luckhardt Bender's, No. 10 East 17th-st., and at Tyson's. The prices for each of the series will be as in past seasons, $7 50, $6, $5 and $3, according to location. Boxes will be $50 and $[illegible]. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Henri Marteau and Professor Willy Hess.

New York Times.
From
Address

MUSICAL

THE list of new works that Mr. Gericke will play this season with the Boston Orchestra has been issued, but unfortunately with some of that carelessness that tends to warp the facts of history. Thus it is said that Sir Edward Elgar's overture, "In the South," is "quite new to America," and that "Psyche" is "an unknown work by César Franck." But Elgar's overture was played in New York by the New York Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 6, 1904, and "Psyche" is not wholly unknown, because the orchestral portions of it, without the chorus, were played by the Philharmonic Society on Jan. 30, 1903. The rest of the list is as follows: Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit," "Chanson de Matin"; Glazounow, symphonic poem, "The Kremlin"; Smetana, overture, "Libussa"; Mahler, Symphony No. 5; Ernst Boehe, symphonic poem, "Odysseus's Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch"; Ferruccio Busoni, overture, "Lustspiel" and "Geharnischte Suite"; Amhurst Webber, symphony, E major; Frederick Converse, Ballad; Max Schillings, overture, "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine, prelude, to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak, symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube"; Eugene d'Harcourt, overture, "Le Tasse." This list does not include novelties of the modern French school that will be played under the leadership of Vincent d'Indy.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK STAATS-ZEITUNG
OCT 8

Konzerte.

Die Philharmonische Gesellschaft kündigt für ihre Konzerte die folgenden Solisten an: Otie Chew, Raoul Pugno, Jean Gerardy, Alfred Reisenauer, Kirkby-Lunn und Henri Marteau. An Orchesterwerken sind für die verschiedenen Programme in Aussicht genommen die 2. und 4. Symphonie von Schumann, die 5. und 6. von Beethoven, die C-dur Symphonie von Schubert, die pathetische Symphonie und „Manfred" von Tschaikowsky, die 2. (D-dur) Symphonie von Brahms, „Ein Heldenleben" und „Don Juan" von Richard Strauß, u. s. w.

In den Konzerten des New York Symphony Orchestra werden die folgenden Solisten auftreten: Jan Kubelik, Alfred Reisenauer, Campanari, Rafael Joseffy (der das erste Brahms'sche Concert spielen wird), Bessie Abbott, Rudolph Ganz und Ch. M. Loeffler.

Das Philadelphiaer Orchester wird hier unter Leitung von Fritz Scheel am 6. November in Carnegie Hall konzertiren.

Der Cellist Herr Leo Schulz hat ein Streichquartett begründet, das seinen Namen führen und aus den Herren Mauriee Kaufmann, David Robinson, Fritz Schaefer und Leo Schulz bestehen wird. Das neue Quartett wird sich am 8. Januar und 19. März in Knabe Hall hören lassen.

Das Kaltenborn-Quartett kündigt eine Serie von Kammermusikkonzerten an, deren erstes am 8. Februar stattfinden wird.

Emma Calve wird am 4. November ein Konzert in Carnegie Hall geben.

Frau Sembrich's übliches Recital wird am 14. November, Nachmittags, in Carnegie Hall stattfinden. Ihr Programm wird wieder aus drei Theilen, nämlich aus vorklassischer und klassischer, romantischer und moderner Gesangsmusik bestehen.

Minnie Coons, eine Pianistin, wird am Abend des 2. November in Carnegie Hall ein Konzert geben. Fräulein Coons ist eine Schülerin von Xaver Scharwenka.

Das Olive Mead-Streichquartett wird wiederum vier Konzerte in Mendelssohn Hall geben, nämlich am 14. November, 9. Januar, 6. März und 3. April.

Die Daten der Konzerte des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters in Carnegie Hall sind wie folgt: Abendkonzerte am 9. November, 7. Dezember, 11. Januar, 15. Februar und 15. März; Nachmittagskonzerte am 11. November, 9. Dezember, 13. Januar, 17. Februar und 17. März.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
MUSICAL COURIER.
From
Address
Date

BUFFALO, September

THE musical season opened in this city concerts, afternoon and evening, Sep given by the march king, Sousa, and whose recent successes in New York are too minds of the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER more than mere mention here. The programs were good.

The large subscription sale of seats for the Boston Symphony concerts indicates a large The concert is scheduled for the evening of Mrs. Mac. Davis Smith is the manager, but financial backing of forty of our wealthy cit

NEW YORK PRESS,
OCT 8 1905

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year. Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. P. Sadony, first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. For many years he has been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory. Three years ago Richter tried to get him for the Manchester Orchestra, but failed. Max Hess is called the best horn player in Germany. Most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra. The Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall will be given on the evenings of November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15 and on the afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer.

REVIEW
From
Address
OCT 1905
Date

RUMORS about the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are again rife, pending the opening of the musical season. Wilhelm Gericke, the present leader of the marvelously adjusted body of orchestral players, has devoted himself sincerely to the work of the dignified position which for years he has held at the artistic head of the Boston orchestra. At the same time, certain facts cannot be blinked; and it has been an open secret that in certain quarters there have been criticisms of Mr. Gericke's conducting and his artistic policy. Coincident with such criticisms there have arisen rumors of a change in the conductorship of the orchestra. So, for instance, the report gained ground near the close of last season that the post would be offered to Felix Weingartner, and the various results of such a step were frequently discussed; but this did not happen.

The official statement from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is still lacking; yet there are good reasons for believing that the coming season will in all probability conclude Mr. Gericke's term of conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As already stated in these columns, Vincent d'Indy will conduct the orchestra for a few concerts; also will Felix Weingartner lead this famous band four times. The latter engagement, however, is not to extend to New York. Mr. Higginson's plans beyond the coming season are still too far removed for discussion. Suffice it to say that the position of conductor has not yet definitely been offered to another orchestral leader.

m
ress
1905
e

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

List of Interesting Novelties to Be Given This Season.

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Wilhelm Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire subjoined list will be played in Boston, and from this list will be chosen the new works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in the various cities it visits.

Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works new to America—an overture entitled "In the South," and two small works entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by César Franck, and the overture "Libussa" is an unknown work by Smetana.

The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite, a symphony in E major by Amhurst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfefertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes (which has never been played by the orchestra); Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include certain interesting novelties of the modern French school which will be played under the leadership of Vincent D'Indy.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From New York Times
Address

\+ + +

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17. Subscribers for last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their seats by sending their applications to C. A. Ellis, box office, Carnegie Hall, accompanied by checks of money orders payable to C. A. Ellis. The regular sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, Oct. 23, at the box office, Carnegie Hall; at Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street, and at Tyson's. The prices for each of the series will be the same as in past seasons. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy Hess.

First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 8 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with bright prospects. Instead of Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Heinrich Warnke. Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the leader of the quartet; Otto Roth is second violin and E. Ferir is the viola player. The organization will offer some works never heard before in America. These include a new quartet by Sinding in A minor, five novellettes by Alexander Glazounov, a quintette for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude by L. Sinigaglia, a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and a sextette for strings in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK SUN
From
Address
OCT 8

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski, Ellison Van Hoose, Alfred Reisenauer, Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau and Willy Hess.

First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 8 1905

Before appearing at the Metropolitan Opera House this season Mme. Louise Homer will go on a short concert tour, appearing first in Boston at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. After singing in many of the large cities Mme. Homer will give a series of song recitals in the West.

NEW YORK HERALD
OCT 6 1905

m MAII
ress
e

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mms. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Henri Marteau and Prof. Willy Hess.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From
Address
Date

MUSICAL

THE list of new works that Mr. Gericke will play this season with the Boston Orchestra has been issued, but unfortunately with some of that carelessness that tends to warp the facts of history. Thus it is said that Sir Edward Elgar's overture, "In the South," is "quite new to America," and that "Psyche" is "an unknown work by César Franck." But Elgar's overture was played in New York by the New York Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 6, 1904, and "Psyche" is not wholly unknown, because the orchestral portions of it, without the chorus, were played by the Philharmonic Society on Jan. 30, 1903. The rest of the list is as follows: Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit," "Chanson de Matin"; Glazounow, symphonic poem, "The Kremlin"; Smetana, overture, "Libussa"; Mahler, Symphony No. 5; Ernst Boehe, symphonic poem, "Odysseus's Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch"; Ferruccio Busoni, overture, "Lustspiel" and "Geharnischte Suite"; Amhurst Webber, symphony, E major; Frederick Converse, Ballad; Max Schillings, overture, "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine, prelude, to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak, symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube"; Eugene d'Harcourt, overture, "Le Tasse." This list does not include novelties of the modern French school that will be played under the leadership of Vincent d'Indy.

REVIEW
rom
ddress
Date

RUMORS about the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are again rife, pending the opening of the musical season. Wilhelm Gericke, the present leader of the marvelously adjusted body of orchestral players, has devoted himself sincerely to the work of the dignified position which for years he has held at the artistic head of the Boston orchestra. At the same time, certain facts cannot be blinked; and it has been an open secret that in certain quarters there have been criticisms of Mr. Gericke's conducting and his artistic policy. Coincident with such criticisms there have arisen rumors of a change in the conductorship of the orchestra. So, for instance, the report gained ground near the close of last season that the post would be offered to Felix Weingartner, and the various results of such a step were frequently discussed; but this did not happen.

The official statement from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is still lacking; yet there are good reasons for believing that the coming season will in all probability conclude Mr. Gericke's term of conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As already stated in these columns, Vincent d'Indy will conduct the orchestra for a few concerts; also will Felix Weingartner lead this famous band four times. The latter engagement, however, is not to extend to New York. Mr. Higginson's plans beyond the coming season are still too far removed for discussion. Suffice it to say that the position of conductor has not yet definitely been offered to another orchestral leader.

n
ress
e

Novelties are promised by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Elgar will be represented by three works new to America—an overture, "In the South," and two small works, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov's symphonic poem, "The Kremlin," will be played. "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cesar Franck and the overture "Libussa" is an unknown work by Smetana. Other works comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernest Boehe, "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite by Ferrucio Busoni; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture, "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, "Le Tasse."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK STAATS-ZEITUNG
om
dress

Konzerte.

Die Philharmonische Gesellschaft kündigt für ihre Konzerte die folgenden Solisten an: Otie Chew, Raoul Pugno, Jean Gerardy, Alfred Reisenauer, Kirkby-Lunn und Henri Marteau. An Orchesterwerken sind für die verschiedenen Programme in Aussicht genommen die 2. und 4. Symphonie von Schumann, die 5. und 6. von Beethoven, die C-dur Symphonie von Schubert, die pathetische Symphonie und „Manfred" von Tschaikowsky, die 2. (D-dur) Symphonie von Brahms, „Ein Heldenleben" und „Don Juan" von Richard Strauß, u. s. w.

In den Konzerten des New York Symphony Orchestra werden die folgenden Solisten auftreten: Jan Kubelik, Alfred Reisenauer, Campanari, Rafael Joseffy (der das erste Brahms'sche Concert spielen wird), Bessie Abbott, Rudolph Ganz und Ch. M. Loeffler.

Das Philadelphiaer Orchester wird hier unter Leitung von Fritz Scheel am 6. November in Carnegie Hall konzertiren.

Der Cellist Herr Leo Schulz hat ein Streichquartett begründet, das seinen Namen führen und aus den Herren Maurice Kaufmann, David Robinson, Fritz Schaefer und Leo Schulz bestehen wird. Das neue Quartett wird sich am 8. Januar und 19. März in Knabe Hall hören lassen.

Das Kaltenborn-Quartett kündigt eine Serie von Kammermusikkonzerten an, deren erstes am 8. Februar stattfinden wird.

Emma Calve wird am 4. November ein Konzert in Carnegie Hall geben.

Frau Sembrich's übliches Recital wird am 14. November, Nachmittags, in Carnegie Hall stattfinden. Ihr Programm wird wieder aus drei Theilen, nämlich aus vorklassischer und klassischer, romantischer und moderner Gesangsmusik bestehen.

Minnie Coons, eine Pianistin, wird am Abend des 2. November in Carnegie Hall ein Konzert geben. Fräulein Coons ist eine Schülerin von Xaver Scharwenka.

Das Olive Mead-Streichquartett wird wiederum vier Konzerte in Mendelssohn Hall geben, nämlich am 14. November, 9. Januar, 6. März und 3. April.

Die Daten der Konzerte des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters in Carnegie Hall sind wie folgt: Abendkonzerte am 9. November, 7. Dezember, 11. Januar, 15. Februar und 15. März; Nachmittagskonzerte am 11. November, 9. Dezember, 13. Januar, 17. Februar und 17. März.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

om
dress

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski, Ellison Van Hoose, Alfred Reisenauer, Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau and Willy Hess.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From
Address
Date

Brooklyn hears a great deal more of good music than the overweening Manhattanites suppose. The chief desideratum is a good auditorium, and that will be supplied by the new Academy of Music. In the meantime, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences continues to supply its patrons with opportunities to hear the best that happens to be available, at the Baptist Temple and Association Hall. At the head of the list there will be, as usual, five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and five by the Kneisel Quartet. These everybody claiming musical respectability must attend. Students can get tickets at special rates for the orchestral evenings. Among the song recitals, those of Emma Eames, Johanna Gadsky, and Ben Davis are prominent; among the violin recitals those of Marie Hall, Jan Kubelik, Henri Marteau (with Geranz as 'cellist), and Maud Powell Weingartner, and Walter Damrosch (with Joseffy) will give two orchestral concerts, while chamber music will be represented also by the Adamowski Trio and the Olive Meade String Quartet. There will be oratorios, Tyrolean Alpine singers, the Hiawatha Music Drama (Frederick Burton and a company of Ojibway Indians), concerts by the Saengerbund and the Arion Society, and a large number of entertainments of a partly educational aspect.

m
lress
e

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

List of Interesting Novelties to Be Given This Season.

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Wilhelm Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire subjoined list will be played in Boston, and from this list will be chosen the new works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in the various cities it visits.

Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works new to America—an overture entitled "In the South," and two small works entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by César Franck, and the overture "Libussa" is an unknown work by Smetana.

The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite, a symphony in E major by Amhurst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfefertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes (which has never been played by the orchestra); Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include certain interesting novelties of the modern French school which will be played under the leadership of Vincent D'Indy.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the W
From
Address
Da

\+ + +

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17. Subscribers for last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their seats by sending their applications to C. A. Ellis, box office, Carnegie Hall, accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis. The regular sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, Oct. 23, at the box office, Carnegie Hall; at Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street, and at Tyson's. The prices for each of the series will be the same as in past seasons. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy Hess.

From TRIBUNE.
Address
Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Subscribers for last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their seats by sending their applications to C. A. Ellis, box office, Carnegie Hall, but these applications must be accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis. The regular sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23, at the box office, Carnegie Hall; at Luckhardt Bender's, No. 10 East 17th-st., and at Tyson's. The prices for each of the series will be as in past seasons, $7.50, $6, $5 and $3, according to location. Boxes will be $50 and $[illegible]. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Henri Marteau and Professor Willy Hess.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
MUSICAL COURIER
From
Address
Date

BOSTON, September [illegible]

THE musical season opened in this city concerts, afternoon and evening. Sept given by the march king, Sousa and whose recent successes in New York are too fr minds of the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER more than mere mention here. The programs were good.

The large subscription sale of seats for the Boston Symphony concerts indicates a large The concert is scheduled for the evening of Mrs. Mac. Davis Smith is the manager, but financial backing of forty of our wealthy citi

NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 8 1905
ess

Three new faces will be seen among the principal musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year. Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, comes from Munich, where for eight years he has been the principal 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. P. Sadony, first bassoon, is reckoned the most celebrated player of this instrument in Germany. For many years he has been the first bassoon of the Cologne Orchestra and the teacher of that instrument in the Cologne Conservatory. Three years ago Richter tried to get him for the Manchester Orchestra, but failed. Max Hess is called the best horn player in Germany. Most of his career has been with the Kaim Orchestra. The Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall will be given on the evenings of November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15 and on the afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer.

First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 8 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with bright prospects. Instead of Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Heinrich Warnke. Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the leader of the quartet; Otto Roth is second violin and E. Ferir is the viola player. The organization will offer some works never heard before in America. These include a new quartet by Sinding in A minor, five novellettes by Alexander Glazounov, a quintette for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude by L. Sinigaglia, a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and a sextette for strings in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

s

Before appearing at the Metropolitan Opera House this season Mme. Louise Homer will go on a short concert tour, appearing first in Boston at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. After singing in many of the large cities Mme. Homer will give a series of song recitals in the West.

From MUSICAL COURIER

Address City

AMONG the novelties to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season will be: Sir Edward Elgar's "In the South," "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin"; Alexander Glazounow's "The Kremlin," a new symphonic poem: César Franck's "Psyche," Smetana's "Libussa," Gustav Mahler's symphony No. 5, Ernst Böhe's symphonic poem, "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch," and John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds of Aristophanes," Dvorák's "Die Waldtaube," Eugene d'Harcourt's overture, "Le Tasse," and works of Ferrucio Busoni. Amherst Webber, Frederick Converse and Max Schilling.

From MUSICAL COURIER

Address

THE soloists this winter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concerts in Boston will be: Waldemar Lütschg, pianist; Madame Samaroff, pianist; Marie Hall, violinist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist. Others well known are Henri Marteau, violinist; Ben Davies, tenor; Emma Eames-Story; Madame Gadsky and Ellison Van Hoose, together in a Wagner program; Olive Fremstadt, soprano; Alfred Reisenauer, pianist; Adele Aus der Ohe, Harold Bauer, Ernest Hutcheson, all of them pianists; Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist; David Bispham, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

From REVIEW

Address

Date

Vincent D'Indy, the French composer-conductor, will actually visit Boston in December, and direct at least four of the regular symphony concerts. He confirmed this by a private letter to an intimate friend of the writer.

But it looks to many that the scheme of getting Mr. D'Indy over here to direct some of his works, was to help increase the box office receipts this year, for it is well known that they have fallen off the last two years. It will be an interesting event to have him with us, as some of his works are much appreciated in Boston, more, I believe, than in any other city; and just now among French composers Vincent D'Indy is very nearly at the head.

The First Established ... Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From MUSICAL COURIER

Address

Date

The coming of the ... Symphony Orchestra is being discussed by all ... The subscription sale is going on and is most ... Calvé and Eames will also come through the ... of Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

m

ress

e

Heinrich Warneke has been engaged as first 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to succeed Rudolf Krasselt, who has returned to Germany. Mr. Warneke comes from Munich, where he has been first 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. Negotiations to secure for this position Leo Schulz, now of New York, but formerly of the Boston Orchestra, fell through.

* * *

From

Address

Date 30

It unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Conductor Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire list will be played in Boston and from it will be chosen the new works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1

m HERALD

ress

OCT 8

e ber 22.

On Monday, October 23, the public sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be opened in Carnegie Hall. The renewal of old subscriptions has been unusually large, Mr. C. A. Ellis reports.

The orchestra's list of Boston soloists is a much longer one, including the names of Mme. Emma Eames, Miss Olive Fremstad and Mr. David Bispham among the vocalist; Miss Aus Der Ohe, Mme. Samaroff, Mr. Waldemar Lütschg and Mr. Rudolf Ganz, among the pianists, and two 'cellists, Mr. Heinrich Warnke and Miss Elsa Ruegger.

18

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

om NEW YORK EV'G POST

dress

20

te

Many novelties have been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Society. Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by "In the South," "Chanson de Nuit," and "Chanson de Matin"; Alexander Glazonov by "The Kremlin," a new symphonic poem; César Frank by "Psyche," Smetana by "Libussa," Gustav Maher by his Symphony No. 5, Ernst Bolhe by his symphonic poem, "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck," and John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes, Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube," Eugene d'Harcourt's overture, "Le Tasse," and works of Ferrucio Busoni, Amherst Webber, Frederick Converse, and Max Schilling.

m CITY

dress 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski, Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau and Professor Willy Hess.

RECORD

PHILA. PA

OCT 1 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Many New Compositions to Be Given During the Season.

Many interesting novelties have been selected by Conductor Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire list will be played in Boston, and from this will be chosen the works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn.

Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture entitled "In the South," and two small works, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is a hitherto unheard work by Cesar Franck, and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

The other new works comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5, a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber, a ballade by Frederick Converse, Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfeifertag," John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes, Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

This does not include certain very interesting compositions of the modern French school which will be rendered under the leadership of Vincent D'Indy.

paper Cutting Bureau in the World

LEDGER

Mr. Gericke promises a considerable list of novelties for twenty-four home concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it may be expected that the most successful of these will be repeated here. His list includes three works by Sir Edward Elgar, not yet heard in America, an overture, "In the South," and two "chansons," of "Night" and "Morning"; Glazounow's symphonic poem, "The Kremlin"; "Psyche," by Cesar Franck; "Libussa," an overture, by Smetana; Mahler's fifth symphony; a symphonic poem of "The Shipwreck of Ulysses" by Ernest Boehe; an overture by Max Schilling, and one by Eugene d'Harcourt; Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube"; two new works by Busoni; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes, and a symphony by Amherst Webber. This does not include such new French music as may be brought over by Vincent d'Indy.

MUSICAL COURIER

From

Address

...SONG the novelties to be performed by the ... Boston Symphony Orchestra this season will ... Edward Elgar's "In the South," "Chanson ... Nuit" and "Chanson Matin"; Alexander Glazounow's "The Kremlin," a new symphonic poem; ... Franck's "Psyche," Smetana's "Libussa," Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5, Ernst Böhe's symphonic poem, "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch," ... new work by Busoni, "Lustspiel" overture to "The Birds of Aristophanes," Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube," Eugene d'Harcourt's overture "Le Tasse," and works of ... Amherst Webber, Frederick Converse, Max Schilling.

From

Address

THE ... this winter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ... season in B... will be: Waldemar Lütschg, ... pianist; Marie Hall, violinist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist. Others ... Henri Marteau, ... inist; Ben Davies, tenor; Emma ... Story, ... Gadsky and Ellison Van Hoose, together in a Wagner program; Olive Fremstadt, soprano; Alfred Reisenauer, pianist; ... Aus der Ohe, Harold Bauer, Ernest Hutcheson, all of ... pianists; Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist; David Bispham ... from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, Willy Hess, ... Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

From

Address

Date

Vincent D'Indy, the French composer-conductor, will actually visit Boston in December, and direct at least four of the regular symphony concerts. He confirmed this by a private letter to an intimate friend of the writer.

But it looks to many that the scheme of getting Mr. D'Indy over here to direct some of his works, ... help increase the box office receipts this year, for it is well known that they have fallen off the ... two years. It will be an interesting event to have him with us, ... some of his works are much appreciated in Paris, so we believe, than in any other city, and possibly among French composers Vincent D'Indy stands very nearly at the head.

The First ...
Newspaper Cutting ... in the World

From

Address

Date

... of the ... Orchestra is being ... all. ... scription sale is ... and Eames will ... Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

1888

Heinrich Warnecke has been engaged as first 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to succeed Rudolf Kraseck, who has returned to Germany. Mr. Warnecke comes from Munich, where he has been first 'cellist in the Kaim Orchestra. Negotiations to secure for this position Leo Schulz, now of New York, but formerly of the Boston Orchestra, fell through.

* * *

From

Address

Date

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Conductor Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire list will be played in Boston and from it will be chosen the new works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1

From

Address

Date

will take place on Sunday evening, October 22.

On Monday, October 23, the public sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be opened in Carnegie Hall. The renewal of old subscriptions has been unusually large, Mr. C. A. Ellis reports.

The orchestra's list of Boston soloists is a much longer one, including the names of Mme. Emma Eames, Miss Olive Fremstad and Mr. David Bispham among the vocalist; Miss Aus Der Ohe, Mme. Samaroff, Mr. Waldemar Lütschg and Mr. Rudolf Ganz, among the pianists, and two 'cellists, Mr. Heinrich Warnke and Miss Elsa Ruegger.

18

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date

Many novelties have been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Society. Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by "In the South," "Chanson de Nuit," and "Chanson de Matin"; Alexander Glazonov by "The Kremlin," a new symphonic poem; César Frank by "Psyche," Smetana by "Libussa," Gustav Maher by his Symphony No. 5, Ernst Bolhe by his symphonic poem, "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck," and John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes, Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube," Eugene d'Harcourt's overture, "Le Tasse," and works of Ferrucio Busoni, Amherst Webber, Frederick Converse, and Max Schilling.

From

Address

...ould come to the Garden.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski, Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau and Professor Willy Hess.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

RECORD

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Many New Compositions to Be Given During the Season.

Many interesting novelties have been selected by Conductor Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The entire list will be played in Boston, and from this will be chosen the works which will be presented for the first time by the orchestra in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn.

Sir Edward Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America—an overture entitled "In the South," and two small works, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is a hitherto unheard work by Cesar Franck, and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

The other new works comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5, a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony in E major by Amherst Webber, a ballade by Frederick Converse, Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfeifertag," John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes, Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

This does not include certain very interesting compositions of the modern French school which will be rendered under the leadership of Vincent D'Indy.

Paper Cutting Bureau in the World

PUBLIC LEDGER

Mr. Gericke promises a considerable list of novelties for twenty-four home concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it may be expected that the most successful of these will be repeated here. His list includes three works by Sir Edward Elgar, not yet heard in America, an overture, "In the South," and two "chansons," of "Night" and "Morning"; Glazounow's symphonic poem, "The Kremlin"; "Psyche," by Cesar Franck; "Libussa," an overture, by Smetana; Mahler's fifth symphony; a symphonic poem of "The Shipwreck of Ulysses" by Ernest Boehe; an overture by Max Schilling, and one by Eugene d'Harcourt; Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube"; two new works by Busoni; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes, and a symphony by Amherst Webber. This does not include such new French music as may be brought over by Vincent d'Indy.

[48]

From.....

Address.....

Date.....

Est

[6h]

STARS IN MUSICAL PLAYS AND ON THE CONCERT STAGE

MISS BESSIE ABBOTT
PHOTO BY GESSFORD

MME EMMA CALVE
COPYRIGHT PHOTO BY AIME DUPONT

MISS LULU GLASER
PHOTO BY OTTO SARONY CO

MISS FRITZI SCHEFF

MME. JOHANNA GADSKI
COPYRIGHT PHOTO BY AIME DUPONT

MME. SCHUMANN HEINK
COPYRIGHT PHOTO BY AIME DUPONT

MME. LILLIAN BLAUVELT
PHOTO BY DAVIS AND SANFORD

THAT the concert season for 1905-06 is to be an unusually active one seems plain from the flood of announcements already received from the various managers and from the headquarters of the musical organizations. The permanent orchestras, choral societies and chamber music artists which New York has known for many years are all to be represented, with the usual number of concerts in the general scheme, and in addition to these the list of artists, vocal and instrumental, who will be heard is this year fuller than ever of interesting names. It happens, for instance, that a larger number of prominent prima donnas than ever before are to find their way to the local concert stage, so that the Metropolitan will by no means corner the vocal market.

Among these singers, some of whose pictures appear on this page, are Mme. Eames, who begins an extensive tour next month under the management of Mr. Henry Wolfsohn to continue until the beginning of her engagement at the Metropolitan; Mme. Sembrich, who will give her usual single recital at Carnegie Hall; Mme. Calvé, whose concert tour will take her clear across the country; Mme. Gadski, who makes a similar wide tour, and Miss Bessie Abbott, Mr. Jean de Reszke's pupil, a new comer in the concert field of whom great things are predicted.

Besides these, comic opera will again enlist the services of Mme. Schumann-Heink and Miss Fritzi Scheff, who have both left grand opera permanently for this lighter field of work. A new comer in this musical sphere is Mme. Lillian Blauvelt, who as a sequel to her recent successful appearance in London in "Faust," will make her début in comic opera this winter under the management of Mr. F. C. Whitney. So much for the prima donnas.

The orchestral societies are one and all to be at it again in full force, and in some cases with a wider scope of work than last year. The Philharmonic Society will give six public rehearsals and concerts, pursuing the same policy that is, importing its conductors as the successive seasons and then fixing upon the one whose [illegible] William Mengelberg, of Amsterdam; Mr. Max Fiedler, of Hamburg; Mr. V. I. Safonoff, of Moscow, who will be eagerly welcomed back by everybody; Dr. Ernest Künwald, of Frankfort; Mr. Fritz Steinbach, of Cologne, and Mr. Victor Herbert, of New York. The dates of the concerts are November 10 and 11, December 1 and 2, 15 and 16; February 9 and 10; March 2 and 3 and 23 and 24.

The Boston Symphony.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit New York for the twentieth season and will give, as usual, a series of five concerts on Thursday evenings, to be followed by as many Saturday matinees.

The changes in one or two important departments of this band's personnel, as already announced in the HERALD, should give Mr. Gericke as finely balanced an organization as ever.

An interesting feature of the season, which involves a departure from the previous policy of the Boston orchestra, is the invitation which has been extended to M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer, to visit this country and conduct a series of the orchestra's regular concerts.

M. D'Indy's visit, in which Brooklyn, Baltimore and Washington are to share, should be an unusual opportunity to hear a "first hand" interpretation of the music of the "young French" school, of which M. D'Indy is a prominent exponent. Now in his fifty-fourth year, he has to his credit a long list of interesting compositions, all radical in style, which embrace all the bigger musical forms, symphonic, chamber, operatic and lyric. He will remain in America about four weeks.

The dates of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts are as follows:—Thursday evening concerts, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15, and March 15.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra begins its third season, during which it is to enlarge its scheme of six Saturday evening concerts by adding three on Sunday afternoons. Mr. Modest Altschuler, the conductor, is enthusiastic over the prospects for the season, and is in negotiation with dates of the Saturday evening series are November 18 and December 30, January 27, February 24, March 17 and April 7. The Sunday afternoon dates are December 31, February 25 and April 8.

The plans for the coming season, as announced, of the New York Symphony Orchestra specify more than double as many concerts as this organization gave last year. In the broader scope he thus gives the orchestra's work, Mr. Walter Damrosch is well advised, considering the popular success of last season's Sunday afternoon affairs in Carnegie Hall.

The series of six Sunday concerts will be increased now to eight, and, in addition, each concert will be repeated on the evening of the following Tuesday. The complete schedule of dates is as follows:—

Sunday afternoon concerts:—November 12 and 26, December 10 and 17, January 7 and 14, February 4 and March 4.

Tuesday evening concerts:—November 14 and 28, December 12 and 19, January 9 and 16, February 6 and March 6.

An occurrence of special interest in the orchestra's season will be Mr. Felix Weingartner's appearance as conductor at two afternoon and two evening concerts.

Although no definite plans are yet announced, it is stated unofficially that the People's Symphony Concerts under Mr. F. X. Arens will be continued at Carnegie Hall, a series of five, probably.

Mr. Frank Damrosch announces that the Young People's Symphony concerts will be given on Saturday afternoons again and will number six, as usual.

The Choral Forces.

TURNING to the choral societies, one finds the usual number in the field and one or two new ones. The Oratorio Society will give four concerts this season—December 1 and 27, February 20 and April 3.

At the first concert Mr. Frank Damrosch will present Beethoven's mass in D; at the Christmas concert, "The Messiah," as usual (this work to be repeated the following day); at the third concert Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," and at the fourth Saint-Saëns' "Samson and Delilah."

The Musical Art Society, which Mr. Damrosch has also conducts, will give its [illegible] concerts, the first [illegible] larged by the appearance of the Musurgia Society as a mixed chorus. The Musurgia projects three concerts to be given under Mr. Walter Henry Hall, as conductor, at Carnegie Hall on the evenings of December 6, February 27 and April 24.

The Musurgia has for years been known as one of the two best choirs of men's voices in the city. Mr. Hall's plan to double its membership by admitting an equal number of women's voices seems an excellent one, as by this means the Musurgia can take the place locally which is occupied in Boston by the Cecilia Society. Short dramatic cantatas not now represented on choral programmes are the Musurgia's main objective, with classic madrigals and other secular works of the seventeenth and eighteenth century composers.

Saturday afternoon concerts November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. The advance sale of seats has been an even larger one than usual.

The People's Choral Union will give its annual concert in April under Mr. Frank Damrosch, singing Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," with its well balanced chorus of one thousand voices.

In the chamber music world the Kneisel Quartet will lead in interest and in the importance of its services to the cause of musical art. Mr. Kneisel and his associates will give their usual six concerts at Mendelssohn Hall.

The Boston Symphony Quartet, under Mr. Willy Hess, will give at least three concerts in this its second season. One change occurs in its membership—instead of [illegible] the 'cellist will be [illegible] of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Warnke comes from Munich, where for eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the famous Kaim orchestra, and brings with him not only a soloist's reputation but that of a skilled chamber music player. The other members of the quartet are Mr. Otto Roth, second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, viola, both members of the Boston orchestra. During the summer Mr. Hess has secured some new music abroad which promises to be especially interesting. Prominent in this list of novelties are a new string quartet by Sanding; five "Novellettes," by the Russian, Glazounow; a quintet for strings and flute, by J. B. Buys, a Dutch composer, and other works by L. Senigaglia, Gabriel Fouré and Hans Koessler.

The Kaltenborn Quartet and the Dannreuther Quartet will each give three concerts, and the Olive Mead Quartet may be expected to appear two or three times; so also may the Flonzaley Quartet.

The Recitalists.

THIS brings one to the recital department, which stretches out in the managers' announcements to an extraordinary length. Mr. Henry Wolfsohn is to be on deck with a strong list of artists, which include prominent singers and almost every type of instrumentalist. Besides Mme. Eames' tour, Mr. Wolfsohn has arranged that of Miss Abbott and is also counting on big results for the tours of Mme. Louise Homer and Mr. Campanari. Mme. Homer will open her season on October 10 in Columbus and continue until November 4. Mr. Campanari will appear in Carnegie Hall late in November.

Mme. Eames' concert tour, which opened last week in Bangor, Me., will take her clear across the country. Mr. Wolfsohn has arranged with the Pullman company for a private car, Elysian, and this, one of the largest of its rolling dwellings, has been specially decorated for the prima donna.

The excellent concert organization which will support Mme. Eames includes Mr. Emilio Gogorza, baryton[illegible]; Joseph Hallman, 'cellist, and Ar[illegible]erst Webber, accompanist.

In Mr. Campanari's concert company are [illegible] Martin Kendal, [illegible]; Miss [illegible] with the New York Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Walter Damrosch, in December. If a forecast can be made from Miss Abbott's successful work for the last five years at the Paris Grand Opera, her reception in New York is to be a warm one.

Mr. Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, is another of Mr. Wolfsohn's headliners. Mr. Pugno comes to America in November for seventy concerts. Another artist under Mr. Wolfsohn's wing is Miss Marie Hall, an English violinist of repute, who will make her début on November 8. with an orchestra.

During the last five years Miss Hall has played to notable applause in London, and has won success in Vienna and in Berlin as well. She has just closed a tour through the English provinces, which, if press reports can be trusted, was something like a triumph.

Her tour in this country will embrace sixty appearances east of the Rockies, including three recitals here.

Mr. Wolfsohn has a long list of others who will bid for popular applause this year.

Mr. Loudon G. Charlton has under his management Mme. Gadski, who will make seventy-five concert appearances during her transcontinental tour.

She will first be heard in Boston with the Symphony Orchestra. It is an ill wind that blows nobody good, and the absence of Mme. Gadski from the operatic forces at the Metropolitan benefits concertgoers throughout the country.

Mr. Alfred Reisenhauer, the German pianist, comes under Mr. Charlton's banner, and also Mr. Harold Bauer, always popular as a pianist here. Mr. Bispham will give a series of New York recitals.

Prominent among Mr. Charlton's instrumentalists will be Marie Nichols, violi[illegible] and Miss Elsa Reugger, violoncellist. [illegible] list of Mr. Charlton's well known vocal[illegible] is a long one and includes Mr. Ell[illegible] Van Hoose and Mr. Kelly Cole, ten[illegible] Mme. Shotwell Piper, dramatic sopr[illegible] Mme. Catherine Fisk, contralto, and Francis Rogers, barytone.

Mr. Rogers has this summer done unusual thing of carrying his vocal w[illegible] to the overstocked London market. [illegible] getting a good high price for them in [illegible]

Mr. R. E. Johnston is another manager whose plans are to be important factors in the public's enjoyment of the concert season. Mr. Johnston's stars include Mme. Charlotte Maconda, a dramatic soprano, who has repeatedly made her mark here; Mr. Henri Marteau, a French violinist, and Mr. Jean Gerardy, a Belgian 'cellist, both of whom will be eagerly welcomed back by music lovers. A newcomer will be Mr. Angelo Patricolo, an Italian pianist, of whom London and Berlin have written very flattering notices, and another is Mr. Thaddeus Rich, a young American violinist, who has the indorsement of Nikisch, Joachim and Halir. Others under Mr. Johnston's management are Mme. Wellington, dramatic soprano; Miss Frieda Stender, soprano, and Miss Rose Daniels, violinist.

Among the season's youthful virtuosi is a pianist, not yet eighteen years of age, who owns the rather startling name of "A. Rubinstein." Lest too much should be expected of him, however, it should be said that his Christian name is Arthur, not Anton. A protégé of Joachim and a pupil of D'Albert, Josef Hofmann and Leschitsky, he has recently been discovered in Europe by Mr. Charles Henry Meltzer and engaged for a series of concerts here.

COLORED PAPER

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Buffalo this season for two concerts is an upward jump for musical interests such as this city has not experienced in years and for the subscription sale last week there was a big demand. The sale for the first concert, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, begins on Tuesday morning, September 26th, at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store. It is 12 years since the orchestra was last here and during that time the big organization has steadily advanced. It is reckoned today the best orchestra in America and one of the finest in the world. The conductor, William Gericke, is one of the most distinguished of living musicians, and his orchestra includes many leading solo players.

Several times in the past have attempts been made to bring the orchestra to Buffalo, but all of them have failed, until this year, when 40 men and women of the city joined forces in making possible this great musical treat. The names of these men and women were published in THE TIMES last week, and scanning the list, it is easy to see why the orchestra consented to come, for the names of the 40 are ones to conjure with. At the Boston concerts a program of about an hour and a half is given by the orchestra, but for Buffalo, fairly starved for good orchestral music, a somewhat longer one has been arranged, one the like of which this city has never heard. Every number is a gem and the selections are varied and most interesting, combining beauty, strength and romance. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra and one of the great violinists of the world, will be the soloist at this first concert, playing Max Bruch's Concerto in G Minor. It is melodious, graceful and skillfully made, showing violinist and violin at their best. It demands the highest skill of execution, for it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and also contains a lovely slow movement, which displays the artist's mastery over his instrument. The program begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." But it seems unnecessary to go into detail when the program entire can be published, as follows:

Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27 ..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich) ..... Bach
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26. I. Allegro moderato (G minor). II. Adagio (E-flat major). III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major).....Max Bruch
Italian Caprice, op. 45...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61. I. Sostenuto assai; Allegro, mo non troppo. II. Scherzo; Allegro Vivace (Trio I. and Trio II.) III. Adagio Expressive. IV. Allegro Molto Vivace.....Schumann
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

WILLIAM GERICKE

Talented Director of the Boston Symphony, Which Will Give Concerts in Convention Hall October 4th and February 19th.

That Buffalo is fully aroused to the fact that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after an absence of twelve years, is coming here for two concerts this season, was demonstrated at the opening of the subscription sale for the concerts, which began on Thursday morning at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store and closes this evening at 6 o'clock. A long line of buyers was waiting for the sale to open and the demand has kept up steadily ever since. The first concert takes place at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, the second on February 19th. The sale of seats for the first concert opens on Tuesday morning next at 9 o'clock, also at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels store. All speculation as to the inducement offered the Boston Symphony Orchestra to come here again was set at rest this week by the publication of the names of the 40 Buffalo men and women who are back of the enterprise and who have joined together to make possible this great musical treat. Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, once it was decided to come here, made up his mind to give Buffalo a symphony program, the equal of which has never been played in this city. It is longer than the usual program selected for the orchestra and it includes several exquisite numbers, opening with one of Mendelssohn's most beautiful overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." The extraordinary quality of the string choir of the orchestra is well known; every player is a master, and the beauty of the string orchestra will be fully demonstrated in Bach's Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form. Prof. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the first concert and will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," which demands the highest skill in execution, as it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping. Variety, beauty and romance are combined in the program arranged for the first Buffalo concert by the orchestra, which is as follows:

Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo Form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G. minor, Op. 26 ..... Max Bruch
(1) Allegro moderato (G minor).
(2) Adagio (E flat major).
(3) Finale: Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61...
..... Schumann
(1) Sostenuto assai; Allegro, mo non troppo.
(2) Scherzo; Allegro Vivace.
Trio I and Trio II.
Adagio Expressive.

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin at the store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels, on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts which took place last week was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats left for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of great variety and attractiveness, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It reads as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, Op. 27 ..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form ..... Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, Op. 26 ..... Max Bruch
Allegro moderato (G minor).
Adagio (E flat major).
Finale, Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61. Schumann
Sostenuto assai; allegro, mo non troppo.
Scherzo; allegro vivace.
Trio I and trio II.
Adagio espressivo.
Allegro molto vivace.
Soloist, Willy Hess.

The Mendelssohn overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, inspired by Goethe, was written in the summer of 1833. His sister Fanny gives us the information that in this work he especially avoided the form of an overture with introduction, and wished the composition to stand as two companion pictures. It is a tone picture, painted with all the freshness and vigor of Mendelssohn's youthful genius.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra justly prides itself upon the remarkable quality of its string choir. In this department are included a dozen players who can rank with the notable violinists of the world. It is the policy of the orchestra to get the best men to be had, no matter what the cost, and in the entire string body there is not a poor instrument or an unworthy player. Wonderful results are, therefore, obtainable from the string orchestra, and the second number on the programme will be anticipated with the keenest interest. The Bach Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in rondo form have been arranged for the strings by Sigismund Bachrich, a Hungarian violinist and composer who is one of the professors in the Vienna Conservatory, and who was for twelve years a member of the famous Hellmesberger Quartette in Vienna. His arrangement is naturally most effective, and a test of the capabilities of the orchestra.

Max Bruch's first concerto for violin, in G minor, has been selected by Willy Hess, the eminent violinist, as his solo number. It is a grateful composition which gives the player full scope for his executive skill and is at the same time melodious and beautiful. It is a favorite number with both violinists and public.

Tschaikowsky's compositions all bear, more or less, the impress of his Slavonic temperament, "fiery exultation on a basis of languid melancholy," as one of his critics has written. In the Italian Caprice, which is a bravura work for orchestra, there are the bold modulations, the strong rhythms, the gorgeous effects of orchestration which characterize his writings.

Wilhelm Gericke is one of the orchestra conductors who excel in the interpretation of Schumann works. The great C major symphony, which he has selected for performance, was written during the six years of Schumann's life in Dresden, and is one of his noblest, brightest writings for orchestra.

...ill play the part of a German musician in "The Genius and the Model," which will be the attraction at the Lyceum October 14th. Mr. Lang has been a member of the summer stock at Cook's for the past two years.

--Seventy-five musicians will play at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

--"Soldiers of Fortune," showing the Moore Stock Company in brisk action to a great advantage, at the Baker Theater, is proving the best drawing play the company has yet produced. The theater will be turned over to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night, but "Soldiers of Fortune" will be given at the matinee performance on that day as usual. Next week, "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

HERALD
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 6- 1905

The matinee to-morrow closes the Moore Stock Company's week in "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Baker Theater, the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing there to-morrow night. A matinee will be given to-day also. "Young Mr. Winthrop" is the bill for next week and souvenirs will be given at the Monday and Wednesday matinees and a reception held after the Wednesday afternoon performance.

HERALD
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 6- 1905

It is stated that the brief one week tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be heard at the Baker Theater to-morrow night, is proving a great financial success. At Montreal, Toronto and Buffalo the first three nights of this week the orchestra played before audiences that entirely filled the largest auditoriums in those cities. To-night the orchestra will play in Cleveland, where another big audience is assured.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
DETROIT, MICH.
From
Address
Date OCT 3 1905

Boston Symphony Thursday Night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, and with Willy Hess as soloist, will give the opening concert of the Detroit Orchestral society's series at the Light Guard armory Thursday night. The doors will be closed while the numbers are being played and the program will begin promptly at 8 o'clock; late comers will be obliged to remain outside until the first intermission, immediately following the overture. The sale of seats is in progress at Wright, Kay & Co.'s and a large audience is already assured.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Address
OCT 4 1905

Seventy-five musicans will play at the Boston Symphony concert at the Baker theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

Oct.
OCT 7 1905

FRENCH COMPOSER TO BOSTON MUSIC: M. Vinant D'Indy, the eminent French composer, will conduct the Boston Orchestra at Christmas time. He is at present at the head of the Schola Cantorum in Paris.

...hed: London, 1881; New York, 1884

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
OCT 4 1905

—Peter Lang will play the part of a German musician in "The Genius and the Model," which will be the attraction at the Lyceum October 14th. Mr. Lang has been a member of the summer stock at Cook's for the past two years.

--Seventy-five musicians will play at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

--"Soldiers of Fortune," showing the Moore Stock Company in brisk action to a great advantage, at the Baker Theater, is proving the best drawing play the company has yet produced. The theater will be turned over to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night, but "Soldiers of Fortune" will be given at the matinee performance on that day as usual. Next week, "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

NEWS
SEP 28 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, numbering eighty in the party, who give the opening concert of the regular Massey Hall season on Tuesday evening next, will arrive from Montreal by special train on Tuesday morning. The entire orchestra will stay at the King Edward Hotel. The management of the Boston Symphony never spare expense in taking care of the comforts and interests of the musicians. No other orchestra in the world is composed of such high-class individual virtuosi. Among the violins there are a dozen or more great artists. They are found as well in wood-wind and the strings. There are no less than six well known chamber music organizations within the orchestra, including the Boston Symphony Quartette, the Longy Club, composed of the leading wood-wind and brass instruments, the Rameau Club devoted to old chamber music, the Adamowski trio, the Ondricek String Quartette. The sale of seats is progressing rapidly at Massey Hall, where subscribers can also enter their names for the Emma Eames Festival concert on Oct. 13th.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS-TRIBUNE
DETROIT, MICH.
OCT 8 - 1905

The success of the series of orchestral concerts planned by the Detroit Orchestral association seems a certainty, judging by the enthusiasm and support of the movement evidenced in the splendid audience that filled the Light Guard armory Thursday evening, to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra, which concert marked the opening of the series. The very cream of Detroit's social and musical circles attended and the presence of a very large proportion of the public which claims allegiance to neither one nor the other, showed that the interest is earnest and general in the efforts of the association to place the best orchestras, playing the best music, within the hearing of the masses. The second concert in the series will be given by the Pittsburg Symphony orchestra under Conductor Paur, Saturday evening, Nov. 25.

...1884

IN THE MUSICAL WORLD

The coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Buffalo this season for two concerts is an upward jump for musical interests such as this city has not experienced in years and for the subscription sale last week there was a big demand. The sale for the first concert, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, begins on Tuesday morning, September 26th, at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store. It is 12 years since the orchestra was last here and during that time the big organization has steadily advanced. It is reckoned today the best orchestra in America and one of the finest in the world. The conductor, William Gericke, is one of the most distinguished of living musicians, and his orchestra includes many leading solo players.

Several times in the past have attempts been made to bring the orchestra to Buffalo, but all of them have failed, until this year, when 40 men and women of the city joined forces in making possible this great musical treat. The names of these men and women were published in THE TIMES last week, and scanning the list, it is easy to see why the orchestra consented to come, for the names of the 40 are ones to conjure with. At the Boston concerts a program of about an hour and a half is given by the orchestra, but for Buffalo, fairly starved for good orchestral music, a somewhat longer one has been arranged, one the like of which this city has never heard. Every number is a gem and the selections are varied and most interesting, combining beauty, strength and romance. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra and one of the great violinists of the world, will be the soloist at this first concert, playing Max Bruch's Concerto in G Minor. It is melodious, graceful and skillfully made, showing violinist and violin at their best. It demands the highest skill of execution, for it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and also contains a lovely slow movement, which displays the artist's mastery over his instrument. The program begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." But it seems unnecessary to go into detail when the program entire can be published, as follows:

Overture, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27 ..... Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich) ..... Bach
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, in G minor, op. 26. I. Allegro moderato (G minor). II. Adagio (E-flat major). III. Finale: Allegro energico (G major).....Max Bruch
Italian Caprice, op. 45...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61. I. Sostenuto assai; Allegra, mo non troppo. II. Scherzo; Allegro Vivace (Trio I. and Trio II.) III. Adagio Expressivo. IV. Allegro Molto Vivace.....Schumann
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

WILLIAM GERICKE

Talented Director of the Boston Symphony, Which Will Give Concerts in Convention Hall October 4th and February 19th.

That Buffalo is fully aroused to the fact that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after an absence of twelve years, is coming here for two concerts this season, was demonstrated at the opening of the subscription sale for the concerts, which began on Thursday morning at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels music store and closes this evening at 6 o'clock. A long line of buyers was waiting for the sale to open and the demand has kept up steadily ever since. The first concert takes place at Convention Hall on the evening of October 4th, the second on February 19th. The sale of seats for the first concert opens on Tuesday morning next at 9 o'clock, also at the Denton, Cottier & Daniels store. All speculation as to the inducement offered the Boston Symphony Orchestra to come here again was set at rest this week by the publication of the names of the 40 Buffalo men and women who are back of the enterprise and who have joined together to make possible this great musical treat. Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, once it was decided to come here, made up his mind to give Buffalo a symphony program, the equal of which has never been played in this city. It is longer than the usual program selected for the orchestra and it includes several exquisite numbers, opening with one of Mendelssohn's most beautiful overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." The extraordinary quality of the string choir of the orchestra is well known; every player is a master, and the beauty of the string orchestra will be fully demonstrated in Bach's Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form. Prof. Willy Hess, concert meister of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the first concert and will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," which demands the highest skill in execution, as it abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping. Variety, beauty and romance are combined in the program arranged for the first Buffalo concert by the orchestra, which is as follows:

Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," Op. 27.....Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo Form .....Bach
Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G. minor, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
(1) Allegro moderator (G minor).
(2) Adagio (E flat major).
(3) Finale: Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.....Schumann
(1) Sostenuto assai; Allegro, mo non troppo.
(2) Scherzo: Allegro Vivace.
Trio I and Trio II.
(3) Adagio Expressivo.
(4) Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist, Professor Willy Hess.

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin at the store of Denton, Cottier & Daniels, on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts which took place last week was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats left for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of great variety and attractiveness, and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It reads as follows:

Overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, Op. 27 .....Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form .....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
Allegro moderate (G minor).
Adagio (E flat major).
Finale, Allegro energico (G major).
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.....Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.Schumann
Sostenuto assai; allegro, mo non troppo.
Scherzo; allegro vivace.
Trio I and trio II.
Adagio espressivo.
Allegro molto vivace.
Soloist, Willy Hess.

The Mendelssohn overture, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, inspired by Goethe, was written in the summer of 1838. His sister Fanny gives us the information that in this work he especially avoided the form of an overture with introduction, and wished the composition to stand as two companion pictures. It is a tone picture, painted with all the freshness and vigor of Mendelssohn's youthful genius.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra justly prides itself upon the remarkable quality of its string choir. In this department are included a dozen players who can rank with the notable violinists of the world. It is the policy of the orchestra to get the best men to be had, no matter what the cost, and in the entire string body there is not a poor instrument or an unworthy player. Wonderful results are, therefore, obtainable from the string orchestra, and the second number on the programme will be anticipated with the keenest interest. The Bach Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in rondo form have been arranged for the strings by Sigismund Bachrich, a Hungarian violinist and composer who is one of the professors in the Vienna Conservatory, and who was for twelve years a member of the famous Hellmesberger Quartette in Vienna. His arrangement is naturally most effective, and a test of the capabilities of the orchestra.

Max Bruch's first concerto for violin, in G minor, has been selected by Willy Hess, the eminent violinist, as his solo number. It is a grateful composition which gives the player full scope for his executive skill and is at the same time melodious and beautiful. It is a favorite number with both violinists and public.

Tschaikowsky's compositions all bear, more or less, the impress of his Slavonic temperament, "fiery exultation on a basis of lanquid melancholy," as one of his critics has written. In the Italian Caprice, which is a bravura work for orchestra, there are the bold modulations, the strong rhythms, the gorgeous effects of orchestration which characterize his writings.

Wilhelm Gericke is one of the orchestra conductors who excel in the interpretation of Schumann works. The great C major symphony, which he has selected for performance, was written during the six years of Schumann's life in Dresden, and is one of his noblest, brightest writings for orchestra.

that the Orpheus has engaged Convention Hall and made various other arrangements for its first concert on November 27th, and that the interests of the organization would certainly suffer without a director, he steps into the gap and gives his services entirely without compensation. The selection of Mr. Mischka is a most happy one, and his well-known ability and experience as a chorus director insure a successful musical season for the Orpheus.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
EXPRESS
POST
HERALD
UNION ADVERTISER
NEWS
NEW SYRACUSE

Seventy-five musicans will play at the Boston Symphony concert at the Baker theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

The matinee to-morrow closes the Moore Stock Company's week in "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Baker Theater, the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing there to-morrow night. A matinee will be given to-day also. "Young Mr. Winthrop" is the bill for next week and souvenirs will be given at the Monday and Wednesday matinees and a reception held after the Wednesday afternoon performance.

—Peter Lang will play the part of a German musician in "The Genius and the Model," which will be the attraction at the Lyceum October 14th. Mr. Lang has been a member of the summer stock at Cook's for the past two years.

—Seventy-five musicians will play at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Baker Theater Saturday night. Of all the orchestras of note none surpass the splendid Boston organization, and few anywhere are to be compared with it. Seats for the concert are now selling.

—"Soldiers of Fortune," showing the Moore Stock Company in brisk action to a great advantage, at the Baker Theater, is proving the best drawing play the company has yet produced. The theater will be turned over to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night, but "Soldiers of Fortune" will be given at the matinee performance on that day as usual. Next week, "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

It is stated that the brief one week tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be heard at the Baker Theater to-morrow night, is proving a great financial success. At Montreal, Toronto and Buffalo the first three nights of this week the orchestra played before audiences that entirely filled the largest auditoriums in those cities. To-night the orchestra will play in Cleveland, where another big audience is assured.

Boston Symphony Thursday Night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, and with Willy Hess as soloist, will give the opening concert of the Detroit Orchestral society's series at the Light Guard armory Thursday night. The doors will be closed while the numbers are being played and the program will begin promptly at 8 o'clock; late comers will be obliged to remain outside until the first intermission, immediately following the overture. The sale of seats is in progress at Wright, Kay & Co.'s and a large audience is already assured.

The success of the series of orchestral concerts planned by the Detroit Orchestral association seems a certainty, judging by the enthusiasm and support of the movement evidenced in the splendid audience that filled the Light Guard armory Thursday evening, to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra, which concert marked the opening of the series. The very cream of Detroit's social and musical circles attended and the presence of a very large proportion of the public which claims allegiance to neither one nor the other, showed that the interest is earnest and general in the efforts of the association to place the best orchestras, playing the best music, within the hearing of the masses. The second concert in the series will be given by the Pittsburg Symphony orchestra under Conductor Paur, Saturday evening, Nov. 25.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, numbering eighty in the party, who give the opening concert of the regular Massey Hall season on Tuesday evening next, will arrive from Montreal by special train on Tuesday morning. The entire orchestra will stay at the King Edward Hotel. The management of the Boston Symphony never spare expense in taking care of the comforts and interests of the musicians. No other orchestra in the world is composed of such high-class individual virtuosi. Among the violins there are a dozen or more great artists. They are found as well in wood-wind and the strings. There are no less than six well known chamber music organizations within the orchestra, including the Boston Symphony Quartette, the Longy Club, composed of the leading wood-wind and brass instruments, the Rameau Club devoted to old chamber music, the Adamowski trio, the Ondricek String Quartette. The sale of seats is progressing rapidly at Massey Hall, where subscribers can also enter their names for the Emma Eames Festival concert on Oct. 13th.

FRENCH COMPOSER TO BOSTON MUSIC: M. Vinant D'Indy, the eminent French composer, will conduct the Boston Orchestra at Christmas time. He is at present at the head of the Schola Cantorum in Paris.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Most gratifying in every respect has been the subscription sale for the two concerts which will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall on October 4 and February 19. The sale demonstrates beyond peradventure that Buffalo will welcome most eagerly the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A large part of Convention Hall has been sold by subscription for the two concerts, and there is practically no doubt that the sale for the first concert which will begin next Tuesday morning will fill the capacity of the house.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. The following is the programme:

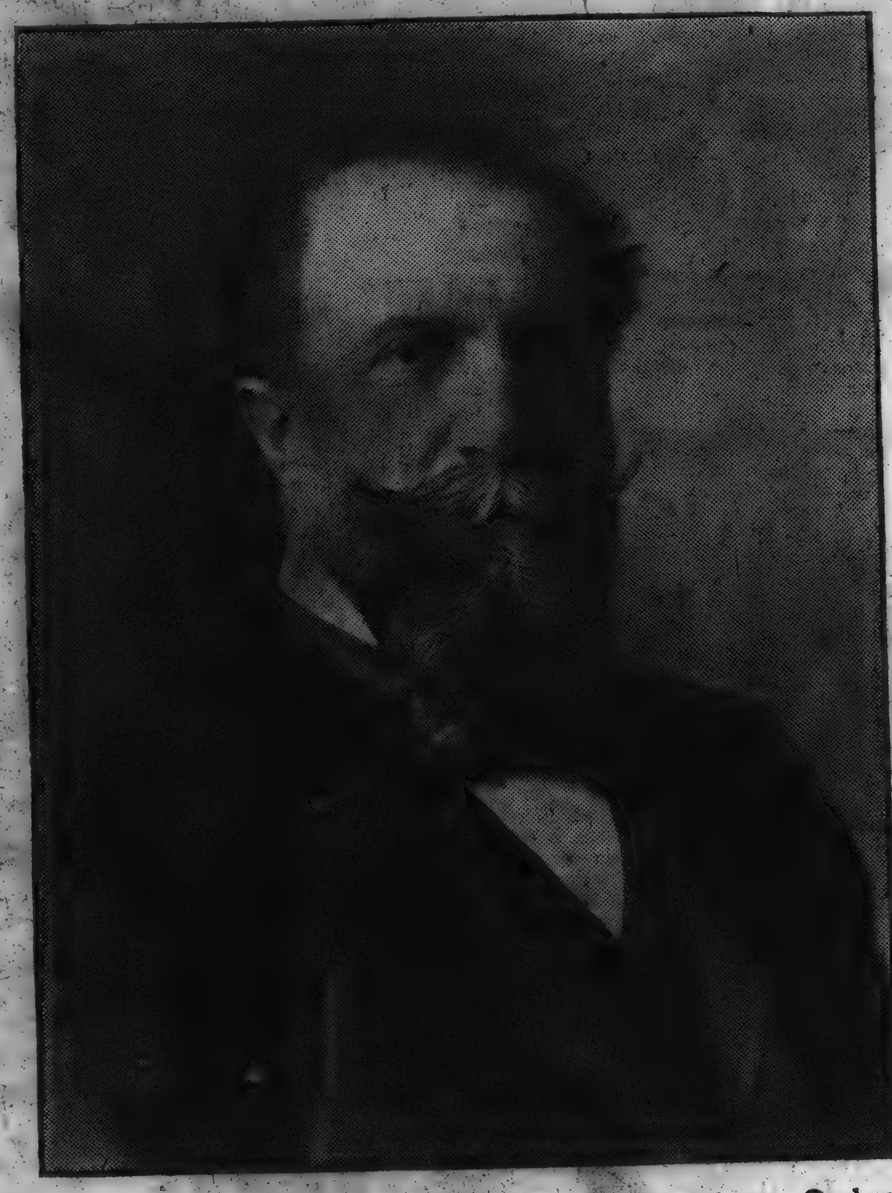
Overture, "Sea-calm and prosperous Voyage," Op. 27..Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte ...Bach
Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
I Allegro moderato.
II Adagio.
III Finale: Allegro energico.
Italian Caprice, Op. 45 ...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61 .....Schumann
I Sostenuto assai; Allegro, ma non troppo.
II Scherzo; Allegro Vivace.
III Adagio Espressivo.
IV Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is noted in the world of music for one thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," one of the most beautiful compositions ever written for the violin. Melodious, graceful and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is a typical bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of an orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

day morning, Sept. 26, at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' music store.



William Gericke, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and One of the Great Conductors of the World.

pedagogy—Mr. Frank Damrosch. Pianoforte—Mr. Sigismund Stojowski. Stringed instruments—The Kneisel Quartet. Organ—M. Gaston M. Dethier. Theory and composition—Mr. Percy Goetschius, Mr. Louis V. Saar.

Musical News in General.

It will delight our musical people to know that we will have at least one week of grand opera by the Savage English Grand Opera Company. The company will be at the Star Thanksgiving week. Mr. Savage's company this season is an exceptionally strong one. He has not only a splendid corps of principals, an excellent chorus, conductors of ability, but also a fine orchestra that is now a part of the organization.

The conductors of the company are: That artist and master, Chevalier Emmanuel; Elliott Schenk, and M. Salvatore.

Chevalier Emmanuel has been with the Savage forces since 1902 and in se-

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although distinctly an Eastern product and maintained primarily for the benefit of Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra whose coming concert here will mark the opening of the musical season, has been one of the chief factors in the development of music in the Middle West and this part of the country owes a debt of gratitude to it that is hardly realized now. For many thousands of persons who now form a part of that magnificent public which is supporting the art of music in the cities of the Middle West, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first that enabled them to realize what orchestra music in the large and best sense of the term means.

Organized in 1881, its first concert having been given on Oct. 22 of that year, the first five years were devoted entirely to Boston and some of the surrounding cities of New England. With the arrival in America of Mr. Gericke, (the successor of Mr. Henschel), in the fall of 1886, and with the rapid advance of the orchestra to perfection, the idea grew that there was a splendid field lying fallow in the West. At that time there were no good orchestras west of the Alleghanies—in fact the only other regularly constituted orchestra was the Philharmonic Society of New York. What orchestral music was heard was given by organizations which now would be called "scratch bands," that is to say, orchestras of occasion, organized for a tour, and to disband after it.

Manifestly artistic results could not be obtained from such means and from [illegible] came requests that the Boston [illegible]phony should give concerts in [illegible] of the country. The problem was difficult. To carry 75 or 80 men [illegible] the country is an expensive [illegible]on, but it was finally decided [illegible] the attempt.

Accordingly in the spring of 1886 a first tour of the Middle West was made. The success was astonishing. No sops were thrown to Cerberus of popular taste. The programmes were like those played in Boston, for Mr. Gericke who was then the conductor, knew no compromise between "good and almost as good." Yet the public responded in a manner which completely bewildered the sceptics, of whom there had been many. Everywhere the concerts were crowded with men and women eager to hear good music, who for the most part were hearing it adequately played for the first time in their lives.

The success of this tour was such, that similar tours were made in the spring of the next succeeding seven years, during the directorship of Mr. Gericke and of his successor, Mr. Nikisch.

Once awakened to the meaning of the orchestral music, the public began to start movements to have orchestras in different cities. Directly to the influence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be traced the foundation and prosperity of such admirable organizations as the permanent orchestras of Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, as well as similar local orchestras which for the past 10 years have been doing missionary work in the cause. It was the Boston Symphony Orchestra which taught the public the possibility and desirability of maintaining such orchestras. It was the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who showed during the early days of that organization that the inevitable deficits were matters of minor moment compared with the other substantial results obtained.

In his article in the Century Magazine last winter, Mr. Richard Aldrich, the eminent critic of the New York Times, said, in speaking of the orchestra and its founder, Mr. Henry L. Higginson:

"He (Mr. Higginson) has raised the standard of orchestral playing in this country immeasurably, and has created a taste and a demand for what was unknown before he began his work. . . . He has caused American music to be spoken of with respect and admiration by every European musician. And all music lovers of his own land ought to rise up and call him blessed."

It is almost needless to state again the date of the first concert, Wednesday evening, Nov. 4, and to add that the sale of single seats will open Tues-

FREE PRESS
DETROIT, MICH.
OCT 5 1905

Boston Symphony Tonight.

Wilhelm Gericke and his men of the Boston Symphony orchestra will arrive in Detroit from Toronto this noon in time for a short rest before their concert in the Light Guard armory tonight. Their short trip has proved a veritable triumphant progress and the management has had every encouragement to make the short foreign season an annual event.

Tonight's program will be as follows: Overture, "Oberon" (Weber); concerto for violin, D minor, No. 9 (Spohr), Mr. Willy Hess; symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique") B minor, Op. 74 (Tschaikowsky); "Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Dance of the Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust" (Berlioz); prelude and "Liebestod," from "Tristan und Isolde" (Wagner).

The seat sale, which is in progress at Wright, Kay & Co.'s, has been gratifyingly large, but curiously, the chief sale has been in the higher priced seats. The bulk of those remaining unsold are of the popular-priced class, and it is to be hoped that there will be a general sale of these, as the ultimate success of the series and future attractions of the same kind in Detroit, depends on the support given by the public.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
OCT 4 190

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA HERE TONIGHT

BRILLIANT AUDIENCE WILL GREET THIS FAMOUS ORGANIZATION AT CONVENTION HALL.

Tonight brings to Buffalo for the first time in nearly 13 years the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, the most famous organization of its kind in the world. Tnight's concert is the first of a series of two, for the orchestra will make a special journey to Buffalo to give another on the evening of February 19th. Convention Hall will see this evening one of the finest audiences which has ever been assempled in Buffalo, for the sale of seats has been gratifying large and the interest in the event most widespread.

This Buffalo concert will be the third the Orchestra has given in its present tour. Leaving Boston on last Sunday eevning it was in Montreal on Monday night and in Toronto last night. From here it goes to Detroit, thence to Cleveland and the last concert will be given in Rochester. From that city it returns to Boston to begin rehearsals for the first set of concerts in its home city, on the 13th and 14th. The concerts in Montreal and Toronto were tremendously successful from every point of view.

The program for tonight is one of the most interesting ever presented in Buffalo. Comprising Mendelssohn's "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," overture, Bachrich's most effective arrangement for string of Bach's "Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo Porm," Max Bruch's Concerto for Violin in G Minor, Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" and finally Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony, No. 2, it provides variety and contrast, as wel las some of the noblest works in the whole literature of music.

The Orchestra brings with it 75 picked musicians. Mr. Gericke will conduct and Professor Willy Hees, one of the greatest of living violinists, will be the solo artist.

NEWS
N. Y.
4 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TONIGHT.

Tonight brings to Buffalo for the first time in nearly 13 years the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, the most famous organization of its kind in the world. Convention Hall will see this evening one of the finest audiences which has ever been assembled in Buffalo, for the sale of seats has been gratifyingly large, and the interest in the event most widespread. This Buffalo concert will be the third the Orchestra has given in its present tour. Leaving Boston on last Sunday evening. It was in Montreal on Monday night and in Toronto last night. From here it goes to Detroit, thence to Cleveland and the last concert will be given in Rochester. From that city it returns to Boston to begin rehearsals for the first set of concerts in its home city, on the 13th and 14th. The concerts in Montreal and Toronto were tremendously successful from every point of view. General admission $1.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
DETROIT, MICH.
OCT 5

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA THURSDAY EVENING

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, arrives in Detroit Thursday from Toronto and will give a concert in the evening in the Light Guard armory. There are 75 men in the organization, with Willy Hess, violinist, as soloist. The concert will begin at 8 o'clock, and the doors will be closed during the rendition of each number. The program follows: Overture, "Oberon" (Weber); concerto for violin, D minor, No. 9 (Spohr), Mr. Willy Hess; symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique") B minor, Op. 74 (Tschaikowsky); "Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Dance of the Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust" (Berlioz); prelude and "Liebestod," from "Tristan und Isolde" (Wagner).

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Most gratifying in every respect has been the subscription sale for the two concerts which will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall on October 4 and February 19. The sale demonstrates beyond peradventure that Buffalo will welcome most eagerly the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A large part of Convention Hall has been sold by subscription for the two concerts, and there is practically no doubt that the sale for the first concert which will begin next Tuesday morning will tax the capacity of the house.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. The following is the programme:

Overture, "Sea-calm and prosperous Voyage," Op. 27..Mendelssohn
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte ....Bach
(Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich).
Concerto for Violin, No. 1, Op. 26 .....Max Bruch
I Allegro moderato.
II Adagio.
III Finale: Allegro energico.
Italian Caprice, Op. 45 ...Tschaikowsky
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61 .....Schumann
I Sostenuto assai; Allegro, ma non troppo.
II Scherzo; Allegro Vivace.
III Adagio Espressivo.
IV Allegro Molto Vivace.
Soloist—Professor Willy Hess.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is noted in the world of music for one thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equalled even by the celebrated Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor," one of the most beautiful compositions ever written for the violin. Melodious, graceful and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is a typical bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of an orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although distinctly an Eastern product and maintained primarily for the benefit of Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra whose coming concert here will mark the opening of the musical season, has been one of the chief factors in the development of music in the Middle West and this part of the country owes a debt of gratitude to it that is hardly realized now. For many thousands of persons who now form a part of that magnificent public which is supporting the art of music in the cities of the Middle West, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first that enabled them to realize what orchestra music in the large and best sense of the term means.

Organized in 1881, its first concert having been given on Oct. 22 of that year, the first five years were devoted entirely to Boston and some of the surrounding cities of New England. With the arrival in America of Mr. Gericke, (the successor of Mr. Henschel), in the fall of 1886, and with the rapid advance of the orchestra to perfection, the idea grew that there was a splendid field lying fallow in the West. At that time there were no good orchestras west of the Alleghanies—in fact the only other regularly constituted orchestra was the Philharmonic Society of New York. What orchestral music was heard was given by organisations which now would be called "scratch bands," that is to say, orchestras of occasion, organized for a tour, and to disband after it.

Manifestly artistic results could not be obtained from such means and from the West came requests that the Boston Symphony should give concerts in that part of the country. The problem was difficult. To carry 75 or 80 men around the country is an expensive operation, but it was finally decided to make the attempt.

Accordingly in the spring of 1886 a first tour of the Middle West was made. The success was astonishing. No sops were thrown to Cerberus of popular taste. The programmes were like those played in Boston, for Mr. Gericke who was then the conductor, knew no compromise between "good and almost as good." Yet the public responded in a manner which completely bewildered the sceptics, of whom there had been many. Everywhere the concerts were crowded with men and women eager to hear good music, who for the most part were hearing it adequately played for the first time in their lives.

The success of this tour was such, that similar tours were made in the spring of the next succeeding seven years, during the directorship of Mr. Gericke and of his successor, Mr. Nikisch.

Once awakened to the meaning of the orchestral music, the public began to start movements to have orchestras in different cities. Directly to the influence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra may be traced the foundation and prosperity of such admirable organizations as the permanent orchestras of Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, as well as similar local orchestras which for the past 10 years have been doing missionary work in the cause. It was the Boston Symphony Orchestra which taught the public the possibility and desirability of maintaining such orchestras. It was the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who showed during the early days of that organization that the inevitable deficits were matters of minor moment compared with the other substantial results obtained.

In his article in the Century Magazine last winter, Mr. Richard Aldrich, the eminent critic of the New York Times, said, in speaking of the orchestra and its founder, Mr. Henry L. Higginson:

"He (Mr. Higginson) has raised the standard of orchestral playing in this country immeasurably, and has created a taste and a demand for what was unknown before he began his work. . . . He has caused American music to be spoken of with respect and admiration by every European musician. And all music lovers of his own land ought to rise up and call him blessed."

It is almost needless to state again the date of the first concert, Wednesday evening, Nov. 4, and to add that the sale of single seats will open Tuesday morning, Sept. 26, at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' music store.

ical Art, Mr. Frank Damrosch director, will include: Singing—Mme. Etelka Gerster, Mme. Hess-Burr, Mlle. Madeleine Walther, Georg Henschel and M. Alfred Giraudet. Sight-singing and pedagogy—Mr. Frank Damrosch. Pianoforte—Mr. Sigismund Stojowski. Stringed instruments—The Kneisel Quartet. Organ—M. Gaston M. Dethier. Theory and composition—Mr. Percy Goetschius, Mr. Louis V. Saar.

Musical News in General.

It will delight our musical people to know that we will have at least one week of grand opera by the Savage English Grand Opera Company. The company will be at the Star Thanksgiving week. Mr. Savage's company this season is an exceptionally strong one. He has not only a splendid corps of principals, an excellent chorus, conductors of ability, but also a fine orchestra that is now a part of the organization.

The conductors of the company are: That artist and master, Chevalier Emmanuel; Elliott Schenk, and M. Salvatore.

Chevalier Emmanuel has been with the Savage forces since 1902 and in'se-

William Gericke, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and One of the Great Conductors of the World.

FREE PRESS
DETROIT MICH
MAR 5
Boston Symphony Tonight.

Wilhelm Gericke and his men of the Boston Symphony orchestra will arrive in Detroit from Toronto this noon in time for a short rest before their concert in the Light Guard armory tonight. Their short trip has proved a veritable triumphant progress and the management has had every encouragement to make the short foreign season an annual event.

Tonight's program will be as follows: Overture, "Oberon" (Weber); concerto for violin, D minor, No. 9 (Spohr), Mr. Willy Hess; symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique") B minor, Op. 74 (Tschaikowsky); "Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Dance of the Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust" (Berlioz); prelude and "Liebestod," from "Tristan und Isolde" (Wagner).

The seat sale, which is in progress at Wright, Kay & Co.'s, has been gratifyingly large, but curiously, the chief sale has been in the higher priced seats. The bulk of those remaining unsold are of the popular-priced class, and it is to be hoped that there will be a general sale of these, as the ultimate success of the series and future attractions of the same kind in Detroit, depends on the support given by the public.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA HERE TONIGHT

BRILLIANT AUDIENCE WILL GREET THIS FAMOUS ORGANIZATION AT CONVENTION HALL.

Tonight brings to Buffalo for the first time in nearly 13 years the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, the most famous organization of its kind in the world. Tnight's concert is the first of a series of two, for the orchestra will make a special journey to Buffalo to give another on the evening of February 19th. Convention Hall will see this evening one of the finest audiences which has ever been assempled in Buffalo, for the sale of seats has been gratifying large and the interest in the event most widespread.

This Buffalo concert will be the third the Orchestra has given in its present tour. Leaving Boston on last Sunday eevning ,it was in Montreal on Monday night and in Toronto last night. From here it goes to Detroit, thence to Cleveland and the last concert will be given in Rochester. From that city it returns to Boston to begin rehearsals for the first set of cencerts in its home city, on the 13th and 14th. The concerts in Montreal and Toronto were tremendously successful from every point of view.

The program for tonight is one of the most interesting ever presented in Buffalo. Comprising Mendelssohn's "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage," overture, Bachrich's most effective arrangement for string of Bach's "Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo Porm," Max Bruch's Concerto for Violin in G Minor, Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" and finally Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony, No. 2, it provides variety and contrast, as wel las some of the noblest works in the whole literature of music.

The Orchestra brings with it 75 picked musicians. Mr. Gericke will conduct and Professor Willy Hees, one of the greatest of living violinists, will be the solo artist.

NEWS
ess

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TONIGHT.

Tonight brings to Buffalo for the first time in nearly 13 years the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra, the most famous organization of its kind in the world. Convention Hall will see this evening one of the finest audiences which has ever been assembled in Buffalo, for the sale of seats has been gratifyingly large, and the interest in the event most widespread. This Buffalo concert will be the third the Orchestra has given in its present tour. Leaving Boston on last Sunday evening. It was in Montreal on Monday night and in Toronto last night. From here it goes to Detroit, thence to Cleveland and the last concert will be given in Rochester. From that city it returns to Boston to begin rehearsals for the first set of concerts in its home city, on the 13th and 14th. The concerts in Montreal and Toronto were tremendously successful from every point of view. General admission $1.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
ess

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA THURSDAY EVENING

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, arrives in Detroit Thursday from Toronto and will give a concert in the evening in the Light Guard armory. There are 75 men in the organization, with Willy Hess, violinist, as soloist. The concert will begin at 8 o'clock, and the doors will be closed during the rendition of each number. The program follows: Overture, "Oberon" (Weber); concerto for violin, D minor, No. 9 (Spohr), Mr. Willy Hess; symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique") B minor, Op. 74 (Tschaikowsky); "Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Dance of the Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust" (Berlioz); prelude and "Liebestod," from "Tristan und Isolde" (Wagner).

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts, which took place last week, was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." This work, the opus number of which is twenty-seven, shows the great composer in the full flush of his melodious youth. Without ostensibly being programme music its whole spirit breathes the meaning of the title.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well-known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equaled even by the celebrated Philarmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's "Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for an orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal of which it is made.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's "Concerto in G Minor." What Liszt's piano forte concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G minor concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful, and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time it contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

Tshaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is typically a bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of the orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

It is a curious fact that there are so few conductors who are in close sympathy with the lovely music written by Robert Schumann. There are many great Beethoven conductors, many great Wagner conductors, conductors who excel in the wonderfully brilliant works of modern romantic writers, but the conductors who reveal the homely heart of the great Wilhelm Gericke is the greatest interpreter of Schumann in the world today, and, if only for this reason, the presence on the programme of Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony, No. 2, would make the concert an event of more than ordinary importance. This symphony is one of the most characteristic works that came from Schumann's romantic genius. It has the brightness, the sunniness, the warmth that characterized the musician before the great misfortune overwhelmed him, and is one of those works which show to such a high degree that German quality which the Germans so expressively call "Gemuethlichkeit."

The sale of single seats for the first concert will begin at Denton, Gottier & Daniels' Tuesday morning, September 26th, at 9 o'clock.

Folowing is the programme:

Mendelssohn—
Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage" Op. 27.

Bach—
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)

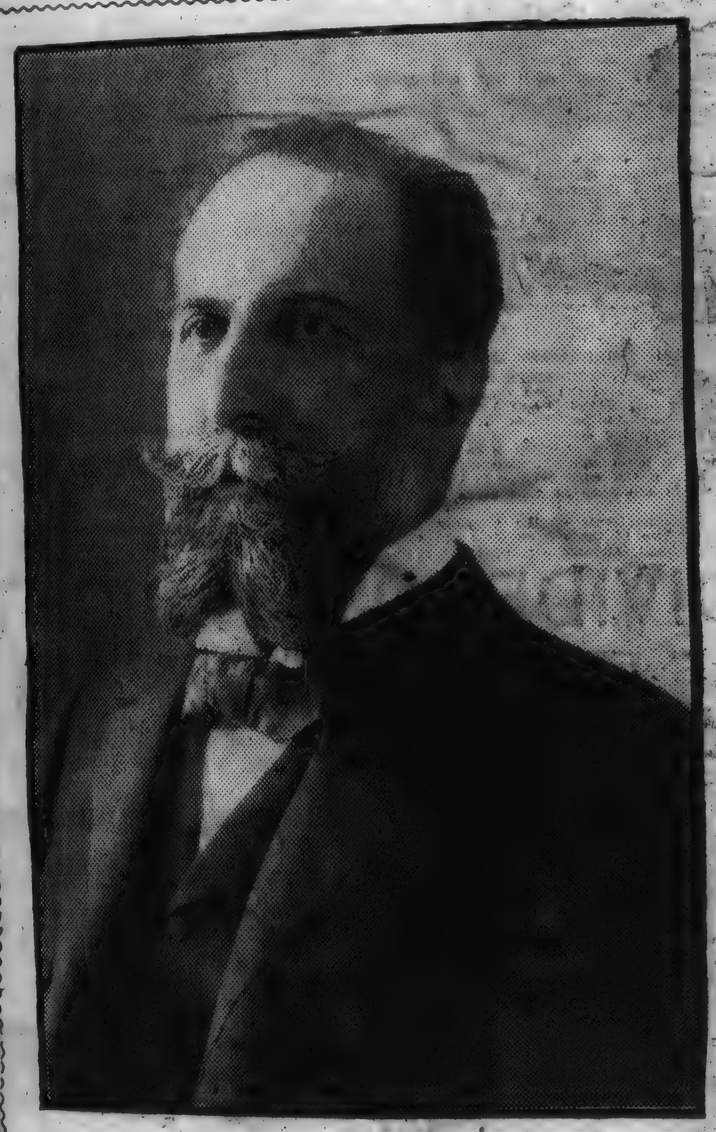
Max Bruch—
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor Op. 26.
I—Allegro moderato (G minor.)
II—Adagio (E flat major.)
III—Finale: Allegro energico (G major.)

Tschaikowsky—
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.

Schumann—
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.
I—Sostenuto assai; Allegro, ma non troppo.
II—Scherzo; Allegro Vivace. Trio I and Trio II.
III—Adagio Espressivo.
IV—Allegro Molto Vivace.

Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

* * *



WILHELM GERICKE.

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at Convention Hall on October 4th.

At the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Convention Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, the public of Buffalo will have an opportunity to hear for the first time one of the most eminent violinists in the world, Prof. Willy Hess, who is now beginning his second year as concert-master of the orchestra. Prof. Hess's career of over thirty years has been crowded with incident and success. He made his debut as a soloist in Holland in 1872, when he was but 13 years old and what is still more remarkable, in the same season he won great distinction by his leading of the celebrated Harfen Quartette, one of the most famous chamber music organizations of its time. Boy violinists of great talent are not uncommon, but a boy of 13 who was successful as a leader of a string quartette must have been very richly endowed.

Prof. Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and at the age of 6 was brought to this country by his parents. In 1872, he was taken by his family to Holland, where he lived for a year and made his first reputation as a virtuoso. The following year his family moving to Heidelberg, the boy began to make tours of the Continent and in Paris made such a deep impression on the cognoscenti that the great Vieuxtemps volunteered to conduct the orchestra at one of his concerts.

In 1876 and 1877 Prof. Hess studied with Joachim, at the end of which time, although still under 20, he was appointed conductor of the opera at Frankfurt-am-Main, and of the Museum concerts in that city. This post he held for eight years, in which time he was thrown constantly in contact with the great musicians of the day, Liszt, Rubenstein, Brahms, Clara Schumann and Wagner. In 1886 he accepted the post of professor of violin in the Conservatory of Rotterdam and leader of the orchestra of that city. Likewise, he became leader of the famous Wirth String Quartette.

After two years in Rotterdam Sir Charles persuaded him to accept the post of concert manager of the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England, which he held for seven years, during which time he was the conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Liverpool, and did a great deal of concert work and teaching.

Prof. Hess left England in 1895 to become the head of the famous Conservatory of Cologne and leader of the celebrated Gurzenrich Quartette. This post he held until 1903, when he returned to England to become professor of violin in the Royal Academy of Music.

His success in America last season was little short of sensational, all the leading critics uniting in saying that he was one of the few really great violinists of the world.

* * *

Father Ludwig Bonvin of Canisius College recently returned

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
BURRALL
BALTIMORE, MD.
ess
OCT 5 - 1905

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sir Edwardd Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America; an overture entitled "In the South" and two small works entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cesar Franck, and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5, a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck; two works by Ferrucio Busoni—a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony, in E major, by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds of Aristophanes," which has never been played by the orchestra; Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include certain very interesting novelties of the modern French school, which will be played under the leadership of M. Vincent D'Indy.

NEWS
ss BALTIMORE, MD
1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEATS.

Concerts On Wednesday Evening Instead Of Tuesdays.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season five concerts in Baltimore, to be given in the Lyric Theatre, on Wednesday evenings (instead of Tuesday), November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers for last season will have until Saturday, October 21, in which to renew their subscriptions for the coming season. The sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23. Mr. Gericke will conduct four concerts. The concert of December 6 will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who has been invited to come to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. The solo artists who will appear will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian programme at the first concert; Herr Reisenauer, the great pianist; Marie Hall, who comes to this country this year for the first time and is reckoned the greatest of women violinists, and M. Henri Marteau, the French violinist. No soloist is announced for the D'Indy concert, which will be devoted entirely to the works of the modern French school.

First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
PA
8 1905

But five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this Winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Wednesday night series having been transferred to Washington. Owing to this fact, to avoid confusion among the subscribers of the first and second series of last year who may wish to renew for this, special arrangements have been made. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last year will have until October 11 in which to renew their subscriptions and get their seats for the coming season. On October 11, 12 and 13, applications from the subscribers for the Wednesday night series of last year will be received and seats will be allotted to them as near as possible to those they occupied last year. On Monday, October 16, applications will be received from new subscribers. Application may be made by mail or in person to Miss H. Harris, 1115 Chestnut Street.

The dates for the concerts are the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 11. The place will be, as usual, the Academy of Music.

This year the strength of the orchestra will be ninety-six performers. With the exception of the December concert, Mr. Gericke will be the conductor. On Monday evening, December 4, Philadelphia will have the opportunity of becoming acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, foremost composer of France, who by special invitation will conduct a series of concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The list of soloists is very strong. For the first concert—a Wagnerian program that great Philadelphia favorite Gadski, and Mr. Elison Van Hoose, have been engaged. The other soloists are Miss Elsa Ruegger, the charming young 'cellist; Henri Marteau, the French violinist, and Timothee Adamowski.

The First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
DRAMATIC MIRROR
n
ess
OCT 14 1905

TORONTO.

At the Grand Oct. 2 Kellar maintains his reputation as a mystifier. Mr. Kellar is assisted by Herr Valador, a clever exponent of sleight of hand. The sketch, The Witch, the Sailor and the Enchanted Monkey, is an entirely new feature and really is the most startling and mystifying deception ever practiced upon an audience. Elsie Janis in The Little Duchess 9.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra held its concert at Massey Hall 8, which marks the opening of the musical season.

The Smart Set is the attraction at the Majestic. The stage settings and costumes are attractive, and the whole entertainment is a pleasing one. Too Proud to Beg 9.

At the Star 2 the Jolly Widows are playing to bumper houses at every performance.

John R. Stewart has resigned as treasurer of the Grand Opera House to [illegible] a partnership with John [illegible] in a new Canadian theatrical [illegible] has now a half interest in a circuit which will embrace five houses in Canada—namely, London, Chatham, Brantford and two other Canadian cities.

STANLEY McKEOWN BROWN.

[52]

The sale of single seats for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Convention Hall, on Wednesday, October 4th, will begin on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. The subscription sale for the two concerts, which took place last week, was most gratifying in every respect to those who have undertaken the great task of bringing this famous orchestra to Buffalo twice during the season. All doubt concerning the success of the series is now banished, and it is certain that there will be very few seats for the door sale of the first concert.

The programme for the first concert is one of the most attractive that has ever been heard in Buffalo and Mr. Gericke is to be thanked and congratulated for having shown such keen discrimination. It begins with one of Mendelssohn's most attractive overtures, "A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage." This work, the opus number of which is twenty-seven, shows the great composer in the full flush of his melodious youth. Without ostensibly being programme music its whole spirit breathes the meaning of the title.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is renowned in the world of music for one particular thing, it is the extraordinary quality of its string choir. It is in this department that the years of work show their finest results, and also is demonstrated the wisdom of the policy which has been always to get the very best men possible, no matter what the cost may be. It is a well-known fact that sitting among the first and second violins, among the violas and 'cellos, are more than a dozen men who rank with the great violin players of the world. And it is another interesting fact that in the whole body of strings there is not a single poor instrument. This combination has brought results that are not equaled even by the celebrated Philarmonic Orchestra of Vienna. The brilliancy and warmth of tone and the perfection of execution have been raised to the maximum degree. For this reason, the second number on the programme will be particularly welcome, Bach's "Prelude Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo Form," which has been arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich. As a general rule, when a Bach sonata is arranged for an orchestra, the real spirit of the music is lost, but this arrangement by Bachrich is a model of its kind, and it not only presents the great Sebastian in one of his sunniest and most melodious moods, but gives the string orchestra ample opportunity to show the metal of which it is made.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist, will play Max Bruch's 'Concerto in G Minor." What Liszt's piano forte concerto in E flat is to pianists, Bruch's G minor concerto is to violinists. Melodious, graceful, and skilfully made, it appeals to all classes of music lovers, and shows the violin and the violinist from every possible point of view. It demands the highest skill of execution. It abounds in rapid passage work and double stopping, and at the same time it contains a lovely slow movement which displays the artist's mastery of cantilena at its best.

Tshaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" is typically a bravura work and tests to the utmost the virtuosity of the orchestra. Attractive in melody and rhythm, it is not only one of the most brilliant things ever written for the orchestra, but one of the most popular.

It is a curious fact that there are so few conductors who are in close sympathy with the lovely music written by Robert Schumann. There are many great Beethoven conductors, many great Wagner conductors, conductors who excel in the wonderfully brilliant works of modern romantic writers, but the conductors who reveal the homely heart of the great Schumann are so few that they may be counted on the fingers of one hand. It is not going too far to say that Wilhelm Gericke is the greatest interpreter of Schumann in the world today, and, if only for this reason, the presence on the programme of Schumann's lovely C Major Symphony No. 2 would make the concert an event of more than ordinary importance. This symphony is one of the most characteristic works that came from Schumann's romantic genius. It has the brightness, the sunniness, the warmth that characterized the musician before the great misfortune overwhelmed him, and is one of those works which show to such a high degree that German quality which the Germans so expressively call "Gemuethlichkeit."

The sale of single seats for the first concert will begin at Denton, Cottier & Daniels' Tuesday morning, September 26th, at 9 o'clock.

Folowing is the programme:

Mendelssohn—
Overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage" Op. 27.

Bach—
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte in Rondo form. (Arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich.)

Max Bruch—
Concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor Op. 26.
I—Allegro moderato (G minor.)
II—Adagio (E flat major.)
III—Finale: Allegro energico (G major.)

Tschaikowsky—
Italian Caprice, Op. 45.

Schumann—
Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.
I—Sostenuto assai; Allegro, mo non troppo.
II—Scherzo; Allegro Vivace. Trio I and Trio II.
III—Adagio Espressivo.
IV—Allegro Molto Vivace.

Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

* * *

WILHELM GERICKE.

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give its first concert at Convention Hall on October 4th.

At the coming concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Convention Hall, on Wednesday evening, October 4th, the public of Buffalo will have an opportunity to hear for the first time one of the most eminent violinists in the world, Prof. Willy Hess, who is now beginning his second year as concert-master of the orchestra. Prof. Hess's career of over thirty years has been crowded with incident and success. He made his debut as a soloist in Holland in 1872, when he was but 13 years old and what is still more remarkable, in the same season he won great distinction by his leading of the celebrated Harfen Quartette, one of the most famous chamber music organizations of its time. Boy violinists of great talent are not uncommon, but a boy of 13 who was successful as a leader of a string quartette must have been very richly endowed.

Prof. Hess was born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1859, and at the age of 6 was brought to this country by his parents. In 1872, he was taken by his family to Holland, where he lived for a year and made his first reputation as a virtuoso. The following year his family moving to Heidelberg, the boy began to make tours of the Continent and in Paris made such a deep impression on the cognoscenti that the great Vieuxtemps volunteered to conduct the orchestra at one of his concerts.

In 1876 and 1877 Prof. Hess studied with Joachim, at the end of which time, although still under 20, he was appointed conductor of the opera at Frankfurt-am-Main, and of the Museum concerts in that city. This post he held for eight years, in which time he was thrown constantly in contact with the great musicians of the day, Liszt, Rubenstein, Brahms, Clara Schumann and Wagner. In 1886 he accepted the post of professor of violin in the Conservatory of Rotterdam and leader of the orchestra of that city. Likewise, he became leader of the famous Wirth String Quartette.

After two years in Rotterdam Sir Charles persuaded him to accept the post of concert manager of the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England, which he held for seven years, during which time he was the conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Liverpool, and did a great deal of concert work and teaching.

Prof. Hess left England in 1895 to become the head of the famous Conservatory of Cologne and leader of the celebrated Gurzenrich Quartette. This post he held until 1903, when he returned to England to become professor of violin in the Royal Academy of Music.

His success in America last season was little short of sensational, all the leading critics uniting in saying that he was one of the few really great violinists of the world.

* * *

Father Ludwig Bonvin of Canisius College recently returned

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

TORONTO.

At the Grand Oct. 2 Kellar maintains his reputation as a mystifier. Mr. Kellar is assisted by Herr Valador, a clever exponent of sleight of hand. The sketch, The Witch, the Sailor and the Enchanted Monkey, is an entirely new feature and really is the most startling and mystifying deception ever practiced upon an audience. Elsie Janis in The Little Duchess 9.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra held its concert at Massey Hall 3, which marks the opening of the musical season.

The Smart Set is the attraction at the Majestic. The stage settings and costumes are attractive, and the whole entertainment is a pleasing one. Too Proud to Beg 9.

At the Star 2 the Jolly Widows are playing to bumper houses at every performance.

John R. Stewart has resigned as treasurer of the Grand Opera House, of London, Ont., and has formed a partnership with John P. Fitzpatrick, of New York, in a new Canadian theatrical circuit. Mr. Stewart has now a half interest in a circuit which will embrace five houses in Canada—namely, London, Chatham, Brantford and two other Canadian cities.

STANLEY McKEOWN BROWN.

[52]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
HERALD
...ORE, MD.
ess

An unusually interesting lot of novelties has been selected by Mr. Gericke for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sir Edwardd Elgar will be represented by three works quite new to America; an overture entitled "In the South" and two small works entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Alexander Glazounov, who stands at the head of living Russian composers, will be represented by a symphonic poem entitled "The Kremlin." "Psyche" is an unknown work by Cesar Franck, and the overture "Libussa" an unknown work by Smetana.

The other works on the list comprise Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 5, a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck; two works by Ferrucio Busoni—a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite; a symphony, in E major, by Amherst Webber; a ballade by Frederick Converse; Max Schilling's overture "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds of Aristophanes," which has never been played by the orchestra; Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube" and an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt entitled "Le Tasse."

This list does not include certain very interesting novelties of the modern French school, which will be played under the leadership of M. Vincent D'Indy.

NEWS
ss ...LTIMORE, MD

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEATS.

Concerts On Wednesday Evenings Instead Of Tuesdays.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season five concerts in Baltimore, to be given in the Lyric Theatre, on Wednesday evenings (instead of Tuesday), November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers for last season will have until Saturday, October 21, in which to renew their subscriptions for the coming season. The sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23. Mr. Gericke will conduct four concerts. The concert of December 6 will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who has been invited to come to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. The solo artists who will appear will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian programme at the first concert; Herr Reisenauer, the great pianist; Marie Hall, who comes to this country this year for the first time and is reckoned the greatest of women violinists, and M. Henri Marteau, the French violinist. No soloist is announced for the D'Indy concert, which will be devoted entirely to the works of the modern French school.

First Established and Most Complete
...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS

But five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this Winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Wednesday night series having been transferred to Washington. Owing to this fact, to avoid confusion among the subscribers of the first and second series of last year who may wish to renew for this, special arrangements have been made. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last year will have until October 11 in which to renew their subscriptions and get their seats for the coming season. On October 11, 12 and 13, applications from the subscribers for the Wednesday night series of last year will be received and seats will be allotted to them as near as possible to those they occupied last year. On Monday, October 16, applications will be received from new subscribers. Application may be made by mail or in person to Miss H. Harris, 1115 Chestnut Street.

The dates for the concerts are the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. The place will be, as usual, the Academy of Music.

This year the strength of the orchestra will be ninety-six performers. With the exception of the December concert, Mr. Gericke will be the conductor. On Monday evening, December 4, Philadelphia will have the opportunity of becoming acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the foremost composer of France, who by special invitation will conduct a series of concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The list of soloists is very strong. For the first concert—a Wagnerian program—that great Philadelphia favorite, Mme. Gadski, and Mr. Elison Van Hoose have been engaged. The other soloists will be Miss Elsa Ruegger, the charming young 'cellist; Henri Marteau, the great violinist, and Timothee Adamowski.

INQUIRER
PHILA., PA
OCT 8 1905

Boston Symphony Concerts

...ree concerts will be given in Philadel-...is winter by the Boston Symphony Or-... the Wednesday night series having ... transferred to Washington. Owing to ... fact, to avoid confusion among the sub-...ers of the first and second series of last ... who may wish to renew for this special ... arrangements have been made. Subscribers ... Monday night series of last year will ... until October 11 in which to renew their ...scriptions and get their seats for the coming ... On October 12, 13 and 14 applications ... the subscribers for the Wednesday night ... of last year will be received and seats ... allotted to them as near as possible ... they occupied last year. On Monday, ... 16, applications will be received from ...scribers. Application may be made by ... or in person to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's ... store, 1115 Chestnut street. If made by ... they must be accompanied by check or ... order, payable to Miss H. Harris.

The dates for the concerts are the Monday ... of November 6, December 4, January ... February 12 and March 12. The place will ... the usual the Academy of Music. ... year the strength of the Orchestra will be ... ninety-six performers. With the exception of ... the December concert, Mr. Gericke will be the ... conductor. On Monday evening, December 4, ... Philadelphia will have the opportunity of be-... coming acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the ... eminent composer of France, who, by special ... invitation, will conduct a series of concerts for ... the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From BALTIMORE, MD
Address
Date OCT 8 - 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season five concerts in Baltimore, to be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings (instead of Tuesday), November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers for last season will have until Saturday, October 21, in which to renew their subscriptions for the coming season. The sale of seats for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 23.

Applications for seats may be made in person or by mail to W. A. Albaugh, 100 North Charles street. Application by mail must be accompanied by check or money order payable to W. A. Albaugh.

Mr. Gericke will conduct four concerts. The concert of December 6 will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who has been invited to come to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts.

The solo artists who will appear will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian program at the first concert; Herr Reisenauer, the great pianist; Marie Hall, who comes to this country this year for the first time and is reckoned the greatest of women violinists, and M. Henri Marteau, the French violinist. No soloist is announced for the D'Indy concert, which will be devoted entirely to the works of the modern French school.

...irst Established and Most Complete ...aper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 9 - 1905

BOSTON ARISTOCRACY OF MUSIC

(Boston Dispatch in New York Herald.)

Boston's 505 is not the aristocracy of the blue book, but of music. They are the willing devotees who count it joy to stand on the steps of Symphony Hall through long Friday mornings from October to April, in fair weather or in foul, in driving storms of rain, hail and snow, or breathing in clouds of dust that they may gain access to the 505 seats of the upper balcony and listen to the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It does not need much money to belong to this aristocracy, but it takes much time. Twenty-five cents is the admission fee, but to be sure that one will not be outside the 505 limit one must be at the hall early in the morning, and the final chord of the great symphony will not die away till after 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

There are two women who have been at the head of the line at nearly every rehearsal for three or four seasons. Next to the leaders the regulars soon begin to assemble, persons who mean to attend every rehearsal, and try to gget near the head of the line, so that they can obtain a particular seat where they fancy the effect of the music is a shade better than it is anywhere else.

The majority of the 505 are women. They come singly and in flocks; they are of all ages, and they have a more pronounced air of business in this matter at least than the men.

They bring books to read; they bring cushions and patent folding camp stools to sit on; they bring luncheons to eat; some of them, and all bring slabs of sweet chocolate. The mind staggers in the effort to compute the amount of sweet chocolate consumed in a single symphony season upon the steps of Symphony Hall.

And it sometimes happens that one of Boston's 400 joins the 505 on the steps of Symphony Hall, for she is determined to hear the symphony, and if there is no ticket to be had at any price for the floor or the first balcony she drives up to the curb in her carriage, with coachman and footman, and takes her place in the line, with a bright new quarter tucked in her glove.

As 1 o'clock draws near the scene becomes more animated. Every trolley car brings its contribution of belated music-lovers, who rush to the end of the line, hoping that they may be among the 505.

Promptly at 1 o'clock the door is opened, and one must have his quarter ready—quarter, not two dimes and a nickel or a dollar, nor anything that requires change. Down they go, jingling into a burlap bag, and a man with a ticker clicks off the numbers until 505 have entered, and the door of hope is closed for that day. An hour and a half more the undaunted 505 must wait before those who have paid high prices begin to pour in.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA., PA
OCT 8 - 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give but five concerts in Philadelphia this season, the Wednesday night series being transferred to Washington. The dates of the five Monday night concerts at the Academy of Music are November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their former seats by applying before October 11. From October 11 to 18 former subscribers to the Wednesday series will be given the first choice of the remaining seats, and applications from new subscribers will be received on and after Monday, October 16. Mr. Gericke will conduct the orchestra as usual, with the exception of the December concert, when M. Vincent d'Indy will be the conductor, the eminent French composer having been invited to come over for this purpose. His visit will be one of the interesting events of the musical season. The soloists announced for the five concerts are Madame Gadski, Ellison Van Hoose, Elsa Ruegger, Henri Marteau and T. Adamowski. A list of the new music which Mr. Gericke has in preparation has already been published.

From SUN
Address BALTIMORE, MD
Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHANGES

Will Play Wednesday Evenings At The Lyric Instead Of Tuesdays.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season five concerts in Baltimore, to be given at the Lyric on Wednesday evenings (instead of Tuesday), November 8, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14.

Mr. Gericke will conduct four concerts. The concert of December 6 will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who has been invited to come to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts.

The solo artists who will appear will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison van Hoose, in a Wagnerian program at the first concert; Herr Reisenauer, the great pianist; Marie Hall, who comes to this country this year for the first time and is reckoned the greatest of women violinists, and M. Henri Marteau, the French violinist. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert, which will be devoted entirely to the works of the modern French school.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA., PA
OCT 7 - 1905

But five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Wednesday night series having been transferred to Washington. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last year will have until October 11 in which to renew their subscriptions and secure their seats. On October 12 and 13 applications from the subscribers for the Wednesday night series of last year will be received and seats will be allotted to them as near as possible to those they occupied last year. On Monday, October 16, applications will be received from new subscribers. Application may be made in person or by mail to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's music store, No. 1115 Chestnut street. If made by mail they must be accompanied by check or money order, payable to Miss H. Harris. The concerts will be given at the Academy of Music on the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12, and March 12. This year the strength of the Orchestra will be ninety-six performers. With the exception of the December concert, Mr. Gericke will be the conductor. On Monday evening, December 6, the conductor will be M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who comes to America by invitation of the Orchestra to conduct one series of concerts.

From STAR
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 8 1905

Boston Symphony Concerts.

Arrangements have been completed for the subscription concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given on five Tuesday afternoons at 4:30 o'clock, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13.

The orchestra will bring to Washington its full membership of ninety-six performers, the same number that is used in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore. In all but one of the concerts the one in December, the conductor will be Mr. Wilhelm Gericke. In December Washington will become acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer, who has accepted an invitation to conduct the orchestra in a series of concerts in Boston and the great cities of the east. M. d'Indy comes to America for this purpose and will be in this country only a few weeks.

At the first concert the great dramatic soprano, Mme. Gadski, will sing. Other soloists will be Prof. Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, pianist, and Henri Marteau, violinist. The engagement is under the management of Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene.

From TIMES
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 8 - 1905

Boston Symphony.

The concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13 at 4:30 o'clock. The orchestra which will come to Washington will comprise ninety-six performers, the same number as is used in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. All but one of the concerts will be conducted by Mr. Gericke, the regular conductor of the orchestra. The second will have as conductor, the eminent French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who is coming to this country by special invitation extended to him by the orchestra.

The local management of these concerts has been intrusted to Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, and it is due largely to her effort that Washington has been restored to the list of cities visited by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A particularly interesting lot of programs have been prepared for the Washington concerts. Not only are the "classics" wisely chosen, but some most attractive novelties are on the list. At the first concert Mme. Gadski will be the solo artist. At the second the special attraction will be M. Vincent d'Indy. Another solo artist will be Prof. Willy Hess, the eminent violinist and concert-master of the orchestra, as well as the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which is to give a series of concerts here during the season. Prof. Hess has never played in Washington, and in view of his sensational success in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore last year, his coming will attract much attention.

The other two solo artists will be Harold Bauer, one of the finest pianists it has been the fortune of this country to applaud, and Henri Marteau, the violinist. Neither of these artists need introduction to Washington.

From TIMES
PHILA., PA
OCT 7 - 1905

...minent d'Indy, the great French com-... will conduct the Boston Sym-...y Orchestra here on December 4. ...soloists to be heard with this or-... are Gadski, Ellison van Hoose, ... Henri Marteau and T. ... There will be five concerts ...

From ITEM
PHILA., PA
OCT 8 - 1905

William Gericke, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestra novelties for the coming musical season. Why does not Mr. Gericke do as much for ... American composers? Webber's work will have its first production in this country at the Boston concerts on December 29 and 30. After the finish of the tour of Mme. Emma Eames, with whom Mr. Webber will journey, on December 17, Mr. Webber will go to Boston as the guest of the Boston Orchestra, to be present at the rehearsals and initial performance. The new symphony has been performed both in Warsaw and London, but he has never heard it. Mr. Webber's opera "Fiorella" was produced at the New Waldorf in London last spring.

From SUN
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 8 - 1905

SUBSCRIPTION SALE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The regular subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given in the New National Theater this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at T. Arthur Smith's, 1327 F street, Wednesday morning, October 18, at 9 o'clock. The prices for the series will be as follows: Orchestra, $10; balcony, first three rows, $10; balcony, other rows, $7.50; gallery, first five rows, $5.00, other rows, $3.75. Boxes, $125.

The concerts will be given on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13, at 4:30 o'clock. The orchestra will comprise ninety-six performers, the same number as in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. All but one of the concerts will be conducted by Mr. Gericke, the regular conductor of the orchestra. The second will have as conductor the eminent French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who is coming to this country by special invitation extended to him by the orchestra.

The local management of these concerts has been intrusted to Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, and it is due largely to her persistent effort that Washington has been restored to the list of cities visited by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There has been general rejoicing in Washington musical circles that arrangements have finally been made to bring the orchestra back. In order to bring this about, it has been necessary to abandon the second series of five concerts in Philadelphia, and this is a sort of poetic retribution, for the Washington concerts were abandoned to give an extra series of five in New York. The inducements held out by Washington for a series of five this winter were so generous that they could not be resisted.

A particularly interesting lot of programmes have been prepared for the Washington concerts. Not only are the "classics" wisely chosen, but some most attractive novelties are on the list. The soloists are very strong. At the first concert Mme. Gadski, who is undoubtedly the leading dramatic soprano of the world to-day, and who is a great favorite in Washington, will be the solo artist. At the second the special attraction will be M. Vincent d'Indy. Another solo artist will be Prof. Willy Hess, the eminent violinist and concert-master of the orchestra, as well as the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which is to give a series of concerts here during the season. Prof. Hess has never played in Washington, and in view of his marked success in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore last year, his coming will attract much attention.

The other two solo artists will be Harold Bauer, one of the finest pianists it has been the fortune of this country to applaud, and Henri Marteau, the violinist. Neither of these artists need introduction to Washington.

[53]

PASTE OVER

...spaper Cutting Bureau in The World
INQUIRER
...

Boston Symphony Concerts

Only five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Wednesday night series having been transferred to Washington. Owing to this fact, to avoid confusion among the subscribers of the first and second series of last year who may wish to renew for this, special arrangements have been made. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last year will have until October 11 in which to renew their subscriptions and get their seats for the coming season. On October 11, 12 and 13, applications from the subscribers for the Wednesday night series of last year will be received and seats will be allotted to them as near as possible to those they occupied last year. On Monday, October 16, applications will be received from new subscribers. Application may be made by mail or in person to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's music store, 1115 Chestnut street. If made by mail they must be accompanied by check or money order, payable to Miss H. Harris.

The dates for the concerts are the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. The place will be as usual the Academy of Music.

This year the strength of the Orchestra will be ninety-six performers. With the exception of the December concert, Mr. Gericke will be the conductor. On Monday evening, December 4, Philadelphia will have the opportunity of becoming acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the foremost composer of France, who, by special invitation, will conduct a series of concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PUBLIC LEDGER
...
OCT 8 1904

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give but five concerts in Philadelphia this season, the Wednesday night series being transferred to Washington. The dates of the five Monday night concerts at the Academy of Music are November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their former seats by applying before October 11. From October 11 to 13, former subscribers to the Wednesday series will be given the first choice of the remaining seats, and applications from new subscribers will be received on and after Monday, October 16. Mr. Gericke will conduct the orchestra as usual, with the exception of the December concert, when M. Vincent d'Indy will be the conductor, the eminent French composer having been invited to come over for this purpose. His visit will be one of the interesting events of the musical season. The soloists announced for the five concerts are Madame Gadski, Ellison Van Hoose, Elsa Ruegger, Henri Marteau and T. Adamowski. A list of the new music which Mr. Gericke has in preparation has already been published.

...ewspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...
ss ...

But five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Wednesday night series having been transferred to Washington. Subscribers for the Monday night series of last year will have until October 11 in which to renew their subscriptions and secure their seats. On October 11, 12, and 13 applications from the subscribers for the Wednesday night series of last year will be received and seats will be allotted to them as near as possible to those they occupied last year. On Monday, October 16, applications will be received from new subscribers. Application may be made in person or by mail to Miss H. Harris, Heppe's music store, No. 1115 Chestnut street. If made by mail they must be accompanied by check or money order, payable to Miss H. Harris. The concerts will be given in the Academy of Music on the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12, and March 12. This year the strength of the Orchestra will be ninety-six performers. With the exception of the December concert, Mr. Gericke will be the conductor. On Monday evening, December 6, the conductor will be M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who comes to America by invitation of the Orchestra to conduct one series of concerts.

n ...
ress ...
e ...
OCT 7 1904

Vincent d'Indy, the great French composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on December 4. The soloists to be heard with this organization are Gadski, Ellison van Hoose, Elsa Reugger, Henri Marteau and T. Adamowski. There will be five concerts during the season. 18

...Cutting Bureau in The World
From ...
Address ...
Date ...

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season five concerts in Baltimore, to be given in the Lyric Theater on Wednesday evenings (instead of Tuesday), November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers for last season will have until Saturday, October 21, in which to renew their subscriptions for the coming season. The sale of seats for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 23.

Applications for seats may be made in person or by mail to W. A. Albaugh, 109 North Charles street. Application by mail must be accompanied by check or money order payable to W. A. Albaugh.

Mr. Gericke will conduct four concerts. The concert of December 6 will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who has been invited to come to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts.

The solo artists who will appear will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian program at the first concert; Herr Reisenauer, the great pianist; Marie Hall, who comes to this country this year for the first time and is reckoned the greatest of women violinists, and M. Henri Marteau, the French violinist. No soloist is announced for the D'Indy concert, which will be devoted entirely to the works of the modern French school.

...Cutting Bureau in The World
From SUN
Address ...
Date ...

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHANGES

Will Play Wednesday Evenings At The Lyric Instead Of Tuesdays.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season five concerts in Baltimore, to be given at the Lyric on Wednesday evenings (instead of Tuesday), November 8, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14.

Mr. Gericke will conduct four concerts. The concert of December 6 will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who has been invited to come to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts.

The solo artists who will appear will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison van Hoose, in a Wagnerian program at the first concert; Herr Reisenauer, the great pianist; Marie Hall, who comes to this country this year for the first time and is reckoned the greatest of women violinists, and M. Henri Marteau, the French violinist. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert, which will be devoted entirely to the works of the modern French school.

...Cutting Bureau in the World
...

Boston Symphony Concerts.

Arrangements have been completed for the subscription concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given on five Tuesday afternoons at 4:30 o'clock, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13.

The orchestra will bring to Washington its full membership of ninety-six performers, the same number that is used in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore. In all but one of the concerts the one in December, the conductor will be Mr. Wilhelm Gericke. In December Washington will become acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer, who has accepted an invitation to conduct the orchestra in a series of concerts in Boston and the great cities of the east. M. d'Indy comes to America for this purpose and will be in this country only a few weeks.

At the first concert the great dramatic soprano, Mme. Gadski, will sing. Other soloists will be Prof. Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, pianist, and Henri Marteau, violinist. The engagement is under the management of Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene.

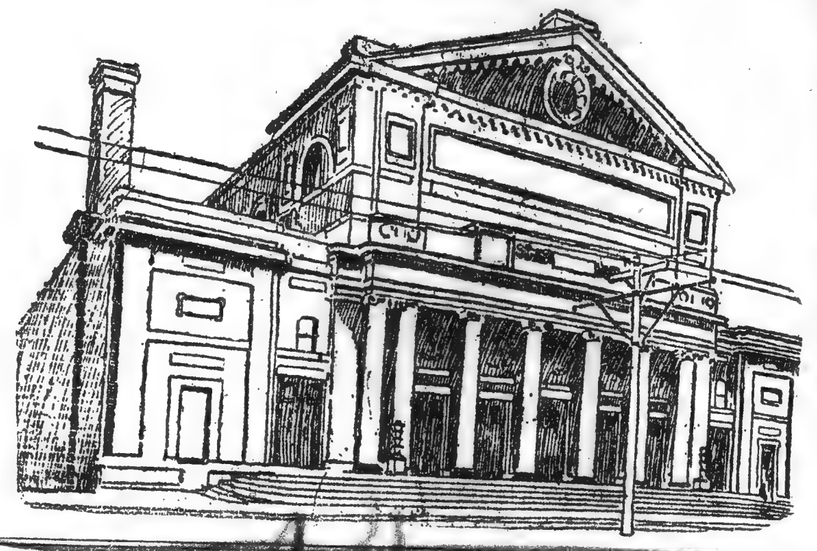
ITEM
...

William Gericke, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has selected the new symphony by Amherst Webber as one of his orchestra novelties for the coming musical season. Why does not Mr. Gericke do as much for ...

American composers? Webber's work will have its first production in this country at the Boston concerts on December 29 and 30. After the finish of the tour of Mme. Emma Eames, with whom Mr. Webber will journey, on December 17. Mr. Webber will go to Boston as the guest of the Boston Orchestra, to be present at the rehearsals and initial performance. The new symphony has been performed both in Warsaw and London, but he has never heard it. Mr. Webber's opera "Fiorella" was produced at the New Waldorf Theatre in London, last spring.

...First Established and Most Complete ...aper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
...
9 - 1904

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON.



BOSTON ARISTOCRACY OF MUSIC

(Boston Dispatch in New York Herald.)

Boston's 505 is not the aristocracy of the blue book, but of music. They are the willing devotees who count it joy to stand on the steps of Symphony Hall through long Friday mornings from October to April, in fair weather or in foul, in driving storms of rain, hail and snow, or breathing in clouds of dust that they may gain access to the 505 seats of the upper balcony and listen to the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It does not need much money to belong to this aristocracy, but it takes much time. Twenty-five cents is the admission fee, but to be sure that one will not be outside the 505 limit one must be at the hall early in the morning, and the final chord of the great symphony will not die away till after 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

There are two women who have been at the head of the line at nearly every rehearsal for three or four seasons. Next to the leaders the regulars soon begin to assemble, persons who mean to attend every rehearsal, and try to gget near the head of the line, so that they can obtain a particular seat where they fancy the effect of the music is a shade better than it is anywhere else.

The majority of the 505 are women. They come singly and in flocks; they are of all ages, and they have a more pronounced air of business in this matter at least than the men.

They bring books to read; they bring cushions and patent folding camp stools to sit on; they bring luncheons to eat, some of them, and all bring slabs of sweet chocolate. The mind staggers in the effort to compute the amount of sweet chocolate consumed in a single symphony season upon the steps of Symphony Hall.

And it sometimes happens that one of Boston's 400 joins the 505 on the steps of Symphony Hall, for she is determined to hear the symphony, and if there is no ticket to be had at any price for the floor or the first balcony she drives up to the curb in her carriage, with coachman and footman, and takes her place in the line, with a bright new quarter tucked in her glove.

As 1 o'clock draws near the scene becomes more animated. Every trolley car brings its contribution of belated music-lovers, who rush to the end of the line, hoping that they may be among the 505.

Promptly at 1 o'clock the door is opened, and one must have his quarter ready—quarter, not two dimes and a nickel or a dollar, nor anything that requires change. Down they go, jingling into a burlap bag, and a man with a ticker clicks off the numbers until 505 have entered, and the door of hope is closed for that day. An hour and a half more the undaunted 505 must wait before those who have paid high prices begin to pour in.

...
IMES
...

Boston Symphony.

The concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13 at 4:30 o'clock. The orchestra which will come to Washington will comprise ninety-six performers, the same number as is used in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. All but one of the concerts will be conducted by Mr. Gericke, the regular conductor of the orchestra. The second will have as conductor, the eminent French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who is coming to this country by special invitation extended to him by the orchestra.

The local management of these concerts has been intrusted to Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, and it is due largely to her effort that Washington has been restored to the list of cities visited by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A particularly interesting lot of programs have been prepared for the Washington concerts. Not only are the "classics" wisely chosen, but some most attractive novelties are on the list. At the first concert Mme. Gadski will be the solo artist. At the second the special attraction will be M. Vincent d'Indy. Another solo artist will be Prof. Willy Hess, the eminent violinist and concert-master of the orchestra, as well as the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which is to give a series of concerts here during the season. Prof. Hess has never played in Washington, and in view of his sensational success in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore last year, his coming will attract much attention.

The other two solo artists will be Harold Bauer, one of the finest pianists it has been the fortune of this country to applaud, and Henri Marteau, the violinist. Neither of these artists needs introduction to Washington.

SUBSCRIPTION SALE BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The regular subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given in the New National Theater this winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open at T. Arthur Smith's, 1327 F street, Wednesday morning, October 18, at 9 o'clock. The prices for the series will be as follows: Orchestra, $10; balcony, first three rows, $10; balcony, other rows, $7.50; gallery, first five rows, $5.00, other rows, $3.75. Boxes, $125.

The concerts will be given on the Tuesday afternons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13, at 4:30 o'clock. The orchestra will comprise ninety-six performers, the same number as in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. All but one of the concerts will be conducted by Mr. Gericke, the regular conductor of the orchestra. The second will have as conductor the eminent French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who is coming to this country by special invitation extended to him by the orchestra.

The local management of these concerts has been intrusted to Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene, and it is due largely to her persistent effort that Washington has been restored to the list of cities visited by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There has been general rejoicing in Washington musical circles that arrangements have finally been made to bring the orchestra back. In order to bring this about, it has been necessary to abandon the second series of five concerts in Philadelphia, and this is a sort of poetic retribution, for the Washington concerts were abandoned to give an extra series of five in New York. The inducements held out by Washington for a series of five this winter were so generous that they could not be resisted.

A particularly interesting lot of programmes have been prepared for the Washington concerts. Not only are the "classics" wisely chosen, but some most attractive novelties are on the list. The soloists are very strong. At the first concert Mme. Gadski, who is undoubtedly the leading dramatic soprano of the world to-day,, and who is a great favorite in Washington, will be the solo artist. At the second the special attraction will be M. Vincent d'Indy. Another solo artist will be Prof. Willy Hess, the eminent violinist and concert-master of the orchestra, as well as the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which is to give a series of concerts here during the season. Prof. Hess has never played in Washington, and in view of his marked success in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore last year, his coming will attract much attention.

The other two solo artists will be Harold Bauer, one of the finest pianists it has been the fortune of this country to applaud, and Henri Marteau, the violinist. Neither of these artists need introduction to Washington.

[53]

PASTE OVER

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
JOURNAL

Symphony Orchestra Drew Better Than Prize Fight

Detroit Redeems Itself by Its Appreciation of the Boston Musicians—A Beautiful Program Well Rendered.

On former occasions it has generally been necessary to secure a lively prize fight to fill completely the Light Guard armory. One naturally hesitates to associate the fistic art with the Boston Symphony orchestra, but certain comparisons and suggestions would thrust themselves upon the mind Thursday evening when that organization, the one institution for which the gilded dome of the State house has a right to illuminate the Commons as the hub of the American universe, drew to the armory as fine an audience as has ever been packed into the building and which thus inaugurated the season of concerts which the Detroit Orchestral association has prepared.

WILHELM GERICKE,
The Placid but Successful Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In commonplace language, it was a success. No better music has been heard in the city within recent memory and the expressions of genuine enjoyment and approval formed a constant chorus as the crowd slowly scattered to the street when the last notes of the "Love-Death" motif died away.

Every one and his neighbor helped to pay homage to Mr. Higginson's orchestra and to prove that when a real effort is made the proper respect can be shown for the classics in music. It was neither an exclusive gathering for society nor for the musical colony. The crowd was as thoroughly representative of the best life of the city as one could imagine, and there were more familiar faces to count and nod to than one could hope to find at the opening of a gift enterprise.

And how they absorbed the music of that orchestra! From the moment that the king's magic horn blew those sweetly touching notes of distress to summon the fairies in "Oberon" to the last pessimistic grunt of the bassoons in the Tschaikowsky "Swan Song," the No. 6 symphony, there was rapt appreciation and respectful applause. That crowd certainly behaved well.

Gericke is neither a freak musician nor a grandstand player. He looks as much like a well-groomed banker as an interpreter of Bach, and when he gets those marvelous effects of ensemble, when every bow seems to melt into one, it is done by a quiet method in which the left hand is rarely used and the right never becomes grotesque nor ferocious. If Gericke is emotional in his interpretation his outward movements do not show it.

In its entirety the program was well selected, played beyond praise and thoroughly enjoyable. But special words of commendation should be given Willy Hess for his delicate and pleasing interpretation of the Spohr D minor concerto.

...EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 7 - 1905

In Musical Circles

The Boston Symphony will play at the Baker theater to-night. That is a fact which ought to make music-lovers feel a glow of satisfaction. Would that the visits of the Bostonians were an annual affair. It might be so, if our people would bestir themselves. Buffalo is to have periodical visits and so is Toronto. Now it has been the opinion of Rochesterians for some years past that, in the matter of music, they could set the Buffalonians a good example. We had a week's grand opera and Buffalo had none; we have a Tuesday Musicale and Buffalo has none; we have an orchestra and Buffalo's orchestras are fleeting affairs which do not last long enough to be really said to exist. Yet, when it comes to the highest form of orchestral music Rochester falls behind. Turn now from these general considerations to the programme. The concert will open with the "Oberon" overture. It is the music of the land of romance, with glimpses into faerie. If the student wants to hear the wood-wind used with the skill of a master of instrumentation who is also a poet, he may find his opportunity in "Oberon." The Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form by John Sebastian Bach are an interlude for strings. The Prelude and Gavotte are taken from the violin partita in E major; the Adagio is taken from the violin sonata in A minor. The arrangement of the numbers for strings is the work of Sigismund Bachrich. Misguided persons think that a composition should never, under any possible circumstances, be played on any instrument save the one for which it was written. But, after all, an arrangement, if it is done reverentially, brings before the attention of thousands exquisite works which otherwise would only be known to the few. If the arrangement is beautiful that is sufficient justification. The symphony will be the "Pathetic" of Peter, Tschaikowsky a work which, thanks to Herman Dossenbach, Rochesterians are very familiar. In the composer's words it came into being the "best of all" of all his works. Composers, like litteratteurs, are not always good judges of their own work. Milton preferred "Paradise Regained" to "Paradise Lost," but in this instance Tschaikowsky's opinion is the opinion of all the world. The "suicide" legend has done something to give the work an accidental interest, but now when all that mass of tradition is discredited, the "Pathetic" stands out as one of the great symphonies of modern times. The overture to "Tannhauser" is the concluding orchestral number. This is a case in which familiarity, so far from breeding contempt, only adds to the popular affection for the work. It seems incredible that after hearing "Tannhauser," Fetis, the great French critic, should have been able to write of the opera, "There is only one tune in it—and what a tune!" But we must make allowance for the fact that Wagner wrote in a new idiom and the world had to take time to learn it. The soloist of the concert is Willy Hess, a violinist of great taste and authority. With the orchestra he will play the Max Bruch violin concerto in G minor, a composition not before heard in Rochester.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
HERALD
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
ress

Boston Symphony Concert To-night.

Rochester will enjoy this evening the musical feast eagerly looked forward to when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its single concert here at the Baker Theater. About all that can be said in praise of the superlative merits of this probably the greatest body of instrumental players in the world, has already been written. The concert is advertised for 8.15 o'clock precisely; and it is hoped that the entire audience will be seated before that hour. Unreserved seats for the gallery will be on sale at 7.30 o'clock to-night. The orchestra will arrive this morning from Cleveland and will be quartered at the Powers. It played earlier in the week to overflowing audiences at Montreal, Detroit, Buffalo and Toronto. It was the first visit of the organization to Canada. The musical critic of the Toronto Globe closes a long review of the concert in that city with the following:

"The orchestra conquered all disposition to be negative in praise. The elevated song of the violins, so pure, so sustained in their cantilena, the melting accents of the clarinets and oboes in their beautiful responses, and, again, the ethereal trills of the violins in octaves, were marvels of achievement in tone, execution and sentiment. The finale, broad and forceful in its general outlines, develops to a climax of much grandeur and power, so that the work, as a whole, made a striking impression. Conductor Gericke was recalled four or five times by the insistent applause, but could not be constrained to respond with an encore number."

...wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
LEADER
...LAND, OHIO
... 6 - 1905

BOSTON ORCHESTRA COMES IN SPECIAL TRAIN TO-DAY.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a concert in Grays' Armory to-night, will arrive in Cleveland at 3 o'clock this afternoon from Detroit. It comes by a special train and travels in three of the largest size Pullman cars. One large baggage car is needed to carry its luggage. The sale of seats, which has been going on at the store of the Burrows Brothers Company, in Euclid avenue, since Monday, has been large and a full house is practically assured.

...om UNION HERALD
...ress
...ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 6 - 1905

The last performance of "Soldiers of Fortune" by the Moore Stock Company will be given at the Baker Theater this afternoon. There will be no evening performance as the stage will be occupied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the matinee performance will be given as usual.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five men strong, arrives in town this morning, from Cleveland, for the concert to be given at the Baker Theater to-night. The sale of seats has been large but some good locations may still be had. This will be the last concert of the orchestra's short tour of one week. It will return from here direct to Boston where the concert season opens next week. An interesting feature which makes the splendid programme offered for to-night doubly interesting will be the distribution of printed programmes having explanatory notes of each number. They touch briefly the biographical data of each composer and also give detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this the notes are so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

...wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...RNAL
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 6 - 1905

To-morrow's matinee closes the Moore Stock company's week in "Soldiers of Fortune," at the Baker, the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing to-morrow night. A matinee wil be given to-day and also to-morrow. "Young Mrs. Winthrop" is the bill for next week and souvenirs will be given at the Monday and Wednesday matinees and a reception held after the Wednesday afternon performance.

Two performances daily are given at the Corinthian theater.

...wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...ICLE
...ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 6 - 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to present one of the choicest programmes ever heard in Rochester at the Baker Theater to-morrow evening. The performance will of course be of the highest technical perfection, while the interpretations of Conductor Gericke will be brilliant and fascinating. A violin solo by Willy Hess, the famous concertmeister, will be an attractive feature. The sale of seats indicates a house filled to its capacity.

...wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...ADVERTISER
...ROCHESTER, N.Y.
OCT 6 - 1905

To-morrow's matinee closes the ...oore stock company's week in "Sol...ers of Fortune" at the Baker, the Bos...n Symphony Orchestra playing the ...eater to-morrow night. A matinee ...ill be given to-day also. "Young Mrs. ...inthrop" is the bill for next week and ...ouvenirs will be given at the Monday ...d Wednesday matinees and a recep...n held after the Wednesday afternoon ...erformance.

...wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
UNION ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
...ss
OCT 7 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Members of Orchestra Arrived To-Day—Concert To-Night.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five men strong, arrived to-day from Cleveland, for the concert to be given at the Baker Theater to-night. The sale of seats has been large. This will be the last concert of the ochestra's short tour of one week. It will return from here direct to Boston where the concert season opens next week.

An interesting feature which makes the programme offered for to-night doubly interesting will be the distribution of printed programmes having explanatory notes of each number. They touch briefly the biographical data of each composer and also give detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this the notes are so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

...om TIMES
...ROCHESTER, N.Y.
dress
OCT 6 - 1905

All the famous artists who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be with that organization when it gives its concert at the Baker Theater tomorrow night. It is to be hoped that tomorrow night's audience will be of a size to induce a return visit of the orchestra another year. The sale of seats is already large.

...Sunday ..., New York, 18...

Town Topics

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

A FITTING prelude to an auspicous season of music was unquestionably the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Grays' Armory last Friday evening. It was a musical feast in which the musician reveled, and the music lover found complete enjoyment. Some exceptions could have been taken at different things, such as the length and arrangement of the program, and the lack at times of musical enthusiasm among the musicians of the orchestra, but the tout ensemble was perfect. The program, although a beautiful one, was not exactly arranged to please the musician, and certainly not the laity. The Beethoven Symphony would have been used to better advantage if it had been placed first on the program. Wagner's "Waldweben" would have made an ideal climax to a musical feast such as we have seldom, if ever, heard locally. Gericke has been spoken of as a scholarly and not an emotional conductor. He is emotional, there is no doubt about that, for if he were not he would be unable to give as beautiful a rendition as he did of the Bach number and Wagner's "Waldweben," but withal he is like the magician, quiet, easy, clever and suave in his movements. It is a well known fact that Gericke is a stern disciplinarian, and his conducting is as decisive as if he had spoken. His reading of the scores was most idealistic. Willy Hess, the concertmeister and violin soloist, is a talented player. He is not an Ysaye, but, nevertheless, he is an excellent artist. His tone is broad, and as to technic he stands well up in the ranks of the foremost players. His support was ideal, and why should it not be? Gericke has the best players in the world, and one could almost take for granted that each of the first violinists were as conversant as Hess was in the Bruch concerto and could play it nearly as well as Hess himself. Hess is a thorough musician, who has devoted, like Gericke, a great many years to it, but he could hardly be called anything but a scholarly player. It is doubtful if he could cast a spell over one with his playing; he is not what one would call a passionate and soul-stirring player, but a thorough, well versed violinist and musician. One of the largest audiences that ever attended a symphony concert was present and, judging from the attendance, it is quite probable that we may hear them again in the near future. The brass, wood, wind and reed section of the orchestra is a marvelous combination. It was really a revelation to the average symphony patron and enthusiast who had never had the pleasure of hearing this organization play. Their attack is perfect, and it seems impossible to look for improvement in this direction. It is safe to say that seldom, if ever, has a Cleveland audience been treated to a more charming, masterly and beautiful interpretation than Gericke gave of Wagner's "Waldweben." The different motifs were carried out in a manner difficult to surpass. The wood, wind and reed instruments made an ideal background for the entrancing strings. In the Bach number the Gavotte movement was the one that created the most enthusiasm. Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach number is delicious, and to think this man was once engaged in the crinoline business, with talents so rare seems verily a sacrilege. Mendelssohn's Overture was received rapturously and in a measure prepared the audience for what was to follow. And so the first concert of the season ended in a blaze of glory, and making friends galore for the orchestra. Monday they played in Montreal, Tuesday in Toronto, Wednesday in Buffalo, Thursday in Detroit, and here on Friday. They played the same program throughout their tour.

per Cutting Bureau in the World
JOURNAL

Symphony Orchestra Drew Better Than Prize Fight

Detroit Redeems Itself by Its Appreciation of the Boston Musicians—A Beautiful Program Well Rendered.

On former occasions it has generally been necessary to secure a lively prize fight to fill completely the Light Guard armory. One naturally hesitates to associate the fistic art with the Boston Symphony orchestra, but certain comparisons and suggestions would thrust themselves upon the mind Thursday evening when that organization, the one institution for which the gilded dome of the State house has a right to illuminate the Commons as the hub of the American universe, drew to the armory as fine an audience as has ever been packed into the building and which thus inaugurated the season of concerts which the Detroit Orchestral association has prepared.

WILHELM GERICKE,
The Placid but Successful Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In commonplace language, it was a success. No better music has been heard in the city within recent memory and the expressions of genuine enjoyment and approval formed a constant chorus as the crowd slowly scattered to the street when the last notes of the "Love-Death" motif died away.

Every one and his neighbor helped to pay homage to Mr. Higginson's orchestra and to prove that when a real effort is made the proper respect can be shown for the classics in music. It was neither an exclusive gathering for society nor for the musical colony. The crowd was as thoroughly representative of the best life of the city as one could imagine, and there were more familiar faces to count and nod to than one could hope to find at the opening of a gift enterprise.

And how they absorbed the music of that orchestra! From the moment that the king's magic horn blew those sweetly touching notes of distress to summon the fairies in "Oberon" to the last pessimistic grunt of the bassoons in the Tschaikowsky "Swan Song," the No. 6 symphony, there was rapt appreciation and respectful applause. That crowd certainly behaved well.

Gericke is neither a freak musician nor a grandstand player. He looks as much like a well-groomed banker as an interpreter of Bach, and when he gets those marvelous effects of ensemble, when every bow seems to melt into one, it is done by a quiet method in which the left hand is rarely used and the right never becomes grotesque nor ferocious. If Gericke is emotional in his interpretation his outward movements do not show it.

In its entirety the program was well selected, played beyond praise and thoroughly enjoyable. But special words of commendation should be given Willy Hess for his delicate and pleasing interpretation of the Spohr D minor concerto.

---

om ..... Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

dress .....

The last performance of "Soldiers of Fortune" by the Moore Stock Company will be given at the Baker Theater this afternoon. There will be no evening performance as the stage will be occupied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the matinee performance will be given as usual.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five men strong, arrives in town this morning, from Cleveland, for the concert to be given at the Baker Theater to-night. The sale of seats has been large but some good locations may still be had. This will be the last concert of the orchestra's short tour of one week. It will return from here direct to Boston where the concert season opens next week. An interesting feature which makes the splendid programme offered for to-night doubly interesting will be the distribution of printed programmes having explanatory notes of each number. They touch briefly the biographical data of each composer, and also give detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this the notes are so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
OCT 6- 1903

To-morrow's matinee closes the Moore Stock company's week in "Soldiers of Fortune," at the Baker, the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing to-morrow night. A matinee will be given to-day and also to-morrow. "Young Mrs. Winthrop" is the bill for next week and souvenirs will be given at the Monday and Wednesday matinees and a reception held after the Wednesday afternon performance.

Two performances daily are given at the Corinthian theater.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
CHRONICLE
ss .....
OCT 6- 1903

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to present one of the choicest programmes ever heard in Rochester at the Baker Theater to-morrow evening. The performance will of course be of the highest technical perfection, while the interpretations of Conductor Gericke will be brilliant and fascinating. A violin solo by Willy Hess, the famous concertmeister, will be an attractive feature. The sale of seats indicates a house filled to its capacity.

The best established and most complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ADVERTISER
ss .....

—To-morrow's matinee closes the Moore stock company's week in "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Baker, the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing the theater to-morrow night. A matinee will be given to-day also. "Young Mrs. Winthrop" is the bill for next week and souvenirs will be given at the Monday and Wednesday matinees and a reception held after the Wednesday afternoon performance.

—It is stated that the brief one week tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be heard at the Baker Theater to-morrow night, is proving a great financial success. At Montreal, Toronto and Buffalo the first three nights of this week the orchestra played before audiences that entirely filled the largest auditoriums in those cities. To-night the orchestra will play in Cleveland, where another big audience is assured.

...EXPRESS

In Musical Circles

The Boston Symphony will play at the Baker theater to-night. That is a fact which ought to make music-lovers feel a glow of satisfaction. Would that the visits of the Bostonians were an annual affair. It might be so, if our people would bestir themselves. Buffalo is to have periodical visits and so is Toronto. Now it has been the opinion of Rochesterians for some years past that, in the matter of music, they could set the Buffalonians a good example We had a week's grand opera and Buffalo had none; we have a Tuesday Musicale and Buffalo has none; we have an orchestra and Buffalo's orchestras are fleeting affairs which do not last long enough to be really said to exist. Yet, when it comes to the highest form of orchestral music Rochester falls behind. Turn now from these general considerations to the programme. The concert will open with the "Oberon" overture. It is the music of the land of romance, with glimpses into faerie. It the student wants to hear the wood-wind used with the skill of a master of instrumentation who is also a poet, he may find his opportunity in "Oberon." The Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form by John Sebastian Bach are an interlude for strings. The Prelude and Gavotte are taken from the violin partita in E major; the Adagio is taken from the violin sonata in A minor. The arrangement of the numbers for strings is the work of Sigismund Bachrich. Misguided persons think that a composition should never, under any possible circumstances, be played on any instrument save the one for which it was written. But, after all, an arrangement, if it is done reverentially, brings before the attention of thousands exquisite works which otherwise would only be known to the few. If the arrangement is beautiful that is sufficient justification. The symphony will be the "Pathetic" of Peter, Tschaikowsky a work which, thanks to Herman Dossenbach, Rochesterians are very familiar. In the composer's words it came into being the "best of all' of all his works. Composers, like litteratteurs, are not always good judges of their own work. Milton preferred "Paradise Regained" to "Paradise Lost," but in this instance Tschaikowsky's opinion is the opinion of all the world. The "suicide" legend has done something to give the work an accidental interest, but now when all that mass of tradition is discredited, the "Pathetic" stands out as one of the great symphonies of modern times. The overture to "Tannhauser" is the concluding orchestral number. This is a case in which familiarity, so far from breeding contempt, only adds to the popular affection for the work. It seems incredible that after hearing "Tannhauser," Fetis, the great French critic, should have been able to write of the opera, "There is only one tune in it—and what a tune!" But we must make allowance for the fact that Wagner wrote in a new idiom and the world had to take time to learn it. The soloist of the concert is Willy Hess, a violinist of great taste and authority. With the orchestra he will play the Max Bruch violin concerto in G minor, a composition not before heard in Rochester.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
...ICAL COURIER
...ss .....

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Members of Orchestra Arrived To-Day—Concert To-Night.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five men strong, arrived to-day from Cleveland, for the concert to be given at the Baker Theater to-night. The sale of seats has been large. This will be the last concert of the ochestra's short tour of one week. It will return from here direct to Boston where the concert season opens next week.

An interesting feature which makes the programme offered for to-night doubly interesting will be the distribution of printed programmes having explanatory notes of each number. They touch briefly the biographical data of each composer and also give detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this the notes are so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

---

om .....
dress .....

All the famous artists who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be with that organization when it gives its concert at the Baker Theater tomorrow night. It is to be hoped that tomorrow night's audience will be of a size to induce a return visit of the orchestra another year. The sale of seats is already large.

Leading Daily ... New York, 18

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
HERALD
m .....
ress .....

Boston Symphony Concert To-night.

Rochester will enjoy this evening the musical feast eagerly looked forward to when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its single concert here at the Baker Theater. About all that can be said in praise of the superlative merits of this, probably the greatest body of instrumental players in the world, has already been written. The concert is advertised for 8.15 o'clock precisely; and it is hoped that the entire audience will be seated before that hour. Unreserved seats for the gallery will be on sale at 7.30 o'clock to-night. The orchestra will arrive this morning from Cleveland and will be quartered at the Powers. It played earlier in the week to overflowing audiences at Montreal, Detroit, Buffalo and Toronto. It was the first visit of the organization to Canada. The musical critic of the Toronto Globe closes a long review of the concert in that city with the following:

"The orchestra conquered all disposition to be negative in praise. The elevated song of the violins, so pure, so sustained in their cantilena, the melting accents of the clarinets and oboes in their beautiful responses, and, again, the ethereal trills of the violins in octaves, were marvels of achievement in tone, execution and sentiment. The finale, broad and forceful in its general outlines, develops to a climax of much grandeur and power, so that the work, as a whole, made a striking impression. Conductor Gericke was recalled four or five times by the insistent applause, but could not be constrained to respond with an encore number."

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the ...
...ER

BOSTON ORCHESTRA COMES IN SPECIAL TRAIN TO-DAY.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a concert in Grays' Armory to-night, will arrive in Cleveland at 3 o'clock this afternoon from Detroit. It comes by a special train and travels in three of the largest size Pullman cars. One large baggage car is needed to carry its luggage. The sale of seats, which has been going on at the store of the Burrows Brothers Company, in Euclid avenue, since Monday, has been large and a full house is practically assured.

Town Topics

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

A FITTING prelude to an auspicous season of music was unquestionably the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Grays' Armory last Friday evening. It was a musical feast in which the musician reveled, and the music lover found complete enjoyment. Some exceptions could have been taken at different things, such as the length and arrangement of the program, and the lack at times of musical enthusiasm among the musicians of the orchestra, but the tout ensemble was perfect. The program, although a beautiful one, was not exactly arranged to please the musician, and certainly not the laity. The Beethoven Symphony would have been used to better advantage if it had been placed first on the program. Wagner's "Waldweben" would have made an ideal climax to a musical feast such as we have seldom, if ever, heard locally. Gericke has been spoken of as a scholarly and not an emotional conductor. He is emotional, there is no doubt about that, for if he were not he would be unable to give as beautiful a rendition as he did of the Bach number and Wagner's "Waldweben," but withal he is like the magician, quiet, easy, clever and suave in his movements. It is a well known fact that Gericke is a stern disciplinarian, and his conducting is as decisive as if he had spoken. His reading of the scores was most idealistic. Willy Hess, the concertmeister and violin soloist, is a talented player. He is not an Ysaye, but, nevertheless, he is an excellent artist. His tone is broad, and as to technic he stands well up in the ranks of the foremost players. His support was ideal, and why should it not be? Gericke has the best players in the world, and one could almost take for granted that each of the first violinists were as conversant as Hess was in the Bruch concerto and could play it nearly as well as Hess himself. Hess is a thorough musician, who has devoted, like Gericke, a great many years to it, but he could hardly be called anything but a scholarly player. It is doubtful if he could cast a spell over one with his playing; he is not what one would call a passionate and soul-stirring player, but a thorough, well versed violinist and musician. One of the largest audiences that ever attended a symphony concert was present and, judging from the attendance, it is quite probable that we may hear them again in the near future. The brass, wood, wind and reed section of the orchestra is a marvelous combination. It was really a revelation to the average symphony patron and enthusiast who had never had the pleasure of hearing this organization play. Their attack is perfect, and it seems impossible to look for improvement in this direction. It is safe to say that seldom, if ever, has a Cleveland audience been treated to a more charming, masterly and beautiful interpretation than Gericke gave of Wagner's "Waldweben." The different motifs were carried out in a manner difficult to surpass. The wood, wind and reed instruments made an ideal background for the entrancing strings. In the Bach number the Gavotte movement was the one that created the most enthusiasm. Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach number is delicious, and to think this man was once engaged in the crinoline business, with talents so rare seems verily a sacrilege. Mendelssohn's Overture was received rapturously and in a measure prepared the audience for what was to follow. And so the first concert of the season ended in a blaze of glory, and making friends galore for the orchestra. Monday they played in Montreal, Tuesday in Toronto, Wednesday in Buffalo, Thursday in Detroit, and here on Friday. They played the same program throughout their tour.

[54]

The Gazette
Established 1778.
MONTREAL, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3

GREAT ORCHESTRA

Boston Symphony Fulfils Keen Expectations of Large Audience at Victoria.

GIVEN A WARM RECEPTION.

Highest Excellence of Orchestral Playing Offered to Montreal for Many Years.

It is no exaggeration to claim that the advent of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Victoria Rink last night, marked the highest excellence of orchestral playing which has been offered to a Montreal audience for many years. Though this organization has never visited Montreal before, its fame and reputation as the leading orchestra of America had long been known; and the keen expectations that were aroused when it became definitely understood that the musical season, this year, would be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony showed that a concert of the highest artistic excellence was anticipated by the local music lovers. They were by no means doomed to disappointment. In truth, their greatest regret must be that the opportunity of hearing this wonderful body of players has so long been denied them.

It cannot be affirmed that the concert last night in the Victoria rink was held under the best conditions from the audience's viewpoint. The rink is not the most suitable place in which to listen to an orchestra—particularly when the rain is furnishing an audible accompaniment on the roof.

The programme opened (promptly at 8.15, as was previously announced) with Weber's Overture to "Oberon," and it was a great conception of a great work, and one became aware immediately that the standard of the orchestra's playing is indeed a high one. After this number came the Spohr Concerto for violin, with Prof. Willey Hess as soloist. Prof. Hess is the new concert-master of the organization, and has long been known as a virtuoso of the first rank. He has never appeared here before, but judging from the reception which he was accorded last night by the big audience, there is not a person who was there who does not desire the opportunity of hearing him in the near future. He possesses great technical skill, as was evidenced in his wonderful rendering of the last movement. His double stopping is perfect, with never a false intonation, and his interpretation is remarkable for its virility and depth of feeling. Much may be said for the accompaniment furnished by the orchestra in this number. In the softest passages the solo stood out prominently, the whole body of the orchestra supporting with an accompaniment barely above a whisper. In the Adagio Mr. Hess played the beautifully melodic themes with great sentiment, and the graceful bravura passages, so notable in the works of Spohr, were rendered in a spirited and finished manner.

Hector Berlioz, the wizard of the orchestra, was represented by three numbers from his best known work, "The Damnation of Faust." The Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisps and Waltz of Sylphs are charming creations, delicate and bright like a fairy tale. And in the interpretation under the baton of Wilhelm Gericke what tone-coloring, what light and shade!

The "Forest Music," from Wagner's "Siegfried," was the most delicate number on the programme, and beautifully rendered. The rustling of the leaves, the bird song and the love theme, and withal, the deep mystery of the forest were all wonderfully portrayed; but the piece de resistance of the evening was the Beethoven C minor Symphony. This is one of Beethoven's greatest masterpieces. Mr. Gericke overlooked none of the fine points of this intricate score.

Probably, in the estimation of the ultra-modern, there was a scarcity of music of this day. No Strauss or De Bussy et al. Certainly they deserve a place. But Mr. Gericke, while keeping abreast of the times, is conservative in his ideas, as he is in his conducting. He has under his control a wonderful body of men, who seem to play like a machine with a big soul.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
OCT 7 1905

When audiences learn that the Boston Symphony Orchestra does not respond to encores, Mr. Gericke says it is noticeable that their applause becomes less perfunctory demand for "more" and more a sincere indication of appreciation. The lesson might well be learned by musical organizations, even

The Daily Star.
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3rd, 1905.

Gericke and His Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under William Gericke, at the Victoria Rink:

PROGRAMME.

Weber...Overture to the Opera "Oberon"
L. Spohr .....
Concerto for Violin, in D Minor, No. 9
I. Allegro.
II. Adagio.
III. Allegretto.
Hector Berlioz—
(a) Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisps.
(b) Waltz of Sylphs.
(c) Rakoczy March.
(From "The Damnation of Faust," Op. 24).
Wagner..."Waldweben," from "Siegfried"
Beethoven—
Symphony in C minor, No. 5, Op. 67
I Allegro con brio.
II. Andante con moto.
III. Allegro: Trio.
IV. Allegro.
Soloist—Prof. Willy Hess.

If Montreal's musical season is to be up to the standard of its inauguration last night, there need be no pilgrimages to other and more famous centres. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, its soloists, Herr Gericke, and a well-chosen programme, singly and together, added another memorable incident to the history of musical development here and one from which, it is to be hoped, some profitable lessons will be drawn.

It would have been difficult to devise weather less suited for fostering musical enthusiasm, but the Victoria Rink was well filled when Gericke's baton, sharp on the appointed minute, rose for the Oberon overture. Among other excellent dispositions planned by Mr. Veitch was the detention of late comers until the first number was ended. Unfortunately, it was successfully applied to the body of the house, which was floored with sawdust and practically noiseless, but not to the gallery, where the bare boards made the moving of every chair audible. In theory, however, the arrangement was excellent enough to stand serious imitation. Then, through the whole course of the concert, the rain drummed a steady though not always an offensive accompaniment. Poor Hess, during the second movement of his concerto, looked once or twice as if he were inclined to yield to the inevitable and sacrifice interpretation to acoustic necessities, for it is doubtful if some of his pianissimo passages were heard ten rows from the conductor's stand, but the heavy down-pour was soon over and Hess had not ceased to be the great violinist.

Aside from the noise of the rain, however, the arrangements were not such as to benefit any soloist, although they suited the orchestral numbers admirably. The orchestra was stationed on a fairly high stand, possibly three-quarters of the way down the rink, and the individual instrument, lacking anything to give it resonance, seemed thin and lacking in volume; when the seventy or any fair proportion of the seventy instruments were utilized, the result was probably more satisfactory than anyone not familiar with the rink as a concert hall would have thought possible.

Concerning the programme and its interpretation, both were what the traditions of the former symphonic organization of America demanded. Gericke was at his best in the Beethoven number, holding his men better in hand and modulating his seventy instruments as though he were projecting his personal intelligence into the mind of each individual player. To many, his interpretation was nothing less than a revelation, and those who had come to endure Beethoven remained to applaud. The "Waldweben," however, was equally beautiful and the orchestral accompaniment to the Spohr concerto was a veritable marvel of continence.

THE HERALD
MONTREAL, TUESDAY, OCT. 3.

THE FLOODS CAME; THE WINDS BLEW

Pity the poor goddess of Montreal music! She has not where to lay her head. She has not a roof to cover her from the inclement sky. She has never had a home of her own. Sundry places that were designed primarily for the accommodation of her sister Terpsichore have given her house-rooom at times, until she outgrew them, and now the biggest of these, for which she is already a tight fit, is about to be torn down and to leave her utterly defenceless. She is developing the plein-air habit, and will soon be seen constantly in a blanket suit in winter and a bathing dress in summer.

The great open-air musical season of the winter 1905-6 began last night, and unfortunately it rained. Notwithstanding, an immense audience braved the elements and sat out for two hours under a large inverted colander wondering whether it would be "comme il faut" to hoist its umbrella and be really comfortable. The Chinese laundries should reap a harvest, for the massacre of masculine shirt-fronts was pitiable. There were a few places, under particular spots in the colander where it did not rain, but as these had not been marked on the plan for the advance sale nobody knew where they were.

To be serious, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert in Montreal last night in the Victoria Rink. The Victoria Rink is a very interesting and historic old place, which some ten years ago was the scene of a good many of the city's big gatherings, but at present it has reached the autumn—and the automobiles—of the declining days. It is probable that in fine weather it would be an excellent make-shift for a concert-hall, for during momentary lulls last night the acoustics appeared to be distinctly good. Its roof, however, is so low and so thin that, apart altogether from the question of its watertightness, it provides during a rainstorm a constant obligato of noise that simply wipes all pianissimo music out of existence. It would be absurd to attempt to criticize the work of the Boston Symphony from the fragments that were tossed out to one amid last night's uproar. It was evident enough that here was by far the most perfectly-drilled and most exquisitely-toned orchestra that had ever played in Montreal, but half at least of its effectiveness was obliterated almost constantly for those who were sitting at any great distance away. By exceptional good fortune the two wonderfully delicate dances from "La Damnation de Faust" occurred during the quietest period of the evening, and being followed by a tremendously spirited performance of the Rakoczy March, elicited much enthusiasm. The accompaniment to Prof. Wilby Hess's violin concerto, subdued to microscopic proportions in any event, was for the most part perceptible only to the eye; forty bows could be seen travelling over forty stringed instruments, but the ear recognized nothing. Mr. Hess managed to make himself audible, and, this being a violin-loving town, and particularly addicted to the ornamental flourishes and the excessive saccharine of the Sphor school, he achievd the triumph of the evening. The Waldweben from "Siegfried," on the other hand, made absolutely no impression. It was gorgeously rich in coloring—the wind section of the Boston Sympnony is the richest and clearest the present wrtier ever remembers hearing—but most of its beauty was doubtless lost to all but the nearest hearers. The atmosphere had a bad effect on the clarionet in the Bird-Song passages, as also on the Weber's overture to 'Oberon.' Spohr's No. 9 D minor concerto for violin, Berlioz's 'Damnation,' and Beethoven Symphony in C minor. All the legato, lyrical work of these numbers was excellently rendered, but the staccato work seemed to lack emphasis and expression, and there was little seeming attempt to impart poignancy or the dramatic into anything. Wilhelm Gericke conducts correctly, but he has to consult his score and sees a composer in single notes rather than in sound masses. Emil Paur is his opposite, and that is why the Pittsburg Orchestra can perform 1812 in an unforgetable fashion, while there was nothing in the performance last evening that will 'bite into the brain.' It was correct and excellent, but not unique.

The Daily Witness.
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The only two faults that could be found with the Boston Symphony performance in the Victoria Rink last evening were secondary ones, and concerned the place where the performance was given and the weather. Unfortunately, it 'rained cats and dogs' all the evening—and the Victoria Rink is not weather-proof. Fifty reasons might easily be found to prove that the Victoria Rink is undesirable for concert purposes, and it would be a somewhat arduous task to find a single 'vice versa,' or 'on the other hand.' At its best, for concert purposes, it resembles in several particulars what we have read of the 'tap rooms' of English inns, only in an English inn the sawdust is not described as being quite so thickly laid on the floor, and the wooden chairs, one should think, must be more comfortable. Such surroundings are eminently not those in which the aesthetic plant is apt to bud and flower, and it did not bud and flower last evening, that is, 'to any great extent.' To experience very much, or, indeed, any aesthetic pleasure one must be in the mood, must decree an exodus of all vexatious feelings, and try to emulate Marcus Aurelius, who was the crown and flower of stoicism. But how few have been able to educate themselves to such a pitch of stoicism that they can placidly sit under a sieve while it is raining hard, or enjoy the sound of violins to the accompaniment of a patter, patter, patter on a big tin roof? It may further be said about the hall that it took some of the crowd quite half an hour to get in and quite half an hour to get out, and there was much jostling and crushing. Only one door was open, and the conditions of entrance and exit resembled those of the Monument National the night that Ysaye played. If a fire had occurred last evening there would certainly have been a holocaust. That the Boston Symphony is 'a splendid aggregation of all the talents' may be accepted as largely true, but those who were sitting in distant parts of the rink had to more or less take the advance agent's word for it. Even those who sat comparatively close to the platform fancied at times they were listening to muted strings, so great seemed the escape of sound, and the musicians themselves could not be at their aesthetic best under such conditions. The programme was a somewhat fossiliferous one, with only one small contribution from Wagner, and none from Richard Strauss or Dr. Elgar. Instead, we looked upon 'those old familiar faces,'

Lovers of orchestral music are indebted to Manager Houston of Massey Hall for the rich treat they enjoyed at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Tuesday. All previous attempts to bring the organization here had failed, owing to the almost prohibitive guarantee that was asked. This season, however, the manager of the orchestra, Mr. Ellis, agreed, on condition that a concert was also arranged for in Montreal. Mr. Houston, who for many years had endeavored to bring the orchestra to Toronto, consented to guarantee personally the Montreal engagement, and to his enterprise the public owe the first appearance of the famous orchestra. The Montreal concert, I am informed, resulted in a loss, but it is satisfactory to know that the one in Toronto more than paid expenses. I fancy that the attendance would have been even larger had a different programme been announced. It may be suggested that on the occasion of a future visit of the orchestra the subscribers be asked to say in advance what symphony they would prefer to hear, and that Mr. Houston stipulates for the performance of whatever work is decided upon by the majority. Two or three compositions might be agreed upon in this manner, leaving it to the management to fill out the remainder of the scheme. The plan would have the advantage of enlisting the personal sympathy of the audience in the programme, as the subscribers would have the satisfaction of listening to music they had themselves selected.

While on the subject of orchestral music, I would make the further suggestion that Mr. Vogt and Dr. Ham come to an arrangement between themselves for the production of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony this season. The Pittsburg Orchestra has been engaged for the Mendelssohn Choir concerts, and the New York Symphony Orchestra for the National Chorus concerts. Either of these orchestras would give a fine performance of the work. The Mendelssohn Choir having already arranged to perform the Ninth Symphony, there is only wanting the Fourth Symphony to complete the cycle of the nine orchestral masterpieces of Beethoven, the other seven having already been heard here.

OCT 7 1905

55

THE MAIL AND EMPIRE,
TORONTO, WEDNESDAY
OCTOBER 4, 1905.

GREAT OPENING OF MUSIC SEASON.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard at Last.

CONCERT WAS DELIGHTFUL

Schumann's Second Symphony Was Exquisitely Given, as Well as Many Other Works.

Toronto is waking up. Her expansion in a material sense is being followed by an expansion in musical taste. Some fractions more than a decade ago, when Mr. Arthur Nikisch was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an attempt was made to bring that organization to the City of Toronto. The subscription list proved so lamentably small that it was not thought advisable to risk the experiment. To be sure, we had not at that time an auditorium so acceptable as Massey Hall. But even a decade ago Theodore Thomas came to that same hall and gave four beautiful concerts replete with novelties, and the cash receipts hardly paid for the strings that were worn out during the engagement. Verily, we must not look back to the days when Plancus was Consul. Last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in Massey Hall, and, though the audience did not entirely fill its vast auditorium, the financial reception it won was sufficient to warrant the hope of an annual visit. The Autumn season of late years even has been singularly devoid of musical interest, but, in the language of the average orator, it last night opened up "in a blaze of glory."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is indeed a rock in a weary land. In fact some of our contemporaries might be justified in alluding to it as an Ebenezer. At the risk of seeming provincial one may be permitted to gloat over an organization of seventy-eight thoroughly competent performers, including no less than forty-six stringed instruments. But then the Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of the greatest organization in the world, a cohesive musical force, made up of men who for the most part have played together for years and conducted by a man who has given the larger part of his mature musical life to its promoting its greatness and efficiency. The only criticisms that have been passed on Mr. Wilhelm Gericke as a conductor resemble those uttered centuries ago upon Andrea del Sarto, "the faultless painter"—that he sought too perfect a finish, too refined an utterance, that he sacrificed ruggedness of expression to beauty of style. The audience which listened to him last night was not one to draw distinctions in such matters. The concert to every musical auditor was sheer delight.

Mr. Gericke is a conductor whose style is distinction itself. His interpretations never smell of the lamp, give no echo of the workshop. He gives one an impression of absolute command, minute intimacy with every touch of tone color. There is nothing strenuous about him; he is merely a quiet, pervading force. And the orchestra itself, in exquisite balance of tone, in the supremely beautiful quality of all its sections, in the unity of its utterance as a co-ordinated whole, perfect in all its parts, leaves nothing that imagination could desire.

The chief number on the programme was Schumann's Second Symphony, that in C major. The controversy is still raging among experts as to whether Schumann was a great orchestral composer or not, or even a passable workman at the task. So distinguished a conductor as Mr. Felix Weingartner, while admitting his melodic genius and his profundity of thought, asserts that his orchestral treatment of his themes leaves everything to be desired. Mr. Gericke, if one may judge by glancing over the programmes he has given of late years, finds in Schumann, the orchestral composer, the same inspired genius that he was as a song writer and a piano composer. And the musical public seems inclined to follow his lead. Nearly two years ago, when Mr. Frank Van der Stucken, with the comparatively limited forces of the Cincinnati Orchestra, gave the last of Schumann's four symphonies, that in D minor, for the Toronto Male Chorus Club, musical listeners were delighted by the melodic qualities it possessed. That feeling was trebly borne in last night by Mr. Gericke's beautiful interpretation of the C Major Symphony. A programme note informed the reader that the latter was not really the second of Schumann's symphonies, but the third, the D minor, to which allusion has just been made, having been the composer's first work in that field, and having failed, was shelved, remodeled, and in its later form became the fourth. The C Major Symphony is a work infused with such rich poetic imagining, with such infinite variety in its melodic utterances, so imbued with tenderness, that makes such an appeal at once to the simple Shakespearean lover of sweet sounds and to the seekers for the profound in music, that in the feeling of the writer it must stand deathless until the last of things. Musical dissectors may skeletonize it and find it an imperfect thing, but then scientists have long ago discovered that the human form divine could be greatly improved upon as a mechanical contrivance. The programme note told us that this work was composed when Schumann was sick in mind and body, and he, indeed, was a man whose soul burst its body before the corporeal frame was worn out. The symphony, however, breathes a high serenity and sweet sanity of mind. The beautiful third movement Adagio Expressivo is so glorious a message of nobility and tenderness that it cannot fail to live in the hearts of those who heard it for the first time. And if it be that Schumann as an orchestral composer leaves everything to be desired, let it be said of the interpretation by Mr. Gericke and his men, it was so exquisite and so reverential as to make it seem that there was nothing to be desired.

The other large number of the programme was the ninth violin concerto of Ludwig Spohr, who composed 15 of them in all. Of the vast number of compositions in various forms which Spohr put forth during his lifetime a few of his violin concertos seem alone likely to survive. Himself a great violinist, the German rival of Paganini, he composed for his instrument in a masterly way. The D minor concerto played by Mr. Willy Hess last night is sweetly melodious in the same sense that the music of Gounod is so. In fact, there are passages in this work that lead one to think that Gounod was indebted to it for some of the tenderest bits of his "Faust." It has the same quality, grace and sweetness without breadth or depth. Yet grace and sweetness are satisfying things and the complete mastery of Spohr in handling instrument and orchestra and in balancing one against the other delight the listener. Mr. Willy Hess, as a soloist, has an authority and elegance of style that arrest and hold the attention. Whether it was the fault of his instrument or not cannot be definitely predicated, but his tone seemed to be dry and lacking in warmth. On the other hand, his immense power of execution, the academic perfection of his performance in the most difficult portions of the extremely difficult last movement won him a genuine ovation.

The latter portion of the programme was made up of shorter and charmingly contrasted numbers. The Berlioz transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" was especially interesting, since it afforded an opportunity of comparison with the Weingartner's transcription of the same work done here by Mr. Emil Paur last Winter. Nothing could be more unlike. Weingartner's treatment is perhaps the more classic, since it preserves throughout the light and joyous spirit of the original. Berlioz scored his transcription owing to the convention which made it necessary that there should be a ballet included in every work produced by the Paris Grand Opera of his day. Charged with the task of staging "Der Freichutz," he was faithful enough to Weber to insist that the ballet should come from music of the composer's own creation. But he could not help putting a good deal of Berlioz into his transcription, and it has all the characteristics of his orchestration—delicate, ethereal passages contrasted with outbursts of tonal fury. And he added a few touches of profound melancholy. There is a recurrent echo on the oboe that seems to say with Swinburne, "Love, sweet as the rose, as the rose must wither"; and there is a singularly beautiful and melancholy coda which comes softly on the woodwind as an absolute surprise after Weber's climax has been reached. It is like the tragically-minded Berlioz commenting on the joyousness of Weber.

And this reminds one to speak of the exquisite quality of the woodwind and brass in this orchestra, certainly of a quality to be heard in no other organization heard on this side of the Atlantic. Even more was it in evidence in Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice," that magnificently scored and richly colored tapestry of tone. The tarantelle toward the end was played with a speed, delicacy and brilliancy that made it dazzling. The concert wound up with the overture to "Tannhauser" which everybody knows and everyone can criticize. Shall one say perfection? The phrase seems tame. Come back, Mr. Gericke!

WORLD
TORONTO
OCT 8 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY VISIT BIG LESSON TO TORONTO

Mr. Gericke With His Cool Collection of Virtuosi Did things That Will Help to Set Up a Standard.

What some people persist in calling the "Bauston" Symphony Orchestra is now a memory in Toronto. From the Boston point of view, Toronto has been counted rather far back in the woods to indulge the luxury of symphony concerts. This may help to explain the fact that the program given by Mr. Gericke's organization last Tuesday had a decided leaning towards the popular variety.

We have had few important programs here that averaged quite as light as Mr. Gericke's offering. This may be a defect in our bringing-up. We have been overambitious, perhaps. Taru a long line of visiting conductors—Thomas, Seidl, Paur, Damrosch, Van der Stucken and Herbert—we had not as yet been reminded that it is better to take it easy, and in some cases to go back and begin all over again. This is what we might have expected when Boston made up its mind to visit Toronto.

Still, we are not complaining—simply ruminating. The Boston Symphony is undoubtedly a revelation. We are wiser now—but not sadder. We are thankful to have discovered in one evening about what Boston is; and we are sure that for such as care for both propriety and power in music the discovery was worth making. A musical university on tour is not a commonplace.

The Bill of Fare.

Mr. Gericke brought his 80 musicians—leaving 16 behind—in order to play us four pieces—not counting the solo—without encores. Of these but one was absolutely new in Toronto—the Schumann symphony. The overture to Tannhauser we had heard according to Sousa and Hasselt and various others since Thomas. The "Invitation to the Dance" was played here last season by the Pittsburg Orchestra, and before that by various other organizations. "The Caprice" was heard just the other day from the Irish Guards.

As to the Schumann number, is there anybody willing to class it with big symphonies such as, for instance, the Pathetic or the Beethoven in C minor? One might as aptly compare Coleridge's "Ode to Dejection" with "Hamlet." Schumann seems altogether too sensitive for a big symphony. The first two movements of the C major were by no means convincing. The first contained dyspeptive chromatics enough for a whole season of vocal exercises. The Scherzo was a brave bit of tone-writing without much tune. The first was peevish; the second capricious; neither was deeply symphonic—at least to the popular ear, which after all belongs to the most of us.

The adagio movement, however, gave a revelation of the real Schumann, who, after all, with his many moods, was a man with a big heart. This came near to the Beethoven and Tschaikowsky standard, because it possessed a body and a character as distinct as a painting by Turner. It was not a fever nor a caprice. You felt not so much the moody Schumann as the meditative man, looking with a calm eye into the deeps of life. Some people ascribe this liveliness of insight to a well-ordered liver; just as they would prescribe pills and seidlitz powders for the vexatious humors which can find nothing more relieving than yards of chromatics. We prefer to regard anything that Schumann might have written as something most less physical. Berlioz would have called it "spleen." If Schumann wanted to sigh and weep over his chromatics, and again to laugh it off by means of a scherzo, the result may be Schumannesque without being at all symphonic. But when Schumann chooses to meditate thru an adagio, it is worth anyone's while to listen—because he is saying something.

The Italian Caprice was worth Mr. Gericke's while. It abounds in constructive imagination. In its liberal and varied use of the resources of the orchestra it appeals to the most average imagination as a work of both strength and beauty, in which the persistent recurrence of the principal themes serves to keep up an admirable dramatic unity. But over it all was the shadow of the splendidly morose, yet big-hearted, Russian, who never could write with a feather, but must have a pen of iron dipped in a rainbow.

As to the "Invitation to the Dance," with all its irresistible melody, we are convinced that Weber had no deliberate intention that audiences when hearing it should smell ballroom roses. The analytical notes to this peculiarly sentimental number were quite as hysterical as the average woman novelist could have wished. This piece may "symbolize the poetic idea of the dance," but in order to hear it under the most healthy conditions it should be played in a beer garden or in a park. It would be quite possible for a scratch Toronto orchestra to put just about all the necessary color into such a composition.

Not a few thoughtful people have been criticizing Mr. Gericke for presuming to play the Tannhauser Overture in Toronto. They have said this just as strongly as they dared without calling the piece a chestnut. The impression seems to be that Mr. Gericke was wasting Toronto's time and his men's elbow-grease in traversing so hackneyed a composition.

Such criticism is a shade too Bostonian. The Tannhauser number as read by Mr. Gericke's band on Tuesday was a complete exposition. It left nothing to be desired except perhaps greater weight in the brass section.

Perfect Adjustment.

This suggests what after all is the main feature of this event—the playing of the orchestra. That in turn refers ultimately back to Mr. Gericke. In 13 years he has practically made the Boston Symphony, which to him is a good big "Me!" Mr. Gericke does not fascinate. He rather repels. He seems like a school inspector. His baton is a pointer; the score is a blackboard.

Humanism is certainly not one of Gericke's besetting sins. Brains count for everything with him. The orchestra must see the meaning. The audience must see it. Music was not born of mere passion or emotion. It was an evolution of brain. Mr. Gericke must have studied Herbert Spencer. After all in conducting a symphony why make a fuss? Pshaw! The thing is superbly easy. Look at those first violins, how calmly they face the score. Those violas, one might fancy them sitting at beer. The bass viols and the trombones—not in the slightest perturbed even the most thunderous fortissimo. Only the flute-player thinks it necessary to remain glued to the conductor. From the tympani to the outermost first violin in that huge band, the most perfect mechanism and adjustment. Touch the button and it goes. Only once could any sawing in tempo be detected. That was in the Caprice, when for a couple of bars the first and second violins chopped a trifle.

Perfect Assurance.

It is in time and in tempo that the conductor's nerves are sure to be displayed if he has any. His irritability, his impetuosity, his sudden tantrums or inspirations, as the case may be, are certain to betray themselves in the beat and the tempo of the players. There were no sudden moments in Mr. Gericke's conducting. Everything was preconceived. He knew to a jot how many ounces of power he had on this or that section of the orchestra; to a tittle what effect he would obtain from each whenever the time came. Once begun, every piece was a predestination. One of the first violins broke his string on a fortissimo. Watch him mend it, tune up and get playing again as tho it were merely a belt slipped off a shaft.

This assurance and certainty of effect is only possible in an orchestra large enough to keep the conductor from worrying lest a trombonist should have eaten too much supper or a 'cellist taken a headache. Mr. Gericke's band is big enough and well drilled enough to dispense with worry. Moreover there was never any doubt in the minds of the men as to which half of the beat and what beat Mr. Gericke wished to emphasize. Obviously the conductor was beating time in every bar—a thing which some fantastic batonists seem to think quite beneath their dignity. But after all, as Mr. Gericke might have argued, being a Pestonian—does not even the profoundest symphony ultimately reduce itself to one—two, or one-two-three—down, right and up as the case may be? And why should not the up beat be accented or the second half of it for that matter?

Perfect Technic.

All tempo emergencies out of the way it seemed natural that Mr. Gericke's men should have at their finger-tips all the niceties of execution. This was true of all the sections, but most noticeable in the strings which after all seemed to dominate the entire orchestra. There was a crispness and a united precision about the Boston strings that would be hard to improve. When the violins played descending chromatics they were never slurred, but each semitone was as clear-cut as a step in a staircase. A trill never left any doubt in the listener's mind as to whether it consisted of a half or a whole step. Staccatos never squawked. Legatos were never drawled. Pizzicati never plunked jaggedly. There was but one plunk.

And so on thru all the minutiae of the orchestra in whatever sort of piece they were playing, was this serene technic born of perfect organization, complete unanimity and thoro drill. Technic was dominant. There was not the slightest affectation. No phrase got an over-touch of color. The lingering portamentos with the unctious sub-crescendos in the middle and the attenuated whisper on the end—none of these for Mr. Gericke; not for Boston. A hundred such things are for the colorists. Mr. Gericke is not strong on painting. He is a draughtsman. Had he been a better painter he might have coaxed the first two movements of the Schumann Symphony enough to please one listener out of a hundred. And by the same method he might have made the invitation to the dance quite too sentimental for anything but a beer-garden.

On so large and uncommon a subject one might preach indefinitely. Enough has been said in all the newspapers to show that Toronto had a good deal to learn from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One thing the encore hog learned also—that when Mr. Gericke disdains an encore he knows tolerably well he is not insulting earnest appreciation, but simply squelching the backwoods desire, which leads the chaps in the back seats to holler "more!" because they want to get their money's worth.

CLEF.

[56]

OCTOBER 4, 1905.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

The first appearance of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra in Toronto will be regarded as an event which in musical importance must be classed with the first visit here of the equally famous Thomas Orchestra. Among the large audience that nearly filled Massey Hall last night were many veteran concert-goers who were present when the late Theodore Thomas gave his initial programme in this city, and to whom the playing of his orchestra was a revelation of exquisite tone quality and superb technical accomplishment. These, it may safely be conjectured, felt that the Boston organization had given them a second revelation, one which if it did not carry a more authoritative message, was equally convincing and illuminative.

Taking the audience as a whole, there could have been no doubt, one would think, as to the almost perfect achievements of the aggregation of seventy-five musicians who followed the direction of Mr. Welhelm Gericke in the interpretation of a choice and exacting programme. The grand, the excelling qualities of the orchestra were not, however, demonstrated to finality with their first essay. It was not until they had made some progress with the Scumann symphony, the first work on the programme, when they had begun to gauge the acoustics of the hall, that their merit was fully apparent in all its distinction. Then, indeed, their performance became compacted with the sympathy that they could mutually feel and with the assurance and confidence that the growing acquaintance with the locale inspired them in measuring and producing their tone. And the final result was that their hearers were forced to the conviction that the orchestra was a truly superb instrument for the material interpretation of abstract music. In the first movement of the Schumann symphony, that in C major, op 61, a slight hardness was noticeable in the enunciation of the motto theme in the prelude by the trumpets, horns and trombone. But all suspicion of harshness vanished before the work was concluded. This symphony was a novelty to Toronto. It is doubtful whether it will ever become popular in the sense that the representative symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikovski are at present popular. It was composed when Schumann was weighed down by physical suffering and mental distress, and the first movement in particular, with its restlessness, its indecision of mood, its veiled melancholy, reflects perhaps his feelings at the time. The Scherzo, brisk and vigorous and with pleaty of motion from its arpeggios, the main characteristic figure, is not wholly gay. There is no full abandonment to joy; there is still the shadow of sorrow. The slow movement, the Adagio, by way of compensation, is an exquisite love song, for it suggests a tender, lofty passion, if anything in music does. Here, indeed, Schumann is at his best. And it was at this point that the orchestra conquered all disposition to be negative in praise. The elevated song of the violins, so pure, so sustained in their cantilena, the melting accents of the clarinets and oboes in their beautiful responses, and, again, the etherial trills of the violins in octaves, were marvels of achievement in tone, execution and sentiment. The finale broad and forceful in its general outlines develops to a climax of much grandeur and power, so that the work, as a whole, made a striking impression. Conductor Gericke was recalled four or five times by the insistent applause, but could not be constrained to respond with an encore number.

The second number for the orchestra was the Berlioz transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz," which I consider more effective and direct than the Weingartner version with its too great ingenuity in its counter-treatment of the themes. One admired the brilliancy of the orchestral ensemble in the tutti, the exceeding neatness and precision with which the bravura passages, divided between the violins and the wood wind, were taken up in turn, the fine round rich tone of the violoncellos in the cantabile phrases of the introduction. This brilliant "apotheosis of dance" was certainly given an inspiring performance. The third number, Tschaikovsky's exceedingly clever, brilliant and effective "Italian Caprice," a species of fantasia on Italian folk-songs, created a profound impression. The vivacious suggestion of opera music in the opening, the fierce joy, the riotous abandon in the dance movements, the compelling power over the listener at times there may be too much [illegible] festival of sound. The [illegible] and close with the very familiar overture to "Tannhauser." Mr. Gericke did not give a reading that was surprising in its differences from that of other noted conductors: there were variations in point of detail occasionally, but the interpretation as a whole accorded with that which the public has learned to consider traditional. One noted the strong emphasis given to the accented notes in the figure for the violins so persistently worked against the theme of the Pilgrims' Chorus in the first movement. This method produced an effect that has been absent from previous performances of the overture. The song in praise of Venus was played with exceptional breadth and dignity, and the revels of the Venusberg prior to their culmination in a wild orgie was remarkable for the dainty, pointed precision of the violins and wood wind. Summing up generally, the tone of the orchestra has nobility and power with singular delicacy and refinement by way of contrast. It is never a noisy orchestra, save, perhaps, when the composer has deliberately intended noise. And the individual material of the orchestra is of the highest class throughout.

---

The only soloist was Mr. Willy Hess, the concertmeister, who played Sphor's violin concerto in D minor, another novelty here. This concerto is distinguished by the melodic beauty and the grace and polish which are found in most of Sphor's violin music. It is virtuoso music, but the effects are all legitimate and suit the genius of the instrument perfectly. The slow movement is exceedingly sweet in its melody, which in the course of the movement is ornamented with the most dainty bravura. The last movement has character both in the solo and the accompaniment, and is, altogether, calculated to take the fancy of an audience on first hearing. Mr. Hess in his rendering revealed a very smooth musical tone, and an execution both of the bow and the left hand that was sure and neat. He surmounted the difficulties with surprising ease. He received five enthusiastic recalls, but following the example of his chief, gave no other response than that of bowing his acknowledgments. And perhaps one may be frank and say that this refusal of encores is a refreshing innovation at our concerts. It is thought that the attendance was large enough to make the concert a financial success, in which case the organization may be expected to visit Toronto again in the near future.

[illegible] programme selection in the most judgment. Although strictly classical there was nothing taxing or cumbersome in the entire programme. Each number, delightfully fresh and unhackneyed, it was a pleasure to have an opportunity to hear some of the gems of Mendelssohn and Schumann, too often neglected by orchestras of the first class.

In the overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," which opened the programme, the pleasing harmonies of Mendelssohn were beautifully brought out by the orchestra.

The Bach prelude, which was the second number, was perhaps the most enjoyable selection of all, showing to perfection the brilliant, clean-cut execution of the players, the wonderful coloring and careful attention to accent which makes the Bach music so beautiful and distinctive in style. The arrangement was by Sigismund Bachrich. The Tschaikowsky, Italian caprice, which, according to Phillip Hale, had such a doubtful success at its initial performance in Moscow, was warmly received. It is a fine example of grave and gay moods and is distinctively a Tschaikowsky composition.

The Schumann symphony No. 2, in four movements, closed the programme.

THE SOLOIST.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist of the evening, filled every expectation in his rendition of the great Bruch concerto No. 1 in G minor.

In it the artist had every opportunity to display the unusual talent with which he is gifted. Brilliant technique, fine tone, exquisite coloring, all combined to make Prof. Hess' playing a delight. So perfect was the work of orchestra and soloist that the date of the next concert will be eagerly anticipated by music-lovers in Buffalo.

COURIER
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 5 - 1905

GERICKE AND HIS MASTER PLAYERS

Splendid Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra a Treat for Musical Buffalo — Directed by Faultless Hand

FIRST OF SERIES OF TWO CONCERTS

That musical Buffalo has decided to make the season which is beginning a notable one in its history was evidenced by the splendid audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall last evening. The promoters of symphony concerts in Buffalo, usually exist in fear and trembling for results, but judging from last night's attendance it is safe to predict that the series of two concerts will be a decided success. Although 8:15 o'clock is really an early hour for a fashionable audience to assemble the hall was well filled and the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, was ready to begin the Mendelssohn overture. Many were not seated until after this selection.

It is with the utmost diffidence that the average musician should attempt to describe, much less to criticise the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an organization whose aim for years has been the attainment of what is as near as possible to perfection; assisted and supported by a city where culture is the foremost thought; the management has succeeded in securing the most talented and scholarly musicians, under the ablest direction—the result being an organization whose work is almost perfect.

THE PROGRAMME.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 5 - 1905

MUSICAL SEASON OPENED WITH A SPLENDID CONCERT.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Delighted Big Audience With Perfect Performance.

Buffalo's musical season of 1905-06 opened last evening at Convention Hall with a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. William Gericke conductor.

The public-spirited gentlemen whose good-will and good purses secured this great attraction deserve an extra amount of appreciation, and the size of last night's audience showed that our musical people were awake to the occasion.

The programme was one to appeal to many tastes, though not made up of ultra-modern novelties. The classic and the romantic schools were represented by works and composers of unfailing interest.

Mendelssohn's tone pictures, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," a vivid piece of tone-painting, was the opening number. It was followed by the Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form by Bach, arranged for strings by Sigismond Bachrich. Beauty of line and tone marked every phase of this number. And it was played so beautifully! Every period so clear-cut, rounded out and polished! It was an exquisite specimen of polyphonic work.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" was the most modern number of the programme and a novelty here. It is as fanciful as its name indicates. After a subdued, almost mournful, introduction, it runs the gamut of change through its folk melody, gypsy dance or Bolero, ending finally with a brilliant Saltarello. The programme closed with the Symphony in C major by Schumann, one of the jewels of musical composition.

As to performance, the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra represents a perfection of achievement and an achievement of perfection that are probably not surpassed, if equalled, by any orchestra in the world. Such a beautiful body of string tone is not to be forgotten; nor the wood winds of surpassing loveliness and brasses that are mellow, rich, but never blatant.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, is one of the most eminent of his day. His orchestra respond to him with sympathy as well as promptness and ability. Each number seemed in turn to represent his best interest, but at the end it was Bach and Schumann that showed his preferences. A more sympathetic accompaniment than he gave Mr. Hess in the concerto could not be desired.

The soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, played the Bruch Concerto in G minor. It was his first appearance in Buffalo. He is an artist of the first rank, a man of magnetic personality, and a musician of genuine ability. The Bruch Concerto is one of the most grateful numbers in violinists repertoires. It gives opportunity for the display of cantabile playing, technical skill, and genuine musicianship. In the last movement Mr. Hess' playing was a superb piece of work.

He was recalled many times, audience and orchestra joining in the demonstration.

It is a source of genuine delight that we are to have another concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in February, 1906.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
COURIER
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 8 - 1905

Wednesday evening of last week will be long remembered by Buffalo's music lovers as one of the most enjoyable musical events which has taken place in the city for many years. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Wilhelm Gericke director, and an orchestra of 75 men, gave a concert of the highest class at Convention Hall. It was entirely gratifying, not only to the public-spirited men who brought the concert about, but to all who have the city's musical interest at heart, to see that the orchestra was received by a large and appreciative audience. It is to be hoped that the second concert of the series, which takes place in February, will be as well attended.

COURIER
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 5 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

It was a Brilliant Success in Every Way—Delight for Buffalo Music-Lovers.

Since Theodore Thomas of Chicago stretched out his hand with a request for $750,000, which was forthwith subscribed for him and his organization, orchestras have been obtaining more and more attention and respect from the business world. So there was no great surprise, though there should have been a vote of thanks, when recently a few well-known Buffalonians co-operated to guarantee the expense of bringing to Convention Hall Boston's great Symphony Orchestra. It is to be hoped that the triumphant success of last night's venture will pave the way to many more events of a like festive nature. Let but the much discussed new temple of music be erected, and Buffalo might join the ranks of cities such as Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Denver or Los Angeles, all of which, though smaller than Buffalo, enjoy established and flourishing permanent orchestras.

The first number on last night's program, Mendelssohn's concert-overture, "Calm Sea and Happy Voyage," in which the music embodies the beauties of the serene Italian waters, was first performed in Berlin, 1832, the year after the composer's journey to Italy, not, as stated in the program, in 1835. Director Gericke's rendering of this beautiful tone-poem showed him to be a scholar, an artist and a director of the first rank. To have forty-six performers of stringed instruments play perfectly in tune, not only amongst themselves, but also with six different kinds of wood-wind—piccolo, flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, contra-bassoon, as well as horns, trumpets and tuba from the brass family—this is in itself no small achievement. Perhaps the most admirable single feature of this orchestra lies in the wonderful precision of the co-operation of its members.

The string-players gained additional applause for their faultless rendering of the three Bach numbers, skillfully transcribed for string-orchestra from their original form as violin-solos.

Professor Willy Hess ranks amongst the best violinists, judging by his fine and dignified performance, from memory, of Max Bruch's difficult and many-sided concerto—a work of many moods, all mastered and successfully imparted to his audience by the gifted soloist.

Lack of space forbids detailed mention of each number. The one most applauded was Tschaikowsky's rhapsodic "Italian Caprice" with its vivid pictures of the revellers at the carnival, and its tarantella full of grotesque gaiety.

Musical Buffalo bids the great Boston orchestra, heartily, au revoir!

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
JOURNAL
DETROIT, MICH.
OCT 7 1905

Musicians of the city feel quite elated over the success of the concert given at the Light Guard armory by the Boston Symphony orchestra last Thursday evening, and many declare it to have been the most enjoyable they have ever attended. From a financial point of view it was highly satisfactory, as there was something like $3,700 in the house. It is, therefore, not probable that the 170 guarantors, whom Mr. Stearns secured to cover any deficit that might result on the season, will be called upon. There are, however, still five more expensive concerts to take care of. There was a rumor floating about after Thursday's concert to the effect that later in the year the Boston Symphony would return for another concert. The management of the Detroit Orchestral association know nothing of any such plan. They have told the management of the Boston Symphony that they want that organization for next season, and if a return visit is planned for this season it will be on the responsibility of the orchestra itself. The next concert of the Detroit Orchestral association will be November 25, when the Pittsburg Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Emil Paur, will give the program.

THE GLOBE, TORONTO,

DAY, OCTOBER 4, 1905.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

The first appearance of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra in Toronto will be regarded as an event which in musical importance must be classed with the first visit here of the equally famous Thomas Orchestra. Among the large audience that nearly filled Massey Hall last night were many veteran concert-goers who were present when the late Theodore Thomas gave his initial programme in this city, and to whom the playing of his orchestra was a revelation of exquisite tone quality and superb technical accomplishment. These, it may safely be conjectured, felt that the Boston organization had given them a second revelation, one which if it did not carry a more authoritative message, was equally convincing and illuminative. Taking the audience as a whole, there could have been no doubt, one would think, as to the almost perfect achievements of the aggregation of seventy-five musicians who followed the direction of Mr. Welhelm Gericke in the interpretation of a choice and exacting programme. The grand, the excelling qualities of the orchestra were not, however, demonstrated to finality with their first essay. It was not until they had made some progress with the Schumann symphony, the first work on the programme, when they had begun to gauge the acoustics of the hall, that their merit was fully apparent in all its distinction. Then, indeed, their performance became compacted with the sympathy that they could mutually feel and with the assurance and confidence that the growing acquaintance with the locale inspired them in measuring and producing their tone. And the final result was that their hearers were forced to the conviction that the orchestra was a truly superb instrument for the material interpretation of abstract music. In the first movement of the Schumann symphony, that in C major, op 61, a slight hardness was noticeable in the enunciation of the motto theme in the prelude by the trumpets, horns and trombone. But all suspicion of harshness vanished before the work was concluded. This symphony was a novelty to Toronto. It is doubtful whether it will ever become popular in the sense that the representative symphonies of Beethoven and Tschaikovski are at present popular. It was composed when Schumann was weighed down by physical suffering and mental distress, and the first movement in particular, with its restlessness, its indecision of mood, its veiled melancholy, reflects perhaps his feelings at the time. The Scherzo, brisk and vigorous and with plenty of motion from its arpeggios, the main characteristic figure, is not wholly gay. There is no full abandonment to joy; there is still the shadow of sorrow. The slow movement, the Adagio, by way of compensation, is an exquisite love song, for it suggests a tender, lofty passion, if anything in music does. Here, indeed, Schumann is at his best. And it was at this point that the orchestra conquered all disposition to be negative in praise. The elevated song of the violins, so pure, so sustained in their cantilena, the melting accents of the clarinets and oboes in their beautiful responses, and, again, the etherial trills of the violins in octaves, were marvels of achievement in tone, execution and sentiment. The finale broad and forceful in its general outlines develops to a climax of much grandeur and power, so that the work, as a whole, made a striking impression. Conductor Gericke was recalled four or five times by the insistent applause, but could not be constrained to respond with an encore number.

The second number for the orchestra was the Berlioz transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz," which I consider more effective and direct than the Weingartner version with its too great ingenuity in its counter-treatment of the themes. One admired the brilliancy of the orchestral ensemble in the tuttis, the exceeding neatness and precision with which the bravura passages, divided between the violins and the wood wind, were taken up in turn, the fine round rich tone of the violoncellos in the cantabile phrases of the introduction. This brilliant "apotheosis of the dance" was certainly given an inspiring performance. The third number, Tschaikovsky's exceedingly clever, brilliant and effective "Italian Caprice," a species of fantasia on Italian folk-song, created a profound impression. The ingenious suggestion of opera music in the opening, the fierce joy, the riotous abandon in the dance movements, exert a seizing power over the listener even if at times there may be too much of a carnival of sound. The concert was brought to its climax and close with the very familiar overture to "Tannhauser." Mr. Gericke did not give a reading that was surprising in its differences from that of other noted conductors: there were variations in point of detail occasionally, but the interpretation as a whole accorded with that which the public has learned to consider traditional. One noted the strong emphasis given to the accented notes in the figure for the violins so persistently worked against the theme of the Pilgrims' Chorus in the first movement. This method produced an effect that has been absent from previous performances of the overture. The song in praise of Venus was played with exceptional breadth and dignity, and the revels of the Venusberg prior to their culmination in a wild orgie was remarkable for the dainty, pointed precision of the violins and wood wind. Summing up generally, the tone of the orchestra has nobility and power with singular delicacy and refinement by way of contrast. It is never a noisy orchestra, save, perhaps, when the composer has deliberately intended noise. And the individual material of the orchestra is of the highest class throughout.

The only soloist was Mr. Willy Hess, the concertmeister, who played Sphor's violin concerto in D minor, another novelty here. This concerto is distinguished by the melodic beauty and the grace and polish which are found in most of Sphor's violin music. It is virtuoso music, but the effects are all legitimate and suit the genius of the instrument perfectly. The slow movement is exceedingly sweet in its melody, which in the course of the movement is ornamented with the most dainty bravura. The last movement has character both in the solo and the accompaniment, and is, altogether, calculated to take the fancy of an audience on first hearing. Mr. Hess in his rendering revealed a very smooth musical tone, and an execution both of the bow and the left hand that was sure and neat. He surmounted the difficulties with surprising ease. He received five enthusastic recalls, but following the example of his chief, gave no other response than that of bowing his acknowledgments. And perhaps one may be frank and say that this refusal of encores is a refreshing innovation at our concerts. It is thought that the attendance was large enough to make the concert a financial success, in which case the organization may be expected to visit Toronto again in the near future.

Mr. Gericke displayed in the choice of his programme uncommon taste and judgment. Although strictly classical there was nothing taxing or cumbersome in the entire programme. Each number, delightfully fresh and unhackneyed, it was a pleasure to have an opportunity to hear some of the gems of Mendelssohn and Schumann, too often neglected by orchestras of the first class.

In the overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," which opened the programme, the pleasing harmonies of Mendelssohn were beautifully brought out by the orchestra.

The Bach prelude, which was the second number, was perhaps the most enjoyable selection of all, showing to perfection the brilliant, clean-cut execution of the players, the wonderful coloring and careful attention to accent which makes the Bach music so beautiful and distinctive in style. The arrangement was by Sigismund Bachrich. The Tschaikowsky, Italian caprice, which, according to Phillip Hale, had such a doubtful success at its initial performance in Moscow, was warmly received. It is a fine example of grave and gay moods and is distinctively a Tschaikowsky composition.

The Schumann symphony No. 2, in four movements, closed the programme.

THE SOLOIST.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist of the evening, filled exery expectation in his rendition of the great Bruch concerto No. 1 in G minor.

In it the artist had every opportunity to display the unusual talent with which he is gifted. Brilliant technique, fine tone, exquisite coloring, all combined to make Prof. Hess' playing a delight. So perfect was the work of orchestra and soloist that the date of the next concert will be eagerly anticipated by music-lovers in Buffalo.

COURIER

JUL 5 1905

GERICKE AND HIS MASTER PLAYERS

Splendid Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra a Treat for Musical Buffalo — Directed by Faultless Hand

FIRST OF SERIES OF TWO CONCERTS

That musical Buffalo has decided to make the season which is beginning a notable one in its history was evidenced by the splendid audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall last evening. The promoters of symphony concerts in Buffalo, usually exist in fear and trembling for results, but judging from last night's attendance it is safe to predict that the series of two concerts will be a decided success. Although 8:15 o'clock is really an early hour for a fashionable audience to assemble the hall was well filled and the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, was ready to begin the Mendelssohn overture. Many were not seated until after this selection.

It is with the utmost diffidence that the average musician should attempt to describe, much less to criticise the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an organization whose aim for years has been the attainment of what is as near as possible to perfection; assisted and supported by a city where culture is the foremost thought; the management has succeeded in securing the most talented and scholarly musicians, under the ablest direction—the result being an organization whose work is almost perfect.

THE PROGRAMME.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

NEWS

n.....

ress.....

e.....

MUSICAL SEASON OPENED WITH A SPLENDID CONCERT.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Delighted Big Audience With Perfect Performance.

Buffalo's musical season of 1905-06 opened last evening at Convention Hall with a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. William Gericke conductor.

The public-spirited gentlemen whose goodwill and good purses secured this great attraction deserve an extra amount of appreciation, and the size of last night's audience showed that our musical people were awake to the occasion.

The programme was one to appeal to many tastes, though not made up of ultra-modern novelties. The classic and the romantic schools were represented by works and composers of unfailing interest.

Mendelssohn's tone pictures, "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," a vivid piece of tone-painting, was the opening number. It was followed by the Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte in Rondo form by Bach, arranged for strings by Sigismond Bachrich. Beauty of line and tone marked every phase of this number. And it was played so beautifully! Every period so clear-cut, rounded out and polished! It was an exquisite specimen of polyphonic work.

Tschaikowsky's "Italian Caprice" was the most modern number of the programme, and a novelty here. It is as fanciful as its name indicates. After a subdued, almost mournful, introduction, it runs the gamut of change through its folk melody, gypsy dance or Bolero, ending finally with a brilliant Saltarello. The programme closed with the Symphony in C major by Schumann, one of the jewels of musical composition.

As to performance, the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra represents a perfection of achievement and an achievement of perfection that are probably not surpassed, if equalled, by any orchestra in the world. Such a beautiful body of string tone is not to be forgotten; nor the wood winds of surpassing loveliness and brasses that are mellow, rich, but never blatant.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, is one of the most eminent of his day. His orchestra respond to him with sympathy as well as promptness and ability. Each number seemed in turn to represent his best interest, but at the end it was Bach and Schumann that showed his preferences. A more sympathetic accompaniment than he gave Mr. Hess in the concerto could not be desired.

The soloist, Prof. Willy Hess, played the Bruch Concerto in G minor. It was his first appearance in Buffalo. He is an artist of the first rank, a man of magnetic personality, and a musician of genuine ability. The Bruch Concerto is one of the most grateful numbers in violinists repertoires. It gives opportunity for the display of cantabile playing, technical skill, and genuine musicianship. In the last movement Mr. Hess' playing was a superb piece of work.

He was recalled many times, audience and orchestra joining in the demonstration.

It is a source of genuine delight that we are to have another concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in February, 1906.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

COURIER

m.....

ress.....

e.....

* * *

Wednesday evening of last week will be long remembered by Buffalo's music lovers as one of the most enjoyable musical events which has taken place in the city for many years. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Wilhelm Gericke director, and an orchestra of 75 men, gave a concert of the highest class at Convention Hall. It was entirely gratifying, not only to the public-spirited men who brought the concert about, but to all who have the city's musical interest at heart, to see that the orchestra was received by a large and appreciative audience. It is to be hoped that the second concert of the series, which takes place in February, will be as well attended.

COURIER

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT

It was a Brilliant Success in Every Way—Delight for Buffalo Music-Lovers.

Since Theodore Thomas of Chicago stretched out his hand with a request for $750,000, which was forthwith subscribed for him and his organization, orchestras have been obtaining more and more attention and respect from the business world. So there was no great surprise, though there should have been a vote of thanks, when recently a few well-known Buffalonians co-operated to guarantee the expense of bringing to Convention Hall Boston's great Symphony Orchestra. It is to be hoped that the triumphant success of last night's venture will pave the way to many more events of a like festive nature. Let but the much discussed new temple of music be erected, and Buffalo might join the ranks of cities such as Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Denver or Los Angeles, all of which, though smaller than Buffalo, enjoy established and flourishing permanent orchestras.

The first number on last night's program, Mendelssohn's concert-overture, "Calm Sea and Happy Voyage," in which the music embodies the beauties of the serene Italian waters, was first performed in Berlin, 1832, the year after the composer's journey to Italy, not, as stated in the program, in 1835. Director Gericke's rendering of this beautiful tone-poem showed him to be a scholar, an artist and a director of the first rank. To have forty-six performers of stringed instruments play perfectly in tune, not only amongst themselves, but also with six different kinds of wood-wind—piccolo, flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, contra-bassoon, as well as horns, trumpets and tuba from the brass family—this is in itself no small achievement. Perhaps the most admirable single feature of this orchestra lies in the wonderful precision of the co-operation of its members.

The string-players gained additional applause for their faultless rendering of the three Bach numbers, skillfully transcribed for string-orchestra from their original form as violin-solos.

Professor Willy Hess ranks amongst the best violinists, judging by his fine and dignified performance, from memory, of Max Bruch's difficult and many-sided concerto—a work of many moods, all mastered and successfully imparted to his audience by the gifted soloist.

Lack of space forbids detailed mention of each number. The one most applauded was Tschaikowsky's rhapsodic "Italian Caprice" with its vivid pictures of the revellers at the carnival, and its tarantella full of grotesque gaiety.

Musical Buffalo bids the great Boston orchestra, heartily, au revoir!

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

COURIER

1.....

ess.....

e.....

Musicians of the city feel quite elated over the success of the concert given at the Light Guard armory by the Boston Symphony orchestra last Thursday evening, and many declare it to have been the most enjoyable they have ever attended. From a financial point of view it was highly satisfactory, as there was something like $3,700 in the house. It is, therefore, not probable that the 170 guarantors, whom Mr. Stearns secured to cover any deficit that might result on the season, will be called upon. There are, however, still five more expensive concerts to take care of. There was a rumor floating about after Thursday's concert to the effect that later in the year the Boston Symphony would return for another concert. The management of the Detroit Orchestral association know nothing of any such plan. They have told the management of the Boston Symphony that they want that organization for next season, and if a return visit is planned for this season it will be on the responsibility of the orchestra itself. The next concert of the Detroit Orchestral association will be November 25, when the Pittsburg Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Emil Paur, will give the program.

[57]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS
DETROIT, MICH.
ss

Boston Symphony Orchestra Warmly Welcomed.

There were only the triumphal arches and laurel wreaths lacking to mark the return to Detroit of the Boston Symphony orchestra Thursday evening in the Light Guard armory an epoch-making event. The barren spaces of the armory were never so beautifully concealed in brave array of smart frocks and correct black coats as last night when society and her husband, the world of music and a very large proportion of "among those present" crowded the auditorium in all the splendor of best bib and tucker. A more brilliant and representative audience has rarely gathered for a concert in this city, and the Detroit Orchestral association, whose premier in musical philanthropy it was, has every reason to feel proud of the success of the initial concert. Of all the fine organizations secured for the series of orchestral concerts the association has planned, none deserved the honor of introduction so much as the Boston Symphony, and it was the happiest choice that brought Mr. Gericke and his men to Detroit, after too manys years absence, under such auspicious circumstances.

To criticise the Boston Symphony is to find captious fault with a perfect work of art or an achievement that is sublime. There is no room for other than unstinted praise where individual excellence has been so inspired by the personality of one man as to result in a flawless ensemble. In appearance Gericke is alert and soldierly with the bearing of a disciplinarian. He is easy and graceful in his movements, but repressed and masterful, and has none of the extravagance of gesture that frequently passes for artistic fervor. Gericke conducts with his brain and baton, not with his arms and body.

The program was a remarkable concession from so stiff a classicist as Gericke, and it was one to appeal to any audience not privileged to have its home in Boston and its shrine in Symphony hall. The numbers, the Weber overture to "Oberon," the beautiful Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" symphony, the prelude and Liebstrode from "Tristan and Isolde" and two ballet excerpts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust." The symphony was magnificently played with a clear, soft beauty of string tone and a delicacy and sympathy from wind and brasses that resulted in a perfect whole. The charming second movement was given with the most alluring grace. The Liebstrode was a sublime climax and brought to an end the finest and most thoroughly satisfying and artistic orchestral concert, probably, that Detroit has ever known.

Prof. Willy Hess played the Spohr concerto for violin in D minor delightfully. Prof. Hess possesses a particularly sweet tone and plays with intelligence and finish. He was recalled several times, and, indeed, the sincere applause which followed every program number was unmistakable proof that the Boston Symphony was heartily welcome. It evidenced also that the Detroit public is in sympathy with the aims of the Detroit Orchestral association.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
DETROIT, MICH.

Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, which gives a concert in Grays' armory Friday evening, is making its first long trip away from home in 18 years. The orchestra played in Cleveland in '92, and since then has not left Boston, excepting to play in some of the cities within a ride of an hour or so from the Massachusetts capital. The present tour includes only a few cities, the furthest western one visited being Detroit, and the smallest, Toronto. The 75 musicians are being transported in a special Pullman train.

NEWS
CLEVELAND, OHIO
OCT 7 - 1903

THE Boston Symphony orchestra scored a triumph when it came to Grays' armory last night under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, and renewed the pleasant relationships of 12 years ago—only more so. As Manager F. R. Comes expressed it last night: "When we came here before, we had to coax people to come to hear us. Selling tickets was like bribing children with sticks of gum—people expected a prize with every purchase—but this concert gives us great faith in Cleveland as a musical city. There has been a marked musical development here and our splendid audience will warrant us in returning here for at least one concert each season."

Grays' armory was well filled when the conductor took the stand and raised the baton for the opening bars of Mendelssohn's "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," which proved to be one of the greatest achievements of the evening. There is a stately dignity to this musical rendering of two little poems by Goethe. Schubert and Beethoven both took a fling at them; but it remained for Mendelssohn to write the great instrumental piece, bringing together two pictures standing in contrast. The author never saw the sea until 1824 and four years later he placed in immortal form these billowy swells and surgings, tranquility, calm, and almost undefinable grandeur. Gericke gave the selection a masterly reading and at the close had firmly established himself with newcomers and had become rehabilitated in the admiration of old-time concert-goers.

The second selection was an arrangement of two movements of a prelude by John Sebastian Bach. There is a romantic story connected with the original manuscript, showing how nearly the world came to losing this creation of the master mind. The original manuscript was found in a heap of waste paper intended for a butter shop in St. Petersburg. The Boston Symphony has included the piece in its repertoire since 1884 and gives the archaic measures the true ring and rhythm.

The chief feature of popular interest in the program was the magnificent rendering of Wagner's "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," arranged by the great master for concert use from scenes before Fafner's cave. I believe a local audience has never heard a more clearly defined piece of orchestral description. When Gericke held up the baton, we heard the rustle of the leaves in the treetops, imagined Siegfried's dream, heard the branches sway more noisily, and finally the bird-song motive, clear as the whistling of a nightingale on a still night. In the arrangement, the scenes between Alberich, Mime and Siegfried are omitted, and there is no reference to Mime's death; but towards the close comes the entrancing blending of the several motives with a touch of the vivacious fire music near the close. The orchestra and its leader translated Wagner as directly as the master himself interpreted the animate and inanimate in his superb composition.

The Beethoven symphony No. 5 is a masterwork, eccentric and inexplicable. Gericke grasped its intricacies with skill and gave a quiet, but suitable rendition.

Willy Hess, the violin soloist, played Max Bruch's G minor concerto, which was dedicated by the author to Joachim and frequently played by that artist. Hess exhibited some excellent bowing and produced a rare singing quality from his instrument. His work is that of a finished artist, full of soul and keen depth of thought.

preparing our answer."

ORCHESTRA SCORES GREAT HIT

Boston Organization Praised by Listeners—Soloist Makes Impression With Program.

The exquisite flawlessness of the work of the orchestra was in entire harmony with the quiet power of the conductor. Gericke resorts to no sensationalism. His climaxes are not dynamic with explosive feeling. All his rendition of a rich and varied program was characterized by simplicity of method and marked restraint. His reading was always in the best taste and brought out the beauty of the theme w ithauthority and high intelligence. If anything was lacking it was the fire of that phase of art which at times carries master and audience alike out of the field of talent into the divine realm of genius.

Professor Hess showed himself a violinist of fine attainments and worthy of the encomiums lavished upon him in cities where he is well known. It would be unfair to compare him with those great masters of his instrument who have achieved immortality, but among artists falling short of the highest fame he must be accorded an enviable position. His style had breadth and behind his admirable technique was a poetic feeling which manifested itself unmistakably and won the enthusiastic favor of his audience.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
LEADER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
OCT 7 - 1903

ORCHESTRA SCORES GREAT HIT

Boston Organization Praised by Listeners—Soloist Makes Impression With Program.

All doubts of the hold which the Boston Symphony Orchestra had upon the music-loving people of Cleveland, after a long absence from this city, were dispelled last night by the splendid audience which crowded the Grays' Armory. Before the concert was half over it was manifest that the popularity of the organization would henceforth be greater than ever, for appreciation of its exquisitely finished and scholarly rendition of a fine program was instant and hearty.

Interest centered especially in the work of the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, and the soloist of the evening, Professor Willy Hess. Under the baton of the master who has sustained the prestige and held to the best traditions of Boston's famous orchestra, the eighty musicians responded to his lightest touch like a perfectly balanced and finished human mechanism.

The exquisite flawlessness of the work of the orchestra was in entire harmony with the quiet power of the conductor. Gericke resorts to no sensationalism. His climaxes are not dynamic with explosive feeling. All his rendition of a rich and varied program was characterized by simplicity of method and marked restraint. His reading was always in the best taste and brought out the beauty of the theme with authority and high intelligence. If anything was lacking it was the fire of that phase of art which at times carries master and audience alike out of the field of talent into the divine realm of genius.

Professor Hess showed himself a violinist of fine attainments and worthy of the encomiums lavished upon him in cities where he is well known. It would be unfair to compare him with those great masters of his instrument who have achieved immortality, but among artists falling short of the highest fame he must be accorded an enviable position. His style had breadth and behind his admirable technique was a poetic feeling which manifested itself unmistakably and won the enthusiastic favor of his audience.

GD.

AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS.

Cleveland Audience Welcomes Conductor Gericke and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concert given at the Grays' armory last evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra marked the opening of the musical season in the city. It was a brilliant opening, lovers of orchestral music and society joining in the outpouring that caused the seating capacity of the armory to be practically sold out before the program started.

It was an appreciative audience. Naturally where the program was of such excellence there was but a limited opportunity for discrimination and the audience expressed vigorous approval of every number on the program a .d gave a most generous reception to Willy Hess, the soloist.

Conductor Gericke is the same positive and emphatic conductor, the orchestra is the same excellent organization. An attractive program was rendered with almost faultless precision. It revived the admiration of all who heard the orchestra on the occasion of its former visit, and it awakened new friendships.

Great as was the success of the orchestra even greater was the success of the soloist, Willy Hess. Although this was his first appearance here he was easily the lion of the evening, and was kept on the stage for five minutes after he completed his solo bowing and smiling his thanks to the audience.

The favorite number on the program aside from the solo, was the Bach number for the strings, though the Mendelssohn overture and the Wagner selection won much favor.

The symphony was the Beethoven Symphony in C minor No. 5. It was given brilliant reading by the conductor.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
POST EXPRESS
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
ss
OCT 9 - 1903

IN THE THEATERS.

The Boston Symphony.

Saturday night's concert was a thing of as pure joy as music can be expected to afford. It is the pet folly of people who go to Europe to talk of the superiority of music there; but they know very well, deep down in their hearts, that Europe has no orchestra which contains a greater number of gifted instrumentalists than does the Boston Symphony.

Perhaps the Oberon overture [illegible] number that the audience felt [illegible] most easily have been spared. But when heard once more it was wonderfully grateful to the senses. That wood wind was as near perfect as anything mundane can be hoped to be. We affect to look down on poor Weber in these days; yet who, among our modern composers, Grieg alone excepted, can write music so full of springtime freshness? It was worth a long journey to know the wild-wood freshness of Mr. Longy's oboe, and to hear the delicious cooing of the flutes. Then came the Bach numbers and every Bachanalian (one o please) metaphorically put himself in an attitude of prayer. There are moments when Bach stands, but supreme among all who have practised the craft and mystery of music and Saturday night when the strings murmured the meditation in Adagio in C major, was one of them. This is not the pleading of Barch's primacy in the hierarchy of music; but if a plebiscite of the audience had been taken at the concert, the listeners would have deified the old man and meant their worship far more earnestly than did the Romans of old when they made gods of their Caesars. Then there was the beautiful Gavotte from the Violin Partita in E major, one of the joys of the writer's childhood and doubtless a formative influence of sovereign power. For it is with Bach as someone said of Plato—not to have known him in youth is a misfortune; to ignore him in maturity is a crime.

The Tschaikowsky Symphony was a haunting experience. Gericke's reading is conservative; but when, as in those strident passages for violin in the opening movement and the Tartarean orgie of the third, he freed the powers of darkness the effect was almost appalling. In no work did the orchestra seem more like a multiplex soul than in this. The laughter of that five-four valse was diabolical and those long successions of drooping phrases in the final adagio recalled Lucian's famous description of the death of the ancient Roman placed in the bath and his veins opened to bleed till life shall have ebbed slowly away. The horns and the bass strings were not as insistent, not as wailingly melancholy under Gerides direction as under that of Hans Richter and he took the valse at a slower rate.

After the psychic sins of the symphony the sensual riot of the Wagner overture sounded rather like playful naughtiness than transgression worthy of perdition. Compared with Tschaikowsky Wagner is something of a melodramatist; he thinks and acts theatrically; with the Russian all is tragically earnest. After the "Pathetic" the "Tannhauser" overture came as a relief.

Willy Hess's tone in the Max Bruch concerto marked him as an elegant sentimentalist among fiddlers. His technique is remarkable; but still his playing is rather romantically subjective than authoritative.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
UNION ADVERTISER
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
ess
OCT 9 1903

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Gives Delightful Programme of Classical Numbers Before Large Audience.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra pleased a large audience at the Baker Theater Saturday night with an excellent programme of classical numbers, which for general execution and artistic rendition were probably the best ever heard in Rochester. The orchestra was directed by Prof. Wilhelm Gericke in a masterly manner and the performance of conductor and members of the orchestra was a delight to Rochester music lovers who composed the audience and gave appreciative attention.

The careful training of the orchestra was evident in every note and entirely accurate phrasing marked every strain. The harmony was perfect, the reed, wind and string instruments in absolute accord, and in every feature there was that velvety smoothness and artistic execution which accompanies only the work of skilled musicians. In addition to the full orchestral numbers, much enjoyment was found in solos by Prof. Willy [illegible] master violinist. He was given [illegible] applause and there was regret that he did not appear more than once.

The programme included among its interesting features the overture to the opera "Oberon," prelude, Adagio [illegible] gavotte, in Rondo and Form, a [illegible] certo for violin, Symphony No. 6, [illegible] thetic," and overture to "Tannhaus[illegible]

[58]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau of the World

Boston Symphony Orchestra Warmly Welcomed.

There were only the triumphal arches and laurel wreaths lacking to mark the return to Detroit of the Boston Symphony orchestra Thursday evening in the Light Guard armory an epoch-making event. The barren spaces of the armory were never so beautifully concealed in brave array of smart frocks and correct black coats as last night when society and her husband, the world of music and a very large proportion of "among those present" crowded the auditorium in all the splendor of best bib and tucker. A more brilliant and representative audience has rarely gathered for a concert in this city, and the Detroit Orchestral association, whose premier in musical philanthropy it was, has every reason to feel proud of the success of the initial concert. Of all the fine organizations secured for the series of orchestral concerts the association has planned, none deserved the honor of introduction so much as the Boston Symphony, and it was the happiest choice that brought Mr. Gericke and his men to Detroit, after too manys years absence, under such auspicious circumstances.

To criticize the Boston Symphony is to find captious fault with a perfect work of art or an achievement that is sublime. There is no room for other than unstinted praise where individual excellence has been so inspired by the personality of one man as to result in a flawless ensemble. In appearance Gericke is alert and soldierly with the bearing of a disciplinarian. He is easy and graceful in his movements, but repressed and masterful, and has none of the extravagance of gesture that frequently passes for artistic fervor. Gericke conducts with his brain and baton, not with his arms and body.

The program was a remarkable concession from so stiff a classicist as Gericke, and it was one to appeal to any audience not privileged to have its home in Boston and its shrine in Symphony hall. The numbers, the Weber overture to "Oberon," the beautiful Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" symphony, the prelude and Liebstrode from "Tristan and Isolde" and two ballet excerpts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust." The symphony was magnificently played with a clear, soft beauty of string tone and a delicacy and sympathy from wind and brasses that resulted in a perfect whole. The charming second movement was given with the most alluring grace. The Liebstrode was a sublime climax and brought to an end the finest and most thoroughly satisfying and artistic orchestral concert, probably, that Detroit has ever known.

Prof. Willy Hess played the Spohr concerto for violin in D minor delightfully. Prof. Hess possesses a particularly sweet tone and plays with intelligence and finish. He was recalled several times, and, indeed, the sincere applause which followed every program number was unmistakable proof that the Boston Symphony was heartily welcome. It evidenced also that the Detroit public is in sympathy with the aims of the Detroit Orchestral association.

per Cutting Bureau of the World

Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, which gives a concert in Grays' armory Friday evening, is making its first long trip away from home in 13 years. The orchestra played in Cleveland in '92, and since then has not left Boston, excepting to play in some of the cities within a ride of an hour or so from the Massachusetts capital. The present tour includes only a few cities, the furthest western one visited being Detroit, and the smallest, Toronto. The 75 musicians are being transported in a special Pullman train.

NEWS

THE Boston Symphony orchestra scored a triumph when it came to Grays' armory last night under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, and renewed the pleasant relationships of 12 years ago—only more so. As Manager F. R. Comee expressed it last night: "When we came here before, we had to coax people to come to hear us. Selling tickets was like bribing children with sticks of gum—people expected a prize with every purchase—but this concert gives us great faith in Cleveland as a musical city. There has been a marked musical development here and our splendid audience will warrant us in returning here for at least one concert each season."

Grays' armory was well filled when the conductor took the stand and raised the baton for the opening bars of Mendelssohn's "Sea Calm and Prosperous Voyage," which proved to be one of the greatest achievements of the evening. There is a stately dignity to this musical rendering of two little poems by Goethe. Schubert and Beethoven both took a fling at them; but it remained for Mendelssohn to write the great instrumental piece, bringing together two pictures standing in contrast. The author never saw the sea until 1824 and four years later he placed in immortal form these billowy swells and surgings, tranquility, calm, and almost undefinable grandeur. Gericke gave the selection a masterly reading and at the close had firmly established himself with newcomers and had become rehabilitated in the admiration of old-time concert-goers.

The second selection was an arrangement of two movements of a prelude by John Sebastian Bach. There is a romantic story connected with the original manuscript, showing how nearly the world came to losing this creation of the master mind. The original manuscript was found in a heap of waste paper intended for a butter shop in St. Petersburg. The Boston Symphony has included the piece in its repertoire since 1884 and gives the archaic measures the true ring and rhythm.

The chief feature of popular interest in the program was the magnificent rendering of Wagner's "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," arranged by the great master for concert use from scenes before Fafner's cave. I believe a local audience has never heard a more clearly defined piece of orchestral description. When Gericke held up the baton, we heard the rustle of the leaves in the treetops, imagined Siegfried's dream, heard the branches sway more noisily, and finally the bird-song motive, clear as the whistling of a nightingale on a still night. In the arrangement, the scenes between Alberich, Mime and Siegfried are omitted, and there is no reference to Mime's death; but towards the close comes the entrancing blending of the several motives with a touch of the vivacious fire music near the close. The orchestra and its leader translated Wagner as directly as the master himself interpreted the animate and inanimate in his superb composition.

The Beethoven symphony No. 5 is a masterwork, eccentric and inexplicable. Gericke grasped its intricacies with skill and gave a quiet, but suitable rendition.

Willy Hess, the violin soloist, played Max Bruch's G minor concerto, which was dedicated by the author to Joachim and frequently played by that artist. Hess exhibited some excellent bowing and produced a rare singing quality from his instrument. His work is that of a finished artist, full of soul and keen depth of thought.

preparing our answer."

ORCHESTRA SCORES GREAT HIT

Boston Organization Praised by Listeners—Soloist Makes Impression With Program.

The exquisite flawlessness of the work of the orchestra was in entire harmony with the quiet power of the conductor. Gericke resorts to no sensationalism. His climaxes are not dynamic with explosive feeling. All his rendition of a rich and varied program was characterized by simplicity of method and marked restraint. His reading was always in the best taste and brought out the beauty of the theme w ithauthority and high intelligence. If anything was lacking it was the fire of that phase of art which at times carries master and audience alike out of the field of talent into the divine realm of genius.

Professor Hess showed himself a violinist of fine attainments and worthy of the encomiums lavished upon him in cities where he is well known. It would be unfair to compare him with those great masters of his instrument who have achieved immortality, but among artists falling short of the highest fame he must be accorded an enviable position. His style had breadth and behind his admirable technique was a poetic feeling which manifested itself unmistakably and won the enthusiastic favor of his audience.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
LEADER

ORCHESTRA SCORES GREAT HIT

Boston Organization Praised by Listeners—Soloist Makes Impression With Program.

All doubts of the hold which the Boston Symphony Orchestra had upon the music-loving people of Cleveland, after a long absence from this city, were dispelled last night by the splendid audience which crowded the Grays' Armory. Before the concert was half over it was manifest that the popularity of the organization would henceforth be greater than ever, for appreciation of its exquisitely finished and scholarly rendition of a fine program was instant and hearty.

Interest centered especially in the work of the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, and the soloist of the evening, Professor Willy Hess. Under the baton of the master who has sustained the prestige and held to the best traditions of Boston's famous orchestra, the eighty musicians responded to his lightest touch like a perfectly balanced and finished human mechanism.

The exquisite flawlessness of the work of the orchestra was in entire harmony with the quiet power of the conductor. Gericke resorts to no sensationalism. His climaxes are not dynamic with explosive feeling. All his rendition of a rich and varied program was characterized by simplicity of method and marked restraint. His reading was always in the best taste and brought out the beauty of the theme with authority and high intelligence. If anything was lacking it was the fire of that phase of art which at times carries master and audience alike out of the field of talent into the divine realm of genius.

Professor Hess showed himself a violinist of fine attainments and worthy of the encomiums lavished upon him in cities where he is well known. It would be unfair to compare him with those great masters of his instrument who have achieved immortality, but among artists falling short of the highest fame he must be accorded an enviable position. His style had breadth and behind his admirable technique was a poetic feeling which manifested itself unmistakably and won the enthusiastic favor of his audience.

Perhaps the "Oberon" overture was the number that the audience felt might most easily have been spared. But when heard once more it was wonderfully grateful to the senses. That wood wind was as near perfect as anything mundane can be hoped to be. We affect to look down on poor Weber in these days; yet who, among our modern composers, Grieg alone excepted, can write music so full of springtime freshness? It was worth a long journey to know the wildwood freshness of Mr. Longy's oboe and to hear the delicious cooing of the flutes. Then came the Bach numbers and every Bachanalian (one o please) metaphorically put himself in an attitude of prayer. There are moments when Bach stands out supreme among all who have practised the craft and mystery of music and Saturday night when the strings murmured the meditation in Adagio in C major, was one of them. This is not the pleading of Barch's primacy in the hierarchy of music; but if a plebiscite of the audience had been taken at the concert, the listeners would have deified the old man and meant their worship far more earnestly than did the Romans of old when they made gods of their Caesars. Then there was the beautiful Gavotte from the Violin Partita in E major, one of the joys of the writer's childhood and doubtless a formative influence of sovereign power. For it is with Bach as someone said of Plato-not to have known him in youth is a misfortune; to ignore him in maturity is a crime.

The Tschaikowsky Symphony was a haunting experience. Gericke's reading is conservative; but when, as in those strident passages for violin in the opening movement and the Tartarean orgie of the third, he freed the powers of darkness the effect was almost appalling. In no work did the orchestra seem more like a multiplex soul than in this. The laughter of that five-four valse was diabolical and those long successions of drooping phrases in the final adagio recalled Lucian's famous description of the death of the ancient Roman, placed in the bath and his veins opened to bleed till life shall have ebbed slowly away. The horns and the bass strings were not as insistent, not as wailingly melancholy under Gerides direction as under that of Hans Richter and he took the valse at a slower rate.

After the psychic sins of the symphony the sensual riot of the Wagnor overture sounded rather like playful naughtiness than transgression worthy of perdition. Compared with Tschaikowsky Wagner is something of a melodramatist; he thinks and acts theatrically; with the Russian all is tragically earnest. After the "Pathetic" the "Tannhauser" overture came as a relief.

Willy Hess's tone in the Max Brunch concerto marked him as an elegant sentimentalist among fiddlers. His technique is remarkable; but still his playing is rather romantically subjective than authoritative.

AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS.

Cleveland Audience Welcomes Conductor Gericke and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concert given at the Grays' armory last evening by the Boston Symphony orchestra marked the opening of the musical season in the city. It was a brilliant opening, lovers of orchestral music and society joining in the outpouring that caused the seating capacity of the armory to be practically sold out before the program started.

It was an appreciative audience. Naturally where the program was of such excellence there was but a limited opportunity for discrimination and the audience expressed vigorous approval of every number on the program a.d gave a most generous reception to Willy Hess, the soloist.

Conductor Gericke is the same positive and emphatic conductor, the orchestra is the same excellent organization. An attractive program was rendered with almost faultless precision. It revived the admiration of all who heard the orchestra on the occasion of its former visit, and it awakened new friendships.

Great as was the success of the orchestra even greater was the success of the soloist, Willy Hess. Although this was his first appearance here he was easily the lion of the evening, and was kept on the stage for five minutes after he completed his solo bowing and smiling his thanks to the audience.

The favorite number on the program aside from the solo, was the Bach number for the strings, though the Mendelssohn overture and the Wagner selection won much favor.

The symphony was the Beethoven Symphony in C minor No. 5. It was given brilliant reading by the conductor.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

IN THE THEATERS.

The Boston Symphony.

Saturday night's concert was a thing of as pure joy as music can be expected to afford. It is the pet folly of people who go to Europe to talk of the superiority of music there; but they know very well, deep down in their hearts, that Europe has no orchestra which contains a greater number of gifted instrumentalists than does the Boston Symphony.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Gives Delightful Programme of Classical Numbers Before Large Audience.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra pleased a large audience at the Baker Theater Saturday night with an excellent programme of classical numbers, which for general execution and artistic rendition were probably the best ever heard in Rochester. The orchestra was directed by Prof. Wilhelm Gericke in a masterly manner and the performance of conductor and members of the orchestra was a delight to Rochester music lovers who composed the audience and gave appreciative attention.

The careful training of the orchestra was evident in every note and entirely accurate phrasing marked every strain. The harmony was perfect, the reed, wind and string instruments in absolute accord, and in every feature there was that velvety smotohness and artistic execution which accompanies only the work of skilled musicians. In addition to the full orchestral numbers, much enjoyment was found in solos by Prof. Willy Hess, master violinist. He was given rousing applause and there was regret that he did not appear more than once.

The programme included among its interesting features the overture to the opera "Oberon," prelude, Adagio and gavotte, in Rondo and Form, a concerto for violin, Symphony No. 6, "Pathetic," and overture to "Tannhauser."

[58]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
DEDHAM CHRONICLE
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
Press

GERICKE AND HIS BAND OF PLAYERS

CONCERT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

BAKER THEATER CROWDED

Superb Programme Given by This Famous Musical Organization Under Its Accomplished Conductor. Hess Enthusiastically Received

After a lapse of twelve years since its last preceding visit to this city, the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared in the Baker Theater last evening before a large and brilliant audience. Time had not dimmed the memory of its excellencies, and when Conductor Gericke stepped to the front of the stage he received a magnificent ovation in the way of prolonged and tumultuous applause. Everybody was in a cordial and expectant mood, and there was no doubt of the sincerity and heartiness of the greeting. The programme was an excellent one—all the better, from the standpoint of giving genuine enjoyment, from the fact that the three principal numbers were familiar to almost everybody present; for such music must be heard repeatedly to be understood and to give a maximum interest to the interpretations of a conductor like Mr. Gericke. The first selection was Weber's "Oberon" overture, the genial elegance of which, together with its mingling of romance and dignity, had a beautiful rendering. There followed a composite from Bach, consisting of a prelude, adagio and gavotte, arranged for strings by Sigismund Bachrich. This was played with wonderful sparkle, precision and clearness in the rhythms and accents, in the varying dynamics, and in the animation which invested with thrilling interest the uncompromising purity of the great master of masters. Max Bruch's concerto for violin (No. 1, in G minor, op. 26) was played by Mr. Willy Hess. This work has some happy musical ideas and a superb orchestral accompaniment. There is none of the classical atmosphere about it. It is, rather, a piece for the display of virtuosity, and it served well to bring out the fine technical powers of Mr. Hess, who played with purity, discernment and spirit, although with something short of what is called a "big" tone. The performance was, on the whole, a noteworthy artistic achievement, and Mr. Hess was applauded so earnestly and persistently that he had to bow his acknowledgments again and again.

Tschaikowsky's sixth symphony (the "Pathetic") had a magnificent tonal rendering. Tschaikowsky is undoubtedly the greatest of the moderns in musical affluence and mastery of orchestration. There are mysteries in this symphony which deepen with every successive hearing. Changes of mood, contrasts that are fairly weird, entrancing musical thoughts of wide and startling divergence, follow one another in bewildering succession. What does it all mean? Nothing, probably, that is expressible in any language but that of music. In that view it is absorbingly interesting. Mr. Gericke gives it with absolutely faultless finish and an amazing wealth of tame coloring. There have been warmer and more sympathetic interpretations, but none surpassing his in crystalline vividness. The overture to "Tannhauser" concluded the programme in a style that brought out triumphantly the splendid powers of the orchestra. For this most delightful concert the public is indebted to the enterprise of Mr. J. E. Furlong, who has other attractive musical projects in contemplation for the coming winter.

SOLO ARTISTS OF WORLD-WIDE FAME WILL GRACE THE COMING SYMPHONY SEASON

GADSKI, FREMSTADT AND EMMA EAMES WILL SING.

Noted Musicians Together with the Splendid Programs That Are Planned Will Make This a Record Breaking Year

Never in the twenty-five years of Boston's great musical organization, the Symphony Orchestra, has the music public of the city looked forward with keener zest to the opening of the season in Symphony Hall than it does this year, and never before has the public desire for the best in orchestral music been gratified with a prospectus of higher standard or wider variety than Mr. Gericke will furnish, beginning with the first public rehearsal the afternoon of Oct. 13 and the first concert on the evening of Oct. 14. Soloists of world-wide reputation will appear during the Fall and Winter.

The coming season will be the orchestra's twenty-fifth. For a quarter of a century the Boston Symphony Orchestra has stood at the head of musical bodies in America.

It was the first permanent orchestra in this country, and it has always been the greatest. In its early years of storm and stress, when its work outside of Boston was chiefly missionary in character, it carried the gospel of good music as far West as the Mississippi, and gave to thousands their first chance to understand what an orchestra and orchestral music really were.

The seed planted has borne abundant fruit, not merely in the splendid public which welcomes the orchestra wherever it may go, but in the several large orchestras and the hosts of smaller ones that a music-loving people, inspired by the example and lessons of Boston's organization, have established throughout the country.

Tour of Smaller Cities.

Next month the orchestra is to make a short tour of a week, visiting Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, cities which once used to have it every year, but have not heard it now in over a dozen. Very different conditions will confront the players now. Then their concerts were almost the only chances the people of those cities had to hear orchestral music of high class. Now, thanks to the work it did then, nearly all of them have small orchestras of their own, which are doing excellent work.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward one day, from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 8, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

Out-of-town concerts comprise the usual series of six in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 18; ten concerts in New York, five in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, respectively; three each in Providence and Hartford, two in Worcester, and one each in Buffalo (in addition to the concert next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. There will probably be a few others. The concerts in Washington will be the first given there in seven years.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Gericke has outdone himself in the programmes he has prepared. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be announced a little later. This year, as in the past, there will be a plentiful supply of the "substantials" with sufficient flavoring of the newer and more highly colored music to give the desired contrast and maintain the interest of the public at the highest point.

Strong List of Soloists.

The list of soloists who will appear is unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz. Miss Hall is the young English violinist who has created a sensation in England and on the Continent. She has been before the public just three years, and from the first was proclaimed one of the great artists of the world.

Her history smacks a bit of romance. Casting aside the story that she was once a street musician, the truth seems to be that she comes of very poor people in Bristol, England, and got her early education as a violinist only by fits and starts and then under the greatest difficulties. Finally some generous patrons of the art, recognizing her talent, made it possible for her to work two years with Kruse in London. At the end of that time she was sent to the famous Svecik in Prague, the teacher of Kubelik. She worked with him for twenty months and then made her debut, first in Vienna and a few months later in London.

Mr. Warnke is the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play at one of the earlier concerts. He brings to this country from Germany a high reputation as an artist.

Mr. Lutschg is a pianist who comes to America for the first time, and Mr. Ganz, also a pianist, although he has been in this country for several years, has never played with the orchestra.

Patrons of the concerts will welcome Henri Marteau, who will be in America for the first time in several years, and Ben Davies, the tenor, and Mme. Emma Eames-Story, neither of whom have sung with the orchestra in several years.

Gadski in a Wagner Programme.

Other singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Von Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer; Alfred Reisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernest Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, is also on the list, and from the orchestra will be drawn Professor Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

The chief event of the season, however, will be the coming of the distinguished French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, who has been invited to conduct the concerts here of December 1 and 2, as well as concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The invitation is a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom d'Indy is the acknowledged leader. In many respects, the most interesting music now being written comes from these pupils and followers of Cesar Franck and certainly no novelties performed in Boston of late years have met with greater favor than the works of these men.

The programme of the first concert is as follows:

Overture, "In the Spring.....Goldmark
Aria.
"Die Waldtaube".....Dvorak
(First time.)
Aria.
Symphony No. 2 in D Major.....Beethoven

Some of the famous singers who will help to make the coming season at Symphony Hall a remarkable one.

[59]

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

QUARTER CENTURY OF THE SYMPHONY

Boston's Famous Orchestra Enters Upon Its Twenty-Fifth Season the Coming Month—Its High Ideals.

INFLUENCE HAS BEEN GREAT AND WIDESPREAD

Changes in Personnel This Year—Some of the Soloists —Programmes of Concerts —The Worcester Festival.

THE time has come for the annual announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts, and this year there is a special sentimental interest attached to it because the coming season will complete the first quarter century of the orchestra's existence. For the older patrons it is hardly possible to believe that since that first concert on Oct. 22, 1881, in the old Music Hall, a whole generation has been born and has grown to maturity, while for this new generation it is as difficult to believe that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has not always been. Twenty-four years have made it an institution as firmly established in Boston life and Boston customs as the Bunker Hill monument, and, better still, so far as there can be certainty in life, the orchestra will continue to be what it has been in the past.

It is fair to say that in the history of Boston's orchestra is found practically the history of orchestral music in America. True, Boston had had its Harvard Musical Association and German orchestra, and New York had its Philharmonic Society and the occasional orchestras of Theodore Thomas, and while all these organizations did praiseworthy work under conditions that were never too favorable, it is due directly to the impetus given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that the United States can today boast the several large and permanent orchestras and innumerable smaller ones.

Nor can the credit due the orchestra be lessened by the assertion that the time was ripe in America for large orchestras. Those who remember the early days of the orchestra will recall the heartbreaking uphill fight that had to be made, first in Boston itself, and then, and for a much longer time, in New York, in Philadelphia, in Baltimore and in the dozen or more smaller cities where today merely an announcement of a concert is sufficient to fill the concert hall. The battle was a hard one, but a splendid victory was gained, not only through dogged persistence, but as much by the uncompromising adherence to the high ideals which have always animated the founder, the conductors and the members of the orchestra.

Its influence has not been limited to those cities where its concerts have been annual fixtures for so many years, although to its example directly may be paratively young organizations of Philadelphia and Washington, and the constant unrest in New York because that city has no permanent orchestra of its own. The tours of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the West from 1886 to 1893 were the means of awakening a great music-loving public to the possibilities of orchestral music which finally resulted in the establishment of the fine permanent orchestras in Chicago, Cincinnati and Pittsburg, and the smaller and less ambitiously designed bands which can be found in almost every considerable city in the country.

But the finest tribute to the work done by the Boston Symphony, finer, perhaps, than the splendidly loyal publicity, is that wherever it has played, no matter how increased the local supply of orchestral music may have been and in these western cities where it has not played for a dozen years or more, the memory of its concerts is so keen from them for another tour.

It is in answer to these that this fall the orchestra will go "on the road" for the week of Oct. 2 and give concerts in Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester. The financial success of all of these has been more than assured from the time of its announcement, and since it became known that the orchestra was to make this trip, other cities in that part of the country have vainly tried to get dates. But the regular work of the season forbids a longer tour.

Changes in Personnel.

Each year, it seems, there must be some few changes in the personnel of the orchestra. In some cases members seek other fields of work, but more often the changes are due to the constant desire to strengthen the orchestra so that it will be impossible to detect a weak spot. This season will bring three new principal instrumentalists—Mr. Heinrich Warnke of Munich, the new principal 'cellist, who replaces Mr. Kraseit; Mr. Peter Sadony of Cologne, the new first bassoonist, and Mr. Max Hess of Munich, who will alternate with Mr. Hackebarth as first horn. All three musicians bring with them to this country enviable reputations. Mr. Warnke has for eight years been the principal cello of the Kaim orchestra, and from that same organization comes Mr. Hess (who, by the way, is not a relative of Mr. Willy Hess). Mr. Sadony is called the best bassoon in Germany. For many years he has been the first bassoon in the Cologne orchestra, and during the same time he has been the teacher of the bassoon in the Cologne Conservatory.

Coming Programmes.

In the making of programmes and the choice of soloists lie the principal pitfalls which threaten every conductor and every management. The impossibility of satisfying everybody has been the common experience of all orchestras since orchestras were. And it seems as impossible to strike a golden mean. The rule seems to be that as many as there are patrons, so many are there opinions, and no opinions are clung to with such fanatical persistence as those which concern music in general and a particular orchestra in particular, especially when the patrons regard themselves as having a sort of proprietary right in it.

In the question of programmes the policy of the Boston Symphony orchestra has varied but little under its several conductors. In a nutshell it may thus be defined: "Plenty of the greater classics, with enough novelties to keep its patrons acquainted with the latest movements in music." Mr. Gericke has followed this policy, especially of late years, and he has made his programmes for the coming year with this in view.

It is true that the composition of orchestral works seems now to be at low ebb; nevertheless, some interesting works are written, and of these Mr. Gericke has chosen such as he thinks are the best, and in a sufficient number to lend to the season the desired variety. The most important new symphony will be Mahler's latest. This year, as in the past, the programmes will be selected so as to give a careful balance between the old and the new, that there may be that contrast which is necessary to maintain interest at its keenest point and yet that the great classics may be fully represented.

The programmes of the first four concerts will be as follows:

FIRST CONCERT.

Friday afternoon, Oct. 13.
Saturday evening, Oct. 14.

Goldmark—Overture, "In the Springs."
Aria.
Dvorak—"Die Waldtaube."
(First time.)
Aria.
Beethoven—Symphony No. 2 in D major.
Soloist to be announced.

SECOND CONCERT.

Friday afternoon, Oct. 20.
Saturday evening, Oct. 21.

Smetana—Overture, "Libussa."
(First time.)
Liszt—Concerto for pianoforte No. 2, in A major.
Richard Strauss—"Death and Transfiguration."
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 4, in F minor.
Soloist, Mr. Lutschg.

THIRD CONCERT.

Friday afternoon, Oct. 27.
Saturday evening, Oct. 28.

Brahms—Academic overture.
Concerto for violoncello.
Elgar—(a), Chanson de Nuit.
(b) Chanson de Matin.
(First time.)
Liszt—A Faust Symphony.
Soloist, Mr. Heinrich Warnke.

FOURTH CONCERT.

Friday afternoon, Nov. 3.
Saturday evening, Nov. 4.
Wagner programme.

"Tannhaeuser," Bacchanale, and scene between Tannhaeuser and Venus from the first act (Paris version).
"Die Meistersinger," Walther's prize song.
"Die Goetterdaemerung," Siegfried's Parting Siegfried's Death.
Funeral March.
Closing Scene.
Soloists, Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

Some of the Soloists.

It is impossible at this time to give a complete list of the season's soloists, because two or three engagements have not yet been definitely closed.

First and foremost, although he cannot be called a soloist, is Mr. Vincent d'Indy, who will visit this country by special invitation and conduct the public rehearsal and concert of Dec. 1 and 2, and the concerts during the following week in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. This is a decided innovation in the general policy of the orchestra, which has been to have no conductors but the regular holder of the place; but the invitation has been made as a compliment to French composers whose works have so often found a place on the Symphony programmes.

Mr. d'Indy's name is familiar to all the patrons of the orchestra, for many of his works have been performed within the last three or four years and have met with favor, among all classes of music-lovers. He may be said to stand at the head of that school of composers known as the "younger Frenchmen," in distinction from Saint-Saens and his followers. A pupil of Cesar Franck, he, with his fellows, stands for modernity in music.

While, like all French composers, he has written more or less for the operatic stage, unlike them he has devoted the greater part of his time to instrumental music. He has written in all the various forms, large and small. But Mr. d'Indy next Sunday.

New names among the soloists are Waldemar Lutschg, pianist; Mme. Samaroff, pianist; Miss Marie Hall, violinist; Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, and Mr. Rudolph Ganz, pianist. Others well known are Mr. Henri Marteau, violinist; Mr. Ben Davies, tenor; Mme. Emma Eames-Story; Mme. Gadsky and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, together in a Wagner programme; Miss Olive Fremstadt, soprano; Mr. Alfred Reisenauer, pianist, who is making his second visit to America; Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Ernest Hutcheson, all of them pianists; Miss Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist; David Bispham, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, Messrs. Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

Miss Marie Hall, violinist, who will make her first appearance with the orchestra in Boston, is one of the musical sensations of the hour. She comes from that forcing house of violinists, the Prague Conservatory, where for two years she was the pupil of Sevcik, the sponsor of Kubelik and other infant phenomena. She came of very poor parents in Bristol, Eng., and had the greatest difficulty in getting a musical education. She got some haphazard instruction from Mossel of Birmingham, Elgar and Wilhelmj, who saw in her a great talent, and ultimately she won the new Wesseley scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, but this she was unable to take for lack of means to live in London. This fact attracted attention, and ultimately she was put under Kruse in London, with whom she remained two years. Then she went to Prague and qualified to work with Sevcik. Two years with him, and she, in the fall of 1902, made her professional debut in Vienna. Since then her success has been extraordinary, even when compared with that of her fellow-pupil, Kubelik, and in England and on the continent she is reckoned one of the musical wonders of the world. She is 21 years old.

Three Pianists.

Mme. Samaroff played in Boston for the first time toward the end of last season at a concert of the Boston Symphony quartet, when she gave much pleasure in ensemble by the elegance, dash and taste of her performance. She is of German-Russian parentage, but is American by birth, and her maiden name was Hickenlooper. She has studied chiefly in Paris, and she entered the Paris Conservatory in 1895 as a pupil of Delaborde. Her concerts in London last season were unusually successful for one who went to that city a stranger.

Waldemar Lutschg, who comes for the first time, will make his American debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra in this city. He was born in St. Petersburg in 1877, where his father was an eminent artist and teacher. Although he betrayed great talent at an early age, he was not allowed to play in public until he was fully prepared for the ordeal. His first public performance, in St. Petersburg, in 1896, was most successful. His first appearance in Germany was made in Dresden on Nov. 10, 1898. His present home is Chicago.

Rudolph Ganz, another pianist who this year makes his first appearance with the orchestra, was born in Zurich in 1877 and made his first public appearance when he was 10 years old, not as a pianist, but as a 'cellist. Two years later he appeared as a pianist. His first real studies began when he was 16, with his uncle, Carl Eschmann-Dumur, and later with Ferruccio Busoni. His Berlin debut was in 1899, when he appeared with the Philharmonic orchestra as pianist and the composer of a symphony. In 1901 he succeeded Arthur Friedheim as teacher of piano in Chicago and since then has given numerous recitals with much success in the larger cities of the middle west.

Sale of Tickets.

Prospects for the Boston season have never been brighter than they are this year. The list of soloists who will appear is unusually strong, Mr. Gericke has chosen many interesting novelties and a decided innovation has been made in the policy of the orchestra by inviting the distinguished French composer, M. Vincent d'Indy, to conduct the concerts of Dec. 1 and 2 in Boston and the concerts during the following week in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Brooklyn and New York. Additional interest is lent to the season by the fact that this is the last year of Mr. Gericke's present engagement.

The season this year will be of the same length as last. There will be 24 concerts on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17, and 24 public rehearsals on consecutive Friday afternoons (except Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward to Thursday), omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16.

The regular auction sale of seats will be held on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Oct. 2, 3, 5 and 6. On the first two days the $15 and $7.50 seats for the public rehearsals will be sold respectively and on the last two days the $12 and $6.50 seats for the concerts. The sales beginning each day at 10 A. M.

LEADER AND SOLOISTS OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Outside Boston.

The plans for the orchestra outside of Boston are rather more extensive than ever before. Its popularity has increased so rapidly, even in the last few years, after many had supposed that the limit had been reached, that the field of its activity in the East is constantly enlarging, and, while Boston is its home city, other cities have come to regard it to a certain extent as their own.

Including the Boston series and the preliminary trip to Canada and the middle West, 104 concerts have been scheduled. There will be the usual series of six in the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge—on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 18. New York will have its five concerts and five Saturday matinees in Carnegie Hall, Brooklyn its five concerts and Baltimore its five. Owing to the very considerable inducements that have been offered there, the orchestra will this year resume its series of five concerts in Washington, and in order to do this the second series of five concerts in Philadelphia will be abandoned, only five being given in that city. Providence and Hartford will each have three concerts and Worcester will have two instead of the usual one. A single concert will be given in Buffalo (in addition to the one there next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland.

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 5- 1905

GREAT AUDIENCE ENJOYS SYMPHONY CONCER

DIRECTOR GERICKE AND HIS ACCOMPLISHED BAND OF PLAYERS GAVE A SPLENDID PERFORMANCE.

Miss Tarbell, of Standard Oil Trust fame, in a recent article on Napoleon credits him with there words: "Of all the fine arts, music is that which has the best influence and which our legislators ought the most to encourage." The thanks of the community are due to a small body of citizens, public-spirited enough to act as financial guarantors of that splendid organization the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which appeared at Convention Hall last night after an absence of 12 years. There are still people to whom music is nothing more than the most expensive of all noises. But fortunately, these people saved their money (and their tempers) last night, with the result that Convention Hall held one of the most delighted and applausive audiences ever there assembled. The lion's share of the plaudits were bestowed on Prof. Willy Hess, whose rendering of the solo part of Bruch's intricate concerto for violin and orchestra was a virile and beautiful performance. He handled his fine Stradivarius violin as only a master could, performing the whole concerto from memory and exhibiting nearly faultless intonation, combined with great power, imagination, grandeur of conception and delicacy of insight. It must be a delight for any soloist to play with so discreet and careful a conductor as is Mr. Gericke. In all those portions where the orchestra merely acts as accompaniment to the solo part, the tone from the large body of players was so subdued that every note of Mr. Hess was distinctly heard by the large audience. Of the orchestral numbers it is impossible to single out one for especial praise. The favorites with the audience were evidently, first, the Bach numbers arranged for strings only, in which the 25 violins, eight violas, seven 'cellos and six basses did superbly accurate work. Secondly the fantastic Italian caprice by Tschaikowsky, inspired, in form by Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies, and in content, by Neapolitan or Venetian carnival episodes. For some years, owing to the wide-spread belief that Tschaikowsky died a suicide, it has been the fashion to class his work among the neurotic or degenerate categories. Even his gloomiest critic should be converted by the abandoned gaiety of this Italian carnival, breathing, almost throughout, the laughter-loving exuberant disposition of the sunny children of the South. In the closing tarantella-movement preceding the last, and liveliest reiteration of the lovers' duet, orchestral shrieks are heard, plainly suggesting shouts of laughter of the merry-makers.

According to a note on the program, Mendelssohn's overture "Calm Sea" was first performed at the Leipsic Gewandhaus in 1835. A better authority, however, states that it was first performed at the Singakademie, Berlin, in December, 1832. It is a charming reminiscence of a voyage he undertook off the coast of Italy, in the summer of 1831. "To me the finest object in nature is and always will be the sea," he writes in one of his characteristic home letters.

It may seem ungracious, in view of Mr. Gericke's masterly conducting, to cavil at his choice of a symphony. To the musicians present, Schumann's noble work in C major was purest joy, but what of the great majority, those who are not musicians? Great financiers state that the average man is "unable to think in millions." And how many average men or women can "think in tone"? To the musician the great glory of music lies in this, that it frees him from the limitation of words, providing him a medium of self-expression both more direct and more intense than language. Not so, however, to the non-musicians as was clearly shown last night by an increasing restlessness in the audience as the great epic tone-poem drew to a close. It was a noble performance, and to the thoughtful mind it incidentally furnished an object-lesson in that greatest of all civilizing factors, harmonious co-operation.

Long life to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its accomplished conductor.

NEWS
BUFFALO, N.Y.
OCT 15 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, which favored Buffalo with such a splendid concert the early part of the month, will give ten concerts in New York City this season; five evening concerts to be given, on Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15. The Saturday afternoon concerts will be on Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke is to lead all the concerts except those in December, which will be conducted by Vincent d'Indy, the great French composer. Among the soloists, who will be heard with the Boston organization, are Mme. Gadski Ellison Van Hoose, Alfred Reisenauer, Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau and Prof. Willy Hess.

Buffalo will have another opportunity of hearing the great Boston Symphony Orchestra next February, and musical Buffalonians may indeed congratulate themselves that this is so.

GERICKE'S BOSTON SYMPHONY WAS A SYMPHONY

Concert at Convention Hall auspiciously opens Buffalo musical Season.

ORCHESTRA EXCELLED

Superlative Programme in every Number and Criticism is difficult. Fine Leadership.

The concert given in Convention Hall last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, was an auspicious opening of the Buffalo musical season, which promises so many fine attractions. It is several years since Buffalonians have had the good fortune to hear in their own city so celebrated an orchestra and they proved their appreciation, both in numbers and in enthusiasm. The superb programme presented was followed with rapt attention and was heartily applauded. It included the Mendelssohn overture, A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; a Bach prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in rondo form, arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich; concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, by Max Bruch; Italian Caprice, Tschaikowsky; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

In a programme of this character, where every number is of superlative excellence, it is difficult to discriminate or differentiate as to the value of any particular composition. The French have a proverb which says: "Art is difficult, criticism is easy." With the memory of this orchestra's perfect work vividly before one, one feels that the proverb should be turned about thus: "Art is easy, criticism is difficult," for it is not possible to hear a more perfect instrumental ensemble.

The Mendelssohn number was given a beautiful reading by Mr. Gericke and the blending of the instruments through the majestic measures of the first tone picture was admirable. The second tone picture, superb in its lights and shades, and in which every significant passage was finely wrought out, was brought to a magnificent climax.

Sigismund Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach music is beautiful. Its lightness and delicacy are wonderfully adapted to the stringed instruments, and it was played with a daintiness and rhythmic charm truly delightful.

The Bruch G minor for violin introduced a violinist new to the Buffalo public, Professor Willy Hess, who is concertmeister of the organization. The intricacies and difficulties which this composition presents to the soloist are many, but Professor Hess handled them in a masterly way. His technique is remarkable, and he makes his instrument sing so that its beautiful, mellow tone stands out in fine and solid relief against the orchestra. There may be differences of opinion as regards the temperamental side of playing, but certainly there can be none as regards his scholarly reading and interpretation of this concerto. He was admirably accompanied by the orchestra.

Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice is a typical bit of writing, but does not show him at his best. It will always be an interesting programme number, but will appeal only to the few. It is rich in tone color, fitful in mood and scored in his well-known style. It was finely interpreted by the orchestra.

The playing of the Schumann C major symphony, No. 2, showed Mr. Gericke at his best. It is doubtful if any orchestral leader could bring out with more subtlety or musical intelligence the intricate beauty of this great score. Mr. Gericke's grasp of the subject in hand was marvelous as was also his control of the musicians under his leadership. It is true that the personnel of this orchestra is of the first order, but great as each musician is in his line, it is due to their leader that their work is so remarkable. Mr. Gericke ranks as one of the world's few great orchestra conductors and he richly merits this title.

An interesting feature of the printed programmes were the explanatory notes of each number. They touched briefly the biographical data of each composer and, in the case of Mendelssohn, described the inspiration of his overture. They gave also detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this, the notes were so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the [illegible] as well as to the musician.

It seems only fitting in closing this review of last evening's performance to refer to the guarantors whose generosity and public spirit have made it possible for Buffalonians to hear this splendid orchestra, second to none in the [illegible], as is generally admitted. [illegible] their generous efforts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here [illegible] February.

GERICKE DOES IT AGAIN; HIS ORCHESTRA IS GOOD.

Director of Boston Symphony Inclines to Older Classics, But Avoids Melodramatics, Says Wilson G. Smith.

By Wilson G. Smith.

That the Boston Symphony orchestra has attained such artistic excellence is hardly to be wondered at. Its personnel comprises the best orchestral talent obtainable, and famous directors—including Gericke, Nikisch, Paur and Henschel—have in turn guided its artistic evolution.

It is patronized by cultured and discriminating audiences at home, who take a civic pride in its recognition and support. Under the conductors mentioned its repertory comprises the best. Certainly, under such conditions, it is not surprising that its name has become the synonym for super-excellence in interpretation and technical efficiency.

With these facts impressed upon one's mind, it was that its concert at Grays' armory Friday evening meant an evening of artistic enjoyment for the large audience in attendance. The program—one of decided conservative character—maintained a constant crescendo of artistic pleasure, from the opening overture of Mendelssohn to the monumental symphony of the mighty Beethoven.

A Foregone Conclusion

It was a program calculated to display Director Gericke at his best. His method and style are scholastic and intellectual rather than emotional. He understands the value of repression and his effects are attained by a logical intellectuality.

Gericke does not assault Parnassus with bombastic gyrations or melodramatic sentimentality. His scores are read with a mental equipoise and logical consistency that indicate a well balanced brain and an equable temperament. He yields to

No Quixotic Impulses,

but controls his orchestral forces with the precision of a military commander. He uses no bushwhacking tactics to command public attention, but places musical interpretation upon the plane of emotional enjoyment dominated by intellectual restraint.

Hence it is that we are not wrought up to emotional frenzy in listening, but enjoy the pleasure of an intellectual tonic.

The Bach suite, splendidly orchestrated by Bachrich in true Bachian spirit, was a fine exposition of Gericke's classic tendencies. Moreover, it presented in the light of a modern melodist. It suggested infinite possibilities had old Bach had the resources of the modern orchestra at his command. The noble dignity and sentiment of the "Adagio" is not found in the reflections of our modern life.

The Polyphonic Bach

Beethoven's immortal symphony—whose principal theme of the first movement seems like the knocking of Fate at the door of life—was given with a chaste classicality.

Willy Hess, who appeared in Bruch's violin concerto, proved himself an artist of fine temperament as well as technic. His tone, while not obtrusively large, is pure and limpid. The "Adagio" had the temperamental coloring of an autumnal sunset, so rich was it in tonal color. The entire concerto was a splendid exhibition of artistic virtuosity. I was going to institute a comparison between the playing of the Boston, Pittsburg and Thomas orchestras, but will defer it till a later occasion, besides, comparisons are said to be odious, so perhaps it is well to be discreet.

THE BUFFALO COURIER.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1905.

GERICKE AND HIS MASTER PLAYERS

Splendid Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra a Treat for Musical Buffalo — Directed by Faultless Hand

FIRST OF SERIES OF TWO CONCERTS

That musical Buffalo has decided to make the season which is beginning a notable one in its history was evidenced by the splendid audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall last evening. The promoters of symphony concerts in Buffalo, usually exist in fear and trembling for results, but judging from last night's attendance it is safe to predict that the series of two concerts will be a decided success. Although 8:15 o'clock is really an early hour for a fashionable audience to assemble the hall was well filled and the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, was ready to begin the Mendelssohn overture. Many were not seated until after this selection.

It is with the utmost diffidence that the average musician should attempt to describe, much less to criticise the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an organization whose aim for years has been the attainment of what is as near as possible to perfection; assisted and supported by a city where culture is the foremost thought; the management has succeeded in securing the most talented and scholarly musicians, under the ablest direction—the result being an organization whose work is almost perfect.

THE PROGRAMME.

Mr. Gericke displayed in the choice of his programme uncommon taste and judgment. Although strictly classical there was nothing taxing or cumbersome in the entire programme. Each number, delightfully fresh and unhackneyed, it was a pleasure to have an opportunity to hear some of the gems of Mendelssohn and Schumann, too often neglected by orchestras of the first class.

In the overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," which opened the programme, the pleasing harmonies of Mendelssohn were beautifully brought out by the orchestra.

The Bach prelude, which was the second number, was perhaps the most enjoyable selection of all, showing to perfection the brilliant, clean-cut execution of the players, the wonderful coloring and careful attention to accent which makes the Bach music so beautiful and distinctive in style. The arrangement was by Sigismund Bachrich. The Tschaikowsky, Italian caprice, which, according to Phillip Hale, had such a doubtful success at its initial performance in Moscow, was warmly received. It is a fine example of grave and gay moods and is distinctively a Tschaikowsky composition.

The Schumann symphony No. 2, in four movements, closed the programme.

THE SOLOIST.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist of the evening, filled exery expectation in his rendition of the great Bruch concerto No. 1 in G minor.

In it the artist had every opportunity to display the unusual talent with which he is gifted. Brilliant technique, fine tone, exquisite coloring, all combined to make Prof. Hess' playing a delight. So perfect was the work of orchestra and soloist that the date of the next concert will be eagerly anticipated by music-lovers in Buffalo.

[61]

BUFFALO EXPRESS,
NG, OCTOBER 5, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY WAS A SYMPHONY

Concert at Convention Hall auspiciously opens Buffalo musical Season.

ORCHESTRA EXCELLED

Superlative Programme in every Number and Criticism is difficult. Fine Leadership.

The concert given in Convention Hall last evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gericke, was an auspicious opening of the Buffalo musical season, which promises so many fine attractions. It is several years since Buffalonians have had the good fortune to hear in their own city so celebrated an orchestra and they proved their appreciation, both in numbers and in enthusiasm. The superb programme presented was followed with rapt attention and was heartily applauded. It included the Mendelssohn overture, A Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; a Bach prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, in rondo form, arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich; concerto for violin, No. 1, in G minor, by Max Bruch; Italian Caprice, Tschaikowsky; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

In a programme of this character, where every number is of superlative excellence, it is difficult to discriminate or differentiate as to the value of any particular composition. The French have a proverb which says: "Art is difficult, criticism is easy." With the memory of this orchestra's perfect work vividly before one, one feels that the proverb should be turned about thus: "Art is easy, criticism is difficult," for it is not possible to hear a more perfect instrumental ensemble.

The Mendelssohn number was given a beautiful reading by Mr. Gericke and the blending of the instruments through the majestic measures of the first tone picture was admirable. The second tone picture, superb in its lights and shades, and in which every significant passage was finely wrought out, was brought to a magnificent climax.

Sigismund Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach music is beautiful. Its lightness and delicacy are wonderfully adapted to the stringed instruments, and it was played with a daintiness and rhythmic charm truly delightful.

The Bruch G minor for violin introduced a violinist new to the Buffalo public, Professor Willy Hess, who is concertmeister of the organization. The intricacies and difficulties which this composition presents to the soloist are many, but Professor Hess handled them in a masterly way. His technique is remarkable, and he makes his instrument sing so that its beautiful, mellow tone stands out in fine and solid relief against the orchestra. There may be differences of opinion as regards the temperamental side of playing, but certainly there can be none as regards his scholarly reading and interpretation of this concerto. He was admirably accompanied by the orchestra.

Tschaikowsky's Italian Caprice is a typical bit of writing, but does not show him at his best. It will always be an interesting programme number, but will appeal only to the few. It is rich in tone color, fitful in mood and scored in his well-known style. It was finely interpreted by the orchestra.

The playing of the Schumann C major symphony, No. 2, showed Mr. Gericke at his best. It is doubtful if any orchestral leader could bring out with more subtlety or musical intelligence the intricate beauty of this great score. Mr. Gericke's grasp of the subject in hand was marvelous as was also his control of the musicians under his leadership. It is true that the personnel of his orchestra is of the first order, but great as each musician is in his line, it is due to their leader that their work is so remarkable. Mr. Gericke ranks as one of the world's few great orchestra conductors and he richly merits this title.

An interesting feature of the printed programmes were the explanatory notes of each number. They touched briefly the biographical data of each composer and, in the case of Mendelssohn, described the inspiration of his overture. They gave also detailed explanation of the thematic and constructive basis of each composition. With all this, the notes were so clearly outlined as to make them valuable to the layman as well as to the musician.

It seems only fitting in closing this review of last evening's performance to refer to the guarantors whose generosity and public spirit have made it possible for Buffalonians to hear this splendid orchestra, second to none in the world, as is generally admitted. Through their generous efforts the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here again in February.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
OCT 5- 1905

GREAT AUDIENCE ENJOYS SYMPHONY CONCER

DIRECTOR GERICKE AND HIS ACCOMPLISHED BAND OF PLAYERS GAVE A SPLENDID PERFORMANCE.

Miss Tarbell, of Standard Oil Trust fame, in a recent article on Napoleon credits him with there words: "Of all the fine arts, music is that which has the best influence and which our legislators ought the most to encourage." The thanks of the community are due to a small body of citizens, public-spirited enough to act as financial guarantors of that splendid organization the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which appeared at Convention Hall last night after an absence of 12 years. There are still people to whom music is nothing more than the most expensive of all noises. But fortunately, these people saved their money (and their tempers) last night, with the result that Convention Hall held one of the most delighted and applausive audiences ever there assembled. The lion's share of the plaudits were bestowed on Prof. Willy Hess, whose rendering of the solo part of Bruch's intricate concerto for violin and orchestra was a virile and beautiful performance. He handled his fine Stradivarius violin as only a master could, performing the whole concerto from memory and exhibiting nearly faultless intonation, combined with great power, imagination, grandeur of conception and delicacy of insight. It must be a delight for any soloist to play with so discreet and careful a conductor as is Mr. Gericke. In all those portions where the orchestra merely acts as accompaniment to the solo part, the tone from the large body of players was so subdued that every note of Mr. Hess was distinctly heard by the large audience. Of the orchestral numbers it is impossible to single out one for especial praise. The favorites with the audience were evidently, first, the Bach numbers arranged for strings only, in which the 25 violins, eight violas, seven 'cellos and six basses did superbly accurate work. Secondly the fantastic Italian caprice by Tschaikowsky, inspired, in form by Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies, and in content, by Neapolitan or Venetian carnival episodes. For some years, owing to the wide-spread belief that Tschaikowsky died a suicide, it has been the fashion to class his work among the neurotic or degenerate categories. Even his gloomiest critic should be converted by the abandoned gaiety of this Italian carnival, breathing, almost throughout, the laughter-loving exuberant disposition of the sunny children of the South. In the closing tarantella-movement preceding the last, and liveliest reiteration of the lovers' duet, orchestral shrieks are heard, plainly suggesting shouts of laughter of the merry-makers.

According to a note on the program, Mendelssohn's overture "Calm Sea" was first performed at the Leipsic Gewandhaus in 1835. A better authority, however, states that it was first performed at the Singakademie, Berlin, in December, 1832. It is a charming reminiscence of a voyage he undertook off the coast of Italy, in the summer of 1831. "To me the finest object in nature is and always will be the sea," he writes in one of his characteristic home letters.

It may seem ungracious, in view of Mr. Gericke's masterly conducting, to cavil at his choice of a symphony. To the musicians present, Schumann's noble work in C major was purest joy, but what of the great majority, those who are not musicians? Great financiers state that the average man is "unable to think in millions." And how many average men or women can "think in tone"? To the musician the great glory of music lies in this, that it frees him from the limitation of words, providing him a medium of self-expression both more direct and more intense than language. Not so, however, to the non-musicians as was clearly shown last night by an increasing restlessness in the audience as the great epic tone-poem drew to a close. It was a noble performance, and to the thoughtful mind it incidentally furnished an object-lesson in that greatest of all civilizing factors, harmonious co-operation.

Long life to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its accomplished conductor.

NEWS
BUFFALO, N. Y.
OCT 15 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, which favored Buffalo with such a splendid concert the early part of the month, will give ten concerts in New York City this season; five evening concerts to be given, on Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15. The Saturday afternoon concerts will be on Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke is to lead all the concerts except those in December, which will be conducted by Vincent d'Indy, the great French composer. Among the soloists, who will be heard with the Boston organization, are Mme. Gadski Ellison Van Hoose, Alfred Reisenauer, Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau and Prof. Willy Hess.

Buffalo will have another opportunity of hearing the great Boston Symphony Orchestra next February, and musical Buffalonians may indeed congratulate themselves that this is so.

GERICKE DOESN'T GYRATE; HIS ORCHESTRA IS GOOD.

Director of Boston Symphony Inclines to Older Classics, But Avoids Melodramatics, Says Wilson G. Smith.

By Wilson G. Smith.

That the Boston Symphony orchestra has attained such artistic excellence is hardly to be wondered at. Its personnel comprises the best orchestral talent obtainable, and famous directors—including Gericke, Nikisch, Paur and Henschel—have in turn guided its artistic evolution.

It is patronized by cultured and discriminating audiences at home, who take a civic pride in its recognition and support. Under the conductors mentioned its repertory comprises the best. Certainly, under such conditions, it is not surprising that its name has become the synonym for super-excellence in interpretation and technical efficiency.

With these facts impressed upon one's mind, it was

A Foregone Conclusion

that its concert at Grays' armory Friday evening meant an evening of artistic enjoyment for the large audience in attendance. The program—one of decided conservative character—maintained a constant crescendo of artistic pleasure, from the opening overture of Mendelssohn to the monumental symphony of the mighty Beethoven.

It was a program calculated to display Director Gericke at his best. His method and style are scholastic and intellectual rather than emotional. He understands the value of repression and his effects are attained by a logical intellectuality.

Gericke does not assault Parnassus with bombastic gyrations or melodramatic sentimentality. His scores are read with a mental equipoise and logical consistency that indicate a well balanced brain and an equable temperament. He yields to

No Quixotic Impulses,

but controls his orchestral forces with the precision of a military commander. He uses no bushwhacking tactics to command public attention, but places musical interpretation upon the plane of emotional enjoyment dominated by intellectual restraint.

Hence it is that we are not wrought up to emotional frenzy in listening, but enjoy the pleasure of an intellectual tonic.

The Bach suite, splendidly orchestrated by Bachrich in true Bachian spirit, was a fine exposition of Gericke's classic tendencies. Moreover, it presented in the light of a modern melodist. It suggested infinite possibilities had old Bach had the resources of the modern orchestra at his command. The noble dignity and sentiment of the "Adagio" is not found in the reflections of our modern life.

The Polyphonic Bach

Beethoven's immortal symphony—whose principal theme of the first movement seems like the knocking of Fate at the door of life—was given with a chaste classicality.

Willy Hess, who appeared in Bruch's violin concerto, proved himself an artist of fine temperament as well as technic. His tone, while not obtrusively large, is pure and limpid. The "Adagio" had the temperamental coloring of an autumnal sunset, so rich was it in tonal color. The entire concerto was a splendid exhibition of artistic virtuosity. I was going to institute a comparison between the playing of the Boston, Pittsburg and Thomas orchestras, but will defer it till a later occasion, besides, comparisons are said to be odious, so perhaps it is well to be discreet.

THE BUFFALO COURIER,
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1905.

GERICKE AND HIS MASTER PLAYERS

Splendid Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra a Treat for Musical Buffalo — Directed by Faultless Hand

FIRST OF SERIES OF TWO CONCERTS

That musical Buffalo has decided to make the season which is beginning a notable one in its history was evidenced by the splendid audience which greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Convention Hall last evening. The promoters of symphony concerts in Buffalo, usually exist in fear and trembling for results, but judging from last night's attendance it is safe to predict that the series of two concerts will be a decided success. Although 8:15 o'clock is really an early hour for a fashionable audience to assemble the hall was well filled and the conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, was ready to begin the Mendelssohn overture. Many were not seated until after this selection.

It is with the utmost diffidence that the average musician should attempt to describe, much less to criticise the work of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an organization whose aim for years has been the attainment of what is as near as possible to perfection; assisted and supported by a city where culture is the foremost thought; the management has succeeded in securing the most talented and scholarly musicians, under the ablest direction—the result being an organization whose work is almost perfect.

THE PROGRAMME.

Mr. Gericke displayed in the choice of his programme uncommon taste and judgment. Although strictly classical there was nothing taxing or cumbersome in the entire programme. Each number, delightfully fresh and unhackneyed, it was a pleasure to have an opportunity to hear some of the gems of Mendelssohn and Schumann, too often neglected by orchestras of the first class.

In the overture, "Sea-calm and Prosperous Voyage," which opened the programme, the pleasing harmonies of Mendelssohn were beautifully brought out by the orchestra.

The Bach prelude, which was the second number, was perhaps the most enjoyable selection of all, showing to perfection the brilliant, clean-cut execution of the players, the wonderful coloring and careful attention to accent which makes the Bach music so beautiful and distinctive in style. The arrangement was by Sigismund Bachrich. The Tschaikowsky, Italian caprice, which, according to Phillip Hale, had such a doubtful success at its initial performance in Moscow, was warmly received. It is a fine example of grave and gay moods and is distinctively a Tschaikowsky composition.

The Schumann symphony No. 2, in four movements, closed the programme.

THE SOLOIST.

Prof. Willy Hess, the soloist of the evening, filled exery expectation in his rendition of the great Bruch concerto No. 1 in G minor.

In it the artist had every opportunity to display the unusual talent with which he is gifted. Brilliant technique, fine tone, exquisite coloring, all combined to make Prof. Hess' playing a delight. So perfect was the work of orchestra and soloist that the date of the next concert will be eagerly anticipated by music-lovers in Buffalo.

[61]

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1905

THE SYMPHONY SEASON

THE BEGINNING OF A NEW YEAR AT SYMPHONY HALL

Mr. Gericke's Fifth Year—New Soloists and New Players—Mr. Vincent d'Indy to Appear as Conductor—Novelties to Be Produced

The Symphony Orchestra, with the coming season, ends the first quarter-century of its existence. Since the first memorable concert was given in the old Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881, a whole generation of music-lovers has been born and educated in the way they should go by an institution that has done much to establish Boston's musical supremacy in America. So integral a part in the artistic economy of Boston and the great cities of the East has the orchestra become, that one is apt to forget in its present seasons of great prosperity that all days have not been fair with it. It was a long and discouraging uphill fight to gather a musical public able to appreciate it. And victory was won only by ceaseless toil, unwavering courage and a dogged perseverance in the maintenance of ideals. When the history of music in America for the last quarter-century has been written, it will be found that the greatest factor in its advancement has been the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its influence, direct and indirect, has been felt the length and breadth of the continent. Before it was established, Boston had had its Harvard Musical Association and its Germania Orchestra. New York had its Philharmonic Society, and for the rest of the country there were only the occasional concerts by the occasional orchestras organized by the late Theodore Thomas.

Today one finds permanent orchestras in Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Washington, and even New York's conscience grows annually uneasy about the lack of such an orchestra in that city. Besides these great orchestras, every considerable city in the Union has its devoted band of forty or fifty men, professionals and amateurs, that are regarded as a nucleus of something greater to come in the future.

On the Boston Symphony Orchestra must rest the entire responsibility for this movement. Until it began its missionary work, the full meaning of orchestral music was hardly known in this country, and the mere mention of classical music was sufficient to empty a hall. It is a mistake to say that a large part of the success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra came because the public was ripe for such a movement. On the contrary, although the love of good music was latent, every inch of ground gained in those early years had to be fought for. It was not only the early success of the orchestra in Boston that gave an impetus to orchestral music in other parts of the country, by showing that a permanent orchestra of the highest class might be made successful, but it was the succession of concerts in other cities, the eight long tours through the Middle West, that brought home to the public the real necessity of such music and inspired them to undertake similar organizations.

This year no less than 104 concerts have already been scheduled, of which forty-eight (public rehearsals and evening concerts), will be given in Boston. In addition to the six concerts of the preliminary trip in the week beginning Oct. 2, in Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester, ten concerts will be given in New York, five in Brooklyn, five in Philadelphia, five in Baltimore and five in Washington. Providence and Hartford will each have three, and Worcester two, while single concerts will be given in Buffalo (in addition to the concert there next month), Poughkeepsie, Springfield, Albany, New Haven and Portland. Cambridge will have its usual quota of six, in Sanders Theatre, on Oct. 26, Nov. 30, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19.

The Boston season will, as usual, consist of twenty-four concerts on consecutive Saturday evenings from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17, and twenty-four public rehearsals on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward to Thursday), beginning Oct. 13, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The regular auction sale of seats for the two series will be held at Symphony Hall at 10 A. M., on Monday, Oct. 2, Tuesday, Oct. 3, Thursday, Oct. 5, and Friday, Oct. 6.

Aside from the sentimental interest attached to it, a particularly attractive season is promised. Mr. Gericke, the last year of whose present engagement it is, promises an unusually interesting lot of novelties, and the list of soloists is unusually strong, even when compared with those of previous years. Some new musicians of high reputation have been added to the orchestra, and most important of all will be the presence as conductor at the concerts on Dec. 1 and 2 of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. This engagement is quite a radical departure in the policy of the orchestra, and may be traced to a desire to pay a sincere and deserved compliment to modern French musicians who have appeared so prominently on the Symphony programmes. While M. Saint-Saëns is the dean of French composers in point of service, M. d'Indy is decidedly the leader of the interesting group known as the "younger Frenchmen," although many of them are young only in the sense that nowadays no one grows old. M. d'Indy is a man of fifty-four, but reckoned as a French musician, he is a modern of moderns. He and his colleagues of the same school trace their artistic descent from César Franck, who was their teacher and mentor. It is they who are largely responsible for the revival of absolute music in France, as contrasted with operatic, and while all of more or less for the stage, the major part of their time has been given to absolute music in all its forms, large and small. No less than seven of M. d'Indy's works have been performed at the Symphony concerts in the last five years, and his chamber music is rapidly attaining great popularity in this country. Undoubtedly his coming will be the musical event of the season.

Mr. Gericke is not yet ready to give out a list of the novelties to be performed this year. The choice of novelties for an orchestra like the Boston Symphony is one of the most difficult tasks set before a conductor. He is constantly besieged on one side by that large contingent which believes that novelties should have no place in a symphony programme, and that no work should be played until years have proved its value; and on the other by an equally large contingent which, if it does not believe that the chief function of a symphony orchestra be the trying of new music, thinks that a large part of its programmes should be given to things that are new. To find a golden mean between these two views in a time when musical composition seems to be at low tide makes trouble enough for a conductor without the other worries which constantly beset him. Mr. Gericke has been very successful in the past in this matter, and there is no reason to doubt that he will be as successful this year.

Neither is it possible to give a complete list of the season's soloists. In the matter of "sensations" the coming season, as compared with some in recent years, is likely to prove a bit disappointing. But one really sensational virtuoso new to America has been announced. This is the young English violinist, Marie Hall, who, from all accounts, has had a most astonishing career.

There is a story about this young artist that she began her career as a street musician, and was so discovered. This seems to be merely tradition. The facts seem to be that she comes of very poor English parents in Bristol. When she was a mere child, her talent was recognized by such men as Wilhelmj, Elgar and Mossel of Birmingham, all of whom gave her a few lessons from time to time. She first attracted general attention a few years ago, when she won a scholarship in the Royal Academy of Music, and was unable to take advantage of it, because she had not the money to live in London. Certain charitable men and women, convinced of her talent, gave her the means of studying with Professor Kruse of London for two years. Then she went to Svecik in Prague, the teacher of Kubelik, and two years later, in the fall of 1902, she made her professional début in Vienna. Her début in London came the following winter. Of her success in England and on the Continent there seems to be no question, and it is possible that she will be the feature of the coming musical season in America.

Two pianists new to the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Waldemar Lütschg and Rudolph Ganz. Waldemar Lütschg, who comes to America this season for the first time, will make his American début with the Symphony Orchestra in this city. He was born in St. Petersburg, where his father was an eminent artist and teacher. Although he showed talent at an early age, he was not allowed to play in public until he was fully prepared for the ordeal. His first public performance in St. Petersburg, in 1896, was most successful, and since that time he has been reckoned as one of the first pianists of Europe. His first appearance in Germany was made in Dresden on Nov. 10, 1898. Rudolph Ganz, another pianist who this year makes his first appearance with the orchestra, was born in Zurich in 1877 and made his first public appearance when he was ten years old, not as a pianist, but as a violoncellist. Two years later he appeared as a pianist. His first real studies began when he was sixteen, with his uncle, Carl Eschmann-Dumur, and later with Ferrucio Busoni. His Berlin début was in 1899 when he appeared with the Philharmonic Orchestra as pianist and the composer of a symphony. In 1901 he succeeded Arthur Friedheim as teacher of piano in Chicago, and since then has given numerous recitals in the larger cities of the middle West.

Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra, will make his début as a solist at one of the early concerts. Several of the soloists on the list have not been heard with the orchestra for a considerable time. Henri Marteau, the eminent violinist, is one, Ben Davies, the tenor, is another, and Mme. Emma Eames-Story and David Bispham others. Among the pianists are Harold Bauer, Adèle aus der Ohe, Mme. Samaroff, who made so deep an impression last season; Alfred Reisenauer, and Ernest Hutcheson. Among the singers are found Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme, and one or two others to be announced later. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, is also announced, and from the ranks of the orchestra will come Professor Willy Hess, Timothée Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

Reference has already been made in the Transcript to the changes made in the orchestra. Mr. Warnke, the new first 'cello, takes the place of Mr. Krasselt. He brings from the Kaim Orchestra, in Munich, the highest of reputations. Mr. Peter Sadony comes from Cologne, where he has been with the Cologne Orchestra for many years, and during that time has been the teacher of the bassoon in the famous Cologne Conservatory. Mr. Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, comes, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich.

The programmes for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT
Friday Afternoon, Oct. 13
Saturday Evening, Oct. 14

Goldmark: Overture, "In the Spring."—Aria.
Dvorak: "Die Waldtaube." (First time.) Aria.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 2 in D major.

SECOND CONCERT
Friday Afternoon, Oct. 20
Saturday Evening, Oct. 21

Smetana: Overture, "L'bussa." (First time.)
Liszt: Concerto for Pianoforte.
Richard Strauss: "Death and Transfiguration."
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4 in A-flat major.
Soloist: Mr. Lutschg.

THIRD CONCERT
Friday Afternoon, Oct. 27
Saturday Evening, Oct. 28

Brahms: Academic Overture.—Concerto for Violoncello.
Elgar: a Chanson de Nuit; b Chanson de Matin. (First time.)
Liszt: A Faust Symphony.
Soloist: Mr. Heinrich Warnke.

FOURTH CONCERT
Friday Afternoon, Nov. 3
Saturday Evening, Nov. 4
Wagner Programme

"Tannhäuser." Bacchanale, and Scene between Tannhäuser and Venus from the First Act. (Paris Version.)
"Die Meistersinger." Walther's Prize Song.
"Die Götterdämmerung." Siegfried's Parting from Brünnhilde.—Siegfried's Death.—Funeral March.—Closing Scene.
Soloists: Mme. Johanna Gadski, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

A MISSING SOCIETY

[From the Leisure Hour]

A society for the suppression of conventionality, endowed with plenary powers, is greatly needed.

Sept 23

DAILY ADVERTISER,

ITS FIRST QUARTER CENTURY

Boston Symphony Orchestra This Season Will Complete 25 Years of Active Musical Work.

This year the Boston Symphony orchestra completes its first quarter century and when a start is made on the next quarter, Bostonians may well look back with pride on the splendid record it has made. The orchestra has been for so many years an established institution of Boston, that its patrons are not always mindful of the extraordinary work it has done and is doing each year. When one looks back 25 years ago and remembers the Cimmerian darkness in which practically all the country dwelt in respect to orchestral music and compares then and now, when besides the large orchestras of Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Chicago, dozens of smaller organizations are found throughout the country, he may well feel a thrill of pride that this vast and potent change is due directly to the accomplishments of Boston's great orchestra.

The work laid out for the orchestra this year is more comprehensive than ever. So far 104 concerts have been scheduled, including those of the preliminary tour. For Boston there are the regular 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. The public rehearsals will be given on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward a day), from Oct. 13 to April 27, omitting Nov. 10, Dec. 8, Jan. 12, Feb. 16 and March 16. The concerts will be given on consecutive Saturday nights from Oct. 14 to April 28, omitting Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17 and March 17.

For the last year of his present contract with the orchestra, Mr. Gericke has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be the usual interesting lot of novelties to lend piquancy to the concerts and excite the curiosity of the patrons. Just what these are will be made public a little later. This year, as in the past, there will be a plentiful supply of the "substantials," with a sufficient flavoring of the newer music to give the desired contrast and maintain the interest of the patrons at the highest point.

In the matter of soloists who will appear at the different concerts, the list is even unusually strong. In the names new to Boston appear those of Marie Hall, Heinrich Warnke, Waldemar Lutschg and Rudolph Ganz.

Patrons of the concerts will gladly welcome back Henri Marteau, who is returning to America this year for the first time in several seasons, and Ben Davies, the tenor; and Mme. Emma Eames-Story. Other singers will be Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, who will appear together in a Wagner programme; David Bispham and Olive Fremstadt. The list of pianists includes that great Boston favorite, Harold Bauer; Alfred Weisenauer, Adele Aus der Ohe, Ernst Hutcheson and Mme. Samaroff. Elsa Ruegger, the 'cellist, will also appear, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, will be drawn Prof. Willy Hess, Timothee Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

Vincent d'Indy can hardly be called a soloist, yet his coming will be the principal event of the season. The invitation, which has been extended to him to conduct the orchestra on Dec. 1 and 2, also in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, is to be interpreted as a graceful compliment to the younger French composers, of whom he is the leader.

EVENING RECORD,
SEPTEMBER 30, 1905

SYMPHONY CONCERTS IN CAMBRIDGE.

Six concerts will be given in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, during the coming season by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the dates being Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, and Thursday evenings, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19. The solo artists will include Miss Alice Cole, contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Knoberg, pianist, and George Proctor, pianist.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT

SEPTEMBER 30, 1905

Novelties for the Symphony Season

Those patrons of the Symphony Concerts who are on the lookout for new sensations in music are likely to have their taste gratified during the coming winter, since Mr. Gericke has chosen an unusually interesting series of novelties to be played during the season. Three of the composers are very familiar to the Boston public—Smetana, Dvorak and Franck—and any unknown works from their hands are certain of welcome.

The Smetana work is an overture to his opera "Libussa." So far as can be learned, it has never been played in America. The opera itself is unknown outside of Bohemia, where all of his works for the stage are performed from time to time. The overture is described as in the best style of the composer of "The Sold Bride." Dvorak is to be represented by a symphonic poem called "Die Waldtaube." This work is of comparatively recent date, and in that time has won a very considerable popularity in Continental music halls. It is practically new to America, as its only performances were at some rather obscure popular concerts in New York several summers ago. "Psyche," by César Franck, is a suite which shows this ordinarily serious composer in a most agreable light.

Two symphonies new to Boston and new to America will be played. One is by Gustav Mahler, the fifth in his series, and the other is by a young Englishman, Amherst Webber. It is rather curious that so little of Mahler's work is known in this country, considering the amount of discussion he has caused. Mahler is one of the most interesting figures in modern music. As an operatic conductor there is probably no man living who is his equal, for he combines with the musicianly qualities necessary for such work an exceptional knowledge of the stage. He has been principal conductor and director of the Imperial Opera in Vienna, and as a concert conductor he stands high. He is now the conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic concerts. His compositions have of late years been quite generally played in Europe. Some of them are stupendous in size, demanding a greater number of performers than even those of Strauss, and their intense modernity, while different from Strauss's has kept discussion continually active.

The other symphony, in E major, by Amherst Webber, has never been played in this country. Mr. Webber is known personally to many Americans through his association some years ago with the de Reszke brothers, whose secretary and accompanist he was. He is a man who gave up considerable prospects in order to pursue his musical studies and adopt music as a profession. Some very interesting songs are about all America knows of his music, but in England he is regarded as a musician of more than ordinary promise. Another Englishman on the list is Sir Edward Elgar. He will be represented by an overture new to America entitled "In the South," and by two shorter pieces entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin."

Two American, and really Bostonian names are included, those of Professor Paine of Harvard University and Mr. Frederick S. Converse. Professor Paine's prelude to "The Frogs" of Aristophanes is not new to Boston, but has never been played at the Symphony concerts. Mr. Converse will be represented by a new ballade for baritone and orchestra.

Other novelties are a symphonic poem by the Russian, Glazounov, entitled "Le Kremlin"; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; two works by Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and "Geharnischte" suite; an overture by Max Schilling entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; and an overture by the Frenchman Eugene d'Harcourt called "Le Tasse."

Undoubtedly some very interesting novelties will be presented by M. Vincent d'Indy, for his programmes are expected to be entirely of modern French music.

The regular sale by auction for the series of twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts will open on Monday morning at ten o'clock, continuing on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

Six concerts will be given in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, during the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the dates being Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, and Thursday evenings, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19. The solo artists will include Miss Alice Cole, contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist, and Mr. George Proctor, pianist. Holders of season tickets last year will have until Oct. 18 to secure the seats they occupied last season, application for the same being made at Sever's University Bookstore.

[62]

SUNDAY, OCT 1, 1905.

NEW SYMPHONY OFFERINGS.

It is an interesting list of novelties which Mr Gericke has selected for the coming season of the Boston symphony orchestra in this city. Fifteen of the works on the list are absolutely new to Boston—most of them absolutely new to America—and the sixtenth has never before been played at a symphony concert.

The list includes two symphonies. One is by Gustav Mahler, who shares with Richard Strauss the interest of musical connoisseurs on the continent. The director of the Imperial opera in Vienna and the conductor of he Vienna Philharmonic concerts, he ranks as one of the very few great musical conductors of the world. It is only in comparatively recent years that he has turned his attention to composing, but in that time he has written many works (the symphony for the Boston season being his fifth) and has caused almost as great a discussion among the cognoscenti as Strauss. Many profess to find in him the greatest living composer. This symphony has never been played in America.

The other symphony is by a young Englishman, Amherst Webber, known to the American public chiefly through some of his very interesting songs. This symphony, which is new, will undoubtedly be listened to with greatest interest.

Another Englishman on the list is Sir Edward Elgar. He will be represented by a new overture entitled "In the South" and by two short pieces, entitled respectively "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin."

America will be represented by two men, both of them, to all intents and purposes Bostonians. Mr John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes will be played for the first time at these concerts. Frederick S. Converse, who was represented on last year's program, will this year have a ballade for baritone and orchestra.

Three novelties are by men no longer living, Smetana, whose overture to "Libussa" will be played; Dvorak, whose symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube" will have a first hearing here, and Cesar Franck, who will be represented by a work entitled "Psyche."

Other novelites will be a new symphonic poem by the Russian Glazounov entitled "Le Kremlin;" a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck;" an overture called "Lustspell" and a suite called "Geharnischte," by Busoni; an overture by Max Schilling called "Der Pfeifertag," and an overture by Eugene d' Harcourt called "Le tasse."

The annual auction sale of seats for the season will open at Symphony hall tomorrow morning at 10, when the $12 seats for the 24 public rehearsals will be sold. Tuesday at the same hour the $7.50 seats for Friday afternoons will be placed on sale. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold beginning at 10 on Thursday, and the $7.50 seats at the same hour on Friday.

OCTOBER 1, 1905.
BOSTON AMERICAN

Symphony Seat Auction

The annual auction sale of seats for the Symphony season will open at Symphony Hall to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, when the $12 seats for the twenty-four public rehearsals will be sold. On Tuesday, at the same hour, the $7.50 seats for Friday afternoons will go on sale. The $12 seats for the concerts will be sold Thursday at ten, and the $7.50 seats at the same hour Friday.

In the list of musical novelties which Mr. Gericke has selected for the coming Symphony season may be mentioned the following: A symphony by Gustav Mahler, director of the Imperial Opera in Vienna and conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic concerts; a symphony by Amherst Webber, the young English composer; overture "In the South," and other new pieces by Sir Edward Elgar; John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; ballade for baritone and orchestra by Frederick S. Converse; Smetana's overture to "Libussa;" Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube," and Caesar Franck's "Psyche."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces six concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on October 26, November 29, December 28, February 1, March 8 and April 19. The soloists will include Miss Alice Cole, contralto, Miss Olga Samaroff, pianist, Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist, and George Proctor, pianist.

---

22 Oct 1.

The Boston Post
The Representative Democratic Paper of New England

SYMPHONY CONCERTS IN CAMBRIDGE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces six concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Wednesday evening, Nov. 28, and Thursday evenings, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19, all at 7:45 o'clock. The contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist, and Mr. George Proctor, pianist.

The season tickets for the six concerts will be $5, and the sale will be conducted according to the plan in use last year. Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats they occupied last season, which must be done before Oct. 18. On Oct. 21 the unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at Sever's University Book Store at 8 o'clock.

BOSTON TRAVELER
SEPTEMBER 30, 1905

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Novelties in music do not necessarily mean works fresh from the hands of the composer. In the list of music unknown to Boston which Mr. Gericke has prepared for the coming Symphony season are three works by masters who are no longer among the living. At least one of these works, Smetana's overture to his opera, "Libussa," has never been played in this country, and Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," one of the last things he did, has never been played in Boston, and its only performance in this country was at an obscure concert in New York. Nor has Cesar Franck's "Psyche" ever been played in Boston.

Another work on the list of novelties which Mr. Gericke has prepared will be labelled "First Time at These Concerts," Professor Paine's Prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes. This, of course, has been heard in Boston and Cambridge, but has never been played at the Symphony concerts.

Altogether, the Symphony Orchestra will play 15 works which are quite new to Boston.

Herald Oct 1.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE.

The Boston Symphony orchestra announces six concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, and Thursday evenings, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19, all at 7:45 o'clock. The soloists will include Miss Alice Cole, contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist, and Mr. George Proctor, pianist. The season tickets for the six concerts will be $5, and the sale will be conducted according to the plan in use last year. Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats they occupied last season, which must be done before Oct. 18. On Oct. 21 the unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at Sever's university book store at 8 o'clock.

---

globe Oct 1—

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONIES.

The Boston symphony orchestra announces six concerts in Sanders theatre, Cambridge—Thursday evening, Oct 26; Wednesday evening, Nov 29, and Thursday evenings, Dec 28, Feb 1, March 8 and April 19, all at 7:45 o'clock. The soloists will include Miss Alice Cole contralto, Mme Olga Samaroff pianist, Miss Clara Kloberg pianist and Mr George Proctor pianist.

The season tickets for the six concerts will be $5 and the sale will be conducted according to the plan in use last year. Subscribers of last season may secure the same seats they occupied last season, which must be done before Oct 18. On Oct 21 the unclaimed seats will be offered for sale at Sever's university book store at 8 o'clock.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN
—MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1905.

SYMPHONY MEN OFF FOR TOUR

The Symphony Orchestra, seventy-five strong, and headed by Mr. Gericke, left Boston last evening for Montreal, where it will give the first concert of the western tour this evening. The men travel in three Pullmans. A baggage car carries their luggage and instruments.

They will be away from Boston just a week. To-morrow night they play in Toronto, Wednesday night in Buffalo, Thursday night in Detroit, Friday night in Cleveland and Saturday night in Rochester. They will leave Rochester after the concert and reach Boston the next morning. On Monday next the rehearsals for the first program of the Boston season will begin, that being given on Friday afternoon, October 13, and Saturday evening, October 14.

Prof. Willy Hess will be the soloist at all the concerts on the present trip.

Oct 2.

BOSTON TRAVELER
FOUNDED IN 1825

SYMPHONY SEATS SOLD

No Very Big Premiums, But General Record Better Than Last Year.

The annual auction sale of seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra began this morning at 10 o'clock. The $12 seats for rehearsals were first put on sale and brought premiums of about $30. There was little frenzied bidding and the sale went along in a humdrum sort of way.

Mr. Watrous, secretary of the orchestra, said to a TRAVELER reporter:

"Our sale today is a little better than last year. The prices are a bit higher, although no records are being broken. The average premium for seats is about $30 and they are being snapped up readily at these figures.

"We are unable to tell who our purchasers are. Most people of social prominence give their orders to ticket brokers, such as Herrick, Connolly, Wadsworth or Hood. One bid permits the purchase of four seats only, but the gathering here today shows Boston's loyalty to the orchestra and its desire to hear good music. The stranger in the city who wishes to hear the Symphony Orchestra has a poor show. The people who are present at the auction sale know just what seats they want, and just about what those seats are worth."

The bidding today started at about $20, but there was little competition. The ticket agents were in evidence, but they did not bid against one another, as has been the fashion in former years. The record premium for a seat at the recitals of the Symphony was obtained in 1892 when $395 was given. This was due to the fact that two agents were told to secure certain seats with no limit set to the price to be paid for them. Things are better managed these days.

The auction was conducted by Walter Jackson, whose father before him sold seats for the Symphony Orchestra. Women, stirred up by the excitement of bidding, hurried up to the clerk's desk, and were so unstrung that they were unable to write their checks.

The highest bid a year ago was $95. The highest price this morning was $60, but at any moment a stir of competition may run up the price, as has been done before.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

Six concerts will be given in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, during the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the dates being Thursday evening, October 26, Wednesday evening, November 29, and Thursday evenings, December 28, February 1, March 8 and April 19. The solo artists will include Miss Alice Cole, contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; and Mr. George Proctor, pianist.

The price of season tickets for the six concerts will be $5. Holders of season tickets last year will have until October 18 to secure the seats they occupied last season, application for the same being made at Sever's University book store. On receipt of checks payable to C. W. Sever and Company, the tickets will be mailed to them. On Saturday morning, October 21, at 8 o'clock, the unclaimed seats will be placed on sale.

Boston Transcript
MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1905

HIGHEST PREMIUM $91

Auction Sale of Seats for the Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Held This Morning

A premium of $91 takes the record for the auction of seats for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which took place, beginning at ten o'clock this morning. The people gathered in Symphony Hall at that time numbered more than marked the opening of the sales a year ago, it was noticed, and there were, as usual, more ladies by far than men in the throng.

Walter Jackson is again the auctioneer, just as he has been for several years. Today's sale was given over to disposal of the $12 seats for the series of Friday afternoon rehearsals. These included all the seats on the floor from row A to row JJ, both inclusive, as well as all of the side seats in the first balcony and those in the first four rows in the rear of this balcony. In all other parts of the hall the seats are $7.50. The first sale today, of seats 1 and 2 in the first row, showed a premium of $13.50 paid, and soon the sale was going on so briskly, led by a number of ticket brokers in the front row and elsewhere, that premiums became on the average much higher than those paid last year, to go back no further. There was a sale at $12, to be sure, but this was soon lost sight of in higher prices.

There was keen interest right along from the opening, but it was after three or four rows had been sold that the sale began to take on special activity and seats were disposed of quickly, with little hesitation on the part of auctioneer or buyers. In row C as high as $38 was paid, and in row D $47 was the top price, as against $28 in row B, for about the same location. Bids in E started at $10, with a first sale at $14, and after sales at $29 premium, the bids started at $20 and later at $25. The highest in this row, a favorite [illegible] $51 for seating and seats. Most of this row sold for above $30 premiums. In row F, beginning with a $17 bid, sales reached $37 as the highest point. While this row was on sale two ladies sitting a few rows back from the stage in the centre of the hall were keenly alive to the bids, for here was their choice of location. They were friends and together, yet the auctioneer could not have known this, evidently, for these two women bid against each other dollar by dollar, each raising the other's previous bid from $27 or $28 to $37, which they paid for their two seats. They went together to settle with Mr. Ellis for their purchase, all unconscious that they had paid far more than they need to have done, in all probability.

At about this stage of the sale, brokers frequently secured at a moderate premium, comparatively, the end single seat on the extreme left of the hall, and as a bid permitted taking four seats, they would then secure at the same cheap moderate premium the first three seats on the extreme right of the hall, in the following row, seats which, unless bought under these conditions, usually brought higher prices. In row G prices ranged from $23.50 to $61 for a single end seat, centre, which was the highest figure paid up to that point, a sale followed immediately by others at $50, $40 and gradually down to $25 in this row.

Succeeding sales in rows H, I, J, K and L showed premiums ranging between $24 and $61, the higher figure being the premium on a single seat, an end one in K, for which the bidding was spirited. Its companion seat brought $60, and seats next in order sold for $40. There was a bit of exciting competition in row M, which began at $28 for the first seats and in which four seats, none of which was an end one, brought a premium of $74 each, the same buyer paying $56 for choice of the next following seats.

When a sale at $81 was made for the middle of row N, four seats going for that price, there was general interest, especially as the next seats in order brought only $41. Later, $61 in this row was reached. In row O two seats also sold for $81 and one at $80, while in Q four centre seats, one an end one, brought the highest price of the morning, $91 premium. Last year the highest premium of the opening sale was $95. At 1.15 o'clock a recess for luncheon was declared.

All things considered, the average today seemed far higher than that reached last year, in the matter of premiums. In many rows where a year ago many seats sold at prices ranging between $10 and $20 premium, these same seats this year sold for above $20 and in many instances above $30 premium.

When the sale opened in the afternoon there were more people on hand than at the morning sale. The sale began in row R and the prices held up pretty well. For several seats back the premiums were between $30 and $40, occasionally going as high as $50; but in the U and V rows the figure was between $20 and $30.

BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 94.
MONDAY, OCT. 2, 1905.

GOOD SUMS PAID

Better Average Than Usual at the Symphony Sale.

HIGHEST PREMIUM WAS $91

Before a large crowd in Symphony Hall, Auctioneer Walter Jackson today placed on sale seats for the Symphony concerts for the year beginning Oct. 14 and concluding April 28. The bidding was spirited, but there were practically no sensational contests, a general average, well above that of past years, being realized on the sale. As usual, agents played an active part in the bidding.

The bidding prices were supplementary to the regulation price of $12 for each seat, and up to the time recess was taken at 1:15 o'clock the highest premium was $91 for each of four aisle seats in Q, 17 rows from the stage. Seats in this quarter of the hall were eagerly sought, four seats in the centre of L bringing $81 each. The two centre seats in O netted a similar premium, while the next seat, No. 18, in the same row, brought $80. The four centre seats in M were sold for a premium of $74 each.

Some other fancy prices for seats near the stage were: $63.50 premium each for two centre aisle seats in J, Nos. 18 and 19; $59 for 17 in the same row. No. 18 in G brought $61; No. 17 in J. brought 59; Nos. 19 and 20 in D sold for $47 premium each; Nos. 19 to 22 in G brought an even $50 premium.

In I seats 18 to 22, near the aisle, netted a premium of $56 each. The first five rows, as usual, proved only moderately attractive, the best seat in A bringing only $26. Manager Mudgett, however, was highly pleased to note a better average on these seats than of late years. One seat in D, No. 19, brought a premium of $47.

There was a large gathering on hand to witness the auction, and bids were heard in all parts of the hall. Auctioneer Jackson carried the sale along with great dispatch, more than half of the main floor having been disposed of before the recess. The higest premium for a seat last year was $95, in 1903 the best figure was $77, and the previous year in a sensational contest between two agents, a high record of $395 was netted for two seats.

The managers feel confident that the current sale will prove one of the best of recent years.

[63]

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

The Boston Journal

YMPHONY HALL.

Some of the Novelties for the Orchestra's Season.

Novelties in music do not necessarily mean works fresh from the hands of the composer. In the list of music unknown to Boston which Mr. Gericke has prepared for the coming Symphony season are three works by masters who are no longer among the living. At least one of these works, Smetana's overture to his opera "Libussa," has never been played in this country and Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube," one of the last things he did, has never been played in Boston, and its only performance in this country was at an obscure concert in New York. Nor has Cesar Franck's "Psyche" ever been played in Boston. Another work on the list of novelties which Mr. Gericke has prepared will be labele, "Professor Time at These Concerts." First Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes. This, of course, has been heard in Boston and Cambridge, but has never been played at the Symphony concerts. Altogether, the Symphony Orchestra will play fifteen works which are quite new to Boston. Among them are two symphonies, both of which are likely to attract more than ordinary interest. Perhaps the more important is Mahler's Fifth. Gustav Mahler, director of the Imperial Opera in Vienna and the conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic concerts, is without question one of the most interesting figures in the musical world of today. The other symphony, one in E major, is by Amherst Webber, a young English musician, who became known to many personally in this country several years ago through his association with the de Reszke brothers. Another Englishman on the list is Sir Edward Elgar, whose rise to popular favor in this country has been little short of phenomenal. He will be represented by three works: a new overture entitled "In the South," and two short pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Frederick S. Converse, whose name appeared on the programs last season, will be represented by a Ballad for baritone and orchestra. Other

VINCENT D'INDY, FRENCHCOMPOSER

Sketch of Distinguished Musician Who Is to Conduct Two Concerts of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SOLOISTS WHO WILL ASSIST THE ORCHESTRA

New Artists of the Savage English Grand Opera Company —A Hint to Mr. Conried— New Opera.

THE announcement that Mr. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston this season, and conduct the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall, on Dec. 1 and 2, gives much pleasure to others than the many admirers of this leader of the "younger" French School. There is always the curiosity to see a celebrated man, and while it is true that conductors are not always the best interpreters of their own works, Mr. d'Indy has had much experience as a member and as conductor of orchestras.

The most celebrated composers of music who have visited Boston of late years were Dvorak and Richard Strauss. The former conducted his "Requiem" at a concert of the Cecilia, and Richard Berlioz, if Mr. Weingartner had conducted works other than his own, or if Mr. Safonoff had heated the blood of eminently respectable citizens and citizenesses by his passionate interpretation of a symphony by Tschaikowsky. Mr. Colonne did come to Boston, but it was only for the Cecilia's Wage Earners' concert, and the orchestra at his command was much too small for the desired and legitimate effects in "The Damnation of Faust." Mr. Weingartner came, but only to play with the Kneisel quartet an uninspired piece of his own chamber music. Richard Strauss asked an absurdly high price and he did not conduct a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the regular series. It is now rumored that Mr. Weingartner will come here with a New York orchestra, and that Mr. Safonoff will visit us with the orchestra of New York that has devoted its attention for two seasons to Russian music. We give these rumors for what they are worth. It seems a pity that such men should not show their talent at a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra this season, but it is said that their contracts forbid an engagement.

And why should not the conductors of established orchestras in the United States follow the example of clergymen and exchange places once or twice in a season? Mr. Gericke, Mr. Paur, Mr. Stock, who has succeeded Theodore Thomas in Chicago, Mr. Scheel, Mr. Va nder Stucken might thus exchange with pleasure and profit to all concerned. Would not audiences and players be stimulated thereby? Would not the conductors themselves be benefited?

D'Indy's Early Years.

Mr. d'Indy is first of all a composer. He is also a teacher. And as a conductor in various cities of Europe he has commanded respectful attention, by reason of his artistic purpose in spreading the knowledge of modern French music and also by his abilities as a conductor.

He comes of an aristocratic and wealthy family.

His family wished him to be a lawyer, and so, against his wish, he studied for that object, but at the same time he studied music. He took pianoforte lessons of Diemer and harmony lessons of Lavignac (1862-65). During the Franco-Prussian war he served as a volunteer in the 105th regiment, and took an active part in the defence of Paris, notably in the battle of Montretout. After the war he gave up definitely any idea of the law, to be, against the wishes of his family, a professional musician.

It should here be said that his father, a man of large income, was fond of music and played the violin not too disagreeably. Vincent's mother died soon after his birth, and, as his father took to himself a second wife, the boy was brought up by his grandmother, Mme. Theodore d'Indy, who, an excellent musician, taught him the rudiments of the art. Thanks to her, he lived for many years apart from the madding world and vexing social diversions. It was she that led him in his early years to the study of the great masters. Vincent had an uncle, Saint-Ange Wilfred d'Indy, who, as an amateur composer, was popular in Parisian parlors and halls, in which his romances, chamber music and operas de salon were performed. It was he that first showed his nephew the treatise of Berlioz on instrumentation.

Vincent was born at Paris, March 27, 1852. (The date 1851 is given by some music dictionaries as d'Indy's birthyear, but in a private letter to us, which is used freely in this biographical sketch, he gives 1852 as the correct date.) D'Indy obediently began the study of law, but at the same time he studied music, taking piano lessons of Diemer and lessons in harmony of Lavignac. He began to study Berlioz's treatise on instrumentation in 1867, and two years later he became intimate with Henri Duparc, who brought him into the Wagnerian fold. The Franco-Prussian war broke out, and D'Indy took an active part in the defence of Paris, especially in the battle of Montretout. After peace was declared, to satisfy thoroughly certain hesitating members of his family, he sought, influenced by Duparc, the advice of Cesar Franck in 1872, and showed him a string quartet. Franck, although he received him in his usual kindness, proved to him that the quartet was badly written in every respect; nevertheless, he found in it certain good qualities, and, instead of discouraging him, he urged him to set himself at work. D'Indy began study with Franck in all branches of composition, and in 1873 he entered his organ class at the conservatory, where he remained two years, and succeeded in taking a first accessit. Believing that the study of composition at the conservatory was not wholly serious, he became the private pupil of Franck. It is not unlikely that pupils of Cesar Franck at the conservatory, during this period, suffered alike with their master, who was, if not exactly under the ban, only tolerated by the more conservative, who shuddered at his reputation of being an "independent." In 1873 D'Indy became acquainted with the "Deutsches Requiem" of Brahms, and his admiration for it was so great that he determined to go on a pilgrimage, in the hope of seeing the composer and of obtaining advice from him. He went to Weimar, where he met Liszt, and he was in a way his pupil for some time. He then went to Vienna and found that Brahms had gone to Bavaria. He followed him, and finally found him at Tutzing, but whether Brahms was not in the mood to receive strangers, or whether he was absorbed by works that demanded concentration of mind, the interview was short and unsatisfactory, although the young Frenchman bore letters from Saint-Saens and Franck.

D'Indy felt the need of becoming thoroughly acquainted with the details of the orchestra. For this purpose he entered the Society of the Chatelet concerts as chorus leader and second drummer, and he filled this position until 1878, when he retired on account of a disagreement with Colonne, the conductor. His "Piccolomini" overture, which now forms the second part of the "Wallenstein" trilogy, was performed at one of Pasdeloup's concerts in 1875. In 1882 a little comic opera, in one act, "Attendez moi sous l'orme," with a libretto based on Regnard's comedy, was produced at the Opera Comique and perplexed the habitues accustomed to simpler harmonies and conventional tunes.

His Growing Fame.

There were other works produced before 1885, but several of them have been dropped from the catalogue drawn up by the composer and now before us. "The Enchanted Forest," an orchestral ballad (1878), "The Ride of the Cid," for baritone, chorus and orchestra (1879), the "Wallenstein" trilogy are retained, as is the piano quartet (1878). A symphony and an overture to "Antony and Cleopatra" have been thrown overboard. In 1885 D'Indy was awarded the prize of the city of Paris for his "Song of the Bell" (after Schiller). This prize for a musical composition by a Frenchman was established in 1878, and there is competition for it every two years. "The Song of the Bell," a romantic symphony for solo voices, double chorus and orchestra, was produced at the expense of the city and performed several times under Lamoureux's direction. Van Dyck, the tenor, then at the beginning of his career (1886) sang the music of Wilhem, the bell founder.

In 1887 D'Indy became chorus master of the Lamoureux concerts, and he prepared the choruses for the first production of "Lohengrin" in Paris at the Eden Theatre, May 3, 1887. Chauvinism allowed only one performance.

Busied in composition, he visited Beyreuth several times. Thus he was at the first performance of the "Ring" and of "Parsifal." With Franck, Saint-Saens, Gabriel Faure, Castillon, Chausson, Duparc, he was one of the founders of the National Society of Music," and after the death of Franck he was appointed president of the society. In 1893 the government appointed him a member of a committee to recommend reforms in the Paris Conservatory, but the professors of that institution made such lively protests that the idea of such a committee was abandoned. In 1893 D'Indy was offered the professorship of composition at the Conservatory, but he refused the position, for he wished to preserve his liberty. The next year he founded with Charles Bordes, the director of the "Singers of St. Gervais," and Alexander Guilmant, the famous organist, a school of music, the Schola Cantorum, of which he is now the honored head. In this school, which is already influential in all that makes for musical righteousness, he is the teacher of composition, and he conducts many of the interesting concerts given under the auspices of the school.

His Per[illegible]

The first important work of D'Indy that was heard in Boston was his piano quartet, which was introduced here by Mr. Ysaye, April 16, 1898. The Boston Symphony orchestra produced here the "Istar" variations (Feb. 18, 1899), and then the suite "Medee," the symphony for orchestra and piano (Mr. Bauer) on a Mountain Air, "The Enchanted Forest," entr'acte from "The Stranger," and the symphony No. 2. The Orchestra Club produced the introduction to act 1 of "Fervaal" and the choral for saxophone and orchestra—its first performance. The Kneisel quartet produced the second string quartet and the suite. The Longy Club brought out the "Chansons et Danses," the trio and the Fantasia for oboe and piano. The Chaval Art Society has performed "The Ride of the Sid" and "Sur la mer." D'Indy's "Lied Maritime" has been sung here in more than one recital, and Mme. Alexander Marius sang "Clair de Lune" with piano accompaniment. Mme. Hopekirk has played excerpts from "Tableaux de Voyage," and Miss Hawkins, "Poemi des Montagnes."

MR. GERICKE'S LIST OF SYMPHONY NOVELTIES.

Not including the unknown French works which M. Vincent d'Indy may offer on his progremme of Dec. 1 and 2, 15 novelties, entirely new to the Boston public, will be played at the Symphony concerts during the coming season. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared contains much of great interest, including two symphonies, and it is not at all improbable that among them may be found some works of enduring merit.

Sir Edward Elgar, the English composer, will be represented by three works. One is a new overture entitled "In the South," which has been received in London with great favor. The other two are smaller pieces, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Another English composer represented in the list is Amherst Webber, a young pianist who first became known in this country some years ago through his connection with the de Reszke brothers when they were members of the Grau Opera Company. His work is a symphony in E major. Mr. Webber is regarded as a composer of more than ordinary talent, and as this is the first time that his name appears on the Symphony programmes, he will undoubtedly receive most serious attention.

America likewise has two representatives, both of whom Boston may fairly claim as its own. Mr. John K. Paine's prelude to "The Birds of Aristophanes," while not new here, has never before been played at a Symphony concert. A new ballade for baritone and orchestra, by Frederick S. Converse, is also announced.

Neither the works of Smetana nor of Dvorak seem to have ben exhausted, for of the former an overture entitled "Libussa" will be played for the first time in America, and of the latter a symphonic poem entitled "Die Waldtaube" for the first time in Boston. "Libussa" is one of Smetana's operas which seems never to have been performed outside of Bohemia. Another composer, no longer living, whose name is on this list is Cesar Franck. He is represented by a work entitled "Psyche."

One of the most interesting personalities in modern music is Gustav Mahler, principal conductor of the Imperial Opera of Vienna and conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic orchestra. As a composer he is placed by many alongside of Richard Strauss, and the production of his new works are most important incidents in the musical season in Germany. His Fifth Symphony will be played for the first time in America.

The other novelties comprise a symphonic poem by the Russian, Alexander Glazounov, entitled "Le Kremlin"; a symphonic poem by Ernst Boehe, entitled "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck"; two works by Ferrucio Busoni, a "Lustspiel" overture and the "Geharnischte" suite; an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tosca," and an overture by Max Schilling, called "Der Pfeifertag."

The annual auction sale of seats will begin at Symphony Hall tomorrow morning at 10 A. M. Tomorrow the seats for the 24 public rehearsals will be sold, and on Tuesday, at the same hour, the sale of the $7.50 seats for rehearsals will begin. On Thursday next, at 10 in the morning, the auction sale of the $12 seats for the 24 concerts will begin, and on Friday the $7.50 seats will be sold.

VINCENT D'INDY AND SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

DAVID BISPHAM BARITONE
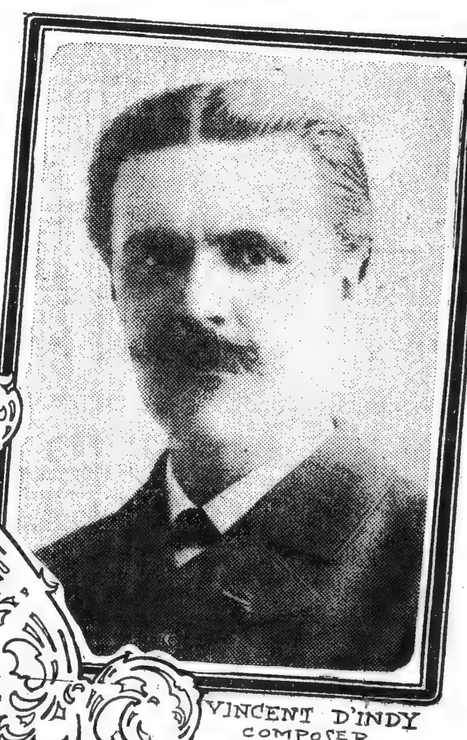
COPYRIGHT A. DUPONT

MME. HOMER
CONTRALTO
PHOTO. COPYRIGHT - A. DUPONT



VINCENT D'INDY
COMPOSER

ELLISON VAN HOOSE
TENOR

HAROLD BAUER
PIANIST

MISS AUS DER OHE
PIANIST

[64]

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY HALL.

Some of the Novelties for the Orchestra's Season.

Novelties in music do not necessarily mean works fresh from the hands of the composer. In the list of music unknown to Boston which Mr. Gericke has prepared for the coming Symphony season are three works by masters who are no longer among the living. At least one of these works, Smetana's overture to his opera "Libussa," has never been played in this country and Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube," one of the last things he did, has never been played in Boston, and its only performance in this country was at an obscure concert in New York. Nor has Cesar Franck's "Psyche" ever been played in Boston. Another work on the list of novelties which Mr. Gericke has prepared will be labeled, "First Time at These Concerts," Professor Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes. This, of course, has been heard in Boston and Cambridge, but has never been played at the Symphony concerts. Altogether, the Symphony Orchestra will play fifteen works which are quite new to Boston. Among them are two symphonies, both of which are likely to attract more than ordinary interest. Perhaps the more important is Mahler's Fifth. Gustav Mahler, director of the Imperial Opera in Vienna and the conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic concerts, is without question one of the most interesting figures in the musical world of today. The other symphony, one in E major, is by Amherst Webber, a young English musician, who became known to many personally in this country several years ago through his association with the de Reszke brothers. Another Englishman on the list is Sir Edward Elgar, whose rise to popular favor in this country has been little short of phenomenal. He will be represented by three works: a new overture entitled "In the South," and two short pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Frederick S. Converse, whose name appeared on the programs last season, will be represented by a Ballade for baritone and orchestra. Other novelties will be: "Le Kremlin," a symphonic poem by Ernst Boche—an entirely new name; a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Schalmischte" suite by Busoni; "Der Pfeifertag," an overture by Max Schillings; and "La Tasse," an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS IN CAMBRIDGE

Six concerts will be given in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, during the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the dates being Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, and Thursday evenings, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19. The solo artists will include Miss Alice Cole, contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; and George Proctor, pianist. Holders of season tickets last year will have until Oct. 18 to secure the seats they occupied last season, application for the same being made at Sever's University Book Store. On receipt of checks payable to C. W. Sever & Co., the tickets will be mailed to them. On Saturday morning, Oct. 21, at 8 o'clock, the unclaimed seats will be placed on sale.

VINCENT D'INDY, FRENCH COMPOSER

Sketch of Distinguished Musician Who Is to Conduct Two Concerts of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SOLOISTS WHO WILL ASSIST THE ORCHESTRA

New Artists of the Savage English Grand Opera Company —A Hint to Mr. Conried— New Opera.

THE announcement that Mr. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston this season, and conduct the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall, on Dec. 1 and 2, gives much pleasure to others than the many admirers of this leader of the "younger" French School. There is always the curiosity to see a celebrated man, and while it is true that conductors are not always the best interpreters of their own works, Mr. d'Indy has had much experience as a member and as conductor of orchestras.

The most celebrated composers of music who have visited Boston of late years were Dvorak and Richard Strauss. The former conducted his "Requiem" at Berlioz, if Mr. Weingartner had conducted works other than his own, or if Mr. Safonoff had headed the blood of eminently respectable citizens and citizenesses by his passionate interpretation of a symphony by Tschaikowsky. Mr. Colonne did come to Boston, but it was only for the Cecilia's Wage Earners' concert, and the orchestra at his command was much too small for the desired and legitimate effects in "The Damnation of Faust." Mr. Weingartner came, but only to play with the Kneisel quartet an uninspired piece of his own chamber music. Richard Strauss asked an absurdly high price and he did not conduct a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the regular series. It is now rumored that Mr. Weingartner will come here with a New York orchestra and that Mr. Safonoff will visit us with the orchestra of New York that has devoted its attention for two seasons to Russian music. We give these rumors for what they are worth. It seems a pity that such men should not show their talent at a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra this season, but it is said that their contracts forbid an engagement.

And why should not the conductors of established orchestras in the United States follow the example of clergymen and exchange places once or twice in a season? Mr. Gericke, Mr. Paur, Mr. Stock, who has succeeded Theodore Thomas in Chicago, Mr. Scheel, Mr. Va nder Stucken might thus exchange with pleasure and profit to all concerned. Would not audiences and players be stimulated thereby? Would not the conductors themselves be benefited?

D'Indy's Early Years.

Mr. d'Indy is first of all a composer. He is also a teacher. And as a conductor in various cities of Europe he has commanded respectful attention, by reason of his artistic purpose in spreading the knowledge of modern French music and also by his abilities as a conductor.

He comes of an aristocratic and wealthy family.

His family wished him to be a lawyer, and so, against his wish, he studied for that object, but at the same time he studied music. He took pianoforte lessons of Diemer and harmony lessons of Lavignac (1862-65). During the Franco-Prussian war he served as a volunteer in the 105th regiment, and took an active part in the defence of Paris, notably in the battle of Montretout. After the war he gave up definitely any idea of the law, to be, against the wishes of his family, a professional musician.

It should here be said that his father, a man of large income, was fond of music and played the violin not too distressingly well. Mayor Willard, Principal Alden E. Briggs of the high school, and Fred A. Pitcher, principal of the Shurtleff school, are expected to address the gathering.

Mrs. Oliver W. Wieth and daughter are enjoying two weeks at Swanville, Me.

Mrs. John B. Gilman and Mrs. George B. Cole are at Brooklyn, N. Y., for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. George Cannon of Bellingham street announce the engagement of their daughter, Alice Ardelle, to Ralph Presbrey Lane of Dorchester.

Miss Susan McDonald, teacher at the Carey school, of 26 Gordon street, is doing excellent work as librarian of the Boys' Club. She is now endeavoring to enlarge the library.

The Women's Veteran Union Independent Relief corps was tendered a complimentary banquet by Hancock command 1, Union Veterans' Union, in Pythian Hall, Wednesday night. The hall was crowded, and an enjoyable evening was spent. An excellent table was spread, and Col. Curtz, commander of the camp, was toastmaster. He introduced as speakers Gen. Gould, Col. Dammers, Comrade Everdean and several others.

The new postmaster, Mr. Lambert, who resides on Willow street, has taken up his duties. Mr. Ezra O. Winsor, the former postmaster, is now deep in his new duties in the delivery department in Boston.

A number of friends of Ralph C. Winer, recording secretary of the Ideal Association, were entertained at his home, 73 Walnut street, Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moses, Mr. and Mrs. S. Dyer, Mrs. Delia Brown and Charles Smith are home after a delightful trip to Gettysburg. The party made a visit to Washington, Harper's Ferry and Philadelphia.

Charles H. Faunce is receiving great praise for his heroic rescue of Chief Spencer at the Mt. Bellingham Church fire Monday night.

Miss Carrie Wilson is stopping in Rome for five weeks. She is expected home in a few months.

Miss Grace Murie, president of the Friendship Club, is preparing a programme for the next four months which promises to be interesting.

Harry Albert Cobb and Blanche Evelyn Phillips were married the past week and are now on their honeymoon. After their return Mr. and Mrs. Cobb will reside at 212 Washington avenue.

Dr. and Mrs. William E. Hamlin are enjoying the cold weather of Mt. Washington.

James H. Keyes of the telephone exchange is enjoying a few weeks in Vermont and Canada.

Miss Helen Treat is home again after a trip across the country to the Pacific coast. Miss Treat enjoyed the handsome scenery of California and Washington. While West she also went to Alaska.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Nichols have been visiting at Claremont, N. H., and Stafford, Vt.

Miss Alice Monaghan of Randolph, Me., is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Eaves of 65 Grove street.

Miss Sadie Hopkins, after two years abroad, has returned to this district.

Mrs. George Woodman is at Claremont, N. H., visiting her sister for a few weeks.

Mrs. Robert A. Evans will be the guest of her brother at Chattanooga, Tenn., for the next few weeks.

The engagement is announced of Miss Cora Gertrude Adams of Woodlawn avenue to Arthur L. K. Browne of Montreal, formerly of Boston.

The family of former City Treasurer Horatio B. Hersey is receiving the sympathy of the entire district on his sudden decease.

the Dixon Academy, Covington, Ky., where he is teacher of Latin and Greek.

The first meeting of the Friday Club will be held at the residence of Mrs. Arthur H. Whittier on Hampshire street Friday afternoon. The meeting on Oct. 20 will be held in Whittier Hall.

At a meeting of the college alumni [illegible] Miss Ursula Mayrath has been appointed Berlioz, if Mr. Weingartner had conducted works other than his own, or if Mr. Safonoff had headed the blood of eminently respectable citizens and citizenesses by his passionate interpretation of a symphony by Tschaikowsky. Mr. Colonne did come to Boston, but it was only for the Cecilia's Wage Earners' concert, and the orchestra at his command was much too small for the desired and legitimate effects in "The Damnation of Faust." Mr. Weingartner came, but only to play with the Kneisel quartet an uninspired piece of his own chamber music. Richard Strauss asked an absurdly high price and he did not conduct a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the regular series. It is now rumored that Mr. Weingartner will come here with a New York orchestra and that Mr. Safonoff will visit us with the orchestra of New York that has devoted its attention for two seasons to Russian music. We give these rumors for what they are worth. It seems a pity that such men should not show their talent at a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra this season, but it is said that their contracts forbid an engagement.

And why should not the conductors of established orchestras in the United States follow the example of clergymen and exchange places once or twice in a season? Mr. Gericke, Mr. Paur, Mr. Stock, who has succeeded Theodore Thomas in Chicago, Mr. Scheel, Mr. Va nder Stucken might thus exchange with pleasure and profit to all concerned. Would not audiences and players be stimulated thereby? Would not the conductors themselves be benefited?

D'Indy's Early Years.

Mr. d'Indy is first of all a composer. He is also a teacher. And as a conductor in various cities of Europe he has commanded respectful attention, by reason of his artistic purpose in spreading the knowledge of modern French music and also by his abilities as a conductor.

He comes of an aristocratic and wealthy family.

His family wished him to be a lawyer, and so, against his wish, he studied for that object, but at the same time he studied music. He took pianoforte lessons of Diemer and harmony lessons of Lavignac (1862-65). During the Franco-Prussian war he served as a volunteer in the 105th regiment, and took an active part in the defence of Paris, notably in the battle of Montretout. After the war he gave up definitely any idea of the law, to be, against the wishes of his family, a professional musician.

It should here be said that his father, a man of large income, was fond of music and played the violin not too distressingly well. Seventeen members of the family including all of their children were present as follows: Lewis Alfred Sibley and Mrs. Sibley of Centre Harbor, N.H.; Mrs. E. K. Maynard of Barrington, N. H.; Alden N. Sibley and Mrs. Sibley and little daughter, of Foxboro; Elton S. Sibley, Mrs. Sibley and child; the Rev. George F. Sibley, Mrs. Sibley and two children, of Waldoboro, Me. In the evening the family gathered under the parental roof, where a delegation of old friends in the First Baptist Church called upon them and presented them with a purse of gold. Mr. and Mrs. Sibley were also handsomely remembered by their children with a similar token, while gifts of flowers and other articles were received from friends.

Miss Grace Webster Edlefson returned Tuesday from her 13 weeks' absence. During the summer she played the violin at Lake St. Catherine, N. Y., after which she spent three weeks camping in the Adirondacks. Later she took a trip to Montreal and Quebec, and spent a week at Bethlehem, N. H.

Miss Frances Leavitt of Adams street, went Monday to Newark, N. J., where she will be assistant principal in Miss Townsend's private school for girls.

Joseph Currier, a fruit ranch owner at San Leandro, Cal., is visiting his brother, Manuel Currier, at his home on Putnam street. He will sail Oct. 9 for an extended trip to Europe and the Azores.

C. M. Hayes, connected with the general manager's office of the Boston & Northern street railway, has moved into the house at 37 Rogers avenue.

It will be "visitors' night" next Tuesday evening at the meeting of Somerville council, Home Circle. There will be an entertainment, refreshments and dancing.

The social committee of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Franklin Street Church has issued the social appointments of the society for the coming season. The first sociable of the season will be held next Wednesday evening, and will be in charge of Mrs. G. W. Maynard.

Mrs. Laura F. Bowker started Friday morning to visit her daughter, Miss Ella W. Bowker, head assistant in the academy at Newport, Vt.

Grand Master N. B. Dame and suite attended the anniversary of Alton lodge, Odd Fellows, at Hyde Park Monday.

At the Thomas-Brown wedding in Waltham Tuesday evening little Miss Mildred Vaupel and Master John L. Vaupel, niece and nephew of the bride, were flower girl and page.

Philip Aberle of 49 Mystic avenue, East Somerville, took charge of the West Somerville postoffice as its new superintendent on Tuesday morning. He was promoted from the position of clerk in the delivery division of the Boston central office, and succeeds Horace B. Lambert, who had been superintendent at the West Somerville office since May 28, 1899. The latter is now superintendent at the Chelsea postoffice. Carrier Allen will return to duty from his vacation the first of the week, and Carriers Paine and McNamara will commence their vacations at the same time.

The marriage of Miss Abbie M. Tribble, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Tribble of 50 Chandler street, to Leonard E. Seeton of Dunstan street, West Newton, will take place Monday evening, Oct. 9, at the home of the bride's parents.

Hobart S. Palmer of 92 Liberty avenue will be married on Wednesday evening, Oct. 11, to Miss Mabel H. Brown, daughter of John H. Brown of 64 Chandler street. The ceremony will take place at the residence of the bride's father at 8 o'clock, and the Rev. Dr. Marble, pastor of the North Avenue Baptist Church of North Cambridge, will tie the nuptial knot. The bride is a member of Dr. Marble's church.

The marriage of Dr. Henry E. Merrill of 417 Highland avenue to Miss Lottie E. Gordon, daughter of Thomas Gordon of 10 Locke street, North Cambridge, will be solemnized next Wednesday evening at the home of the bride by the Rev. E. E. Braithwaite, Ph. D., pastor of the Day Street Congregational Church. Dr. Merrill and his mother, Mrs. Emma E. Merrill, have resided in West Somerville for the past 17 [illegible] tered the Society of the Chatelet concerts as chorus leader and second drummer and he filled this position until 1878, when he retired on account of a disagreement with Colonne, the conductor. His "Piccolomini" overture, which now forms the second part of the "Wallenstein" trilogy, was performed at one of Pasdeloup's concerts in 1875. In 1882 a little comic opera in one act, "Attendez moi sous l'orme," with a libretto based on Regnard's comedy, was produced at the Opera Comique and perplexed the habitues accustomed to simpler harmonies and conventional tunes.

His Growing Fame.

There were other works produced before 1885, but several of them have been dropped from the catalogue drawn up by the composer and now before us. "The Enchanted Forest," an orchestral ballad (1878), "The Ride of the Cid," for baritone, chorus and orchestra (1879), the "Wallenstein" trilogy are retained, as is the piano quartet (1878). A symphony and an overture to "Antony and Cleopatra" have been thrown overboard. In 1885 D'Indy was awarded the prize of the city of Paris for his "Song of the Bell" (after Schiller). This prize for a musical composition by a Frenchman was established in 1878, and there is competition for it every two years. "The Song of the Bell," a romantic symphony for solo voices, double chorus and orchestra, was produced at the expense of the city and performed several times under Lamoureux's direction. Van Dyck, the tenor, then at the beginning of his career (1886) sang the music of Wilhem, the bell founder.

In 1887 D'Indy became chorus master of the Lamoureux concerts, and he prepared the choruses for the first production of "Lohengrin" in Paris at the Eden Theatre, May 3, 1887. Chauvinism allowed only one performance.

Busied in composition, he visited Beyreuth several times. Thus he was at the first performance of the "Ring" and of "Parsifal." With Franck, Saint-Saens, Gabriel Faure, Castillon, Chausson, Dupare, he was one of the founders of the National Society of Music," and after the death of Franck he was appointed president of the society. In 1893 the government appointed him a member of a committee to recommend reforms in the Paris Conservatory, but the professors of that institution made such lively protests that the idea of such a committee was abandoned. In 1895 D'Indy was offered the professorship of composition at the Conservatory, but he refused the position, for he wished to preserve his liberty. The next year he founded with Charles Bordes, the director of the "Singers of St. Gervais," and Alexander Guilmant, the famous organist, a school of music, the Schola past week, is now able to be around.

OISTS.

The latest arrival in the Leahy family of Princeton street has been christened Maurice Leahy, Jr.

Miss Alice Webber of East Bridgewater is the guest of Miss Alice Newhall.

Mrs. Catherine McCrillis has been visiting friends at Wenham the past week.

Miss Sarah Godbold has been visiting friends at Ludlow, Vt.

John and George Morrison returned home last week after a three months' European trip.

Dr. W. H. Keniston of Hartford, Ct., visited his family on Princeton street last week.

Mrs. Charles Rollins has been entertaining Mrs. Daniel Talbot of Pictou, N. S., the past week.

Miss Agnes Dickenson has returned from Portland, Me.

AUS DER OHE
PIANIST

Cantorum, of which he is now the honored head. In this school, which is already influential in all that makes for musical righteousness, he is the teacher of composition, and he conducts many of the interesting concerts given under the have returned from a month's vacation in New Hampshire and Maine.

[64]

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY HALL.

Some of the Novelties For the Orchestra's Season.

Novelties in music do not necessarily mean works fresh from the hands of the composer. In the list of music unknown to Boston which Mr. Gericke has prepared for the coming Symphony season are three works by masters who are no longer among the living. At least one of these works, Smetana's overture to his opera "Libussa," has never been played in this country and Dvorak's symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube," one of the last things he did, has never been played in Boston, and its only performance in this country was at an obscure concert in New York. Nor has Cesar Franck's "Psyche" ever been played in Boston. Another work on the list of novelties which Mr. Gericke has prepared will be labeled, "First Time at These Concerts," Professor Paine's prelude to "The Birds" of Aristophanes. This, of course, has been heard in Boston and Cambridge, but has never been played at the Symphony concerts. Altogether, the Symphony Orchestra will play fifteen works which are quite new to Boston. Among them are two symphonies, both of which are likely to attract more than ordinary interest. Perhaps the more important is Mahler's Fifth. Gustav Mahler, director of the Imperial Opera in Vienna and the conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic concerts, is without question one of the most interesting figures in the musical world of today. The other symphony, one in E major, is by Amherst Webber, a young English musician, who became known to many personally in this country several years ago through his association with the de Reszke brothers. Another Englishman on the list is Sir Edward Elgar, whose rise to popular favor in this country has been little short of phenomenal. He will be represented by three works: a new overture entitled "In the South," and two short pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Frederick S. Converse, whose name appeared on the programs last season, will be represented by a Ballade for baritone and orchestra. Other novelties will be: "Le Kremlin," a symphonic poem by Ernst Boche—an entirely new name; a "Lustspiel" overture and a "Geharnischte" suite by Bussoni; "Der Pfifertag," an overture by Max Schillings; and "Le Tasse," an overture by Eugene d'Harcourt.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS IN CAMBRIDGE.

Six concerts will be given in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, during the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the dates being Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Wednesday evening, Nov. 29, and Thursday evenings, Dec. 7, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19. The solo artists will include Miss Alice Nicole, contralto; Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; and George Proctor, pianist. Holders of season tickets last year will have until Oct. 18 to secure the seats they occupied last season, application for the same being made at Sever's University Book Store. On receipt of checks payable to C. W. Sever & Co., the tickets will be mailed to them. On Saturday morning, Oct. 21, at 8 o'clock, all unclaimed seats will be placed on sale.

VINCENT D'INDY, FRENCH COMPOSER

Sketch of Distinguished Musician Who Is to Conduct Two Concerts of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SOLOISTS WHO WILL ASSIST THE ORCHESTRA

New Artists of the Savage English Grand Opera Company —A Hint to Mr. Conried— New Opera.

THE announcement that Mr. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, will visit Boston this season, and conduct the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony Hall, on Dec. 1 and 2, gives much pleasure to others than the many admirers of this leader of the "younger" French School. There is always the curiosity to see a celebrated man, and while it is true that conductors are not always the best interpreters of their own works, Mr. d'Indy has had much experience as a member and as conductor of orchestras.

The most celebrated composers of music who have visited Boston of late years were Dvorak and Richard Strauss. The former conducted his "Requiem" at a concert of the Cecilia, and Richard Berlioz, if Mr. Weingartner had conducted works other than his own, or if Mr. Safonoff had heated the blood of eminently respectable citizens and citizenesses by his passionate interpretation of a symphony by Tschaikowsky, Mr. Colonne did come to Boston, but it was only for the Cecilia's Wage Earners' concert, and the orchestra at his command was much too small for the desired and legitimate effects in "The Damnation of Faust." Mr. Weingartner came, but only to play with the Kneisel quartet an uninspired piece of his own chamber music. Richard Strauss asked an absurdly high price and he did not conduct a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the regular series. It is now rumored that Mr. Weingartner will come here with a New York orchestra and that Mr. Safonoff will visit us with the orchestra of New York that has devoted its attention for two seasons to Russian music. We give these rumors for what they are worth. It seems a pity that such men should not show their talent at a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra this season, but it is said that their contracts forbid an engagement.

And why should not the conductors of established orchestras in the United States follow the example of clergymen and exchange places once or twice in a season? Mr. Gericke, Mr. Paur, Mr. Stock, who has succeeded Theodore Thomas in Chicago, Mr. Scheel, Mr. Vander Stucken might thus exchange with pleasure and profit to all concerned. Would not audiences and players be stimulated thereby? Would not the conductors themselves be benefited?

D'Indy's Early Years.

Mr. d'Indy is first of all a composer. He is also a teacher. And as a conductor in various cities of Europe he has commanded respectful attention, by reason of his artistic purpose in spreading the knowledge of modern French music and also by his abilities as a conductor.

He comes of an aristocratic and wealthy family.

His family wished him to be a lawyer, and so, against his wish, he studied for that object, but at the same time he studied music. He took pianoforte lessons of Diemer and harmony lessons of Lavignac (1862-65). During the Franco-Prussian war he served as a volunteer in the 105th regiment, and took an active part in the defence of Paris, notably in the battle of Montretout. After the war he gave up definitely any idea of the law, to be, against the wishes of his family, a professional musician.

It should here be said that his father, a man of large income, was fond of music and played the violin not too disagreeably. Vincent's mother died soon tered the Society of the Chatelet concerts as chorus leader and second drummer and he filled this position until 1878, when he retired on account of a disagreement with Colonne, the conductor. His "Piccolomini" overture, which now forms the second part of the "Wallenstein" trilogy, was performed at one of Pasdeloup's concerts in 1875. In 1882 a little comic opera in one act, "Attendez moi sous l'orme," with a libretto based on Regnard's comedy, was produced at the Opera Comique and perplexed the habitues accustomed to simpler harmonies and conventional tunes.

His Growing Fame.

There were other works produced before 1885, but several of them have been dropped from the catalogue drawn up by the composer and now before us. "The Enchanted Forest," an orchestral ballad (1878), "The Ride of the Cid," for baritone, chorus and orchestra (1879), the "Wallenstein" trilogy are retained, as is the piano quartet (1878). A symphony and an overture to "Antony and Cleopatra" have been thrown overboard. In 1885 D'Indy was awarded the prize of the city of Paris for his "Song of the Bell" (after Schiller). This prize for a musical composition by a Frenchman was established in 1878, and there is competition for it every two years. "The Song of the Bell," a romantic symphony for solo voices, double chorus and orchestra, was produced at the expense of the city and performed several times under Lamoureux's direction. Van Dyck, the tenor, then at the beginning of his career (1886) sang the music of Wilhem, the bell founder.

In 1887 D'Indy became chorus master of the Lamoureux concerts, and he prepared the choruses for the first production of "Lohengrin" in Paris at the Eden Theatre, May 3, 1887. Chauvinism allowed only one performance.

Busied in composition, he visited Beyreuth several times. Thus he was at the first performance of the "Ring" and of "Parsifal." With Franck, Saint-Saens, Gabriel Faure, Castillon, Chausson, Dupare, he was one of the founders of the National Society of Music," and after the death of Franck he was appointed president of the society. In 1893 the government appointed him a member of a committee to recommend reforms in the Paris Conservatory, but the professors of that institution made such lively protests that the idea of such a committee was abandoned. In 1895 D'Indy was offered the professorship of composition at the Conservatory, but he refused the position, for he wished to preserve his liberty. The next year he founded with Charles Bordes, the director of the "Singers of St. Gervais," and Alexander Guilmant, the famous organist, a school of music, the Schola

...AND SYMPHONY SOLOISTS.

...auxiliary will speak. Mayor Willard, Principal Alden E. Briggs of the high school, and Fred A. Pitcher, principal of the Shurtleff school, are expected to address the gathering.

Mrs. Oliver W. Wieth and daughter are enjoying two weeks at Swanville, Me.

Mrs. John B. Gilman and Mrs. George B. Cole are at Brooklyn, N. Y., for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. George Cannon of Bellingham street announce the engagement of their daughter, Alice Ardelle, to Ralph Presbrey Lane of Dorchester.

Miss Susan McDonald, teacher at the Carey school, of 26 Gordon street, is doing excellent work as librarian of the Boys' Club. She is now endeavoring to enlarge the library.

The Women's Veteran Union Independent Relief corps was tendered a complimentary banquet by Hancock command 1, Union Veterans' Union, in Pythian Hall, Wednesday night. The hall was crowded, and an enjoyable evening was spent. An excellent table was spread, and Col. Curtz, commander of the camp, was toastmaster. He introduced as speakers Gen. Gould, Col. Dammers, Comrade Everdean and several others.

The new postmaster, Mr. Lambert, who resides on Willow street, has taken up his duties. Mr. Ezra O. Winsor, the former postmaster, is now deep in his new duties in the delivery department in Boston.

A number of friends of Ralph C. Winer, recording secretary of the Ideal Association, were entertained at his home, 73 Walnut street, Sunday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moses, Mr. and Mrs. S. Dyer, Mrs. Delia Brown and Charles Smith are home after a delightful trip to Gettysburg, Washington, Harper's Ferry and Philadelphia.

Charles H. Faunce is receiving great praise for his heroic rescue of Chief Spencer at the Mt. Bellingham Church Monday night.

Miss Carrie Wilson is stopping in Lynn for five weeks. She is expected home in a few months.

Miss Grace Murie, president of the Friendship Club, is preparing a programme for the next four months which promises to be interesting.

Harry Albert Cobb and Blanche Evelyn Phillips were married the past week and are now on their honeymoon. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Cobb will reside at 212 Washington avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Hamlin are enjoying the cold weather of Mt. Washington.

Miss H. Keyes of the telephone exchange is enjoying a few weeks in Vermont and Canada.

Miss Helen Treat is home again after a trip across the country to the Pacific coast. Miss Treat enjoyed the handsome scenery of California and Washington.

While West she also went to Victoria, B. C.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Nichols have been visiting at Claremont, N. H., and Stafford Springs, Ct.

Miss Alice Monaghan of Randolph, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Hopkins, after two years of 65 Grove street.

Miss Sadie Hopkins, after two years has returned to this district.

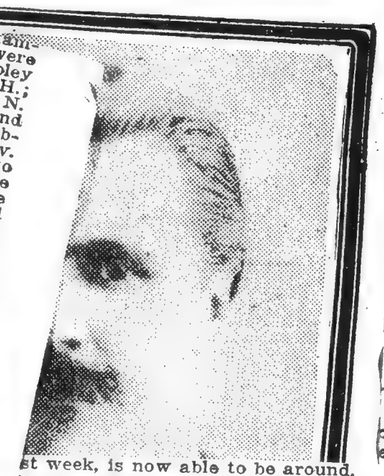
George Woodman is at Claremont, N. H., visiting her sister for a few weeks.

Robert A. Evans will be the guest of his brother at Chattanooga, Tenn., for the next few weeks.

The engagement is announced of Miss Gertrude Adams of Woodlawn avenue to Arthur L. K. Browne of Montpelier, formerly of Boston.

Miss Lilly of former City Treasurer Hersey is receiving the sympathy of the entire district on his sudden death.

Academy, Covington, Ky., teacher of Latin and Greek. Friday Club meeting at the residence of Mrs. Whittier on Hampshire afternoon. The meeting will be held in Whittier Hall.



st week, is now able to be around.

The latest arrival in the Leahy family Princeton street has been christened Maurice Leahy, Jr.

Miss Alice Webber of East Bridgewater is the guest of Miss Alice Newhall.

Mrs. Catherine McCrillis has been visiting friends at Wenham the past week.

Miss Sarah Godbold has been visiting friends at Ludlow, Vt.

John and George Morrison returned home last week after a three months' European trip.

Dr. W. H. Keniston of Hartford, Ct., visited his family on Princeton street last week.

Mrs. Charles Rollins has been entertaining Mrs. Daniel Talbot of Pictou, N. S., the past week.

Miss Agnes Dickenson has returned from Portland, Me.

AUS DER OHE
PIANIST

Cantorum, of which he is now the honored head. In this school, which is already influential in all that makes for musical righteousness, he is the teacher of composition, and he conducts many of the interesting concerts given under the have returned from a month's vacation in New Hampshire and Maine.

[64]

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

BOSTON HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 95.

TUESDAY, OCT. 3, 1905.

SYMPHONY SEATS GO AT HIGH PRICES

General Average of Prices for Friday Afternoon Concerts Exceed Last Year by Substantial Figure.

HIGHEST PREMIUM OF DAY WAS $91

At the Afternoon Session Seat in Row T Went at Premium of $59—Prices Higher Than Last Year.

Symphony Hall was well filled all day yesterday, when the seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra were placed at auction by Mr. Walter Jackson.

While sensational features such as have distinguished former occasions were lacking, the general average of premiums exceeded that of past years by a substantial figure. This was particularly true of those seats beyond the centre of the hall, for when they were offered at the afternoon session there appeared no diminution of bidding, which held strong until the last seat had been sold.

The bidding prices were supplementary to the regular assessment of $12 for each ticket, and during a spirited contest for four seats next the centre aisle in row 2 the premium reached the high mark of the day at $91.

This was $10 higher than the next highest bid of the day, and only $4 lower than the record of last year. There were some amusing incidents connected with the bidding, which arose through the unfamiliarity of ladies with such affairs. Two young ladies who were seated midway in the hall, after several ineffectual attempts to secure recognition, finally repaired to different parts of the hall.

One of them bid $28, and at the same moment the other was recognized by the auctioneer, with a bid of $29. Without being aware of the identity of the other bidder, but determined to secure seats, the two women very quickly had the centre of the stage. One of them finally dropped out, and her competitor issued triumphant with a bid of $48.

"How many?" asked the auctioneer. "Two," returned the successful bidder, and then rushing across the hall she notified her friend of the successful termination of the competition.

Herrick's Ticket Agency was a factor in nearly every bid.

The aisle seats throughout the hall were generally obtained by agencies, while individuals were forced to accept the inner seats of the rows.

Seats in the centre of the hall generally netted high premiums and were at all times eagerly sought, four seats in the centre of L bringing $81 each. The two centre seats in O netted a similar premium, while the next seat, No. 18, in the same row, brought $80. The four centre seats in M were sold for a premium of $74 each.

Some other fancy prices for seats near the stage were: $63.50 premium each for two centre aisle seats in J, Nos. 18 and 19; $59 for 17 in the same row. No. 18 in G brought $61; No. 17 in J, brought $59; Nos. 19 and 20 in D sold for $47 premium each; Nos. 19 to 22 in G brought an even $50 premium.

In I seats 18 to 22, near the aisle, netted a premium of $56 each. The first five rows, as usual, proved only moderately attractive, the best seat in A bringing only $26. Manager Mudgett, however, was highly pleased to note a better average on these seats than of late years. One seat in D, No. 19, brought a premium of $47.

At the afternoon session seat 17, on the centre aisle, in row T secured a premium of $59; 18 and 19 of the same row brought $44. In U No. 6 brought $48, 16 brought $45, and 17 and 18 each netted $47. The double-lettered rows also brought good prices.

The highest premium last year was $95, in 1903 $77, and in 1902 $305, on a very determined contest for two seats. Today balcony seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals will be sold at auction, and on Thursday the auction sale of regular $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will take place.

---

4 Oct 3

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

SYMPHONY CONCERT SEATS

BRISK BIDDING AT FIRST SALE

Highest Price Reached Was $91, Which Was Paid for [illegible] in Center of Hall—Mrs. [illegible] Gets Two at $56 Each.

The auction sale of the $12 tickets for the 24 public rehearsals to be given by the Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoons during the coming season was held yesterday in Symphony Hall. The bidding was spirited, and although the morning brought forth no astounding prices, the average was far better than it has been for some years.

In the first 3 rows this increase in the general average was most noticeable. Herein the seats, which have always been considered not very desirable, owing to their proximity to the stage, sold for excellent prices. In the first row the first tickets to sell brought the premium of $13.50, and the aisle seats sold for $26 and $24 above the regular ticket rates.

The best prices were paid for the seats in the middle of the first section, those in the rows from E and F to Q. These seats brought an average of over $30, the seats on the middle aisle selling for the best prices.

The highest price of the morning was paid for seats 13, 14, 17 and 18 in Q, which went for $91 each. These seats are in about the middle of the hall and are very desirable.

In O seats 16 and 17 sold for $81 each and 18 for $80. In N, 14, 15, 16 and 17 went for $81, and in M the same numbers brought $74.

Seats 18 and 19 in row J brought $63.50. Seat 18 in G sold for $61, 17 in J for $59.00, 5 seats on either side of the middle aisle in I went for $56 each, and there were many in these rows that brought $40 and above.

C. J. Connelly, ticket broker, who, as agent, buys more tickets than anyone else, said he had half again as many orders as last year. The reason so many prominent people buy through an agent is that they can get them cheaper, even including the commission. For instance, the agent has an order to buy 2 aisle seats in K and is given carte blanche as regards price. When his 2 buyers begin bidding for the seats a "layman" stops. Knowing that the agent can not be outbid, whereas were they bidding against a person not an agent, they might "freeze him" out.

Typically Boston are the orders given for seats. Everyone wants the same seats he or she had last year.

Among those for whom Connelly bought seats are: Ex-Atty.-Gen. Pillsbury, on the floor, two-thirds of the way back; U. S. Dist.-Atty Adams, who "must have end seats in the centre;" Mrs. E. C. Swift of Pride's, the beef magnate's wife; G. B. Inches of No. Grafton; T. J. Coolidge of Beacon st.; Mrs. M. A. Bigelow, Hotel Victoria; Mrs. Ex-Gov. Ames, 355 Commonwealth ave.; Dana Estes; G. M. Preston.

Mrs. George Conley, the authoress, wanted balcony seats. Mrs. Sears, Beacon st., who always has the best seats, ordered aisle seats in K.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, it is understood, got her usual seats, I 17 and 18, at $56 premium each.

---

6 Oct 3

The Boston Post

The Representative Democratic Paper

SYMPHONY SEAT BRINGS $91

Auction Sale Occurs and Spirited Bidding Marks Selections

The record in the auction of seats for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was made yesterday, when $91 was paid for four centre seats in Q row. The record last year was $95.

In Row O two seats sold for $81 and one for $80. Middle Row N also brought $81 each for four seats, and in M the record price was $74.

Yesterday's sale was given over to disposal of the $12 seats for the series of Friday afternoon rehearsals.

Walter Jackson was again the auctioneer, as he has been for several years. These included all the seats on the floor from Row A to Row JJ, both inclusive, as well as all of the side seats in the first balcony and those in the first four rows in the rear of this balcony.

In all other parts of the hall the seats are $7.50.

The first sale yesterday of Seats 1 and 2 in the first row, showed a premium of $13.50 paid, and soon the sale was going on so briskly, led by a number of ticket brokers in the front row and elsewhere, that premiums became on the average much higher than those paid last year, to go back no further.

A Lone Sale at $12

There was a sale at $12, to be sure, but this was soon lost sight of in higher prices.

An incident of the sale was the seemingly unconscious bidding against each other of two women, friends, who each paid $37 apiece for seats in Row F, all of which had been previously sold for not more than $17.

BOSTON JOURNAL

Oct 3

SYMPHONY SEATS BRING RECORD PRICES

Premium of $91 Paid for Single Seat for Public Rehearsals—Auctioneer Collapses During Sale—Sale Continues Today.

The auction sale of the $12 tickets for the twenty-four Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra took place yesterday in Symphony Hall. The bidding throughout the day was spirited, and, on the whole, the prices of the seats jumped 25 per cent. higher than those of last year. The highest sum paid for a single seat was $91 premium, bid by a ticket agent for each of the four aisle seats in row Q.

There were several hundred of Boston's elite seated in the hall when Auctioneer Walter Johnson began the sale in the morning. No coaxing or persuasion on the part of the auctioneer was necessary to get bidders for the much-coveted seats. The offers were shouted so quick and fast that Jackson had to be on his guard every second. Handsomely gowned women, who had selected favorite seats from the printed diagram, were on hand to battle against speculators and other masculine bidders.

Auctioneer Overcome.

In the afternoon Auctioneer John Leonard, a veteran in this work, took up the exhausting job. On account of the very fast bidding and the close concentration attendant upon the sale Mr. Leonard was overcome with an attack of vertigo at about 5.30. He had just finished a sale when an officer standing near the platform saw him totter. The policeman, with two or three clerks, jumped to Leonard's side in time to catch him. The women in the hall became greatly excited over the event, and could not be induced to take their seats again until it was learned that Mr. Leonard had recovered from the attack of faintness.

The best prices were received for a block of seats running from row E to row R in the center section. In every case the price bid was added to the regular subscription of $12. In row O seats were sold for $81 premium; in row N they brought a like price, and in row M they were knocked down for $74. Two seats in H brought $63.50. One in G went for $61, one in J for $59 and one in I for $56.

Brokers Out in Force.

Ticket brokers were out in force. Herrick is said to have purchased $20,000 worth of seats for customers and on his own account. C. J. Connelly reports that his purchases were nearly twice those of last season. The latter broker bought tickets for ex-Attorney General Pillsbury, United States District Attorney Adams, Mrs. E. C. Swift of Pride's Crossing, G. B. Inches of North Grafton, Thomas Jefferson Coolidge of Beacon street, Mrs. M. A. Biglow, Hotel Victoria; Mrs. Ames, wife of the ex-governor; Dana Estes and G. M. Preston. The Thayers, Ameses, Searses, Phillipses, Wendalls, Higginsons and Grews were all represented by their agents and got a choice selection of seats.

Today at 10 A. M. the sale of the $7.50 seats for Fridays will be held. Thursday at the same hour will begin the sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts. Friday morning the sale of the $7.50 seats for Saturday evening concerts will begin.

SUNDAY POST,

OCTOBER 15, 1905

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN CAMBRIDGE

The sale of season tickets for new subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, will open at Sever's book store, Cambridge, on Saturday morning next, Oct. 21. The concerts will be given on the evenings of Oct. 26, Nov. 29, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19—all of them Thursdays except the November date, which is on Wednesday on account of Thanksgiving.

The soloists will be in order as follows: Miss Olive Mead, violinist; Miss Alice R. Cole, contralto; George W. Proctor, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; Myron W. Whitney, Jr., baritone, and Mme. Samaroff, pianist.

SUNDAY HERALD—

OCTOBER 15, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE

The sale of season tickets for new subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, will open at Sever's bookstore, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, Oct. 21. The six concerts will be given on the evenings of Oct. 26, Nov. 29, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19—all of them Thursdays except the November date, which is on Wednesday on account of Thanksgiving. The soloists will be in order as follows: Miss Olive Mead, violinist; Miss Alice R. Cole, contralto; Mr. George W. Proctor, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; Mr. Myron W. Whitney, Jr., baritone, and Mme. Samaroff, pianist.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 15, 1905.

MUSICAL MATTERS

Interesting Opening of Symphony Season.

"Valkyrie" and Other Operas in English at the Tremont.

Chamber Concerts of Note —Preludes and Echoes.

The 25th season of Symphony concerts was opened in Symphony hall with the popular American singer, Mrs Louise Homer, as the solo artist. Her selections were the Liszt son, "The Loreley," and a scene and aria from Wagner's "Rienzi." The orchestral novelty was Dvorak's symphonic poem, "The Wood Dove," played here for the first time. The Goldmark overture, "In the Spring," and Beethoven's great Second Symphony completed the program. The assemblage was limited, as usual, to the seating capacity of the hall, hundreds were disappointed in not being able to gain admittance. Mr Gericke was received with the customary enthusiasm and the orchestra performed its duties in the manner so familiar to Bostonians that a standard which is considered unusual in other cities is now taken as a matter, of course, with our Symphony patrons. Mrs Homer's rich and powerful mezzo voice was at its best, the dramatic qualities showing to particular advantage in the aria from "Rienzi," the phrases of passion and despair being declaimed with splendid effect and without marring the beauty of her vocalism. She sang the score in German and showed that Wagner, even in very turbulent mood, could be made musical. The fantastic and tender "Loreley" was sung with appealing expression and sweetness of tone. Mrs Homer's reception was very hearty and she was recalled several times at the close of each number.

Goldmark's joyous "Spring" overture opened the program delightfully, and each charming episode and furtive theme was given as delicately and smoothly as one could desire. The "little rehearsal of the "crack of doom" went with the necessary fortissimo vigor, and the finale was a brilliant and harmonious finishing touch.

Dvorak's poem, "The Wood Dove," is a musical illustration of a lamenting young widow, who, after murdering her first husband, marries a jovial second. As they pass the grave of the first spouse the mourning song of the wild dove causes the woman to go mad and drown herself in a nearby stream. The composer has cleverly shown the various scenes in characteristic orchestration, which fits the story admirably as a rule, although lacking at times in suggesting its deep and tragic import. The treatment appeared to be rather simple, for there were no special difficulties in the score, and Mr Gericke's men had little or no trouble in making the interpretation pleasing. If it was void of dramatic strength the fault evidently was with the orchestra.

Last, but not least, was the beautiful Second Symphony by Beethoven, the gem of the program. This work showed the orchestra in its happiest vein, notably so in the legato melodies in the second and third movements, which were the perfection of ensemble playing.

This week's soloist will be Waldemar Lustschg, a pianist new to this country. The program will be as follows: Overture, "Libussa," Smetana, first time here; concerto for pianoforte, No. 2, in a major, Liszt; "Death and Transfiguration," Richard Strauss; symphony No. 4, Tschaikowsky.

SUNDAY GLOBE—

OCTOBER 15, 1905.

CAMBRIDGE SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The sale of season tickets for new subscribers to the Boston symphony concerts in Sanders theatre, Cambridge, will open at Sever's bookstore, Cambridge, Saturday morning, Oct 21. The price for the series is $5. The six concerts will be given on the evenings of Oct 26, Nov 29, Dec 28, Feb 1, March 8 and April 19—all of them Thursdays except the November date, which is on Wednesday on account of Thanksgiving.

The soloists will be in order as follows: Miss Olive Mead, violinist; Miss Alice R. Cole, contralto; George W. Proctor, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; Myron W. Whitney Jr, baritone, and Mme Samaroff, pianist.

[65]

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY
OCTOBER 14, 1905

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA BEGINS THE NEW SEASON

Mr. Gericke and the Band at Their Best—Mme. Homer Sings and Dvorak's "Forest Dove" Serves for Novelty—Local Plans and Announcements—Max Reger, the New German Composer, Who Is "Halfback Redivivus"—Singers and Virtuosi

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first concert here of its twenty-fifth season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The chief newcomers to the band were Heinrich Warnke, first 'cello; Peter Sadony, first bassoon, and Max Hess, first horn. Mr. Gericke, who was welcomed with a ripple of friendly applause, conducted, and Mme. Louise Homer, the alto of the Metropolitan Opera House, was the singer. The novelty of the concert was Dvorak's symphonic poem, "The Forest Dove," played for the first time in Boston. The whole programme, which will be repeated tonight, ran as follows:

Goldmark: Concert overture, "In the Spring."
Liszt: Song, with orchestra, "The Loreley."
Dvorak: Symphonic poem, "The Forest Dove."
Wagner: Scene, "Just God!" and air, "My Life Fades in its Blossom," from "Rienzi."
Beethoven: Symphony, No. 2.

As symphony concerts go, the afternoon could hardly have been gayer. Liszt's "toy" setting, as he rightly called it, of the ballad of the "Loreley" and the bit of musical melodrama out of Wagner's youthful "Rienzi" neither heightened nor subdued the gayety. Mme. Homer a little chilled it, for her voice has often sounded clearer, smoother and more pliant. But she and her tunes were only more or less agreeable vocal interludes. The warm pleasure and the keen exhilaration of the concert lay in the purely orchestral numbers and in the way in which Mr. Gericke and his men played them. He could hardly have made a more ingratiating or a less taxing programme, and still one that showed his own and his band's virtuosity at their brightest. He was beginning the season gayly as one who, with still a touch of dignity, renews his youth.

Goldmark's "Spring" overture is not weighty with musical ideas, nor intricate and subtle in the development and the expression of them. No more is the symphonic poem of Dvorak's later years. No more even, in comparison with its successors, is Beethoven's second symphony. With all three the persistent and abiding impression is of transparent charm—the charm of beautiful and imaginative sound. In the overture it is the particular charm of fresh fancy, kindling quickly and freely into musical expression, and then flowing spontaneously, fully and smoothly forward with little meanderings by the way into tonal graces and instrumental ornaments. So many things touch a sensitive fancy like Goldmark's when he feels the incoming tide of spring. In the symphonic poem the particular charm is the charm of a homely tale told, with a little help from the programme book, in the finer and more exalted speech of music—told simply and sincerely, but warmly colored in the telling, bending responsively to every mood, and lighted with naively vivid orchestral details. Yet Dvorak, with all the many-shaded glow and tortuous glamour of his instrumental coloring could summon a child's soul. In the symphony the particular charm was richer, deeper, fuller-bodied—a nobler charm. Gay it still was and joyous, but the gayety was more finely touched, and the joy the joy of him who sees the face of an ideal clear and close and rejoices boldly in the glimpse. "Believing Beethoven" someone called it.

It was easy in the exhilaration of listening yesterday afternoon to call the charm of all three abiding. Only the cooler blood of reflection brought the realization that not a little of their charm and our zest depended upon the sympathetic understanding of conductor and player, and upon the flowing perfection of their execution. There are orchestras and conductors under whose hands Goldmark's music is beginning to sound somewhat thin and faded. The "Forest Dove," unappreciated, might readily sound like the tame tale of a musing old man, long practiced in the art of instrumentation. It is easy to play some of Beethoven's symphonies like dead classics. It is much more difficult to play the second as though it had been written last summer. More and more Mr. Gericke is maturing a particularly individual talent for making the classics sound freshly alive. He did it last winter for Beethoven's fifth symphony. He did it yesterday for the second, and so to reanimate that is a far harder achievement. Nowhere did he try to inflate Dvorak's little musical tale into a swelling musical tragedy. Yet nowhere did he let the telling flag, or blunt or distort a single pretty detail. He gave us in the audience no time or wish to take thought whether Goldmark's music is beginning to wither. It went freshly, as in a spring air, and brightly, as in a spring sunshine.

And how well his men seconded him, and responded to him! They had hardly finished Goldmark's overture before most of us in the audience were sure that the orchestra was keeping all its familiar perfections. The symphonic poem and the symphony only confirmed our faith. Once more we heard the flawless fusion and the delicate adjustment of the instrumental groups. There was the old loveliness of tone—the subdued or the intense brilliance of the strings, the liquid smoothness or the flowing richness of the wood winds, the clear tempered sonority of the brass. The band sung in broad melody, or it vibrated to quickly changing rhythms. Not a delicate modulation, not an instrumental detail seemed to escape it, and overture and symphonic poem were full of both. The orchestra was like a single sensitive instrument played with unerring beauty. The charm of the three orchestral numbers was transparent, but it was conductor and band, as much as the composers, that made the transparency.

There is no reason to [illegible] with Dvorak's symphonic poem as a bit of programme music. There is no need, even, to take it too seriously. It is by no means an inspired composition. It is a pleasantly entertaining one. A few lines on the programme spin the thread of the folk tale that was the composer's "literary" material. The music readily summons the moods of the telling. The widow follows her husband's funeral procession to the grave. Hers is a simple, wistful grief. Almost on the heels of the funeral train comes the eager, the bouncing, wooer. To woo is to win, and the country folk make the wedding musically gay. But the dove, whither the soul of the good husband has flown, is plaintive on its forest tree, and remorse stirs in the wife. (She had poisoned her dead husband, says the programme, which is very obviously a fact that music may not impart.) She dies, and the composer gently mourns her. "'T is true, 't is pity, and pity 't is, 't is true." The musical speech sounds as simple as the tale, though some of the transitions are full of half-concealed ingenuity. The changing moods are warmly colored. There are piquant details from the flickerings of the harp at the wedding feast to the wail of the wood winds as the dove coos its sorrow. It is all pleasant to hear—even when widow or dove is lamenting.

Mme. Homer was rather the disappointment of the afternoon. Her tones lacked pliancy, and her voice sounded woodenish. They lacked also smooth and rounded beauty as of one who forgets the art of song in the pursuit of "dramatic" effect. The richness of her alto voice seemed a little thick and viscous. There were the strivings for temperament, more than temperament itself. There were not always the signs of a finely controlling intelligence. She gave most pleasure in Wagner's declamatory scena. Liszt's "Loreley" at best is stiff, pale and finicking, and even the fragment from "Rienzi," beloved though it is of altos in concerts, needs the broken column and "the alarums and excursions without" that Wagner's stage directions prescribe.

H. T. P.

/ / + / /

Local Announcements

Waldemar Lütschg, a young Russian pianist, who has settled for the time in Chicago, makes his first public appearance in America at the pair of Symphony concerts next week. He began his career as a virtuoso nine years ago in St. Petersburg. His playing has been warmly liked there and in other Russian cities, and Germany has heard it with praise. He has the familiar Russian enthusiasm for the music of Russian composers, but he has not chosen his concerto for next Friday and Saturday from them. It will be a better tested vehicle for a début—Liszt's second concerto in A major.

There will also be an overture by Smetana on the programme that apparently has not been played heretofore in America. It begins his opera, "Libussa," and celebrates its heroine, a queen who made Bohemia a nation. The other two numbers are the best understood and best liked of Richard Strauss's tone poems, "Death and Transfiguration," and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, which even the Fifth and the Sixth cannot obscure. In many ways an exceptionally interesting programme.

The dates of the six concerts that the Symphony Orchestra is to give this winter in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge are Oct. 26, Nov. 29, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 9—Thursday evenings all, except Nov. 29, which falls on Wednesday. The soloists at the concerts are in order: Miss Mead, the violinist; Miss Cole, the alto; Mr. Proctor, the pianist; Miss Kioberg, the pianist; young Mr. Whitney, the baritone, and Mme. Samaroff, the pianist. The sale of seats at $5 for the series begins Oct. 21, at Sever's bookshop in Cambridge.

The dates for the six chamber concerts of Mr. Hess's Boston Symphony Quartet in Jordan Hall, are, as we recently announced, Monday evenings, Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5 and April 8. The seats go on sale Oct. 20 at Symphony Hall at $7.50, $6 and $4 for the series. As last year, Mr. Hess, Mr. Roth and Mr. Ferir will play in the quartet, and Mr. Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, will replace Mr. Krasselt. Messrs. Pugno, Stasny, Buonamici, pianist, and other virtuosi in and out of the orchestra, will assist the quartet. Here is the music from which Mr. Hess will make his programmes:

Beethoven—Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3; Quartet in B-flat major, Op. 130; Septet, Op. 20. Brahms—Sextet in B-flat major, Op. 18; Pianoforte Quartet in A major, Op. 25. Jan Brandts Buys—Quintet for Strings and Flute in D major (new). Gabriel Fauré—Pianoforte Quartet in C minor, Op. 15. Glazounow—Novelettes for String Quartet, Op. 15. Haydn—Quartet in C major, Op. 33. D'Indy—Quartet, Op. 35. Hans Koessler—Sextet for String in F minor (new). Mozart—Quintet for Clarinet and Strings in A major; Quartet in C major. Sinding—Quartet in A minor, Op. 70 (new). Sinigaglia—Concert-étude for String Quartet, Op. 5 (new). Schubert—Quartet in A minor, Op. 29; Quintet for Strings, in C major. Schumann—Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3. Taneiew—Quartet in B-flat minor, Op. 4. Saint-Saëns—Trio for Pianoforte and Strings in F major, Op. 18.

Another child of the orchestra, Mr. Longy's club of players upon wood-wind instruments, will give three concerts in Potter Hall on the evenings of Dec. 18, Jan. 22 and Feb. 26. Mr. Longy has not yet completed his programmes, but they will range from the composers of the eighteenth century to those of the twentieth. Some of the music will be new. Most of it will be unfamiliar.

[illegible]NDAY [illegible]
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 107.
SUNDAY, OCT. 15, 1905.

SYMPHONY'S 25TH SEASON BEGINS

Good-Sized Audience Was Sympathetic — Dvorak's "Wood Dove," Played Here for First Time, Disappoints.

MRS. HOMER SHOWS VOCAL IMPROVEMENT

Fine Performances of Pieces by Beethoven and Goldmark—Some New Players Make First Appearance.

The 25th season of the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, began last night in Symphony Hall. Mr. Gericke was very warmly greeted and although empty seats here and there showed that regular subscribers had not returned to the city—the return of the cottagers is later each year—yet the audience had a holiday air and it applauded heartily whenever there was opportunity for a manifestation of approval. There were a few new players in the orchestra. It will no doubt be a pleasure to speak of their accomplishments a litle later when they are more accustomed to their respective positions and have occasion for individual display.

The programme was as follows:

Overture, "In the Spring".....Goldmark
Song, "The Lorelei".....Liszt
Symphonic poem, "The Wood Dove"...Dvorak (First time.)
Scene and aria from "Rienzi".....Wagner
Symphony No. 2.....Beethoven

The feature of the concert was the brilliant and supremely euphonious performance of Goldmark's overture. Inasmuch as Symphony concerts in all musical countries are given as a rule in the fall and winter of the year, orchestral hymns and invocations to spring are performed out of season. The first performance of Goldmark's overture was in December, and the first performance in America was in the same month. Mr. Nikisch made a brave attempt to suit the musical sentiment to the season, and he brought out the overture in April; but, as spring is in New England merely a division of the year, a word that is of meaning chiefly to milliners and poets, it matters little when such music is played. This overture is not characteristically Goldmarkian; it is not charged with oriental feeling, in fact, it is at first rather Mendelssohnian; and the contrasting section is Wagnerian, but it is spontaneous and inspiring music: it is full of buoyancy and swing; it is frankly melodious, and in its suggestion of twittering and resteless birds it is not too deliberately mimetic. As played last night, the overture was full of grace, color, beauty and life.

After Dvorak returned to Prague, which he again made his dwelling-place until his death, he composed five pictorial or narrative symphonic poems, no one of which was eminently successful, and two or three operas which had only a success of esteem, if any one of them was even thus complimented. Dvorak was unhappy in consequence. Shortly before his death he complained of the public's failure to appreciate him, and his remarks as quoted were rather peevish, unlike his own cheerful and kindly nature. The fault was in the music itself, not in the public; for the talent of Dvorak was lyrical, not dramatic; his salient characteristics were melody, rhythm, color—and his melody and rhythm were derived from the folk tunes of his beloved land. He was happiest when he was with the plain people, and his "American music," as some call it, interested him, and, in a measure, inspired him because he had to do again with folk themes. Simple, naive, what could he do with subjects that were macabre or horrible? Take this "Wood Dove" for instance, based on a legendary poem by Erben.

Our old friend, the Ephesian widow, who was only too easily persuaded to fall in love with the soldier guarding her husband's corpse, is here in Bohemia; she weeps as she follows her husband's body, and Dvorak writes a funeral march that is outwardly as pompous as though it were for a hero, but the true contents are empty and jejune. As she breaks down in dismal wails, trumpets announce relief and consolation in the shape of a lusty peasant, who at once presses his suit. She does not keep him waiting, and there is wedding music that is distinguished by its unrelieved and dull vulgarity. There is a coarseness in music that seems elemental, natural, inevitable, human; there is also a fierce and terrible brutality in music that is appalling: we find such expressions of human nature in certain works of Tschaikowsky; but the vulgarity of this festival music of Dvorak's is stupid and tiresome; it is the vulgarity of a guttersnipe; it is not even amusing. A dove, the soul of the dead husband, is heard lamenting, and lo, we are told by the printed argument in the score that this charming and easily comforted widow had poisoned her first husband, that overcome by remorse—or possibly by the wedding music provided thoughtfully by husband No. 2, with the assistance of Dvorak—she goes mad and seeks death in the waters hard by.

Poor Dvorak made a brave attempt to write realistic music for this last tragic scene, but he no more chills the blood than does the urchin who exposes suddenly on a neighbor's doorstep a pumpkin jack-o'-lantern and then rings violently the bell. In this music there is no thought of the Dvorak of the wild Slavonic dances, the rhapsodies, the sad and haunting gypsy melodies. No effort of conductor or orchestra could make this symphonic poem impressive or even tolerable. Nor is the music so gorgeously colored as other works by this naive composer, who at the last fell into routine and conventionalisms when he purposed to be realistic and tragic.

It is a pleasure to hear now and then even an inferior symphony by Beethoven when it is performed with such loving care for the detail as is shown by Mr. Gericke. The larghetto of the second symphony is still beautiful in its simplicity. Mr. Gericke took it at a little faster pace than is customary, and the music gained thereby.

Mrs. Homer, two seasons ago, caused her many friends uneasiness by her evident desire to make effects at any cost; by her tendency to ignore the sane and voice-preserving laws of song and of vocal beauty. Perhaps she was drawn from the path of righteousness by the example of her German sisters in the Metropolitan Opera House Company; perhaps she was goaded to extravagance in tone-emission by a noisy orchestra dominated by the too enthusiastic Mr. Hertz. Last night she showed that she has been considering her ways, that she now realizes the beauty of repose, the force that lies in the suggestion of reserve strength. She was heard to her best advantage in "The Loreley," a song that has been censured by some for many years as an undue expansion of Heine's simple idea, as being an elaborate cantata instead of a direct and appealing song.

But Liszt's setting has a peculiar and romantic charm, and Mrs. Homer appreciated and expressed the spirit of the composer. She is to be thanked for comparative restraint in the declamation of the wretched music from "Rienzi," music of a third rate Italian opera imagined by a genius in the period of experimentation. As sung by many this scene and air remind one of the sounds heard on a famous occasion by Miss Maud's young man in Tennyson's poem, "The shrill-edged shriek of a mother divides the shuddering night."

The programme of the second concert, which is given on the music page of this issue, will be one of greater interest.

IT is generally understood that the musical season opens with the first Symphony concert. Now and then some young pianist or singer, who has been storing up energy during the summer months, rushes into a hall and wonders why the public at large does not clamor for admission, but such —unfortunates born out of due season— are few.

Much has already been said about the new works to be performed at the Symphony concerts, and also about the pianists and singers to be heard here for the first time. The programme of the concert this week will include an unfamiliar overture — the prelude to Smetana's opera "Libussa," which was produced at Prague in 1881. Libussa, or Libusa, married a ploughman and founded a mighty dynasty, which became extinct in 1306. An old chronicler describes her as "a wonderful woman among women. Chaste in body, righteous in her morals, second to none as judge over the people, affable to all and even amiable, the pride and glory of the female sex, doing wise and manly deeds, but, as nobody is perfect, this so praiseworthy woman was also a soothsayer." She is the heroine of half a dozen operas. The other orchestral pieces are Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor, No. 4, and Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Death and Transfiguration." Mr. Waldemar Lutschg will play Liszt's piano concerto in A major, No. 2, and thus make his first appearance in America. He was born at St. Petersburg in 1877. He studied there and played for the first time in public in 1896. His first appearance in Germany was at Dresden Nov. 10, 1898.

Mr. Warncke, the new 'cellist of the orchestra and the Boston Symphony quartet, will make his first appearance in America as a soloist Oct. 28, when he may possibly play Dvorak's concerto, first played by the late Leo Stern, the husband of Suzanne Adams, and introduced in Boston by Mr. Schroeder, who assisted the composer writing it in this country in certain matters of the detail.

Among the most important orchestral compositions that will be played here for the first time is Gustav Mahler's very long and elaborate symphony in C sharp minor, No. 5, which was produced by Mr. Van der Stucken in Cincinnati on March 25 of this year. A symphony by Mr. Amherst Webber, which has been played in one or two European towns, will also be performed for the first time in Boston.

HERALD—BOSTON,
OCTOBER 15, 1905.

Other Chamber Concerts.

The Boston Symphony quartet, composed of Messrs. Willy Hess, Otto Roth, Ferir and Heinrich Warncke, will give this season six concerts in Jordan Hall; the dates are the Monday evenings of Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5 and April 9. The season subscription sale will open at Symphony Hall on next Friday morning, Oct. 20. The soloists will be Messrs. Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny and a singer to be announced. Members of the Symphony orchestra will also assist. The works to be played will be chosen from the following list: Beethoven—Quartet in C major, op. 59, No. 3; quartet in B-flat major, op. 130; septet, op. 20. Brahms—Sextet in B-flat major, op. 18; piano quartet in A major, op. 25. Jan Brandts Buys—Quintet for string and flute in D major (first time). Gabriel Faure—Pianoforte quartet in C minor, op. 15. Glazounoff—Novellettes for string quartet, op. 15. Haydn—Quartet in C major, op. 33. D'Indy—Quartet, op. 35. Hans Koessler—Sextet for string in F minor (first time). Mozart—Quintet for clarinet and strings in A major; quartet in C major. Sinding—Quartet in A minor, op. 70 (first time). Sinigaglia—Concert-etude for string quartet, op. 5 (first time). Schubert—Quartet in A minor, op. 29; quintet for string, in C major. Schumann—Quartet in A major, op. 41, No. 3. Taneiew—Quartet in B-flat minor, op. 4. Saint-Saens—Trio for piano and strings in F major, op. 18. The work of the Boston Symphony quartet made a most favorable impression in Boston last season, and the prospects for the coming one are bright.

[66]

The Boston Post

THE SYMPHONIES BEGIN

The 25th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, was inaugurated last evening at Symphony Hall, the programme of the first concert being as follows:

Overture, "In the Spring".....Goldmark
Song, with orchestra, "The Loveley".....Liszt
Symphonic Poem, "The Wood Dove".....Dvorak
Scene and aria from "Rienzi".....Wagner
Symphony No. 2, in D.....Beethoven

Mrs. Louise Homer was the soloist.

Mr. Gericke was warmly applauded when he appeared to direct the first number. The membership of the orchestra is nearly the same as before, the new members including Heinrich Warnke, first 'cellist; P. Sadoni, bassoon; Max Hess, first horn; also Boston's well-known and distinguished violinist, John C. Mullaly, who will be a most valued addition to the many artists composing the orchestra.

The opening number was Goldmark's overture, "In the Spring." Although from its title it might be considered out of season, the overture is one that can often be heard with pleasure, for it is in Goldmark's best mood, not only as to freedom and originality of thought, but as to the scoring, which is ideal in every way. In some ways the "In the Spring" overture surpasses such as "Sappho," "Penthesilea" and is only second to "Sakuntala." It made a delightful impression.

Dvorak's symphonic poem, "The Wood Dove," was heard at these concerts for the first time. Briefly stated, the work, in five sections, played without pause, was suggested by an old Bohemian folk legend, and was composed about six years ago. The music is well descriptive of the story, so far as one can judge at a first hearing, and there are many pages of great beauty that fix the attention of the listener. The work deserves another hearing in the near future.

Mme. Louise Homer, a general favorite in this city, made her second appearance at these concerts. She sang Liszt's admirable setting of the familiar Heine poem with fine voice and intelligent grasp of the spirit of the text. She was even more successful in the scene and aria from the third act of "Rienzi." Mme. Homer was enthusiastically applauded and recalled after each number. Beethoven's second symphony in D, was the closing number. The ensemble of the orchestra was especially fine for the first of the season, owing, perhaps, in part to the recent trip to Canada and the West.

At the rehearsal and concert this coming week Waldemar Luetschg, a young Russian pianist now living in Chicago, will play Liszt's concerto in A major, No. 2, and this will be his first appearance in this country. The orchestral pieces will be the overture to Smetana's opera, "Libussa," Strauss' tone-poem, "Death and Transfiguration," and Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor, No. 4.

6 Oct-16-'5

The Boston Journal

With its beautiful home filled by the musically elect; with its conductor's stand entwined with greenery and decorated with flowers; with an unusually hearty welcome for Mr. Gericke, the Boston Symphony Orchestra began its twenty-fifth season in due form Saturday night and gave the official signal that shall start all the other musical features of the town into full activity. It was almost the same organization in its personnel that marshaled its ranks before the audience a year before. A few faces, however, are new. Mr. Warnke has come from Munich to fill the position of first 'cello; Mr. Hess—not Willy—has the leading horn, while our familiar friend John C. Mullaly, is now one of the first violins. Otherwise the splendid band is practically unchanged.

Begins in Key of Gaiety.

The concert began in a key of gaiety and pure abandon, for Goldmark's overture, "In the Spring," has more naive charm and simple beauty than one would expect from a man of his temperament. Schumannesque in many ways, the work yet has its own interpretation of the joy of renewed life, of birds and flowers and babbling brooks. It is a delightful, spontaneous bit of musical imagery, and it was played as it deserved—with delicate loveliness of rhythm and tone.

Dvorak's tone-poem, "The Wood Dove," had its first performance here, and it made little or no impression. Attempting to tell the story of the widow too soon consoled by a lover after the death of the husband she had poisoned, and the terrifying return of her spouse's spirit in the form of a dove, it merely sets forth, with something very near akin to dulness, a funeral march, a rustic dance or two and some rather rugged and somber strains supposed to be the accusing voice of conscience. The dove has little part in the matter, and its coolings are immediately swallowed up by hoarse blasts of the bassoon. Altogether, the work is unworthy the Dvorak of earlier days, and scarcely holds the interest of the most friendly.

Beautiful Second Symphony.

Beethoven's second symphony has beauty enough to make it still deserving of a place at modern concerts, spite of the endless repetitions of many of its themes and the undeniably old-fashioned cut of its form. It was played with that rare finish and perfection of detail which Mr. Gericke knows so well how to obtain from his orchestra.

Louise Homer, the soloist, more radiant than ever, and, it would appear, in more powerful voice, sang first Liszt's wonderfully fascinating setting to the "Lorelei" poem. She gave it in an honest, conscientious and hearty style that was partially effective, but that still lacked much of finesse and that weird suggestiveness the music ought to convey. Later she sang a scena and aria from Wagner's "Rienzi," dull things in themselves and not especially bettered by the tremendous strength with which she tossed her voice into the hall. On the whole her true "metier" is in grand opera with all its most turbulent accessories.

E. E. GRAY CO.
BLACKSTONE, HANOVER

4 Oct 16/05

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Concert Overture, in A major, op 36, "In the Spring" ..... Goldmark
Song, "The Loreley," with Orchestral accompaniment .....Liszt
Mme. Louise Homer.
Symphonic Poem, "The Wood Dove," (after Erben's like-named Ballad), op 110. (First time) .....Dvorak
Scene, "Just God!" and Aria, "My Life fades in its Blossom," from "Rienzi," Act III., No. 9 .....Wagner
Mme. Louise Homer.
Symphony No, 2, in D major, op. 36..Beethoven

The Bass-drum pounds the knell of parting day,
The lowing horns wind slowly through the key,
The Boston Orchestra starts in to play,
And work begins for Gericke—and me.

The boast of Gericke, the pomp of Paur,
And all that Henschel, all that Nikisch gave,
Await alike the season's opening hour
To play all things from furious to grave.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The big portfolios of Sauerquell bear.
Full many a work with gongs and wind-machine,
With much of dissonance and little air.

When Mr. Gericke took the stand the greeting was especially prolonged and cordial. The opening work of the season was decidedly different from the solemn style in which the former conductors used to break the ice. Henschel used to commence with Beethoven's "Dedication of the House" overture, as a sort of musical grace, and Nikisch and Paur generally gave some lofty number as "avant-courier."

It was much pleasanter, however, to take our spring medicine at once. Goldmark's Spring overture is entirely free from musical riddles, or "Weltschmerz," or any of those troubles which seem to afflict most modern composers. On the contrary, it seems that in the Springtime Goldmark's fancies lightly turn to thoughts of woodwind. Pipings and carollings and all veins of pastoral beauty were in the work, yet contrapuntal skill was not lacking. Such men as Goldmark, Rheinberger, or Jadassohn, may not be of absolutely the first rank in musical creation, but they certainly prove how much of melody and beauty can be united with strict form. The overture was heartily applauded.

Mme. Louise Homer made an unqualified success. She entered into the full spirit of Liszt's ballad, giving the climax—"Er schaut nur hinauf in der Hoh"—with fine effect, and making a very effective contrast with the sadness of the subsequent "Und das hat mit ihrem singen, Die Lorelei gethan."

As if to disprove the saying the Homer sometimes nods, she made a still greater success with the "Rienzi" aria. When one listens to a work of this kind how utterly absurd it makes the accusations of Rowbotham and other old fogy Englishmen, that Wagner introduced his theories because he could not write melodies!

There is too much of melody in this number; it interferes with the dramatic effect; and the roulades and vocal repetitions are almost comically unlike the Wagner whom the world has come to recognize.

Nevertheless the work, amid much of claptrap, has its moments of genius, and Mme. Homer has done well to resuscitate it. There were many recalls. Mme Homer's voice was never as brilliant as it is at present.

How would one enjoy a melodrama written by Wordsworth? A symphonic poem by Dvorak is about as much at cross purposes. The story tells of a woman who poisons her husband, then wooed and won by a young peasant, is afterwards haunted by the spirit of the dear defunct, goes mad and commits suicide. Liszt might have made something out of this gruesome topic, but Dvorak only succeeds in giving a mixture of ghosts and rose-water.

The story is told at great length, as if by a man who had reached what Disraeli would have called his anecdotage. There are some good points in the composition, as, for example, the sturdy peasant's dance, with its empty fifths as prelude, but the supernatural touches were tame and the work was far too long for what it had to say. The score might be sent to the Society for Psychical Research, for we have certainly no further use for it in the Symphony concerts.

Spite of the fact that one or 2 American critics have found fault with Beethoven, that composer seems to wear pretty well. Mr. Gericke spared not a single repeat in the symphony, yet there was scarcely a sign of any exodus before the last notes. The orchestra played with such spirit that we suspect that they liked the work as much as the audience did. The work is worth study were it only for its historical significance. Its larghetto movement (the gem of the work) was one of those compositions of long breath in slow tempo which Beethoven was the first to thoroughly master.

Its Scherzo is the first symphonic movement of this form, Beethoven having grown tired of the smug Minuet which Haydn had riveted upon the symphony. Yet the movement which he called "Minuet," in his first symphony, or the so-called Minuet of the Fourth Symphony, is far more of a Scherzo than this movement, although this second symphony marks the formal opening of the new path.

The finale, too, is epoch-making. The old suite had ended with a gigue, or jig, and all the old cycle forms had the habit of ending with a jovial movement to reward the patience of the auditors. Almost all the symphonies of Haydn and Mozart followed this lead and ended in a rollicking manner. Beethoven himself yielded to the custom in his first symphony.

But in this second symphony he begins to show what a symphonic finale should really be,—a true climax. The reviewer finds more meaning and more power in the finale than in any other movement of this symphony.

But perhaps it is rather late to write about the merits of Mr. Van Beethoven, and it may be unnecessary to defend them from modern attacks; therefore we limit ourselves to adding that the orchestra was of surprisingly good ensemble for a first concert, the bassoons were very steady in the Trio of the Scherzo, and the symphony made a good climax to an interesting concert. Louis C. Elson.

MUSIC NOTES.

It is possible that we shall have some opportunities of comparing orchestras this season. The Philadelphia Symphony orchestra, under Mr. Fritz Scheel, is contemplating a Boston performance. If Mr. Paur would venture here with his Pittsburg orchestra we believe he would receive a cordial welcome.

BOSTON JOURNAL—S
OCTOBER 14, 1905.

The program for next week's Symphony concerts, the second in the series, is one of unusual interest. Not only will it bring to Boston an unknown pianist and an unknown work by the Bohemian composer Smetana, but it will contain two of the most attractive works of Richard Strauss and Tschaikowsky. The soloist will be Waldemar Lutschg, who on Friday afternoon will make his debut in America. Mr. Lutschg is a young man whose coming to this country was preceded by most favorable reports. He is a Russian by birth and parentage, having been born in St. Petersburg of Russian parents. His father was an artist of distinction and a teacher of painting. He himself showed at an early age a great talent for the piano, but he was thoroughly prepared for concert work before he made his debut in his native city in 1896. His success there was immediate and since that time he has been one of the most popular pianists in Russia. Two years later he made his first tour of Germany and attracted most favorable notice in Dresden, Berlin, Frankfort and other musical centres. His whole career has been spent on the continent. Smetana is a most familiar name to the patrons of the Symphony concerts, and the announcement that an unknown work from his hand is to be played has attracted much attention. It is the overture to his opera "Libussa," and so far as is known this has never been played in America. The opera itself is a characteristically national work. It gets its name from the principal character, an Amazon warrior who played an important role in the history of the Czechs. The other works are Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's charming symphony in F minor, No. 4.

Waldemar Lutschg,
Pianist, soloist at Symphony next week.

BOSTON TRAVELER
OCTOBER 14, 1905.

LUTSCHG NEXT SYMPHONY STAR

Brilliant Young Russian Pianist Will Delight Music Lovers at Next Week's Concerts.

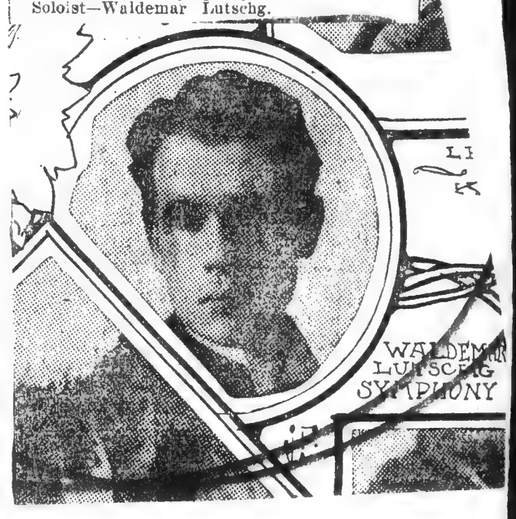
The programme for next week's Symphony concerts (Friday afternoon and Saturday evening), the second in the series, is one of unusual interest. Not only will it bring to Boston an unknown pianist and an unknown work by the Bohemian composer Smetana, but it will contain two of the most attractive works of Richard Strauss and Tschaikowsky.

The soloist will be Waldemar Lutschg, who on Friday afternoon will make his debut in America. Mr. Lutschg is a young Russian whose coming to this country was preceded by most favorable reports. He is a Russian by birth and parentage, having been born in St. Petersburg.

Smetana is a most familiar name to the patrons of the Symphony concerts, and the announcement that an unknown work from his hand is to be played has attracted much attention. It is the overture to his opera "Libussa," and so far as is known, this has never been played in Amerisca.

The programme in full is as follows:

Smetana.....Overture, "Libussa" (First Time.)
Liszt.Concerto for pianoforte, No. 2 in A major
Richard Strauss..."Death and Transfiguration"
Tschaikowsky....Symphony No. 4 in F minor
Soloist—Waldemar Lutschg.



BOSTON HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 111.
THURSDAY, OCT. 19, 1905.

Much is expected of Mr. Warnke, the new 'cellist of the Symphony quartet—he spelled his name Warncke in Munich—and Mr. Hess is already known as an excellent leader.

Mr. Warnke, who will play Dvorak's 'cello concerto at the third symphony concert, the 28th, was born at Wesselburen, Holstein, on Aug. 30, 1871, of a musical family. He began to study the piano when he was 6 and the 'cello when he was 10. His father, a violinist, taught him. He afterward studied at Hamburg and at Leipsic.

Associated with the orchestras at Baden-Baden and Frankfort, he went to Munich to be the chief 'cellist of the Kaim orchestra. There he was a member of a string quartet and a trio club. He is married and has one child.

[67]

6 Oct-21 1905

The Boston Journal

NEXT WEEK'S SYMPHONY.

Aside from a particularly attractive program, next week's public rehearsal and concert of the Symphony Orchestra gains unusual interest in the debut of Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Mr. Warnke has already made a most favorable impression on his fellows in the orchestra, and it is expected he will be quite equal of upholding the high standard of artistry which was set by his predecessors. He has chosen for the medium of his introduction Dvorak's very difficult violin concerto in B minor, op. 104. Two novelties, at least works new to the symphony concerts, appear on the program, Elgar's "Chanson du Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." They are early violin pieces of the popular English composer, which he has since instrumentated for a large orchestra. The symphony, especially in view of the marked revival of admiration for Liszt, is sure to attract notice. It is the "Faust Symphony," but Mr. Gericke will play only the instrumental parts, the three movements labeled "Faust," "Gretchen" and Mephistopheles," omitting the final chorus.

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Quartet will be given in Jordan Hall, Monday, Oct. 30, at 8 o'clock. For this opening event of the season, Professor Willy Hess, the leader of the quartet, has arranged a most attractive program. It will comprise three chamber-music works: Beethoven's quartet in C major, op. 59, No. 3; Glazounow's "Novellettes" for string quartet, and Brahms' sextet for strings in B flat major, op. 18. The assisting artists will be Messrs. Max Zach and Josef Keller of the Symphony Orchestra.

numbers which will be presented by the choir.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE.

Miss Olive Mead will be the soloist at the First Symphony concert in Cambridge, which will be given in Sanders Theater Thursday evening, Oct. 26. The program will be as follows: Goldmark, overture "In the Spring"; Saint-Saens, concerto for violin in B minor, No. 3; Dvorak, Symphonic Poem, "Die Waldtaube"; Beethoven, Symphony No. 2, in D major.

Heinrich Warnke,
First 'cello, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1905

STRAUSS, TSCHAIKOVSKY AND SMETANA

The Second Symphony Concert—More Plans for the New Season—Singers and Virtuosi

In Symphony Hall yesterday the Symphony Orchestra gave the second afternoon concert of the new season. Mr. Gericke conducted, and Waldemar Lütschg, a young Russian, who has lately settled in Chicago, was the pianist. He was making his first appearance in America and the audience applauded him warmly. Smetana's overture to his opera "Libussa" was the unfamiliar music of the concert, and it was played probably for the first time in America. The whole programme, which will be repeated tonight, was: Smetana, Overture to the opera "Libussa"; Liszt, Concerto No. 2, for piano; Richard Strauss, tone-poem, "Death and Transfiguration"; Tschaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

"Death and Transfiguration" is becoming Richard Strauss's "Tannhäuser." The full and true believers agree that it contains or foreshadows nearly all the peculiar qualities of his later tone-poems: yet regret that here and there in it he has preferred the ways of Liszt to his own. Meanwhile in Europe and in America conductors place it oftenest of all Strauss's music on their programmes, and their audiences seem to hear it more and more gladly. The wandering composer himself chooses none so frequently for his own conducting. The reasons are plain enough. Of all Strauss's tone-poems "Death and Transfiguration" is the most readily comprehensible and the most deeply moving. It does not matter at all whether the verses that accompany the music were written before or after it was composed. They do tell us sufficiently what was in Strauss's mind and fancy as he wrote, and that, as with any music that seeks expression first of all, we have a right and a duty to know.

With such guidance there is no obscuring or mistaking what the music would express. The details are trivial—the ticking of the clock in "the little necessitous chamber," the rattle in the throat of the dying idealist. They are the infatuations of programme-makers or the excesses of the composer. They are also the things upon which the detractors and the doubters love to dwell to the hiding of others that are infinitely more important. There is no mistaking the wan mood of a spent and expiring soul with which the music begins. There is no missing the tonal flashes—call them youth, childhood, "the lyric period," what you will—that brighten or soften it. There is no withstanding that tonal battle when ideals clash against all the world and Fate behind. And there is no resisting that mighty apotheosis when every instrumental voice cries at its fullest and richest: "Say not the struggle naught availeth."

"Death and Transfiguration" is not only readily comprehensible; it is deeply moving. It is time to have done with the mechanics of Strauss, even with the mechanics of his imagination, except in our private studies. Most of us know by this time that he can invent such uncanny rhythms as that which brings Death into the chamber. We know, also, that he can split a theme into harmonic splinters, as he does when Fate beats down the Ideal of the tone-poem. We know the wonders of his polyphony; the miracles of his instrumentation; the strangeness and the marvels of his harmonies—and dissonances. It is time for us to take all these things for granted, as he does. They are means, not ends. Does the music of "Death and Transfiguration" search our hearts and kindle our spirits? Does it lay bare the soul of the dying man, mood upon mood, emotion upon emotion? Does it wage once more in tones the eternal battle for an Ideal? Does it cry with all the myriad voices of the Apocalypse that the struggle does avail? It is not a question of whether music can or ought to express these things and a dozen others in the emotional contents of the tone-poem. Those are matters for academic debate. The real question is whether this particular man, Richard Strauss, has made this particular music, "Death and Transfiguration," accomplish these things. Can there be but one answer from any imaginative or open-minded hearer?

This music searches our hearts with its pathos, shakes us with its warfare, intoxicates us with the plangent splendor of its triumph. And it does all these things the more because it is music of our own time, lives and strivings. When Beethoven wrote, they were remaking the modern world. In the prime of Wagner and Liszt romance had been born again. And now we search our own hearts and the hearts of others and cannot find the things we seek. They splinter like Strauss's harmonies. They vanish like his tonalities. We shift, we strive, we fail, we despair. Yet we are all optimists at bottom. We do hear at our best moments the full-throated C-major glories of that apotheosis. It remained for Strauss to put the moods of his time into tones that speak as with our voices.

Tschaikovsky followed Strauss on Mr. Gericke's programme, and he, too—it is easy to hear someone saying—is of our time. He is by the dates in the biographical dictionary, and no Russan of today is much more than that. Beside Strauss he is still primitive in mind and mood, though he has learned our arts of expression, and sometimes bettered our teaching. Hear Fate, according to Tschaikovsky, stamping and stalking through the first movement of the fourth symphony—a giant god, earth-shaking, irresistible. Shall we strive against him; shall we do tonal battle for our ideals, even as does Strauss? Not at all, replies the Russian. "Moderato con anima in movemento di valse." Let us float away in waltz rhythm on our dreams and visions. We can have them for the asking. Let us sit in sad-sweet melancholy and muse of old, forgotten, far-off things, "andante in modo di canzona," with the plaintive oboe to lead the instrumental choir. Or let us play with our fancies and with our stringed instruments in persistent pizzicato. Finally, shall we riot through a wild debauch of folk-tune, and yet hear Fate still stamping and stalking above the din?

Primitive minds, primitive emotions. Or so they seemed after Strauss, with his acrid, intense modernity. In bitter contest, he had persuaded us, lies surcease from sorrow and unrest. And Tschaikovsky would take us for comfort into the rude tumults of a peasant holiday. No wonder it was hard to take his fourth movement for more than a rough-and-tumble of excited sound. Strauss's hero strives, falls hopes, fights again, conquers. Tschaikovsky's sits in the sun—maybe the brightness will hide him from that stalking Fate—and pipes sadly, moodily, or chases vagrant fancies up and down the strings. You hear Strauss's song of triumph, and Tschaikovsky answers in "movemento di valse." 'T is fate as a primitive mind sees it, as primitive emotions fear it, and shrink before it. The consolations are as primitive, be they plaintive or fanciful or tumultuous. Yet the "poetic basis" as the phrase goes, behind Strauss's and behind Tschaikovsky's music, are one and the same—the struggle against the world, and Fate behind, for ideals and the happiness they bring. But how different is the treatment. Strauss's is all passionate contest; Tschaikovsky's all pretty or tumultuous evasion. Emotionally Strauss's is the voice of a man. Tschaikovsky's, in comparison, of a child.

It was almost a pity after such taxing and intricate music that Smetana's overture did not end the concert instead of beginning it. Libussa was a national heroine of Bohemia who does not deeply affect us who are beyond its borders. Smetana put her into a sort of national opera and wrote a solemn overture for it still more in the vein that suits national festivals. Stately sonorities begin it. Ingratiating melody continues it. (Libussa was woman as well as queen.) Chivalrous accents end it. After Strauss and Tschaikovsky you recalled it like a calming memory. Of Mr. Lütschg and the playing of the orchestra it will be fairer to write after tonight's concert.

H. T. P.

/ / + / /

Coming Concerts

Some of the plans for the occasional concerts at Symphony Hall of visiting pianists, violinists, primi donne, and, this season, even orchestras, were completed this week, and they make a highly promising list. The orchestra is the New York Symphony, which Walter Damrosch is making a better and better band, and which he materially improved last spring, when he brought a group of players upon wind instruments from Paris and Brussels to join it. Mr. Damrosch himself will conduct at one of the two concerts that the orchestra will give here, and at that concert Joseffy will be the pianist. At the other Felix Weingartner, probably the most interesting and distinguished conductor in Europe today, will make his first appearance in Boston. Twice he has come to New York and made Beethoven's music sound there as it never sounded before. On his third visit to America in January he goes to other cities as well. For primi donne we are to hear Sembrich and Gadski in song recitals and Calvé and Eames with their companies in miscellaneous concerts. Sembrich's recital is now a part of our musical calendar, but Gadski has been heard here hitherto only in orchestral concerts and in opera. Yet she is accomplished in the singing of songs. Calvé's concert is comparatively near, on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11. Eames's falls a month later, on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 9. The pianists who are to give recitals now include Reisenaur, the sane and robust German who gave pleasure on his first visit two seasons ago; Bauer, who won his spurs in America here in Boston; and Pugno, the Parisian, who has already paid us one visit and who plays the classics with elegant discretion and the modern Frenchmen with fine sympathy. The violinists, in turn, who are to come to us, are Kubelik, who has matured rapidly in musical understanding and feeling since he first visited America and who still keeps his characteristic beauty of tone; Morteau, the French virtuoso, who used to be all youthful fire; and Marie Hall, the young English woman, who comes to America for the first time and with the warm praise of discriminating judges at home. Of late feeling has quickened and deepened her technical brilliancy. Gerardy, the excellent Belgian 'cellist, is also to play here in a recital with Kreisler. Finally, for a Sunday night or two, there is the perennial Sousa.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 6, PART II)

Three movements of Liszt's "Faust" symphony—"Faust," "Gretchen" and "Mephistopheles"—make the principal number of the third pair of symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. It is a pity to omit the choral finale which really carries the symphony to its climax and is as fine a piece of choral music as Liszt ever wrote. But since it is both choral and difficult there is no other way in the ordinary course of a concert orchestra. At least it will be good to hear the three instrumental movements. The severest detractors of Liszt will hardly deny that now and then there is a musical idea in them. The other orchestral numbers are Brahms's familiar "Academic Overture" and two trifles by Elgar that are new to our audiences. "A Song of the Night" and "A Song of the Morning" he calls them. He wrote them some years ago as concert pieces for violin, and more recently he has scored them richly and individually for orchestra. The soloist for the pair of concerts is Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cello, from Weingartner's band in Munich. We had a glimpse of his virtuosity and the quality of his tone in some passages in Liszt's and Strauss's music at the concerts of this week. Next Friday and Saturday he will put himself to the full and severe test of Dvorak's concerto.

The first of the concerts that our orchestra is to give this season at Cambridge takes place in Sanders Theatre on Thursday evening. Goldmark's "Spring" overture, Saint-Saëns's third concerto for violin, Dvorak's tone poem, "The Forest Dove" and Beethoven's second symphony make the programme—except the concerto that of our first pair of concerts. In the concerto, Olive Mead, the excellent violinist, will play the solo part.

The programme for the first of the Chamber concerts of the Symphony Quartet, in Jordan Hall on Oct. 30, comprises Beethoven's quartet in C-major (Op. 59, No. 3); the Russian, Glazounowv's "Novellettes" for string quartet, which are unfamiliar if not quite new; and Brahms's sextet for strings in B-flat major (Op. 19). In the sextet Mr. Zach will take the viola and Mr. Keller the double bass. The sale of seats for the series of concerts is now in progress at Symphony Hall.

BOSTON AMERICAN——

, OCTOBER 22, 1905.

AT SYMPHONY.

Great Crowd of Society Folk Applaud Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" at the Second Evening Concert

Society thronged to Symphony Hall last night to the second evening concert of the new season.

Mr. Gericke conducted with his usual skill, and Waldemar Lutschy, the young Russian pianist, making his first appearance in America, called forth warm applause.

"Death and Transfiguration," Strauss's great and deeply moving tone poem, held the audience as if under a spell. Through the music of this marvellous production is heard the soft, joyous tone of youth, and on and on through the ever-deepening life mystery—even to the laying bare of the soul of the dying.

Waging with wondrous tones the eternal battle for an ideal, the music carried the listeners from depths of trial and despair to triumph and ecstasy.

Following the profundity of Strauss came Tschaikovsky's symphony, with its dreamy rythm, like a tonal doctrine of non-resistance; light, evasive and restful, after the passionate contest in the Strauss story.

Smetana's overture to the opera "Libussa," which opened the concert, told enchantingly the story of Libussa, national heroine of Bohemia, who was woman as well as queen.

The overture rippled and sparkled with captivating melody and ended in a burst of splendor.

Prominent among those attending were: Mrs. John L. Gardner, accompanied by Mr. George Proctor and wearing a gown of black chiffon, with lace insertions, over black silk, and a large black and white lace hat with lavender plume; J. B. Lang and Miss Lang, the latter wearing a pastel green silk gown with bertha of old point lace; Mrs. Whitney, in lavender silk with white lace trimmings, and the Misses Whitney, both in light silks; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goourich, Mrs. Goodrich wearing black silk; Mrs. Guy Norman, Mrs. Oliver Ames, in a gown of black and white silk; Miss Blanche Bonnelle, Mrs. M. A. Bigelow, the Grews, Higginsons, Wendalls, Thayers, Searses and Phillips.

[68]

4 Oct-13-5

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Overture, to the Opera "Libussa" (First time) ..... Smetana

Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 2, in A major ..... Liszt

Waldemar Lutschg, soloist.

Tone Poem "Death and Transfiguration," op. 23 ..... Richard Strauss

Symphony No. 4, in F minor, op 36.Tchaikowsky

The programme was decidedly modern, yet it gave such strong contrasts of style that its modernity was by no means a dreary waste of dissonance, and there was no monotony. Smetana was the most classical of these moderns. The "Libussa" overture was simple in its thematic material and the composer used it as a Beethoven might have done. Strong contrasts were in its measures, the lofty fanfares of the beginning being an admirable foil to the delicate duet of oboe and flute which constituted the subordinate theme.

There was clear, clean-cut development, and the composer did not expand the form by any long coda; when he had said his say he ended his work, a proceeding which is by no means usual with the composer of the present.

The slavonic word "smetana" means "cream," and this Bohemian is worthy of his name. But we doubt whether the audience could fully appreciate the classicality of the overture on a single hearing, particularly as its lofty simplicity was at once effaced by the orchestral spices of Liszt.

Mr. Lutschg made a fine impression in the Liszt concerto. He bristles with technique as his name bristles with consonants. Rarely have we heard an unheralded young pianist with so clear a conception of what he wanted to do and such good equipment for doing it. A shallowness of tone in the heavy bass chords was the only shortcoming of the work. The A major concerto is not as great a work to conjure with as its peppery companion in E-flat, yet it is intrinsically the greater of the two Liszt concertos.

Its orchestral touches are very beautiful. We do not think that Liszt has yet received full credit for his orchestral power; even Tschaikowsky or Richard Strauss do not cause him to grow pale, and the work held its own easily against the two masterpieces that followed. The ensemble was perfect, and the honor of this must be divided between Mr. Gericke and Mr. Lutschg. While the pianist displayed an admirable surety, he did not discard a free interpretation at times; an occasional use of "tempo rubato" was eminently fitting and lent effect to some passages, but this gave added difficulty to the orchestral part. Every climax was well wrought up and at the end the pianist was recalled over and over again. He thoroughly deserved the tribute; we shall watch the career of this artist with much interest, for there is something of genius in his performance.

The rest of the concert was devoted to studies of Fate and Death from the German and Russian points of view, yet it was not sombre and it was certainly intensely interesting and exciting (as well as elevating) to its very last note. The chief event of the programme was the Strauss performance. The composition ("Death and Transfiguration") grows greater and greater with each repeated hearing; in this case familiarity breeds reverence. It is not so long ago that the witlings called it "Death and Damnation" and thought the whole matter horribly morbid and unhealthy.

Now it stands revealed as one of the greatest possible pictures of human struggle, a Greek tragedy in tones, but with an ending far nobler than the Hellenic pictures of Fate. In Tolstoi's "Death of Ivan Illitch" we find in words what Strauss has here told in tones, an accidental resemblance, but a close one, in the final calm, clear view of mortal dissolution. The work is not programme-music in the sense that Beethoven's Pastoral symphony or Mendelssohn's Hebrides overture are programme-music.

It pictures moods rather than events, and in this it is rather of the school of Beethoven's Heroic symphony or of Brahms' Tragic overture. At this concert we tried to listen without a thought of Ritter's descriptive poem or of the dozen little sick-room details which commentators have saddled upon the work—and the composition gained in consequence. An unavailing struggle, happy memories, a journey through the valley of Despair to a serene confronting of Death, that is programme enough for this mighty tone-poem.

We cannot sufficiently praise the performance. One could pick out individual excellences, the exquisite flute-playing and the delicate violin work at the point where memories of the past enter, but it is unnecessary; the whole orchestra played gloriously. And the reading of the work was one which must redound to Mr. Gericke's credit; it gained by the moderation with which it was performed; there was no attempt to inflate the emotions portrayed; everything was set forth powerfully and clearly, but never sensationally.

Even the chronic fault-finders must have been convinced that Mr. Gericke showed real greatness by his interpretation of this work. We were glad to see the audience pour out some of the resultant enthusiasm, at the end of the work, upon the poetic conductor.

Then came another view of Fate, this time "a la Russe." It was a bold, but wise, step to place the Tschaikowsky work after the Strauss composition. The grandeur of Sophocles does not abolish the vehemence of Sudermann or Ibsen; yet perhaps the juxtaposition was unfair to the Russian, who, although a genius in his way, has not the titanic power of the great German.

There were many fanfares at the beginning of the symphony, some of which reminded of the introduction of Schumann's B-flat symphony, seen through a glass (of Vodka) darkly. The second movement, in song-style, was delightfully tuneful and gave the oboe a fine chance to do masterly work in folk-song melody, which M. Longy performed most delicately. The subordinate theme which follows is not far removed from light-opera music. The return of the first melody, this time upon the bassoon, gave that instrument a chance to give an excellent "obbligato."

The third movement, a spicy little song-form with trio, was finely given by the strings, although, at the beginning of the trio, when the woodwind entered, there was an aberration of intonation (for once) between the two orchestral departments.

The finale is a peasant's orgie, more innocent than that one in which Berloiz caused Childe Harold to seek relief. Tschaikowsky desired to picture a relief from the scourgings of Fate by going direct to the healthy life of the people and watching their enjoyments. But we must place Strauss' clear-eyed facing of doom on a much higher plane than Berlioz's absinthe and brandy, or Tschaikowsky's village festival among the moujiks. We cannot find much more than a case of nervous depression and physical relief in the emotions of the symphony. Possibly a musical picture of a game of golf as an antidote would have been quite as successful a climax.

But we prefer not to take Tschaikowsky's psychology, as here displayed, too seriously. Let it suffice that the work had some splendid orchestration, was tuneful, enjoyable and intelligible. We need not always be studying great problems or suffering "Weltschmerz" when he listen to music.

Louis C. Elson.

MUSIC NOTES.

At Mr. Higginson's request the symphony concert of next Saturday will become a memorial service in honor of Mrs Charles Russell Lowell, and the programm will be changed to include Beethoven's Heroic symphony and Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony.

6

The Boston Journal

The first American appearance of Waldemar Lutschg, the Russian pianist, was the feature of special interest at the second Symphony concert, although the whole evening was one to be remembered. Mr. Lutschg is young and serious. He appears to take his art rather solemnly, which is, after all, not so bad a thing in a youthful player. It has given him a dignity and a maturity of style not always found in a man of his years; it has made him free from mannerisms and has given him little of the aplomb of the storming virtuoso. He goes to the other extreme, sometimes, and appears to be holding his own energy and virility in check.

Perhaps the Liszt A major concerto, which he chose for his debut, was partly responsible for his lack of effectiveness. It is a rather dull affair, in the main, and even such a great player as Joseffy, who gave it here last year, was unable to lend it vitality. But Mr. Lutschg showed he has ample technique, a well-rounded tone and an artistic temperament. His appearance as a recital pianist will be awaited with interest.

Smetana's Overture.

The novelty of the program was Smetana's overture to the opera "Libussa," a glorification of the traditional Bohemian heroine of Prague. The music is festal, with the pomp of brasses predominating, full of rich color, and altogether interesting, as is everything that the hapless Smetana wrote. The touch of romantic sincerity, the passionate patriotism and the flashes of almost supernatural beauty in his works make them irresistibly fascinating. The playing of the orchestra was noble in the highest degree.

Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" seems more classically clear and simple as time goes on. Did we once believed it weird and revolutionary? All that has passed, and it now appeals by the extreme beauty of the death-bed dreams of youth and by the sonorous splendor of the dawning of the life beyond. Here again the band covered itself with honors for its elegance of technique, although the effect of the work would have been still greater had Mr. Gericke "let things go" with a little more abandon. Strauss himself did it last season, and nothing of real finish was lost.

Tschaikowsky to Close.

Tschaikowsky's characteristic and wonderfully suggestive fourth symphony, with its haunting melancholy, its "gripping" themes and its turbulent grandeur, all magnificently played, made a fitting close to an exceptionally interesting concert. For this week, in place of the program announced in Saturday's Journal, Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Beethoven's "Eroica" and other works will be given, at the request of Maj. Higginson, as a memorial to Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell who died recently in New York.

SUNDAY HERALD

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 114.

SUNDAY, OCT. 22, 1905.

FATE AND DEATH PAINTED IN MUSIC

R. Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 Given at Second Concert.

TWO MASTERPIECES GRANDLY RENDERED

Smetana's Prelude to "Libussa"—Luetschg Plays First Time in America—Next in Memory of Mrs. Lowell.

The second Symphony concert was given last night in Symphony Hall. Mr. Gericke conducted. The programme was as follows:

Overture to "Libussa" (first time).....Smetana
Piano concerto in A major, No. 2.....Liszt
"Death and Transfiguration".....R. Strauss
Symphony No. 4.....Tschaikowsky

Smetana wrote his opera "Libussa," a glorification of Bohemia's Amazon princess, who finally was forced to take to herself a husband to aid her in governing her people, for a "future audience," as his biographer, Weilek, puts it. Smetana's serious opera, "Dalibor," met with little success when it was produced in 1868 and the composer, cut to the quick, took great pains with "Libussa," especially in the matter of musical declamation. The opera was completed in 1872 and the overture was played in the seventies, but the opera was not produced until 1881, when it took a prize and was chosen as the work for the dedication of a new opera house in Prague. The composer designed his work for festival occasions; he could not endure the thought of it becoming a hackneyed repertory piece; but his wish was not regarded even while he was alive.

The overture is built on three typical themes. The first typifies Libussa, the Amazon, "the pride and glory of the female sex, doing wise and manly deeds," as the old chronicler describes her. The second is the theme of Libussa, the woman with all the feminine charms and wiles that were characteristic of her weaker sisters. The third typifies Premysl, whom she called from the field as he was ploughing, and wedded; with whose assistance she founded a powerful dynasty.

The overture is music for a solemn festival, better suited for the theatre and for the purpose of establishing a mood than for performance, detached and without special significance, in a concert hall; yet as music without any particular association it is impressive—in fact, singularly impressive by reason of the simplicity and the earnest, sincerity that are peculiar to Smetana, qualities that are revealed fully in his superb symphonic poem, "Vysehrad." It is music that might well prepare for the reading of a stately epic poem or accompany the unveiling of a painting of some historic and mighty deed.

The works of Strauss and Tschaikowsky played at this concert are among the masterpieces of the two composers, and they were both inspired by thoughts of faith and of death. Each has a programme, an argument, for although the poem by Alexander Ritter was written after the music had been composed, the poem is published in the score as a commentary, and while no argument appears in Tschaikowsky's score, the Russian wrote to Mrs. von Meck, to whom the symphony is dedicated, an elaborate explanation of his purpose. It was bold of Mr. Gericke to put two works of this nature in juxtaposition. The experiment was engrossing and successful. Few compositions could come after Strauss' work and hold the attention of an audience. Tschaikowsky's symphony has been praised by some and feared by others as aggressively Russian; but it is not parochial in its national sentiment, rhythm and color; its theme is universal; it appeals to every thinking being who is perplexed or disheartened by the mystery of life.

Tschaikowsky and Brahms were constitutionally curious about death, and their curiosity, which was akin to despair, was often expressed in their music. Brahms was inclined to be peevish or surly in his expression of doleful dumps. He wrote in the spirit in which he died, for at the last he cried and turned his face to the wall, while Tschaikowsky simply said to his brother, who gave him assurance: "I think this is death; good-by, Modi," and just before his sweet soul left his tormenting body he looked toward heaven with an indescribable expression of unclouded consciousness, and there was a certain light in his eyes.

The Russian is heroic in his despair, and it should be remembered that he himself was not satisfied with the hopeless Lamentation that closes his sixth symphony and purposed to rewrite it. Brahms in his music—with the exception of his "Tragic" overture in which there is a touch of noble serenity—reminds one of poisoned Brachiano's speech in Webster's awful play:

"On pain of death, let no man name death to me;
It is a word infinitely terrible."

Brahms' attitude is not unlike that of the sorry hero of Zola's "Joie de Vivre," who was haunted and incapacitated for manly work by the mere thought of death.

In Strauss' tone-poem and in Tschaikowsky's symphony there is full and intense expression of man's rebellion against Fate. The sick man of Strauss reviews in the delirium of fever the [illegible] childhood and youth; once more he struggles for the things that men in this world set their hearts upon. To him in his death-sweat life is as mirage and shifting sand. And lo, the mighty transformation! Death, dreaded, fought against, first gives him deliverance from the world; at last he sees clearly and knows the realities. "Death hath this also: that it openeth the gate to good fame." The veriest clown is thus ennobled; he knows at last the secret of secrets, and the proudest that look on his set face may well envy him.

After the fever and stress and fury of Strauss' music comes the apotheosis of poor humanity. There is the suggestion in the solemn strains of the uprising and disappearing forever of life's mist and clouds, of the fleeing away of all doubts and fears as shadows. Man's life, then, after all, is not so weak and pitiful. The corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

And yet there have been hearers who listening to this music found in it only charnel house horrors and bedlam ravings.

In Tschaikowsky's music, man is portrayed as under the bludgeon of Fate. Of what avail is the fist shaken at the sky? How impotent the fiercest outburst! He may pursue happiness, but it is a chimera. He seeks consolation in past memories, in thought of old familiar faces that are gone forever, and in this melancholy is a certain joy. The scherzo might be compared to the "Sleep Chasings" of Walt Whitman, to the fantastical forms and incidents that flit through a dreamer's brain. At last the wretched one solves his problem before death brings relief; there is happiness to be found in observing and entering into the happiness of others. Thus may one live to the appointed end—yet the shadow of Fate will now and then darken the landscape and contract the horizon.

Is this too fantastical? But Tschaikowsky himself well said: "It is the characteristic feature of instrumental music that it does not allow analysis." One hearing the tone poem and the symphony may hear them thus; another may be interested first of all in the technical proficiency of the orchestra; and still another may wonder what it is all about and sigh for a symphony by Haydn, one "with no nonsense in it—good, straight, pretty and lively music," or possibly for the overture to "Rienzi." The hearer must meet the composer at least half way.

The orchestral performance, on the whole, was of the highest order of excellence. It was a pleasure to the ear and to the imagination. There were moments of inimitable solo display and in ensemble the orchestra was as a commanding and entrancing virtuoso. If the climax of "Death and Transfiguration" was finely worked out and overpowering in its grandeur, the whimsical, capricious scherzo of the symphony, with its spectral jesting, was given with an astounding command of nuances. Mr. Gericke conducted with much sympathy and fervor, as well as with an exquisite sense of proportion.

Mr. Waldemar Luetschg, pianist, played here for the first time in America. Born in St. Petersburg in 1877, he studied there and began the career of a virtuoso in 1896. He is now living in Chicago. He chose the second concert of Liszt, which was last played at these concerts by Mr. Joseffy. The concerto itself is not a work for sensational display; it does not by dash and glitter, by pomp and fury immediately compel the applause that rewards any apparently extraordinary feat of physical labor or relieves excited and tightly strung nerves. The pianist in order to make an effect with it must be a musician and a poet as well as a master of digital dexterity.

Mr. Luetschg made a very favorable impression. His tone is delightfully clear and crisp in bravura passages, liquid in cantabile, and his general technic is fluent. His reading was both musical and poetic, and there was the polished elegance in phrasing that is especially demanded in the interpretation of Liszt.

All in all, a brilliant and memorable concert.

At the special request of Mr. Henry L. Higginson the concert this week will be in memory of Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell. The programme will therefore be changed from that announced on the music page of this issue. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Beethoven's "Eroica" will be played, and the balance of the programme will be announced later.

The programme of the third Symphony rehearsal and concert, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, will include Brahams' Academic overture; Dvorak's concerto in B minor for 'cello, op. 104 (Mr. Warnke, 'cellist); Elgar's "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin" (first time at these concerts), and Liszt's "Faust" symphony without the choral finale. The pieces by Elgar (op. 15) have been played here at "Pop" concerts. They were originally pieces for violin and piano, and in his catalogue are sandwiched between 12 voluntaries for the organ and three songs. The voluntaries were sold to a publisher for £5. Elgar long afterward orchestrated the violin pieces, and they were produced in September, 1901. The last performance in Boston of the "Faust" symphony was by the Philadelphia orchestra, led by Mr. Scheel, at a Richard Strauss concert in Symphony Hall, March 5, 1904. The first performance here of the symphony as a whole was at a Philharmonic concert in 1880. The "Gretchen" movement was played here in 1870.

Mr. Warnke, who will make his first appearance in America as a soloist Saturday evening, was born in Wesselburen, Holstein, on August 30, 1871. His father was a violinist, and all his five brothers are musicians. When he was 6 years old he was put at the piano, and at 10 he began to study the 'cello, under the tuition of his father. Two years later he was sent to the conservatory in Hamburg, where he studied under Gowa, and it was there he first began to play in public. He afterward studied in Leipsic under Klengal, and he made his debut at the Gewandhaus. He has been associated with orchestras of Baden-Baden and Frankfort. Eight years ago Mr. Weingartner took him to Munich to be the chief 'cellist of the Kaim orchestra. While in Munich he was a member of a trio of which Weingartner was the pianist and Rettig, the concert master of the Kaim orchestra, the violinist. He was also a member of a quartet with a brother of Mr. Rudolph Krasselt as first violin. Mr. Warnke is married and has one child. He has never composed.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Quartet will be given in Jordan Hall on Monday evening, Oct. 30, at 8 o'clock. The programme will include Beethoven's quartet in C major, op. 59, No. 3; Glazounoff's "Novelletten," op. 15; Brahms' sextet in B flat major, op. 18, with the assistance of Messrs. Zach and J. Keller. The sale of season tickets is now going on at Symphony Hall.

[69]

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, OCT 22, 1905.

The Russian pianist, Waldemar Lutschg, made his first appearance in this country as soloist at last week's Symphony concerts, playing the Liszt A major concerto, a work in which brilliancy of performance is the chief requisite, although there are many cantabel passages of great beauty and some moments in which the deeper musicianly qualities may find expression. To Mr Lutschg the immense technical difficulties presented no obstacle for his finger work was accomplished with a skill and smoothness in execution that indicated a master of this art, and his shadings and variations in tempo were accomplished without marring the clarity of his tones, even in the most rapid fingering. Mr Lutschg evidently is a man of great power, judging from his physique; but he didn't abuse the instrument and his fortissimo, tempered to the capacity of the piano, was free from the jaggling accompainment so frequently heard when the pianist allows passion and temperament to overthrow discretion.

The arpeggio measures were played gracefully, the chord runs and the light cadenza passages were equally good in execution and the small sample of cantabel proved to be of an exquisite singing quality. The almost whimsical finale was set forth in tonal color of great brilliancy and the whole interpretation was a splendid example of pianistic art of a high quality. Mr Lutschg was received with great warmth.

The other program numbers were the overture from Smetana's opera, "Libussa"; the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," and the fourth, Tschaikowsky symphony. The Smetana excerpt is chiefly in festival form and has three chief themes typifying characters in the opera. The first is dignified, the second quiet and tender and the last heroic in suggestion. The opening fanfare, which is quite long, was magnificently played by the brass contingent of the orchestra; the strings and other instruments gave the second theme in an agreeably expressive vein, and the heroic mood of the closing part was set forth with due solemnity and pomp.

The massive and somber tone poem by Richard Strauss was played in an effective manner, of course, and doubtless many appreciated, and probably fewer really enjoyed, the numerous chaotic movements of the work. The characteristic symphony by Tschaikowsky was delightful from beginning to end. The varied instrumental combinations make it unusually attractive to the general public, and the peculiar phrases and themes sprinkled ad lib throughout the four movements enable the different "bands" to show what they can do—and they did it perfectly. The novel pizzicato scherzo deserves special mention, for here the strings were particularly efficient, the "picking" being crisp and in perfect unison. The vigorous fourth movement was sufficiently strenuous to suit the most exacting taste.

This week's program will introduce as soloist Mr Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra. He will play Dvorak's B minor concerto, for 'cello. The other numbers will be Brahms' "Academic Overture," two compositions by Elgar, first time at these concerts, and Liszt's "Faust Symphony."

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The first concert by the Boston Symphony quartet will be given in Jordan hall Monday evening, Oct 30. For this event Prof Willy Hess, the leader of the quartet, has arranged an attractive program. It will comprise three chamber-music works; Beethoven's quartet in C major, op 59, No. 3, Glazounow's "Novelettes," for string quartet, and Brahms' sextet for strings in B flat major, op 18. The assisting artists will be Messrs Max Zach and Josef Keller of the Symphony orchestra. The sale of season tickets is going on at Symphony hall.

The Boston Post
The Newspaper

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT

At the second Symphony concert last evening the soloist was Waldemar Lutschg, a young Russian pianist, now a resident of Chicago, and who made his first public appearance in America on this occasion. The programme of the evening included the following numbers:

Overture to the opera "Libussa".....Smetana
Concerto for piano No. 2, in A.....Liszt
Tone poem, "Death and the Transfiguration"
Symphony No. 4, op. 36.....Strauss
.....Tschaikowsky

Mr. Lutschg was born at St. Petersburg in 1877, being in his 29th year. Although in the outset of his career as a virtuoso, he showed artistic abilities of a high order. His technic is finished, his tone is pleasing, and his general conception of the Liszt concerto, while at times immature, was, in the main, one that made his performance enjoyable and interesting. Mr. Lutschg made an excellent impression on his first appearance, being enthusiastically applauded and several times recalled.

The overture to Smetana's opera, "Libussa," was played for the first time in the United States, so far as can be learned. It is built upon three themes from the opera, and is supposed to portray the varied development of the Princess Libussa, a heroine of a Bohemian legendary tale. The overture is effective scored and is in many ways pleasing, although its purport would be better understood if heard with the opera itself. For some reason it failed to impress the audience.

Richard Strauss' "Death and the Transfiguration" was played with marvellous tonal beauty and perfection of detail, but without that vigor in interpretation that was given to it when the composer directed the work a season or two ago with the Philadelphia orchestra.

The work is not so much of a puzzle as formerly, but doubtless will remain more or less incomprehensible to the average listener for many seasons. The Tschaikowsky symphony was carefully read and was received with great favor. It is not as familiar or as great as the two symphonies that follow, but it possesses all the melodic charms, ingenious treatment of themes and marvellous orchestral tone coloring that distinguish most of the works of this greatest of all Russian composers.

Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, will be the soloist at the rehearsal and concert of this coming week, in a concerto by Dvorak. This will be his first appearance.

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

The first concert by the Boston Symphony Quartet will be given in Jordan Hall on next Monday week, Oct. 30, at 8 o'clock. For this event Professor Willy Hess, the leader of the quartet, has arranged a most attractive programme. It will comprise three chamber-music works: Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3; Glazonow's "Novellettes" for string quartet, and Brahms' Sextet for strings, in B-flat major, Op. 18. The assisting artists will be Messrs. Max Zach and Josef Keller of the Symphony Orchestra.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Overture, to the Opera "Libussa" (First time) ..... Smetana
Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 2, in A major..... Liszt
Waldemar Lutschg, soloist.
Tone Poem, "Death and Transfiguration," op. 23 .....Richard Strauss
Symphony No. 4, in F minor, op 36.Tchaikowsky

The programme was decidedly modern, yet it gave such strong contrasts of style that its modernity was by no means a dreary waste of dissonance, and there was no monotony. Smetana was the most classical of these moderns. The "Libussa" overture was simple in its thematic material and the composer used it as a Beethoven might have done. Strong contrasts were in its measures, the lofty fanfares of the beginning being an admirable foil to the delicate duet of oboe and flute which constituted the subordinate theme.

Mr. Lutschg made a fine impression in the Liszt concerto. He bristles with technique as his name bristles with consonants. Rarely have we heard an unheralded young pianist with so clear a conception of what he wanted to do and such good equipment for doing it. A shallowness of tone in the heavy bass chords was the only shortcoming of the work. The A major concerto is not as great a work to conjure with as its peppery companion in E-flat, yet it is intrinsically the greater of the two Liszt concertos.

The rest of the concert was devoted to studies of Fate and Death from the German and Russian points of view, yet it was not sombre and it was certainly intensely interesting and exciting (as well as elevating) to its very last note. The chief event of the programme was the Strauss performance. The composition ("Death and Transfiguration") grows greater and greater with each repeated hearing; in this case familiarity breeds reverence. It is not so long ago that the witlings called it "Death and Damnation" and thought the whole matter horribly morbid and unhealthy.

Then came another view of Fate, this time "a la Russe." It was a bold, but wise, step to place the Tschaikowsky work after the Strauss composition. The grandeur of Sophocles does not abolish the vehemence of Sudermann or Ibsen; yet perhaps the juxtaposition was unfair to the Russian, who, although a genius in his way, has not the titanic power of the great German.

L. C. Elson.

MUSIC NOTES.

At Mr. Higginson's request the symphony concert of next Saturday will become a memorial service in honor of Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, and the programme will be changed to include Beethoven's Heroic symphony and Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony.

On Conductor Fritz Scheel's first programme for the Philadelphia Orchestra's concerts, in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on Friday afternoon, Oct. 27, and Saturday evening, Oct. 28, appears the Robert Schumann Symphony No. 2, in C Major; Jean Sibelius' "Swan of Tuonela;" a composition by A. Liadow, entitled "Baba-Jaga," and the Tschaikowsky Fantasie Overture, "Hamlet."

Emile Sauret, the assisting artist, will play the Dvorak Concerto in A Minor, and the Saint-Saens Rondo Capriccioso.

The season sale of the Philadelphia Orchestra for its home series is the largest in its history.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1905

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

AN EXCEPTIONAL SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mr. Higginson Honors the Memory of Mrs. Lowell—Next Week's Opera—Chamber Music Begins—Coming Concerts and Recitals—A Symposium About Bach—Singers and Virtuosi

It was an exceptional concert that the Symphony Orchestra gave yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, and with two numbers of its programme the reviewer in the ordinary practice of his calling has little, under the circumstances, to do. The concert began with Schubert's "unfinished" symphony. It ended with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony. Between the two came Dvorak's concerto for violoncello, in which Mr. Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the band, made his first appearance, apart from it. The concerto and the new virtuoso are the reviewer's concern, and we shall write of them at length on Monday. The two symphonies were not played, as they usually are, as so much absolute music for our pleasure. They were played at Mr. Higginson's request to recall and to honor the memory of Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell, who died in New York not many weeks ago. Behind, but still bright, were the memories of the two families whose names she bore, and, brightest of all, of those of both houses who gave their lives in the Civil War. Our finest piece of sculpture bears daily witness to one of them. Yesterday it fell to another art, in the particular name of sister or of wife, to honor them all.

There was the art of music at its fullest and finest in the concert. Who shall write new praise now of the two symphonies? But neither they nor the art that they incarnate were serving their usual purpose. Yesterday it was for the "Eroica" symphony, in all its glorified voices, to recall with the transfiguring power of beautiful sound a noble life lived well, a life that ran rich and full and that gave lavishly of its richness and fulness. It was for that same power of sound to recall a little of the stress and suffering in which some of that life was lived as it gave to the state those that it held dearest. It was most of all for it to publish a solemn grief and to exalt an illustrious memory. Such mourning and such proclamations were for it and for Beethoven. More intimate and more lyric were the passion and the beauty of Schubert's fragment. Here was the passionate longing that is music's peculiar voice, and passionate regret, and side by side with them the lyric beauty that soothes and softens. The "Eroica" symphony had been a stately mourning. The unfinished symphony was as the voice of personal griefs. Beethoven's music proclaimed a life well fought and an exalted memory. In Schubert's played the light of the ideal for which that life was lived and the light that will suffuse the memory of it for them that cherish it. In Schubert were the human cry and the human solace. A woman's memory asked his music. Beethoven's was for her, and both her houses, and all her heroes.

H. T. P.

There will be no Symphony concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 10 and 11. That week the orchestra will be playing in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

The Boston Post

NEW 'CELLO SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

The programme of the third Symphony concert, last evening (as a memorial to Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell), included the following numbers, Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, being the soloist:

Unfinished symphony in B minor.....Schubert
Concerto for 'cello, op. 104.....Dvorak
Symphony in E flat, "Heroic".....Beethoven

This was not the programme originally intended for performance, but was changed at the desire of Mr. Higginson, in memory of Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, whose death occurred recently. The orchestral numbers are old favorites and shining lights in the classic repertory, notwithstanding the fact that Beethoven's "Heroic" symphony is one of the longest of the nine written by him and among the longest by any composer living or dead. The unfinished symphony of Schubert is one that is eternally fresh in spirit, and in it there is melody enough to supply at least 50 composers of the present day.

The performance of both symphonies proved most enjoyable to the audience.

Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, made his initial public appearance in America as soloist on this occasion. He is about 35 years of age, born at Wesselburen, Germany, and for the past eight years has been first 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra at Munich. This season he joined the local Symphony Orchestra, succeeding Rudolf Krasselt.

Mr. Warnke played the B minor concerto by Dvorak, one of the works written by him while a resident of New York city, some 10 years ago. The work has been played in Boston, by Alwin Schroeder, who is said to have written much of the part of the solo instrument.

Mr. Warnke plays with only a moderate tone, which, however, is refined and pleasing, if not one that will haunt the memory of the listener. He is a mature artist of much temperament, and his interpretation of the concerto was authoritative and convincing. Mr. Warnke was warmly applauded and several times recalled.

A Wagner programme is offered for this coming week, with Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose as the soloists.

[70]

SUN
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 121.
SUNDAY, OCT. 29, 1905.

MUSIC IN MEMORY OF MRS. LOWELL

Third Symphony Concert Is Also Occasion of First Appearance as Soloist of Mr. Warnke.

LATTER IS 'CELLIST OF INDISPUTABLE PARTS

Dvorak Concerto, However, Not in Keeping with Ceremonial Spirit of Evening—"Eroica" and Schubert.

The third concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, was given last night in Symphony Hall. The programme was as follows:

Unfinished Symphony.....Schubert
Concerto for 'cello.....Dvorak
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".....Beethoven

The concert was in memory of Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, and the symphonies were chosen as appropriate to the occasion. A concert of this nature may well be free from critical and detailed discussion, even if the symphonies were not so familiar as to make any long consideration of them an almost impertinence, save as to questions arising from the manner of the performance. Yet it may not be out of place to say a few words about the character of memorial or commemorative music.

There is music that may be fitly played or sung because it was dear to the departed or because, associated with them it has some private and significant meaning. Even music that is not in itself serious or deeply emotional may thus be charged with sentiment and become, in connection with the memory strangely sacred. "For even that vulgar and tavern music," says Sir Thomas Browne, "which makes one man merry, another mad, strikes in me a deep fit of devotion and a profound contemplation of the first composer." A waltz or a humble ditty in which a beloved one found pleasure can never again be to those recalling this personal taste merely a tune for dancing or a street song.

There is music which by its nature is a lament and for general application—a funeral march or ode, written without specific thought of an individual.

Then there is the music composed deliberately in memory of a friend or of a public man. Much of this music is conventional, perfunctory. Yet there have been striking works written of late years. Tschaikowsky loved the man Nicholas Rubinstein, though he often stood in fear of his musical judgment or was irritated by it, and when he wrote the noble piano trio dedicated to the memory of Nicholas, he included a set of variations in which he endeavorded to portray certain characteristics of his friend, as, for instance, his passion for dancing, so that strains that might seem to the outsider incongruous in such a work by reason of their frivolity are to those acquainted with the purpose of the composer and the character of Rubinstein full of significance, and they form an indispensable part of the tribute. So Hans Koessler, in his Symphonic Variations "dedicated to the manes of Johannes Brahms," which have been played at these concerts, attempted to portray to the audience his first meeting with Brahms in Hungary, Brahms as a friend, Brahms as the friend of children, Brahms as a friend of nature and as a humorist, and the final variation is entitled "He has given an example for emulation," the example apparently being a double fugue. But Koessler is not a Tschaikowsky, and the latter was not guilty of the folly of a programme in his memorial tribute.

Surely, no one would deny the melancholy beauty of the first movement of Schubert's symphony, with its lyricism that is appealingly feminine, with its melancholy that is without touch of peevishness and without taint of pessimism; and the second movement has the serenity—that is, Schubert's romantic serenity—which is another thing than the classic serenity of Mozart, the quiet beauty and the restrained passion of a Grecian frieze.

But the "Eroica"? Had not Napoleon disappointed Beethoven's hope of him, the symphony would now be dedicated to him, as it was originally in the manuscript score. It is not necessary to go so far as Wagner went in his explanation of the symphony—as though there were need of any explanation, as though the word "Eroica" with the music were not enough! At the same time, a hearer, wondering at certain pages in the symphony, or perplexed, not being able, unaided, to see their connection with the dominating idea of the work, may be thankful for some of Wagner's hints.

The symphony is for humanity, not for an individual. The mighty dead march is for humanity, not alone for the restless man, who, dying at St. Helena, was borne years after and unknowing in triumph through the streets of Paris to his imposing tomb. Nor is the heroic life reserved only for warrior or statesman. It is not lived solely by man. There have been women whose lives spent in gracious ministration may justly be described as heroic, as there have been saints in humble villages whose names are not recorded in any hagiology. And it should be remembered that in the tribute to Mrs. Lowell there was, inevitably, through association, the thought of manly lives and manly deeds of heroism.

Mr. Heinrich Warnke made his first appearance in this country as a virtuoso. Before the change of programme was announced, he had chosen Dvorak's concerto as his piece for display. He is a 'cellist of indisputable parts, but there are very few concertos for any instrument that would have been in keeping with the ceremonial spirit of the evening, and Dvorak's work, which on the whole is interminably soulless, is not among them. There will be other opportunities of judging Mr. Warnke's artistry.

Boston Symphony Quartet Gives Its Opening Concert Tonight

(Photo by E. Chickering Co., Boston. First publication.)

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

Reading from the left—Otto Roth, Willy Hess, E. Ferir and H. Warncke.

The Boston Symphony Quartet, a group of string players from the great Symphony Orchestra, will give its first concert of the season at Jordan Hall this evening, the event also marking the first public appearance of the organization in its present personnel. The place of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist of last year, is now filled by Heinrich Warncke, the new 'cellist of the orchestra, and a player of high reputation in Europe. Otherwise the membership is the same, and Mr. Hess continues to be the leader, if a string quartet can be said to possess such a functionary.

Now that the Kneisel Quartet has packed up its instruments and departed for the confines of New York city, it is the intention of the much younger organization to strive to fill its place, if possible. The players are all men of the highest ability, and the spirit that animates them is one of both ambition and artistry. If the quartet can be kept intact for a number of years there is no doubt as to its ultimate distinction.

LOWELL MEMORIAL SYMPHONNY CONCERT

The third Symphony concert was a memorial to the late Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell, and the traditional laurel wreath was hung upon the organ. The music, for the most part very familiar, was also for the most part appropriate. Nothing could be finer and more in the true spirit of elegy than the lovely Schubert "Unfinished" symphony, with its gentle melancholy and its themes that carry one's imagination quite beyond the dross of earth. If ever a man's musical soul soared into the blue, it was when this "clumsy, short, round-shouldered, tallow-faced" genius wrote his immortal symphony in B minor. It is one of the most fascinating speculations in the realms of composition to wonder how Schubert would have completed his work. Egotistical fools have tried to write the missing movements, just as they have tried to write to an ending "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," of course without avail. There was but one Schubert, and this exquisite fragment is perhaps all the more haunting because of its incompleteness. It was played with all the perfection that Mr. Gericke and his men know so well how to lavish upon music of its sort.

Mr. Warncke, the new first 'cellist, and the soloist of the evening, had chosen Dvorak's B minor concerto for his debut, and it was allowed to remain in the memorial program, wisely enough, for it is quasi-elegiac in character. It is a thing of rare and simple beauty, full of compelling melody and the charm that the great Bohemian could command in the moments of his best and genuine inspiration. Now and then it is reminiscent of his "New World" symphony, but to those who love that fascinating work such resemblance is a great pleasure.

Mr. Warncke has the refined style and beautiful tone of a poet rather than a warrior of the 'cello. He is not a "large" player, nor, apparently, a man of strong emotionalism. But the finish and classic charm of his work was highly appealing, and the audience was quick to respond to its call.

The colossal "Eroica" Symphony, one of the most titanic outputs of Beethoven's genius, was played with superb power and a freedom somewhat unusual under Mr. Gericke. The first movement, especially, went with enormous fire, while the second, the funeral march, had a somber dignity that could scarcely be excelled. But the concert—in memoriam as it was—might well have ended just there. The lively scherzo was out of keeping and the evening had already been well filled.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 29, 1905.

THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Last week's Symphony program, which was in memory of the late Mrs Charles Russell Lowell, was unusually long, although only three composers were listed, Schubert, Dvorak and Beethoven. Mr Heinrich Warnke, the new first cellist of the orchestra, made his local debut as a soloist, playing Dvorak's B minor concerto. Schubert's unfinished B minor symphony and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony completed the selections. It is a well known fact that Mr Schroeder assisted Dvorak in writing the cello concerto, with the result that the work is considered one of the foremost as well as difficult compositions for that instrument produced in recent years. The first movement gives prominence to the orchestra, the solo instrument being heard mainly in some florid passages, simple themes of secondary importance as related to the orchestral body. The subsequent movements give greater scope to the soloist.

Mr Warnke's performance was masterly throughout, his whole interpretation showing him to be a cellist whose skill is of the highest order. His tone is pure and resonant, his bowing graceful, and there appeared to be no difficulties in fingering which he could not easily compass. The simpler themes in the first part were "sung" with fine sentiment and limpidity of tone, at times suggesting, in the upper register, the violin. In the second movement there was the requisite brilliancy of execution, the complex and elaborate development of the different phrases were beautifully worked out, clarity of tone not being sacrificed by rapid finger work and the chord passages were run smoothly in harmoniously. The triple themes in the finale, with the tempo constantly changing, form a somewhat unusual combination of "stumbling blocks," but the soloist and the orchestra managed them in perfect time, giving a splendid example to ensemble playing.

The concerto is of great length and taxes the performer severely, but Mr Warnke met all physical demands as thoroughly as he did the technical, and at the close of each movement the artist was heartily applauded.

The orchestra deserves the usual mead of praise for its contributions to the program. Mr Warnke would not have found a better or more sympathetic musical assistance. In the impressive Schubert work the interpretation was exquisite and the great "Evoica" symphony was played with splendid effect.

This week's program will be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's works. Mme Gadski and Mr Ellison Van Hoose will be the soloists. Next week the orchestra will make the first of its regular trips to other cities.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Schubert—Unfinished Symphony.
Dvorak—Violoncello Concerto in B minor.
Soloist, Mr. Heinrich Warnke.
Beethoven—Heroic Symphony.

The concert was a tribute from the founder of the orchestra to the memory of a great and good woman, one affiliated closely to Boston and connected with two of our worthiest families—Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell. A laurel wreath upon the stage emphasized the fact of the memorial character of the occasion. It might have been well also to have quoted the recent sketch of the heroine (from "The Outlook") in the programme book.

The Schubert symphony was written in the days when Music, Heavenly Maid, was young, and yet beautiful; before these latter times when she has grown ugly and careworn with worrying over many unsolvable problems. Dvorak once wrote that he considered the symphonies Schubert's greatest title to fame. Yet even in this charming work, or in the more powerful C-major symphony, we find a song-writer using the orchestra, just as in Beethoven's "Fidelio" we find an orchestral mind using the voice. Schubert thought vocally, and the fact is evident even in his chief instrumental works. This is not a defect, but it causes one to judge the work differently. Beethoven wins his effects by development of figures, Schubert by contrasting melodies. There was evident appreciation of the symphony on the part of the audience, and Mr. Gericke was twice recalled to bow to the long-continued applause.

The Dvorak concerto introduced our new violoncellist, Mr. Warnke. The chief interest of the concert centred upon this work because of this fact. The concerto itself was quite in line with the central idea of the concert, being subdued and melancholy, even elegiac in character. We do not consider the work a grateful one for a debut. The figure development of the first movement is carried to excess, and in the first movement the ingenuity of treatment does not quite offset the "damnable iteration."

The Adagio is the best part of the composition, and the contrasts of melancholy and fury were well-made. The duet work for flute, with the solo instrument, gave Mr. Maquarre an opportunity to shine. The finale began heroically with hints at military glory; but with a Bohemian the paths of glory lead but into minor; your true Czech is as fond of brooding as he is of Goulasch.

The dialogue between the oboe and the cello in the Adagio ought also to be chronicled, although the symphony gave M. Longy more opportunities. Two soliloquies for the violoncello, in the two last movements, were especially expressive.

It was a difficult occasion for Mr. Warnke. We have always had great masters of his instrument in our orchestra even from the days of Fritz Giese; even our second cellists have often been of very high rank. To come after such a procession as Giese, Hekking, Schulz, Schroeder and Krasselt, is a trying ordeal. Then, too, the concerto has a long orchestral exposition before a solo note is heard; during this the artist can think upon his sins and get up a fine attack of nervousness. Yet, when Mr. Warnke began we were at once impressed with his purity of style. His intonation is impeccable, and in the Adagio he showed that he is a master of expressive, sympathetic tone. His surety in double-stopping and in high position work is commendable. But he seems not to have the breadth of some of his predecessors nor their fire. He is likely to shine more as a painter in miniature, as a chamber-musician. Of that the reviewer may be able to judge tonight at the concert of the Boston Symphony Quartette. Mr. Warnke was very warmly received, and recalled three times at the end of his performance.

Then came Beethoven's "Heroic" symphony. Mr. Gericke read the first movement with an abundance of spirit, but for once he omitted the repeat of the exposition. At the end of the development, where the horn enters against the violins with the tonic harmony against the dominant, the conductor represses the violins and augments the power of the horn, so that the war of harmonies is not perceived. This is polishing a rough point unnecessarily.

Yet Beethoven's hero seems a very quiet gentleman compared with Strauss's combative party, whom we have met in "Heldenleben." It is a pity that Carlyle could not have written an appendix to his great essay, and treated of hero-worship in music. He would have descanted liberally upon the idea of lauding ones-self as Strauss has done, and would surely have made a chapter on "Every man his own hero!" Beethoven is guiltless of any such fantastic proceeding.

In that great funeral march which Coleridge called "a funeral in purple," in which Beethoven buries his hopes of liberty and Napoleon together, the oboe playing was beautiful, full of grief in the first theme and of consolation in the Trio, and that great orchestral sob at the close was remarkably impressive. In the Scherzo, that movement which has evoked more comments than Shakespeare's "Duedame" ("As You Like It") the horns did good work. Once their part in this was considered as difficult as any horn passage in existence.

The finale was rather roughly played for our symphony orchestra, but it was a great reading as a whole for which credit is due Mr. Gericke. The Heroic symphony does not wear quite as well as some of the other Beethoven symphonies, possibly because in just this field of combat and strife the modern school has found its best mood, and with increased forces and much greater orchestral virtuosity gives more powerfully dramatic tone-pictures than ever were dreamed of in 1804.

Louis C. Elson.

...ERALD
...N. J.
5 ...05

LACK OF MUSIC HALLS.

Manager of Boston Symphony Orchestra Comments on Recent Tour.

The following from the Springfield Homestead is of interest to Rochester, especially as the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently appeared in this city:

"Returning from a week's tour in which Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester were visited, the Boston Symphony Orchestra passed through Springfield last Sunday in a special train, bound for the Hub, where the home town season was inaugurated yesterday afternoon. It was the first time in the history of the orchestra that it invaded Canada.

"While the train was in Springfield union station, Frederick L. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, who was in charge of the tour, talked interestingly to a Homestead man of the trip and the lessons he had drawn from it. Mr. Comee dwelt with particular emphasis on the lack of halls in this country and Canada that are suitable for concert purposes. He said:

"'One of the most significant lessons learned by none too pleasant experiences was the lamentable lack in nearly every city of a suitable, and one may say, decent audience room. In Toronto, thanks to the general liberality of its donor and founder, the Massey Music Hall was in every way worthy of the best musical organizations in this country, and this commendable fact has been amply recognized by Theodore Thomas, Victor Herbert, Walter Damrosch, Emil Paur and other conductors of the leading orchestras of this country; to their approval now can be added William Gericke, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"'In Rochester while there was no hall for concert purposes only, the Baker Theater, with a stage setting suited to the demands of the orchestra, afforded an adequate substitute. In Montreal the orchestra was compelled to play in the Victoria Rink, used in the summer for an automobile garage and as an unpropitious clerk of the weather saw fit to send a sudden and very severe shower during the concert the noise of the rain on the roof of the ring sadly interfered with the effectiveness of the performance, notably the subdued passages. The asphalt pavement covered with sawdust rather suggested a circus or horse show rather than a concert by one of the leading musical organizations of this country.

"'In Buffalo, YConvention Hall, very much too spacious for satisfactory acoustics, was the only available place. In both Detroit and Cleveland the orchestra was forced as a last resort to play in armories used throughout the week for drill purposes and other functions of the local military companies.

"'It must be distinctly understood that the cities included in the trip are not selected solely to be criticised, but it is a deplorable fact that nearly every prominent city in this country is without a hall adequate for concert performances. Even New York has but one—Carnegie hall; Boston has its Symphony hall; Baltimore, the Lyric; Chicago, the Auditorium and the new Thomas hall built chiefly because the Auditorium was too large; Cincinnati has its Music Hall and New Haven its beautiful Woolsey hall at Yale University.

"'Quite likely a few other cities may boast of a hall, at once a credit and comfort to its music lovers, but it is safe to say that only a very limited number have been overlooked. In Brooklyn the burning of the Academy of Music a few years ago has forced every musical organization of note into the Baptist Temple, which, while it was a lucky find, and as the saying goes, much better than nothing, falls far short of the proper place for good music. Washington has no satisfactory hall and the disinclination of theater managers to break a week for a single night for an orchestra necessitates afternoon performances as against a much more satisfactory evening concert. Philadelphia has no adquate hall for large organizations, but fortunately the Academy of Music, with a proper stage setting, affords one of the most satisfactory audience rooms in this country.

"'While it is manifestly impossible and perhaps inexpedient to control the avenues through which multi-millionaires shall direct their gifts to the public, we still venture the opinion that to alternate a music hall with a library, a church or a hospital, might result in a more extended satisfaction to the community at large than generous bequests always along the same line.'"

NEWS
...om
...dress TORONTO, CAN.
OCT 7- 1905
...te

A correspondent has taken exception to the opinion expressed by The News that Wilhelm Gericke has the proper temperament for his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. According to his view, Mr. Gericke is a scholar rather than a poet, and his readings lack that emotional force which is such a striking quality of Emil Paur.

Without quarreling for a moment with the opinion of this gentleman, it may be desirable to set forth in some detail the reason for "the faith which is in us," and which was expressed somewhat hastily, and perhaps vaguely, in the regular criticism, owing to the hurry of the daily round.

First, then, it must be taken for granted that technically the Boston Symphony Orchestra surpasses any other organization of similar type in America. This is generally admitted, even by such rivals as the Chicago Orchestra and the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

In a sense, therefore, the ideals of orchestral music — still technically speaking—so far as America is concerned, must be fixed by this incomparable artistic body. It, therefore, has the character of a conservatory (in its literal sense) of orchestral music. For that reason it must endeavor, as far as possible to preserve the connection between the composer and the orchestra. There are traditions of more or less importance concerning every classic work, and while it would be extremeism to accept every one of these, bad or good, it may be said that in the main they are worthy traditions. To guard them, the conductor must be an artistic conservative, or perhaps, taking a term from politics, a liberal-conservative. This describes Wilhelm Gericke to a nicety, and inasmuch as he is now serving a second term of years with the Orchestra, it may be assumed that Col. Higginson, the guarantor, finds his temperament ideal for the carrying out of a high art propaganda.

The whole question depends on whether or not the composer of a piece of music should be regarded as a finality. In other words, whether the music should carry its own message or whether it should be simply a text for the expression of the performer's message. The ultra-romanticists incline to give the performer every liberty, while the ultra-classicists desire to preserve unimpaired the splendor of the composer's name and the purity of his musical expression.

For example, Paderewski gives a rendering of the slow movement of the Appassionata Sonata of Beethoven that is so "soulful" as to be Chopinesque. What Beethoven would have thought of such lackadaisical treatment one shudders to imagine.

It may be taken as a general rule that the performer who best realizes the intention of a composer and sinks his own egotism in the glory of the original creator is the purest artist.

Put a thorough emotionalist like Paderewski over the Boston Symphony Orchestra and pleasing "effects" would multiplied, to the delight of the olate-eating matinee girl and other soulful people. Wagner says musical "effect" is "a working without a cause." To produce the highest music, therefore, the performers must remember that the composer is the first cause, and everything must be developed therefrom.

Emil Paur may be regarded as a romantic classicist, a man who reverences the concepts of the composer, but at the same time infuses into the music a certain modicum of his poetic personality. This is the happy mean between the mere time-beater without emotion and the emotionalist without time—"the tempo rubato-ite." For this reaon Paur is beloved of all music-lovers. Gericke can never be more than an object of highest admiration.

Gazette
...REAL, CAN.
...ss
OCT 14 1905

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY VISIT.

"Lovers of orchestral music are indebted to Manager Houston of Massey Hall for the rich treat they enjoyed at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Tuesday," writes the Toronto Globe Critic. "All previous attemps to bring the organization here had failed, owing to the almost prohibitive guarantee that was asked. This season, however, the manager of the orchestra, Mr. Ellis, agreed, on condition that a concert was also arranged for in Montreal. Mr. Houston, who for many years had endeavored to bring the orchestra to Toronto, consented to guarantee personally the Montreal engagement, and to his enterprise the public owe the first appearance of the famous orchestra. The Montreal concert, I am informed, resulted in a loss [illegible] to know that [illegible] than paid

[72]

From MUSIOAL LEADER
...CHICAGO, ILL.
Address
Date OCT 5 - 1905

The stand has often been taken by the writer that the musical atmosphere of a country can never be created by a few large cities, even though they be great as New York, Chicago and Boston. The growth of an art in a country is quite as dependent upon the hamlet as upon the metropolis, and in that particular it may be said that America is in its infancy. Whether the people of our smaller cities are willing to do their share in the matter or not, we will in a certain sense be able to find out during the coming season, because never in the history of music have the enterprises been attempted that will be brought forward this year. It is not necessary at this late date to make the claim that the greatest educator is the orchestra; and, of course, the smaller city cannot have that which is best and greatest in this particular line. But when we realize the number of great orchestras and conductors, who will go on tour this season, we may readily see that a new era is dawning in the musical life of the country, and it is one which can only build for the greatest results in the future.

Whether the cities to be visited by the several magnificent orchestras which are going out, are able to realize what their support will mean to themselves and to their sections of the country is questionable, and it will take very skillful engineering, and a large part of the word "engineering" in this case means advertising to make a success. If we take it back to its inception, we will find that advertising itself is what has made orchestral tours possible. During all those years, when Leopold Damrosch, Theodore Thomas, Anton Seidl, Emil Paur, down to the present ceaseless labors of Gericke, the younger Damroschs and others, worked for the cause of music in this country, great as were their achievements, these were never sensationally heralded to the world. All that could be hoped for was enough publicity to give them metropolitan audiences. But with the advent of the foreign conductors the orchestra took on new dimensions, new phases and new aims. Every city in the United States was alive to the fact that New York could afford to receive the greatest conductors living, and that in a sense their musicianship and the organ which they handled was the actual basis upon which all music was built.

Then general interest was awakened to such an extent that visitors to New York were sufficiently interested to give up a night at the theater for the purpose of seeing (mind you, I do not say hearing) this or that "great foreign conductor." Nor was that the only feature brought about by the foreigner—he made it compulsory for all other orchestras to make violent strides, and in so far as the world at large had become interested in the doings of the foreigners, other orchestras must of necessity shine in the lime-light too. This may be unpalatable for men who have worked as seriously and as admirably as have some of our own important conductors; but it was a matter that did not lie with them. It lay with the news interest per se and as fostered, first, by the press of New York, and then by the press throughout the entire United States.

Of course, the prospects look very bright, but the question obtrudes itself disagreeably, whether those people who can afford to support great orchestral concerts in the smaller cities, will see the importance of doing so for the culture of their own children, and for the general benefit to their community at large. It seems to me that the opportunity now presents itself to form musical clubs of a new order, which would be allied to one another in such a way as to make a chain of cities, bound together in the support of a series of orchestral concerts. In addition to the financial side such clubs might provide for explanatory lectures on the programmes to be presented and a new interest created in the moribund musical club of today. This suggestion will answer some of the innumerable questions that are put to me constantly, as to suggestions for altering the modus operandi which the clubs have been pursuing year in year out.

From MUSICAL LEADER
...CHICAGO, ILL.
Address
Date OCT 12 1905

CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, O., October 7, 1905.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concert season opened here Friday night with a concert by The Boston Symphony Orchestra; Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, and Willy Hess, soloist. The programme given was as follows: Mendelssohn's overture, "Sea calm and Prosperous Voyage;" Bach's Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte, in Rondo Form. (String Orchestra). Max Bruch's Concerto for Violin in G minor. Wagner's "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," and Beethoven's Symphony, Op. 67, No. 5, in C minor. The Bach number, and the Bruch Concerto were especially well received by the large and brilliant audience present. This was the first time Clevelanders have had the pleasure of hearing Willy Hess, the violinist, in their own city, and his masterly playing of this beautiful concerto was a musical treat long to be remembered by those present. In a concert by this famous orchestra, Cleveland has opened her musical season in excellent style, and now let the good work continue.

LACK OF MUSIC HALLS.

Manager of Boston Symphony Orchestra Comments on Recent Tour.

The following from the Springfield Homestead is of interest to Rochester, especially as the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently appeared in this city:

"Returning from a week's tour in which Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland and Rochester were visited, the Boston Symphony Orchestra passed through Springfield last Sunday in a special train, bound for the Hub, where the home town season was inaugurated yesterday afternoon. It was the first time in the history of the orchestra that it invaded Canada.

"While the train was in Springfield union station, Frederick L. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, who was in charge of the tour, talked interlestingly to a Homestead man of the trip and the lessons he had drawn from it. Mr. Comee dwelt with particular emphasis on the lack of halls in this country and Canada that are suitable for concert purposes. He said:

"'One of the most significant lessons learned by none too pleasant experiences was the lamentable lack in nearly every city of a suitable, and one may say, decent audience room. In Toronto, thanks to the general liberality of its donor and founder, the Massey Music Hall was in every way worthy of the best musical organizations in this country, and this commendable fact has been amply recognized by Theodore Thomas, Victor Herbert, Walter Damrosch, Emil Paur and other conductors of the leading orchestras of this country; to their approval now can be added William Gericke, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"'In Rochester while there was no hall for concert purposes only, the Baker Theater, with a stage setting suited to the demands of the orchestra, afforded an adequate substitute. In Montreal the orchestra was compelled to play in the Victoria Rink, used in the summer for an automobile garage and as an unpropitious clerk of the weather saw fit to send a sudden and very severe shower during the concert the noise of the rain on the roof of the ring sadly interfered with the effectiveness of the performance, notably the subdued passages. The asphalt pavement covered with sawdust rather suggested a circus or horse show rather than a concert by one of the leading musical organizations of this country.

"'In Buffalo, YConvention Hall, very much too spacious for satisfactory acoustics, was the only available place. In both Detroit and Cleveland the orchestra was forced as a last resort to play in armories used throughout the week for drill purposes and other functions of the local military companies.

"'It must be distinctly understood that the cities included in the trip are not selected solely to be criticised, but it is a deplorable fact that nearly every prominent city in this country is without a hall adequate for concert performances. Even New York has but one—Carnegie hall; Boston has its Symphony hall; Baltimore, the Lyric; Chicago, the Auditorium and the new Thomas hall built chiefly because the Auditorium was too large; Cincinnati has its Music Hall and New Haven its beautiful Woolsey hall at Yale University.

"'Quite likely a few other cities may boast of a hall, at once a credit and comfort to its music lovers, but it is safe to say that only a very limited number have been overlooked. In Brooklyn the burning of the Academy of Music a few years ago has forced every musical organization of note into the Baptist Temple, which, while it was a lucky find, and as the saying goes, much better than nothing, falls far short of the proper place for good music. Washington has no satisfactory hall and the disinclination of theater managers to break a week for a single night for an orchestra necessitates afternoon performances as against a much more satisfactory evening concert. Philadelphia has no adquate hall for large organizations, but fortunately the Academy of Music, with a proper stage setting, affords one of the most satisfactory audience rooms in this country.

"'While it is manifestly impossible and perhaps inexpedient to control the avenues through which multi-millionaires shall direct their gifts to the public, we still venture the opinion that to alternate a music hall with a library, a church or a hospital, might result in a more extended satisfaction to the community at large than generous bequests always along the same line.'"

NEWS
om
dress OCT 7 - 1905
te

A correspondent has taken exception to the opinion expressed by The News that Wilhelm Gericke has the proper temperament for his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. According to his view, Mr. Gericke is a scholar rather than a poet, and his readings lack that emotional force which is such a striking quality of Emil Paur.

Without quarreling for a moment with the opinion of this gentleman, it may be desirable to set forth in some detail the reason for "the faith which is in us," and which was expressed somewhat hastily, and perhaps vaguely, in the regular criticism, owing to the hurry of the daily round.

First, then, it must be taken for granted that technically the Boston Symphony Orchestra surpasses any other organization of similar type in America. This is generally admitted, even by such rivals as the Chicago Orchestra and the Pittsburgh Orchestra.

In a sense, therefore, the ideals of orchestral music — still technically speaking—so far as America is concerned, must be fixed by this incomparable artistic body. It, therefore, has the character of a conservatory (in its literal sense) of orchestral music. For that reason it must endeavor, as far as possible to preserve the connection between the composer and the orchestra. There are traditions of more or less importance concerning every classic work, and while it would be extremeism to accept every one of these, bad or good, it may be said that in the main they are worthy traditions. To guard them, the conductor must be an artistic conservative, or perhaps, taking a term from politics, a liberal-conservative. This describes Wilhelm Gericke to a nicety, and inasmuch as he is now serving a second term of years with the Orchestra, it may be assumed that Col. Higginson, the guarantor, finds his temperament ideal for the carrying out of a high art propaganda.

The whole question depends on whether or not the composer of a piece of music should be regarded as a finality. In other words, whether the music should carry its own message or whether it should be simply a text for the expression of the performer's message. The ultra-romanticists incline to give the performer every liberty, while the ultra-classicists desire to preserve unimpaired the splendor of the composer's name and the purity of his musical expression.

For example, Paderewski gives a rendering of the slow movement of the Appassionata Sonata of Beethoven that is so "soulful" as to be Chopinesque. What Beethoven would have thought of such lackadaisical treatment one shudders to imagine.

It may be taken as a general rule that the performer who best realizes the intention of a composer and sinks his own egotism in the glory of the original creator is the purest artist.

Put a thorough emotionalist like Paderewski over the Boston Symphony Orchestra and pleasing "effects" would multiplied, to the delight of the plate-eating matinee girl and other soulful people. Wagner says musical "effect" is "a working without a cause." To produce the highest music, therefore, the performers must remember that the composer is the first cause, and everything must be developed therefrom.

Emil Paur may be regarded as a romantic classicist, a man who reverences the concepts of the composer, but at the same time infuses into the music a certain modicum of his poetic personality. This is the happy mean between the mere time-beater without emotion and the emotionalist without time—"the tempo rubato-ite." For this reaon Paur is beloved of all music-lovers. Gericke can never be more than an object of highest admiration.

* * *

Gazette
ss

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY VISIT.

"Lovers of orchestral music are indebted to Manager Houston of Massey Hall for the rich treat they enjoyed at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Tuesday," writes the Toronto Globe Critic. "All previous attemps to bring the organization here had failed, owing to the almost prohibitive guarantee that was asked. This season, however, the manager of the orchestra, Mr. Ellis, agreed, on condition that a concert was also arranged for in Montreal. Mr. Houston, who for many years had endeavored to bring the orchestra to Toronto, consented to guarantee personally the Montreal engagement, and to his enterprise the public owe the first appearance of the famous orchestra. The Montreal concert, I am informed, resulted in a loss, but it is satisfactory to know that the one in Toronto more than paid expenses."

[72]

From MUSICAL LEADER
Address
Date

The stand has often been taken by the writer that the musical atmosphere of a country can never be created by a few large cities, even though they be great as New York, Chicago and Boston. The growth of an art in a country is quite as dependent upon the hamlet as upon the metropolis, and in that particular it may be said that America is in its infancy. Whether the people of our smaller cities are willing to do their share in the matter or not, we will in a certain sense be able to find out during the coming season, because never in the history of music have the enterprises been attempted that will be brought forward this year. It is not necessary at this late date to make the claim that the greatest educator is the orchestra; and, of course, the smaller city cannot have that which is best and greatest in this particular line. But when we realize the number of great orchestras and conductors, who will go on tour this season, we may readily see that a new era is dawning in the musical life of the country, and it is one which can only build for the greatest results in the future.

Whether the cities to be visited by the several magnificent orchestras which are going out, are able to realize what their support will mean to themselves and to their sections of the country is questionable, and it will take very skillful engineering, and a large part of the word "engineering" in this case means advertising to make a success. If we take it back to its inception, we will find that advertising itself is what has made orchestral tours possible. During all those years, when Leopold Damrosch, Theodore Thomas, Anton Seidl, Emil Paur, down to the present ceaseless labors of Gericke, the younger Damrosches and others, worked for the cause of music in this country, great as were their achievements, these were never sensationally heralded to the world. All that could be hoped for was enough publicity to give them metropolitan audiences. But with the advent of the foreign conductors the orchestra took on new dimensions, new phases and new aims. Every city in the United States was alive to the fact that New York could afford to receive the greatest conductors living, and that in a sense their musicianship and the organ which they handled was the actual basis upon which all music was built.

Then general interest was awakened to such an extent that visitors to New York were sufficiently interested to give up a night at the theater for the purpose of seeing (mind you, I do not say hearing) this or that "great foreign conductor." Nor was that the only feature brought about by the foreigner—he made it compulsory for all other orchestras to make violent strides, and in so far as the world at large had become interested in the doings of the foreigners, other orchestras must of necessity shine in the lime-light too. This may be unpalatable for men who have worked as seriously and as admirably as have some of our own important conductors; but it was a matter that did not lie with them. It lay with the news interest per se and as fostered, first, by the press of New York, and then by the press throughout the entire United States.

Of course, the prospects look very bright, but the question obtrudes itself disagreeably, whether those people who can afford to support great orchestral concerts in the smaller cities, will see the importance of doing so for the culture of their own children, and for the general benefit to their community at large. It seems to me that the opportunity now presents itself to form musical clubs of a new order, which would be allied to one another in such a way as to make a chain of cities, bound together in the support of a series of orchestral concerts. In addition to the financial side such clubs might provide for explanatory lectures on the programmes to be presented and a new interest created in the moribund musical club of today. This suggestion will answer some of the innumerable questions that are put to me constantly, as to suggestions for altering the modus operandi which the clubs have been pursuing year in year out.

* * *

From LEADER
Address
Date

CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, O., October 7, 1905.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The concert season opened here Friday night with a concert by The Boston Symphony Orchestra; Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, and Willy Hess, soloist. The programme given was as follows: Mendelssohn's overture, "Sea calm and Prosperous Voyage;" Bach's Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte, in Rondo Form. (String Orchestra). Max Bruch's Concerto for Violin in G minor. Wagner's "Waldweben" from "Siegfried," and Beethoven's Symphony, Op. 67, No. 5, in C minor. The Bach number, and the Bruch Concerto were especially well received by the large and brilliant audience present. This was the first time Clevelanders have had the pleasure of hearing Willy Hess, the violinist, in their own city, and his masterly playing of this beautiful concerto was a musical treat long to be remembered by those present. In a concert by this famous orchestra, Cleveland has opened her musical season in excellent style, and now let the good work continue.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TOWN TOPICS
From CLEVELAND, OHIO
Address
Date OCT 14 1905

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

A FITTING prelude to an auspicous season of music was unquestionably the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Grays' Armory last Friday evening. It was a musical feast in which the musician reveled, and the music lover found complete enjoyment. Some exceptions could have been taken at different things, such as the length and arrangement of the program, and the lack at times of musical enthusiasm among the musicians of the orchestra, but the tout ensemble was perfect. The program, although a beautiful one, was not exactly arranged to please the musician, and certainly not the laity. The Beethoven Symphony would have been used to better advantage if it had been placed first on the program. Wagner's "Waldweben" would have made an ideal climax to a musical feast such as we have seldom, if ever, heard locally. Gericke has been spoken of as a scholarly and not an emotional conductor. He is emotional, there is no doubt about that, for if he were not he would be unable to give as beautiful a rendition as he did of the Bach number and Wagner's "Waldweben," but withal he is like the magician, quiet, easy, clever and suave in his movements. It is a well known fact that Gericke is a stern disciplinarian, and his conducting is as decisive as if he had spoken. His reading of the scores was most idealistic. Willy Hess, the concertmeister and violin soloist, is a talented player. He is not an Ysaye, but, nevertheless, he is an excellent artist. His tone is broad, and as to technic he stands well up in the ranks of the foremost players. His support was ideal, and why should it not be? Gericke has the best players in the world, and one could almost take for granted that each of the first violinists were as conversant as Hess was in the Bruch concerto and could play it nearly as well as Hess himself. Hess is a thorough musician, who has devoted, like Gericke, a great many years to it, but he could hardly be called anything but a scholarly player. It is doubtful if he could cast a spell over one with his playing; he is not what one would call a passionate and soul-stirring player, but a thorough, well versed violinist and musician. One of the largest audiences that ever attended a symphony concert was present and, judging from the attendance, it is quite probable that we may hear them again in the near future. The brass, wood, wind and reed section of the orchestra is a marvelous combination. It was really a revelation to the average symphony patron and enthusiast who had never had the pleasure of hearing this organization play. Their attack is perfect, and it seems impossible to look for improvement in this direction. It is safe to say that seldom, if ever, has a Cleveland audience been treated to a more charming, masterly and beautiful interpretation than Gericke gave of Wagner's "Waldweben." The different motifs were carried out in a manner difficult to surpass. The wood, wind and reed instruments made an ideal background for the entrancing strings. In the Bach number the Gavotte movement was the one that created the most enthusiasm. Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach number is delicious, and to think this man was once engaged in the crinoline business, with talents so rare seems verily a sacrilege. Mendelssohn's Overture was received rapturously and in a measure prepared the audience for what was to follow. And so the first concert of the season ended in a blaze of glory, and making friends galore for the orchestra. Monday they played in Montreal, Tuesday in Toronto, Wednesday in Buffalo, Thursday in Detroit, and here on Friday. They played the same program throughout their tour.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL.
Date OCT 5 1905

The Symphony Season.

The following announcement has been rendered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra management:

The Boston season will, as usual, consist of twenty-four concerts on consecutive Saturday evenings, from October 14 to April 28, omitting November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17, and twenty-four public rehearsals on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward to Thursday, beginning October 13, omitting November 10, December 8, January 12, February 16 and March 16.

Some new musicians of high reputation have been added to the orchestra. The appearance of M. d'Indy, the leader of French composers, is looked forward to, as he will conduct several concerts.

The announcement states further: "Since the first memorable concert was given in the old Music Hall, on October 22, 1881, a whole generation of music lovers has been born and educated in the way they should go by an institution that has done much to establish Boston's musical supremacy in America. So integral a part in the artistic economy of Boston and the great cities of the East has the orchestra become that one is apt to forget in its present season's of great prosperity that all days have not been fair with it. It was a long and discouraging uphill fight to gather a musical public able to appreciate it. And victory was won only by ceaseless toil, unwavering courage and a dogged perseverance in the maintenance of ideals. When the history of America for the last quarter-century has been written, it will be found that the greatest factor in its advancement has been the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its influence, direct and indirect, has been felt the length and breadth of the continent. Before it was established Boston had had its Harvard Musical Association and its Germania Orchestra. New York had its Philharmonic Society, and for the rest of the country there were only the occasional concerts by the occasional orchestras, organized by the late Theodore Thomas. Today one finds permanent orchestras in Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, and even New York's conscience grows annually uneasy about the lack of such an orchestra in that city. Besides these great orchestras, every considerable city in the Union has its devoted band of forty or fifty professionals and amateurs that are regarded as a nucleus of something greater to come in the future. On the Boston Symphony Orchestra must rest the entire responsibility for this movement. Until it began its missionary work, the full meaning of orchestral music was hardly known in this country, and the mere mention of classical music was sufficient to empty a hall."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From NEWS
Address
Date OCT 6 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little Year Book, showing its complete bookings for the present season. Counting the preliminary trip of a week to Canada and the Middle West, the total number of concerts will be 109, the season ending in Boston on Saturday, April 28. Forty-eight concerts will be given in Boston. Then come New York with 10 and Cambridge with six, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered chiefly among the cities and towns of New York State and New England. The season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the Orchestra. Not only was the trip to the West very profitable, but everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions show a substantial increase over those of last year. In Washington, the New National Theater, where the concerts will be given, has been absolutely sold out on subscription. The second concert in Buffalo is scheduled for Monday evening, Feb. 19.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From MUSICAL LEADER
Address CHICAGO, ILL
Date OCT 12 1905

Symphony Orchestra Novelties.

Mr. Gericke has prepared an attractive list of works to be performed the coming season by the orchestra, some of which are unknown to Boston, and at least one, Smetana's overture to his opera, "Libussa," has never been played in this country. Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," one of his last works, has not been heard in Boston, and its only performance in America was, some one says, "at an obscure concert in New York." Another work to be performed is Cæsar Franck's "Psyche," which, likewise is a novelty in Boston. A novelty, as one finds, is not, after all, music fresh from the composer's brain, but may be by musicians not even living at the present day.

One interesting fact in Mr. Gericke's policy is that he places American talent side by side with that of old Europe. Prof. Paine's prelude to "The Birds," of Aristophanes, which both Boston and Cambridge have enjoyed, but it has not been played at the Symphony Concerts.

About fifteen numbers, altogether, will be quite new, hence "novel" to Boston. Two symphonies, both of which will doubtless attract unusual interest, one Mahler's Fifth; the other in E Major, by Amherst Webber, a young English musician, who was heard several years ago through his association with the deReszkes in this country.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From NEWS
Address
Date OCT 7 - 1905

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is now a hallowed memory. It may not be generally known that the effort of bringing the orchestra to Toronto was one of no common difficulty. Before the managers would consent to visit this city they demanded a guarantee for a concert in Montreal, and Mr. Stewart Houston furnished this guarantee, at some loss. For his public spirit in this matter no one will refuse proper appreciation. Speaking of the prospects for a concert next season, Mr. Houston said yesterday to The News: "I hope to make it an annual affair and perhaps next year we may be able to reduce the prices slightly. The transportation and hotel bill alone was $1,200, aside from the salaries of the performers and the incidental expenses, so the experiment was a costly one, which I am glad to say succeeded. The orchestra was greatly pleased with the concert here, and Mr. Gericke was delighted with the hall and its acoustic properties." Good. The audience was delighted also.

* * *

Oliver Huckel, a devout Wagnerian,

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From
Address
Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little Year Book, showing the complete bookings for the present season. Counting the concerts already given, the total number for the year is 109. Forty-eight of the concerts will be given in the home city. Then come New York with ten and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The rest are scattered through the cities and towns of New York state and New England. The season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the orchestra. Not only was the week's preliminary trip to Canada and the Middle West most profitable but everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions show a desided increase over those of last year. The season will end in Boston on Saturday, April 28. The second concert in Buffalo is set for Monday evening, February 19.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From
Address
Date

M. D'INDY WILL CONDUCT.

Vincent D'Indy will conduct two of the concerts the Boston Symphony orchestra is to give this season in New York. The programs will include principally the French music with which the conductor is closely identified. There will be a number of compositions given for the first time in this country. This will be the first visit Mr. D'Indy has made to this country. He is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen," and today is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony orchestra. As a conductor M. D'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria, whither he has gone as guest several times.

New York programs will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New York.

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TOWN TOPICS
From
Address
Date

IN MUSICAL CIRCLES

A FITTING prelude to an auspicous season of music was unquestionably the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Grays' Armory last Friday evening. It was a musical feast in which the musician reveled, and the music lover found complete enjoyment. Some exceptions could have been taken at different things, such as the length and arrangement of the program, and the lack at times of musical enthusiasm among the musicians of the orchestra, but the tout ensemble was perfect. The program, although a beautiful one, was not exactly arranged to please the musician, and certainly not the laity. The Beethoven Symphony would have been used to better advantage if it had been placed first on the program. Wagner's "Waldweben" would have made an ideal climax to a musical feast such as we have seldom, if ever, heard locally. Gericke has been spoken of as a scholarly and not an emotional conductor. He is emotional, there is no doubt about that, for if he were not he would be unable to give as beautiful a rendition as he did of the Bach number and Wagner's "Waldweben," but withal he is like the magician, quiet, easy, clever and suave in his movements. It is a well known fact that Gericke is a stern disciplinarian, and his conducting is as decisive as if he had spoken. His reading of the scores was most idealistic. Willy Hess, the concertmeister and violin soloist, is a talented player. He is not an Ysaye, but, nevertheless, he is an excellent artist. His tone is broad, and as to technic he stands well up in the ranks of the foremost players. His support was ideal, and why should it not be? Gericke has the best players in the world, and one could almost take for granted that each of the first violinists were as conversant as Hess was in the Bruch concerto and could play it nearly as well as Hess himself. Hess is a thorough musician, who has devoted, like Gericke, a great many years to it, but he could hardly be called anything but a scholarly player. It is doubtful if he could cast a spell over one with his playing; he is not what one would call a passionate and soul-stirring player, but a thorough, well versed violinist and musician. One of the largest audiences that ever attended a symphony concert was present and, judging from the attendance, it is quite probable that we may hear them again in the near future. The brass, wood, wind and reed section of the orchestra is a marvelous combination. It was really a revelation to the average symphony patron and enthusiast who had never had the pleasure of hearing this organization play. Their attack is perfect, and it seems impossible to look for improvement in this direction. It is safe to say that seldom, if ever, has a Cleveland audience been treated to a more charming, masterly and beautiful interpretation than Gericke gave of Wagner's "Waldweben." The different motifs were carried out in a manner difficult to surpass. The wood, wind and reed instruments made an ideal background for the entrancing strings. In the Bach number the Gavotte movement was the one that created the most enthusiasm. Bachrich's arrangement of the Bach number is delicious, and to think this man was once engaged in the crinoline business, with talents so rare seems verily a sacrilege. Mendelssohn's Overture was received rapturously and in a measure prepared the audience for what was to follow. And so the first concert of the season ended in a blaze of glory, and making friends galore for the orchestra. Monday they played in Montreal, Tuesday in Toronto, Wednesday in Buffalo, Thursday in Detroit, and here on Friday. They played the same program throughout their tour.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
MUSICAL LEADER
From
Address
Date

The Symphony Season.

The following announcement has been rendered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra management:

The Boston season will, as usual, consist of twenty-four concerts on consecutive Saturday evenings, from October 14 to April 28, omitting November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17, and twenty-four public rehearsals on consecutive Friday afternoons (excepting Good Friday, April 13, which rehearsal is moved forward to Thursday, beginning October 13, omitting November 10, December 8, January 12, February 16 and March 16.

Some new musicians of high reputation have been added to the orchestra. The appearance of M. d'Indy, the leader of French composers, is looked forward to, as he will conduct several concerts.

The announcement states further: "Since the first memorable concert was given in the old Music Hall, on October 22, 1881, a whole generation of music lovers has been born and educated in the way they should go by an institution that has done much to establish Boston's musical supremacy in America. So integral a part in the artistic economy of Boston and the great cities of the East has the orchestra become that one is apt to forget in its present season's of great prosperity that all days have not been fair with it. It was a long and discouraging uphill fight to gather a musical public able to appreciate it. And victory was won only by ceaseless toil, unwavering courage and a dogged perseverance in the maintenance of ideals. When the history of America for the last quarter century has been written, it will be found that the greatest factor in its advancement has been the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its influence, direct and indirect, has been felt the length and breadth of the continent. Before it was established Boston had had its Harvard Musical Association and its Germania Orchestra. New York had its Philharmonic Society, and for the rest of the country there were only the occasional concerts by the occasional orchestras, organized by the late Theodore Thomas. Today one finds permanent orchestras in Chicago, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Washington, and even New York's conscience grows annually uneasy about the lack of such an orchestra in that city. Besides these great orchestras, every considerable city in the Union has its devoted band of forty or fifty professionals and amateurs that are regarded as a nucleus of something greater to come in the future. On the Boston Symphony Orchestra must rest the entire responsibility for this movement. Until it began its missionary work, the full meaning of orchestral music was hardly known in this country, and the mere mention of classical music was sufficient to empty a hall."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From
Address
Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little Year Book, showing its complete bookings for the present season. Counting the preliminary trip of a week to Canada and the Middle West, the total number of concerts will be 109, the season ending in Boston on Saturday, April 28. Forty-eight concerts will be given in Boston. Then come New York with 10 and Cambridge with six, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered chiefly among the cities and towns of New York State and New England. The season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the Orchestra. Not only was the trip to the West very profitable, but everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions show a substantial increase over those of last year. In Washington, the New National Theater, where the concerts will be given, has been absolutely sold out on subscription. The second concert in Buffalo is scheduled for Monday evening, Feb. 19.

Esta

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little Year Book, showing the complete bookings for the present season. Counting the concerts already given, the total number for the year is 109. Forty-eight of the concerts will be given in the home city. Then come New York with ten and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The rest are scattered through the cities and towns of New York state and New England. The season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the orchestra. Not only was the week's preliminary trip to Canada and the Middle West most profitable but everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions show a decided increase over those of last year. The season will end in Boston on Saturday, April 28. The second concert in Buffalo is set for Monday evening, Febru-
19.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
MUSICAL LEADER
From
Address
Date

Symphony Orchestra Novelties.

Mr. Gericke has prepared an attractive list of works to be performed the coming season by the orchestra, some of which are unknown to Boston, and at least one, Smetana's overture to his opera, "Libussa," has never been played in this country. Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," one of his last works, has not been heard in Boston, and its only performance in America was, some one says, "at an obscure concert in New York." Another work to be performed is Cæsar Franck's "Psyche," which, likewise is a novelty in Boston. A novelty, as one finds, is not, after all, music fresh from the composer's brain, but may be by musicians not even living at the present day.

One interesting fact in Mr. Gericke's policy is that he places American talent side by side with that of old Europe. Prof. Paine's prelude to "The Birds," of Aristophanes, which both Boston and Cambridge have enjoyed, but it has not been played at the Symphony Concerts.

About fifteen numbers, altogether, will be quite new, hence "novel" to Boston. Two symphonies, both of which will doubtless attract unusual interest, one Mahler's Fifth; the other in E Major, by Amherst Webber, a young English musician, who was heard several years ago through his association with the deReszkes in this country.

om NEWS
ldress OCT 7 - 1905
te

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is now a hallowed memory. It may not be generally known that the effort of bringing the orchestra to Toronto was one of no common difficulty. Before the managers would consent to visit this city they demanded a guarantee for a concert in Montreal, and Mr. Stewart Houston furnished this guarantee, at some loss. For his public spirit in this matter no one will refuse proper appreciation. Speaking of the prospects for a concert next season, Mr. Houston said yesterday to The News: "I hope to make it an annual affair and perhaps next year we may be able to reduce the prices slightly. The transportation and hotel bill alone was $1,200, aside from the salaries of the performers and the incidental expenses, so the experiment was a costly one, which I am glad to say succeeded. The orchestra was greatly pleased with the concert here, and Mr. Gericke was delighted with the hall and its acoustic properties." Good. The audience was delighted also.

* * *

Oliver Huckel, a devout Wagnerian,

s

M. D'INDY WILL CONDUCT.

Vincent D'Indy will conduct two of the concerts the Boston Symphony orchestra is to give this season in New York. The programs will include principally the French music with which the conductor is closely identified. There will be a number of compositions given for the first time in this country. This will be the first visit Mr. D'Indy has made to this country. He is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen;" and today is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony orchestra. As a conductor M. D'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria, whither he has gone as guest several times.

New York programs will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New York.

BOSTON TRAVELER

OCTOBER 14, 1905.

SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The Boston Symphony Quartet, composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Ferir, viola, and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cello, will give this season six concerts in Jordan Hall, the dates being the Monday evenings of October 30, November 27, January 1, February 5, March 5 and April 9. The season subscription sale will open at Symphony Hall on next Friday morning, October 20, the prices for the series being $7.50, $6 and $4.

Professor Willy Hess has arranged a most attractive prospectus for the season. The soloists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny and a singer to be announced. Members of the Symphony Orchestra will also assist.

The work of the Boston Symphony Quartet made a most favorable impression in Boston last season, and the prospects for the coming one are in every respect very bright.

B. Journal Oct. 14/05

HESS QUARTET PLANS.

The Boston Symphony Quartet, composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cello, will give this season six concerts in Jordan Hall, the dates being the Monday evenings of Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5 and April 9. The season subscription sale will open at Symphony Hall next Friday morning, Oct. 20. Professor Willy Hess has arranged a most attractive prospectus for the season. The soloists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny and a singer to be announced. Members of the Symphony Orchestra will also assist. The works to be played will be chosen from standard lists, and will also include many interesting novelties.

SUNDAY GLO[BE]

OCTOBER 15, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

A most interesting prospectus for the coming season has just been announced by the Boston Symphony quartet. This organization now consists of Prof Willy Hess, first violin; Mr Otto Roth, second violin; Mr Ferir, viola, and Mr Heinrich Warnke, 'cello. Six concerts will be given on Monday evenings in Jordan hall, the dates being Oct 30, Nov 27, Jan 1, Feb 5, March 5 and April 9. The subscription sale will open next Friday at Symphony hall, the prices being, for the series, $7.50, $6 and $4.

The assisting artists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny, a singer yet to be announced, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The work of the quartet made a most favorable impression in Boston last season, and the prospects for the coming season are particularly brigut.

SUNDAY POST

OCTOBER, 15, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

A most interesting prospectus for the coming season has just been announced by the Boston Symphony Quartet. This organization now consists of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Ferir, viola, and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cello. Six concerts will be given on Monday evenings in Jordan Hall, the dates being Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5, April 9. The season subscription sale will open on next Friday at Symphony Hall, the prices being, for the series, $7.50, $6. and $4.

The assisting artists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasmy, a singer yet to be announced and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Globe Sept 17/05

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The Boston symphony quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. The work done by this organization last year left a very deep impression on the minds of all that heard it and its success as a new organization made it certain that there was a large place for it to fill in the eastern musical season.

One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the cellist will be Mr Heinrich Warnke, the new principal cellist of the Boston symphony orchestra. Mr Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal cellist of the Kaim orchestra, and besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Prof Willey Hess concert master of the Boston symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer which he spent in Europe, Prof Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op 70; five novellettes for string quartet, op 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer, whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, op 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

Buys is a Dutchman of about 40 years. He has written much choral music and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam.

Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch; he is between 35 and 40 years old and has composed music in all forms. Among other things is a very successful violin concerto, which Prof Hess played two years ago. Hans Koessler, a resident of Budapest, is the composer of much interesting music, little of which has been heard in this country. He was the teacher of Dohnanyi.

NEW YORK TIMES

SEPTEMBER 17, 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with bright prospects. One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Prof. Willy Hess, the leader of the quartet, in the Summer which he spent in Europe, secured some new music. He has a new string quartet by Sinding, in A minor, Opus 70; five novelettes for string quartet, Opus 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major, by Jan Brandt-Buys, a Dutch composer, whose name is hardly known in America; a concert étude for string quartet, Opus 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Fauré, and a sextet for strings in F minor, by Hans Koessler.

+ + +

MUSICAL COURIER

From _____

Address _____

PROF. WILLY HESS, leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, has brought some interesting novelties from Europe, which his organization will perform at its concerts during the coming season. Among the numbers promised are a string quartet by Sinding; five "Novelettes" for string quartet, by Glazounow; a quintet for strings and flute, by Jan Brandt Buys; a concert etude for string quartet, by Sinigaglia; a piano quartet, by Gabriel Fauré, and a string sextet, by Hans Koessler.

B. Journal Oct 17/05

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE.

The sale of season tickets for the new subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in Cambridge will open at Sever's bookstore, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, Oct. 21. The price for the series is $5. The six concerts will be given in Sanders Theater on the evenings of Oct. 26, Nov. 29, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19—all of them on Thursdays, except the second, which was put forward to Wednesday on account of Thanksgiving. The soloists will be, in order: Miss Olive Mead, violinist; Miss Alice R. Cole, contralto; George W. Proctor, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; Myron W. Whitney, Jr., baritone, and Mme. Samaroff, pianist.

Herald Sept 17/05

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The Boston Symphony quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. The work done by this organization last year left an abiding impression, and the success made it certain that there was a large place for it to fill in the eastern musical season.

Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist, will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra. He has made an enviable name in Europe as a chamber music player. The other members will be Messrs. Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony and leader of the quartet; Otto Roth, second violin, and E. Ferir, viola.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Mr. Hess secured music that promises to be interesting. Among these works are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys; a concert etude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a piano quartet in C minor, by Gabriel Faure, and a sextet for strings in F minor, by Hans Koessler. Buys is a Dutchman, about 40 years old. He has written much choral music, and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam. Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch, he is between 35 and 40 years old, and has composed music in all forms, among other things a successful violin concerto. Koessler, a resident of Budapest, was the teacher of Dohnanyi. A set of orchestral variations by Koessler has been played here by the Symphony orchestra.

MUSICAL LEADER

Address _____

Date OCT 6 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet.

This superb organization, with the personelle of Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emil Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, violoncello, announces six concerts of chamber music, on dates previously given in these columns. Pugno, George Proctor, Buonamici and Srasny, with a singer to be announced, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assist. The programmes will include works from Beethoven, Brahms, Buys, Faure, Haydn, Glazounow, D'Indy, Koessler, Mozart, Sinding, Sinigaglia, Schubert, Schumann, Saint-Saens and Taneieu.

The first concert's programme follows: Quartet in C Major (Op. 59, No. 3), Beethoven; Novellettes for String Quartet (Op. 15), Glazounow; Sextet for Strings in B Flat Major (Op. 18), Brahms. Assisting, Max Zach and Josef Keller.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT

OCTOBER 12, 1905

More Musical Plans

It is good to hear that Mr. Longy and his associates in the Symphony Orchestra will continue their chamber concerts of music for wood-wind instruments. They are now planning three, for the evenings of Dec. 18, Jan. 22 and Feb. 26, in Potter Hall. The programmes will follow the lines along which they ran last year. Nearly all the music will be unfamiliar, and some of it quite new. The old masters will have their share. So, too, will living Frenchmen.

The dates for the chamber concerts of Mr. Hess's Boston Symphony Quartet in Jordan Hall are Monday evenings, Oct. 30, Nov 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5 and April 9. The assisting virtuosi already engaged are Pugno, Stasny, Buonamici and Proctor and various members of the orchestra. Mr. Hess will make his programmes from the following list:

Beethoven—Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3; Quartet in B-flat major, Op. 130; Septet, Op. 20. Brahms—Sextet in B-flat major, Op. 18; Pianoforte Quartet in A major, Op. 26. Jan Brandts Buys—Quintet for Strings and Flute in D major (new). Gabriel Fauré—Pianoforte Quartet in C minor, Op. 15. Glazounow—Novellettes for String Quartet, Op. 15. Haydn—Quartet in C major, Op. 33. D'Indy—Quartet, Op. 35. Hans Koessler—Sextet for String in F minor (new). Mozart—Quintet for Clarinet and Strings in A major; Quartet in C major. Sinding—Quartet in A minor, Op. 70 (new). Sinigaglia—Concert-étude for String Quartet, Op. 5 (new). Schubert—Quartet in A minor, Op. 29; Quintet for Strings, in C major. Schumann—Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3. Taneiew—Quartet in B-flat minor, Op. 4. Saint-Saëns—Trio for Pianoforte and Strings in F major, Op. 18.

Post 17

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Professor Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, Op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, Op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major, by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, Op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

NEW YORK TIMES

NOV 12 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this Winter, the dates being Tuesday, Jan. 2; Tuesday, Feb. 6, and Wednesday, March 7. The quartet made one appearance in New York last Winter, and was favorably received. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emile Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cello.

"ROMEIKE," NEW YORK

NEW YOR[K]

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

MUSICAL LEADER

From _____

Address _____

Date SEP 21 1904

Boston Symphony Quartet.

There is a possibility of a series of chamber music concerts here by this quartet, which has been recently reorganized with Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; E. Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist. The Boston Symphony Quartet holds the same relation to the Boston Orchestra that the Kneisel Quartet formerly held.

[74]

From NEW YORK TIMES

Address _____

Date NOV 12 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this winter, the dates being Tuesday, January 2; Tuesday, February 6, and Wednesday, March 7. The quartet made one appearance in New-York last winter and was most favorably received. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Emil Ferir, viola; and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, cello.

From N. Y. TRIBUNE

Address _____

Date NOV 12 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this winter, the dates being Tuesday, January 2; Tuesday, February 6, and Wednesday, March 7. The quartet made one appearance in New-York last winter and was most favorably received. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Emil Ferir, viola; and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, cello.

BOSTON TRAVELER

OCTOBER 14, 1905.

SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The Boston Symphony Quartet, composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Ferir, viola, and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cello, will give this season six concerts in Jordan Hall, the dates being the Monday evenings of October 30, November 27, January 1, February 5, March 5 and April 9. The season subscription sale will open at Symphony Hall on next Friday morning, October 20, the prices for the series being $7.50, $6 and $4.

Professor Willy Hess has arranged a most attractive prospectus for the season. The soloists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny and a singer to be announced. Members of the Symphony Orchestra will also assist.

The work of the Boston Symphony Quartet made a most favorable impression in Boston last season, and the prospects for the coming one are in every respect very bright.

HESS QUARTET PLANS.

The Boston Symphony Quartet, composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cello, will give this season six concerts in Jordan Hall, the dates being the Monday evenings of Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5 and April 9. The season subscription sale will open at Symphony Hall next Friday morning, Oct. 20. Professor Willy Hess has arranged a most attractive prospectus for the season. The soloists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny and a singer to be announced. Members of the Symphony Orchestra will also assist. The works to be played will be chosen from standard lists, and will also include many interesting novelties.

SYMPHONY IN CAMBRIDGE.

The sale of season tickets for the new subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in Cambridge will open at Sever's bookstore, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, Oct. 21. The price for the series is $5. The six concerts will be given in Sanders Theater on the evenings of Oct. 28, Nov. 29, Dec. 28, Feb. 1, March 8 and April 19—all of them on Thursdays, except the second, which was put forward to Wednesday on account of Thanksgiving. The soloists will be, in order: Miss Olive Mead, violinist; Miss Alice R. Cole, contralto; George W. Proctor, pianist; Miss Clara Kloberg, pianist; Myron W. Whitney, Jr., baritone, and Mme. Samaroff, pianist.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT

OCTOBER 12, 1905

More Musical Plans

It is good to hear that Mr. Longy and his associates in the Symphony Orchestra will continue their chamber concerts of music for wood-wind instruments. They are now planning three, for the evenings of Dec. 18, Jan. 22 and Feb. 26, in Potter Hall. The programmes will follow the lines along which they ran last year. Nearly all the music will be unfamiliar, and some of it quite new. The old masters will have their share. So, too, will living Frenchmen.

The dates for the chamber concerts of Mr. Hess's Boston Symphony Quartet in Jordan Hall are Monday evenings, Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5 and April 9. The assisting virtuosi already engaged are Pugno, Stasny, Buonamici and Proctor and various members of the orchestra. Mr. Hess will make his programmes from the following list:

Beethoven—Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3; Quartet in B-flat major, Op. 130; Septet, Op. 20. Brahms—Sextet in B-flat major, Op. 18; Pianoforte Quartet in A major, Op. 25. Jan Brandts Buys—Quintet for Strings and Flute in D major (new). Gabriel Fauré—Pianoforte Quartet in C minor, Op. 15. Glazounow—Novellettes for String Quartet, Op. 15. Haydn—Quartet in C major, Op. 33. D'Indy—Quartet, Op. 35. Hans Koessler Sextet for String in F minor (new). Mozart—Quintet for Clarinet and Strings in A major; Quartet in C major, Op. 70 (new). Sinigaglia—Quartet in A minor, Op. 5 (new). Schubert—Quartet in A minor. Op. 29; Quintet for Strings, in C major. Schumann—Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3. Taneiew—Quartet in B-flat minor, Op. 4. Saint-Saëns—Trio for Pianoforte and Strings in F major, Op. 18.

SUNDAY GLOBE

OCTOBER 15, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

A most interesting prospectus for the coming season has just been announced by the Boston Symphony quartet. This organization now consists of Prof Willy Hess, first violin; Mr Otto Roth, second violin; Mr Ferir, viola, and Mr Heinrich Warnke, 'cello. Six concerts will be given on Monday evenings in Jordan hall, the dates being Oct 30, Nov 27, Jan 1, Feb 5, March 5 and April 9. The subscription sale will open next Friday at Symphony hall, the prices being, for the series, $7.50, $6 and $4.

The assisting artists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny, a singer yet to be announced, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The work of the quartet made a most favorable impression in Boston last season, and the prospects for the coming season are particularly bright.

SUNDAY POST

OCTOBER, 15, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

A most interesting prospectus for the coming season has just been announced by the Boston Symphony Quartet. This organization now consists of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Ferir, viola, and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cello. Six concerts will be given on Monday evenings in Jordan Hall, the dates being Oct. 30, Nov. 27, Jan. 1, Feb. 5, March 5, April 9. The season subscription sale will open on next Friday at Symphony Hall, the prices being, for the series, $7.50, $6, and $4.

The assisting artists will be Raoul Pugno, George Proctor, Carlo Buonamici, Carl Stasny, a singer yet to be announced and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violinist. During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Professor Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; five novellettes for string quartet, op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major, by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert étude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor, by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor, by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

The annual sale of seats for the Symphony season will be held in Symphony Hall on Oct. 2, 3, 5 and 6. The sale will, of course, be by auction, and under the rules which have governed the previous ones since this method of disposing of seats was adopted. There will be, as usual, twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four concerts. The first rehearsal is set for Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, and the first concert for the following night. Full particulars concerning the features of the season will be given later. Only three new faces will be seen in the orchestra this year: a new principal 'cello, a new first bassoon and a new alternate first horn. These musicians were engaged in Europe last summer. The new principal 'cellist, who takes the place of Mr. Krasselt, is Mr. Heinrich Warnke, who comes from Munich, where he has been for the past eight years the principal 'cellist of the famous Kaim Orchestra. Mr. Peter Sadony, the new bassoon player, comes from Cologne, where for many years he has been the first bassoon in the orchestra there and the teacher of that instrument in the conservatory. The engagement of Mr. Max Hess of the Kaim Orchestra in Munich as first horn does not mean the displacement of Mr. Hackebarth, whose artistic work is so justly admired by the patrons of the orchestra. The engagement is merely in line with the general policy of the orchestra to double the principal wind instruments. Mr. Hess is a young man of twenty-seven and brings to America a reputation of being one of the best horn-players in Germany. Practically his whole career has been with the Or-

"ROMEIKE," NEW YORK

NEW YOR

The First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

MUSICAL LEADER

From .....

Address .....

Date .....

Boston Symphony Quartet.

There is a possibility of a series of chamber music concerts here by this quartet, which has been recently reorganized with Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; E. Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist. The Boston Symphony Quartet holds the same relation to the Boston Orchestra that the Kneisel Quartet formerly held.

[74]

globe Sept 17/05

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The Boston symphony quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. The work done by this organization last year left a very deep impression on the minds of all that heard it and its success as a new organization made it certain that there was a large place for it to fill in the eastern musical season.

One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr Krasselt, the cellist will be Mr Heinrich Warnke, the new principal cellist of the Boston symphony orchestra. Mr Warnke comes from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal cellist of the Kaim orchestra, and besides bringing with him the reputation of being one of the best 'cellists in Europe has made an enviable name for himself as a chamber music player.

Prof Willey Hess concert master of the Boston symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Prof Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op 70; five novellettes for string quartet, op 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer, whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, op 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

Buys is a Dutchman of about 40 years. He has written much choral music and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam.

Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch; he is between 35 and 40 years old and has composed music in all forms. Among other things is a very successful violin concerto, which Prof Hess played two years ago. Hans Koessler, a resident of Budapest, is the composer of much interesting music, little of which has been heard in this country. He was the teacher of Dohnanyi.

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET.

The Boston Symphony quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. The work done by this organization last year left an abiding impression, and the success made it certain that there was a large place for it to fill in the eastern musical season.

Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist, will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony orchestra. He has made an enviable name in Europe as a chamber music player. The other members will be Messrs. Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony and leader of the quartet; Otto Roth, second violin, and E. Ferir, viola.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Mr. Hess secured music that promises to be interesting. Among these works are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, op. 70; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys; a concert etude for string quartet, op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a piano quartet in C minor, by Gabriel Faure, and a sextet for strings in F minor, by Hans Koessler. Buys is a Dutchman, about 40 years old. He has written much choral music, and has taught in the conservatories of Cologne, Leipsic, Amsterdam and Rotterdam. Sinigaglia is a Russian of Italian parentage. A pupil of Max Bruch, he is between 35 and 40 years old, and has composed music in all forms, among other things a successful violin concerto. Koessler, a resident of Budapest, was the teacher of Dohnanyi. A set of orchestral variations by Koessler has been played here by the Symphony orchestra.

Part II

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with the brightest of prospects. One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Professor Willy Hess, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is the leader of the quartet; Mr. Otto Roth, one of the first violins of the orchestra, is the second violin, and Mr. E. Ferir, the principal viola of the orchestra, is the violist.

During the past summer, which he spent in Europe, Professor Hess secured some new music that promises to be most interesting. Among the works which have never been heard before in America are a new string quartet by Sinding in A minor, Op. 70; five novelettes for string quartet, Op. 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major by Jan Brandt Buys, a Dutch composer whose name is hardly known in America; a concert etude for string quartet, Op. 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Faure, and sextet for string in F minor by Hans Koessler, the leading composer of Hungary.

NEW YORK TIMES

SEPTEMBER 17. 1905.

The Boston Symphony Quartet enters on its second season with bright prospects. One change is noted in its members. Instead of Mr. Krasselt, the 'cellist will be Mr. Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Prof. Willy Hess, the leader of the quartet, in the Summer which he spent in Europe, secured some new music. He has a new string quartet by Sinding, in A minor, Opus 70; five novelettes for string quartet, Opus 15, by Alexander Glazounov; a quintet for strings and flute in D major, by Jan Brandt-Buys, a Dutch composer, whose name is hardly known in America; a concert étude for string quartet, Opus 5, by L. Sinigaglia; a pianoforte quartet in C minor by Gabriel Fauré, and a sextet for strings in F minor, by Hans Koessler.

+ + +

From .....

Address .....

PROF. WILLY HESS, leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, has brought some interesting novelties from Europe, which his organization will perform at its concerts during the coming season. Among the numbers promised are a string quartet by Sinding; five "Novelettes" for string quartet, by Glazounow; a quintet for strings and flute, by Jan Brandt Buys; a concert etude for string quartet, by Sinigaglia; a piano quartet, by Gabriel Fauré, and a string sextet, by Hans Koessler.

From ..... LEADER

Address .....

Date .....

The Boston Symphony Quartet.

This superb organization, with the personelle of Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emil Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, violoncello, announces six concerts of chamber music, on dates previously given in these columns. Pugno, George Proctor, Buonamici and Srasny, with a singer to be announced, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assist. The programmes will include works from Beethoven, Brahms, Buys, Faure, Haydn, Glazounow, D'Indy, Koessler, Mozart, Sinding, Sinigaglia, Schubert, Schumann, Saint-Saens and Taneieu.

The first concert's programme follows: Quartet in C Major (Op. 59, No. 3), Beethoven; Novellettes for String Quartet (Op. 15), Glazounow; Sextet for Strings in B Flat Major (Op. 18), Brahms. Assisting, Max Zach and Josef Keller.

From ..... NEW YORK TIMES.

Address .....

Date ..... NOV 12 1905

T T T

The Boston Symphony Quartet announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this Winter, the dates being Tuesday, Jan. 2; Tuesday, Feb. 6, and Wednesday, March 7. The quartet made one appearance in New York last Winter, and was favorably received. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emile Férir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cello.

From .....

Address ..... N. Y. TRIBUNE

Date ..... NOV 12 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this winter, the dates being Tuesday, January 2; Tuesday, February 6, and Wednesday, March 7. The quartet made one appearance in New-York last winter and was most favorably received. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Emil Ferir, viola; and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, cello.

NOV 12 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartette announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this winter, the dates being Tuesday, January 9, Tuesday, February 6, and Wednesday, March 7. The Quartette made one appearance in New York last winter and was most favorably received. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emile Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cello.

6 oct 31 1905

The Boston Post

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

At Jordan Hall last evening the Boston Symphony Quartet gave its first concert of the present season, this being the programme:

Quartet, A minor, op. 29.....Schubert
Novelettes, op. 15.....Glazounoff
Sextet, B flat major, op. 18.....Brahms

This season finds the quartet with three of its last year's membership, Willy Hess, Otto Roth and Emil Ferir, with Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, who succeeds Rudolf Krasselt. In a strong quartet organization a change in any of its membership generally means an impairment of its ensemble, for a time at least, for as a rule the members of a quartet must play together several years before each becomes familiar with the individualities of his associates, and the four become intimate enough to play as one, which is the ideal ensemble and one difficult to realize even when each of the quartet is a virtuoso of the highest rank. It is pleasant to record that the ensemble realized by Professor Hess and his associates last evening was of surprising excellence, all the more so when it is realized that one of the members has been playing with the others but a short time.

The programme also was most enjoyable. The Schubert quartet seems as bright and fresh as ever, and the Glazounoff Novelettes, although ultra-modern in spirit, are melodic and interesting as to the material, and the treatment is highly ingenious and individual in every way. These made the "hit" of the evening. Messrs. J. Keller and Max Zach were the assisting artists in the Brahms sextet, which was finely interpreted. The audience was large and always appreciative. The second concert in the series will be Monday evening, Nov. 27.

SYMPHONY QUARTET OPENS CONCERT SEASON

New 'Cellist Warnke Adds to the Finished Work—Shading of Schubert Numbers Especially Commended.

The Boston Symphony Quartet opened its concert season most auspiciously last evening, before an audience which comfortably filled Jordan Hall, and which, considering the counter attraction, contained a large representation from musical Boston. The quartet as at present constituted includes Professor Willy Hess, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Emile Ferir, viola, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cello. The defection of Mr. Krasselt, the celloist of last year, seemed at the time to have arrested the development of the quartet, but in Mr. Warnke it has gained a 'cellist of the highest rank, and in its program of last evening there was nothing to indicate the members had not been playing together for a long time.

The program consisted of the Schubert quartet in A minor Opus 29, A. Glazounow's novelettess for quartet, Opus 15, and the superb Brahms sextet in B flat major Opus 18. In this the quartet had the assistance of Max Zach, 'cellist, and Josef Keller, viola.

The Glazounow numbers are not so well known as the other works. The spirited Orientale (allegro con brio) was received with much enthusiasm. The playing of the quartet was smoother and more sympathetic than in former concerts. The shading in the Schubert numbers was all that could be desired, and the quaint meanings of the Glazounow movements were beautifully interpreted.

Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 123.
TUESDAY, OCT. 31, 1905.

FIRST SYMPHONY QUARTET CONCERT

Pleasing Chamber Works by Schubert, Glazounoff and Brahms—Performance Is Smooth and Animated.

The Boston Symphony quartet (Messrs. Hess, Roth, Ferir and Warnke) gave the first concert of the season last night in Jordan Hall. The programme included Schubert's quartet in A minor, op. 29; Glazounoff's Novellettes, op. 15, and Brahms' sextet in B flat major, op. 18, in which Messrs. Max Zach, viola, and J. Keller, 'cello, assisted. The programme was well chosen, for, although the pieces by Glazounoff, produced here by the Adamowski quartet Nov. 23, 1898, are not of marked distinction, with the possible exception of the Orientale and Interludium, they served as a resting place between the music by Schubert and Brahms. Both the quartet and the sextet are familiar here, but familiarity has not staled their beauty. The quartet, the only one of the 14 published during Schubert's lifetime, has the true Schubertian charm, with its blend of grace, lyricism and peculiar melancholy.

The sextet (1862) is a much clearer and riper work than those of Brahms that preceded it; it gave to the composer a certain popularity, and, although the true Brahmsite prefers or pretends to prefer the companion sextet in G major, the average audience will always find the earlier composition more interesting by reason of its structure, melodic character and general intelligibility.

Mr. Hess, who at the end of last season had brought his quartet to a high state of proficiency, might well have been discouraged by the withdrawal of Mr. Krasselt, who, it is said, is consumed with a desire to conduct; but courage is one of the attributes of an excellent quartet leader, and in Mr. Warnke, the new 'cellist, Mr. Hess has a colleague of chamber music routine, fluent technic and sound musical feelings and convictions. As Messrs. Roth and Ferir are quartet musicians of much experience, the first concert of the club as it is now organized gave immediate pleasure and a cheerful promise of artistic and popular success for the future. The performance was smooth, animated and united, discreetly emotional throughout. The tone was as fine in quality and as admirably blended as the quartet's previous work has led its hearers to expect. The sextet was played, on the whole, with judicious enthusiasm and with good balance of tone. The occasionally piquant Russian music aroused the warmest applause. The last movement, the "Orientale," was perhaps the most popular.

There was an enthusiastic audience of moderate size. The second concert will take place Monday evening, Nov. 27.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, OCT 31, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY QUARTET

Gives Its First Concert of the Season, with Max Zach and Josef Keller Assisting.

A rather sparsely-settled house greeted the Boston Symphony quartet in Jordan hall last night for the first concert of the season, though a Brahms sextet, with Max Zach and Josef Keller assisting the quartet, was on the program. Heinrich Warnke, the new cellist, was heard last week, so curiousity concerning him may be supposed to have been satisfied. Maj Higginson, Herr Gericke and several other members of the symphony orchestra were present, but there was nothing of the society affair about the concert. Comparatively few people even wore evening dress.

The evening's offering was rather uninteresting, beginning with the Schubert quartet in A minor (opus 29), and continuing with three "novellettes" for two violins, viola and cello, by A. Glazuno, full of affectation and insistent fifths in the third movement, called "Orientale," but sounding no further east than the home of the Cossacks. The first movement, called "Alla Spagnuola," is even more affected; the second, "an old-fashioned interlude," is the most interesting of the three.

The Brahms number was the sextet in B flat major, No. 18 of the composer's works. To those who like Brahms, and the close attention given by the audience last night, indicated a number of worshippers present, the sextet is one of the favorite works of this strange composer.

Prof Willy Hess read it boldly, and much more simply and with far less affectation than Brahms' enthusiasts are wont to demand.

The principal fault to be found with last night's performance of the quartet was a certain lack of balance; viola and cello were constantly too heavy for the violins, and there was once or twice that incredible flaw—incredible in this particular band—of a slight but irritating discrepancy in the matter of pitch.

There was not much opportunity for fire, nor was there any of the heart-wringing emotional music that stirs an audience, but the applause was generous, if mild. The second concert of this quartet's series is to be given in the same hall, Nov 27.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1905.

Jordan Hall: The Symphony Quartet

The Boston Symphony Quartet, with Willy Hess as first violin, Otto Roth as second, Emile Férir for the viola and Heinrich Warnke for the 'cello, gave its first concert for the new season in Jordan Hall last night, with Max Zach to assist it with an extra viola and Josef Keller with an extra 'cello. Schubert's quartet in A-minor (op. 29) began the programme, and Brahms's sextet in B-flat major (op. 29), for two violins, two violas and two 'cellos ended it. Between the two came three trifles for string quartet by Glazounow, which it pleased him to call "Noveletten." Two of them happen to be glorified dances, one Spanish and one Oriental. The third is a rather unfruitful effort to imitate archaic and stately simplicity.

The concert ended better than it began. Give Mr. Hess and his associates such music as these trifles of Glazounow's, broad of melody, sharp of rhythm, full of bright tonal colors and contrasting fancies, and they impart to them every quality that they ask. The warmth, the brightness, the rhythmical verve of their playing hide all else. Give them, still more, the fine sextet of Brahms's and it summons their best traits. Keenest of all is their feeling for rhythm. Most persuasive of all is the sense of life in their playing as though the music was coming fresh to them. It is lucid playing, too. It never obscures the musical design, not even in all those subtle variations out of which Brahms makes his slow movement. It never leaves the ornament cold figures of a composer's imagination. It touches them with responsive spontaneity. Breadth of tone and of style are within the quartet's command when Brahms invites them in the first movement of the sextet, and it never lets reserve stiffen them or austerity turn them cold.

These were the quartet's virtues, and with Glazounow and Brahms to aid they hid its shortcomings. Schubert was less kind to them. The brightness was there and the warmth. But there was not all the perfect euphony that Schubert asks of his four instrumental voices. The tremulous tonalities were too substantial. The modulations lacked their impulsiveness. Now and then the quartet was too heavy-footed. Again, it missed the faint, pervading melancholy or made it too intense. The peculiar Schubertian note was wanting. We that listened had heard Brahms's tones unmistakably. We had danced along with Glazounow. But we were never quite sure of our Schubert.

H. T. P.

The Providence Journal.

Published by the Providence Journal Co.
Journal Building, 203 Westminster St.
Providence, R. I.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1905.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Fine Programme Given Last Night by the Boston Orchestra.

The first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given last evening in Infantry all. A fine programme was presented and was played by the orchestra with the superb technical finish and musicianly skill in interpretation that has long been recognized as distinctive of this organization. The audience was considerably smaller than the average for two years past. Also, it might be called large in comparison with the average attendance some years ago, when the number ran down to such small figures as to cause the discontinuance of the concerts. The hall was perhaps two-thirds filled, the difference between this and the crowded houses of last year and the year before being easily traceable to the removal of the influence exerted by the committee of guarantors, the management of the orchestra having resumed this season the control of the Providence concerts.

Last night's programme presented Mme. Antoinette Szumowska, pianist, as the soloist, and included the following numbers:

Concert overture in A-major, "In the Spring," op. 36.....Goldmark
Concerto for pianoforte, in E-minor, op. 11.....Chopin
Mme. Antoinette Szumowska.
"Waldweben," from "Siegfried".....Wagner
Symphony in D-major, op. 36.....Beethoven

This was an exceedingly well-balanced and enjoyable list of selections. Goldmark's splendid concert overture, "In the Spring," reflects a mood quite foreign to the usual habit of that composer. For this once he abandoned the dramatic and mythological subjects which furnished the inspiration for his operas and his other overtures, and produced a work characterized in a surprising degree by freshness and animation, a joyous and triumphant paean to the spring. The orchestration is vivid and piquant, without the sensuousness commonly characteristic of Goldmark's scoring, but none the less the work of a master technician and colorist. It was played with dazzling brilliancy and effect, as was also the familiar excerpt from Wagner's "Seigfried" which followed.

The symphony, Beethoven's second, while it does not rise to the heights of several of his later works, is characterized by variety and a gay capriciousness quite remarkable when it is remembered that at the time of its composition Beethoven was a sufferer from ill-health, and was living the life of a recluse under doctor's care. A brilliant performance was afforded.

MME. ANTOINETTE SZUMOWSKA.
Soloist at Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mme. Szumowska played Chopin's charming E-minor concerto with elegant expression and conspicuous beauty of tone and phrasing. Her performance was justly recognized by enthusiastic applause and a double recall.

The concert was thoroughly enjoyable in every part and formed an auspicious opening to the season. The next appearance of the orchestra will be on the evening of Thursday, Jan. 4.

[75]

SUNDAY HERALD
Published Every Day in the Year.
VOL. CXVIII., NO. 128.
SUNDAY, NOV. 5, 1905.

ALL IS WAGNER AT SYMPHONY

Mme. Gadski and Mr. Van Hoose Are Soloists in Fourth Concert—Orchestra's Playing Especially Fine.

"FAUST" AT TREMONT UNDIMMED TO CROWD

"Tannhaeuser" at Matinee—Mr. Charles Anthony's Piano Recital Shows Results of Summer Abroad.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke conductor, gave its fourth concert last night in Symphony Hall. The programme was as follows: Wagner's March of Homage, and these excerpts from his operas: Bacchanale and Elisabeth's Greeting from "Tannhaeuser"; Prize song from "The Mastersingers"; Siegfried's parting from Bruennhilde, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, and the Closing Scene from "The Dusk of the Gods." The programme was changed unavoidably at the last minute, and Elisabeth's Greeting was substituted for the duet of Venus and Tannhaeuser, according to the Parisian version. The solo singers were Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

The music itself is familiar, the singers are well known, and there is little to say about the orchestral performance save words of praise.

Some protest against Wagnerian concerts. Extreme Wagnerites are indignant at the injury thus done "the Master." They forget that Wagner himself, however he may have written in pamphlets about the importance of preserving the integrity of his works, was delighted in private life—if he can be said to have had any private life—whenever concerts of this nature were organized. He encouraged them, he conducted them, just as in one breath he would say that only Germans could perform and appreciate his operas, and then immediately dream of triumphs at the Paris Opera House or in Rio Janeiro and welcome the news of performances in Italy. There are few composers who are not eager to secure performances of their works under any conditions, however unfavorable these conditions may be.

There are other protestants who insist that excerpts from Wagnerian operas lose in effect when they are performed in a concert hall. As a matter of fact, they both lose and gain. The opera, or music drama if you prefer, is an appeal made at the same time to the ear and the eye, to the senses and the understanding. The hearer is also the spectator. He is supposed to be interested at one and the same moment in music, dramatic action, the intrigue of the plot, and, also, in the later Wagnerian operas, in metaphysics and in symbolism. Full, yet discriminative, appreciation of the music itself is hardly possible unless it is known both as absolute music, without dramatic connection, and as dramatic music in the opera house for which it was designed and constructed.

Again, some are disturbed by the appearance of Siegfried or of Wotan in a more or less irreproachable claw-hammer coat, of Bruennhilde in a concert dress and with a smile in gratitude for the applause that is to come. But on the operatic stage are there never disquieting apparitions? Siegfried is a beardless youth when he frees Bruennhilde. When he appears in "The Dusk of the Gods" he has whiskers. How long, pray, was he with Bruennhilde in the mountain cave before domesticity became harassing and the yearning to wander could no longer be resisted? Neither Wagner nor anyone of his grubbing commentators has thrown light on this important subject. Is not the sight of a massive and concrete Bruennhilde, the replica of a Germania statue on a brewery, disillusionizing? Does not the singing of many of the impersonators in "The Ring" break the spell? And, finally, one excellent reason for a Wagner programme in a series of symphony concerts is that 99 out of 100 subscribers are highly pleased by it. They have few opportunities of hearing "The Ring," "Tristan" and "The Mastersingers." It gives them great delight to hear fragments of these operas performed by a great orchestra and with one or two singers of good repute.

The orchestral performance last night was one of uncommon splendor. There was as usual the inimitable euphony, the exquisite balance of tonal contrasts; but in addition there was dramatic spontaneity, uncommon elasticity, superb emotional breadth and sweep, supreme passion. Never before have we heard here the funeral music of Siegfried played with such deep significance and overwhelming grandeur.

The singers were fresh-voiced and in the vein. Mme. Gadski sang the monologue of Bruennhilde with a fine display of differentiation in dramatic emotions. She is one of the very few of the German sisterhood who, as Bruennhilde, does not trample arrogantly on all the fundamental laws of song. Mr. Van Hoose bore well his part.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1905

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA GIVES A WAGNER CONCERT

Good Work by the Savage Company in "La Boheme"—Next Week's Operas—Coming Concerts—A Grist of Miscellany

The Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its fourth pair of concerts yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Mr. Gericke conducted and Mme. Gadski, making her first appearance in America for the new season, and Ellison Van Hoose, the tenor, were the singers. Wagner's music made the entire programme. Originally the duet between Tannhäuser and Venus in the first act of "Tannhäuser" stood upon it. As long ago as last August Mme. Gadski agreed to prepare the music of Venus, which was new to her. As recently as Thursday noon Mr. Gericke discovered that she had not prepared it and that it was too late to repair her neglect. A change in the programme became imperative, and Elisabeth's burst of song at the beginning of the second act of "Tannhäuser" was substituted for the longer excerpt. As the programme finally stood, it comprised the "Huldigunsmarsch," the Bacchanale and "Elisabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhäuser"; Walter's prize-song from "Die Meistersinger," the duet between Siegfried and Brünnhilde in the prologue to "Götterdämmerung," and Siegfried's last speech, his orchestral apotheosis and Brünnhilde's closing scena from the same music drama.

It was a "Wagner concert" and a "Wagner concert" has become a permissible and an established anomaly in cities that have no opera. Through his later years Wagner cried lustily against such concerts. His was music of the scene, he liked to say It was, indeed, but one element in a fusion of all the arts of the theatre. There should be a pictorial background for it. Waves of light, often, should appeal to the eye simultaneously with the waves of sound that strike the ear. Dramatic action should accompany and emphasize it, while at the some time it should explain, illumine, or enforce that action. Sometimes it was linked to disembodied passion or to purely mental images. Often, as well, it was bound to material things or to the physical aspects of characters or actions passing at the moment before the spectator's eye. In a word, almost all of it was music of the theatre that lost many of its intrinsic qualities when it was transferred to the concert room.

Wagner's sense of humor was not conspicuous especially when it might have played about himself and his music, and, so far as the gossips have yet recorded, he never applied it to "Wagner concerts." He did not frequent them, and their full flowering indeed came long after his death. If he had known them, the humorous aspect of them might have struck him, as at perverse moments it strikes even the most serious and sympathetic of us that listen to them Elisabeth, warmed anew to life by the return of her minstrel lover, comes joyfully again to the hall of the tournaments of song. Its arches frame her. Through them stretches the slopes and the sky of the Wartburg in the spring sunshine. She herself is as a virginal figure stepping from the illuminated page of a mediæval manuscript. Her gladness is on her lips, It is thrilling through the little orchestral introduction that brings her into the hall. Then it floods her, and she breaks in pure elation into the momentary outburst:

"Dich, theure Halle, grüss' ich wieder, Froh grüss' ich dich, geliebter Raum!"

It is the spontaneous cry of maidenly joy at a particular moment in a particular play. Wagner has imagined it with warm beauty and sympathy in his tones. And what happens at a "Wagner concert." The singer comes with measured step from the retiring room. A frock of the newest fashion clothes her. She salutes the audience in front of her and the band behind her. She stands decorously during the orchestral prelude. Then she sings, with what feeling she may, though to that throbbing climax of purehearted rejoicing:

"Sei mir gegrüsst, sei mir gegrüsst."

Outburst? Rejoicing? "Elisabeth's greeting" has become a mere concert number to display the singer's vocal art. Even Patti and Melba have so saluted the Hall of Song.

Recall for a moment the scene of Siegfried's death—the gathering darkness, the ominous flight of the ravens; Hagen's revengeful thrust; the tottering hero struggling to rear his shield and crush with it; his fall; the group of shrinking, fearsome barbarians around him; the silence broken only by the hollow drumbeats; the moment of final struggle and exaltation, the eyes that see nothing around, but do see in ecstatic vision the flame-bound rock and the Valkyr that sleeps upon it:

"Brünnhilde!
Heilige braut."

And an amiable gentleman in a frock coat, his hands clasped benignantly on his white waistcoat, is trying to persuade us that he is the expiring Siegfried, and not an admirable tenor in admirable voice.

Or out of the darkness, through the smoky torchlight of the Gibichungs' Hall comes the Valkyr herself to wail her dead hero. She apostrophizes gods and men. Divine, she reads from the book of fate. Human, she cries with a woman's agony. It is the supreme climax of a mighty tragedy. And here is the same lady from the retiring room. How pleasant is her hat to see! The Valkyr casts herself on the pyre. The mounting flames lick and kindle the very abode of the high gods. The old world crumbles. We all know how impotent is the scenic illusion in this end of the whole "Ring" drama to reach the height of Wagner's imaginings. But is it not the spark that lights our responsive mood while that orchestral postlude blows it into flame? Without the background of scenery and action, without the quick memory of all that has gone before, does that turbulent instrumental splendor carry its full significance?

musical world [illegible] twenty arguments to uphold them: that half the listeners—you may doubt the proportion—are recalling all that Wagner wove around the music that they are hearing and recalling it in glorified memory; that they are grasping its purely musical content and detail as they could not grasp them in all the distractions of the theatre; that without such concerts we should not hear eminent conductors in Wagner's music; that in an opera-less city we should in fact hear none at all except a few preludes and fragments. But is this to say no more than that they are a permissible, tolerated, established, even well-liked anomaly, and that already custom has dulled us to some of their aspects. But in that ideal musical world of our visions there will be no anomalies. It has not yet dawned upon us here in Boston. Usually it seems as remote as other millenniums. Perhaps it will come when some one or some few think an opera, even an opera here in Boston, worth the endowing, or when we cease our affectation of superiority to the company of the Metropolitan Opera House. Its manager is one thing. Itself is another, one of the three or four great companies of the world, and the only one that can give us such opera as by our title as a musical capital we should welcome. A concert orchestra has its place in such a capital. So too has an opera.

To say all these things is not for a moment to depreciate Mr. Gericke or his "Wagner concert" of yesterday. He was a conductor in an opera house—and one of the foremost in Europe—before he was a conductor in the concert room. None of us is so well aware, none of us, probably, feels so keenly the anomalies that lurk in such concerts. His very programme shows that he tried as much as circumstances permitted, to avoid or to cloak them. The "March of Homage" may not be the most interesting music that Wagner wrote, but it is concert music. Siegfried's orchestral glorification proclaims that hero, though the theatre be miles away. The Bacchanale in the Venusberg, as we were saying only yesterday, becomes the more "the momentous background" that Wagner designed for the tragedy of "Tannhäuser," when the eye sees only the images that the music brings and not a gross and too tangible physical semblance of them. It is possible to listen to the Prize-Song as a pure and disembodied lyric. Within the inevitable limits of a "Wagner concert" Mr. Gericke's programme was well chosen. Besides, what orchestra in an opera house, with all the resources of theatre to aid, could play this music with such penetrating and suffusing beauty of tone, with such pliancy and subtlety and symmetry, with such illuminating detail and just feeling as did ours? Inevitably we tend to forget Wagner, the composer of music, in Wagner the architect of huge fabrics that employ all the arts. Once or twice a year our orchestra reminds us that Wagner the musician excels Wagner the actor, the scene-painter, what you will. Perhaps that is justification enough for "Wagner concerts" in Boston.

H. T. P.

/ / + / /

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, NOV 5, 1905.

FOURTH SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

Wagner was the only composer represented on the fourth Symphony program, the orchestra having the asistance of Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in the vocal excerpts from the German master. The selections were. "March of Homage," "Bacchanale" and Elizabeth's "Greeting" from Tannhauser," the "Prize Song" from "The Mastersingers" and scenes from "The Dusk of the Gods." The visiting artists are so well and favorably known that their joint appearance with the Symphony men aroused great interest in that class of intermittent patrons who flock to the hall on "special" occasions in hopes of getting seats in the upper balcony, and at noon the line of would-be attendants extended from the hall as far south as the Conservatory of music. As only the regulation number of seats were available hundreds were obliged to go away disappointed at not gaining admission.

There is no doubt that Wagner, selected, proves really more entertaining to the average musical ear than does the majority of his music dramas in which prolixity and profundity of musical expression make any of the scenes wearisome to all but enthusiastic Wagnerites and musical students with advanced ideas. Mr Gericke's concert selections were judicious and the performance was thoroughly enjoyable from beginning to end.

Mme Gadski sang beautifully, her glorious voice being as flexible, rich and resonant as ever, and showing that dramatic quality so necessary in the Wagner roles and which is too seldom found associated with melodious utterance. Even the most emotional passages in the Brunhile music were sung and not shouted, and in this duet with Siegfried the charming prima donna gave renewed evidence that she is entitled to rank with the foremost interpreters of Wagner's war goddess. Mme Gadski was received with great enthusiasm. Mr Van Hoose's contributions, too, call for high praise, his sweet tenor voice and expressive delivery making his work very enjoyable. He is specially to be commended for his artistry in the "Prize Song," which so many tenors declaim, regardless of the title.

The orchestral work was of a high standard. The opening march was as dignified and impressive as one could wish; in the "Bacchanale" the varying themes were cleverly brought out and the funeral march from "The Dusk of the Gods" was given with splendid effect, the fortissimo crescendos and contrasting measures showing ensemble playing which it would be difficult to improve.

This week the orchestra will be away and the fifth rehearsal and concert will not be given until Nov 17 and 18. Mr Felix Winternitz will be the soloist, playing a Sinding violin concerto. The orchestral pieces will be Mozart's G minor symphony, prelude to J. K.Paine's "Birds of Aristophanes" and the Tschaikowsky variations from suite No. 3.

4 Jan 1905
BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

MUSICAL MATTERS

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

PROGRAMME.

Wagner.

March of Homage.
Bacchanale from "Tannhauser."
Elisabeth's Greeting from Act. II, "Tannhauser."
Madame Gadski.
Prize Song from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."
Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.
Siegfried's Parting from Brunnhilde, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, Closing Scene, from "The Dusk of the Gods."
Mme. Gadski and Mr. Van Hoose.

A Wagner concert and an entire success. It had the advantage of presenting a crescendo of power to the very end. Even the march with which it began was an effective number. Wagner was not at his best in his concert marches, and the meaningless "Centennial March" (our national gold brick for which we paid $5000) was the weakest work that the great composed was ever guilty of. But the "Kaiser Marsch" is much better, with its reiterations of "Ein Feste Burg" as the voice of protestant Germany, and the March of Homage is the best of the 3.

The work was finely interpreted, but the succeeding "Bacchanale" was absolutely great in its whirlwind of passion. Mr. Gericke is developing an emotional power that was not present in his work of years ago; he is riper and more brilliant now that he has ever been before. The public appreciated the fervor of the performance and much enthusiasm ensued, the conductor being obliged to bow his thanks twice.

Mme. Gadski made a success of Elizabeth's Greeting to Symphony Hall, although she entered too soon with her solo. But both orchestra and soloist passed bravely over the slip and the end of the number was as triumphant as it deserved to be, the B in alt being very forcible and clear. A high note sways the multitude even in a Wagner number, and there was much enthusiasm after the song, the artist being recalled many times.

Mr. Van Hoose sang the Prize Song with much breadth, but the ensemble was not so perfect as we have heard it. As usual, this artist was sure in intonation even in the broadest crescendos and the highest passages.

The parting of Siegfried and Brunnhilde does not lose much by its transference from the operatic to the concert stage, for there are no vivid theatrical accessories to the scene where the young hero starts upon his Rhine journey. Possibly a portmanteau, an umbrella and a travelling rug might add to the realism of the work on the concert platform. But after all the glorious music stands by itself and guides and stimulates the imagination wherever it is sung.

Mr. Van Hoose sang Siegfried's death very expressively. Here one misses the impressive stage setting, and it seemed odd to see the corpse remain standing during his funeral music. The number was called (as usual) "Siegfried's Funeral March," but it ought to be remembered that it is not a march at all. Wagner never inculcated keeping any kind of step to it upon the stage and never treated it as the marches in "Lohengrin" or "Parsifal." It should be entitled "Funeral Music."

Again there was a lofty interpretation. The various motives, punctuated by the impressive Death-figure, narrated the biography of Siegfried in effective story. An especial word of commendation is due to the trumpet for the manner in which the sword motive was rung out.

After this the remains walked off and an intermission took place before the culmination of the memorable concert. The finale of "Goetterdaemmerung" and of the trilogy is the grandest climax in the entire repertoire of music. Motive is piled upon motive and the fire, sword, Siegfried, Brunnhilde, Rheingold, Rhine daughters, ring, heroism, and many other motives, pass in dramatic review, all summing up in the most impressive three-chord progression ever invented,—the Fate-motive.

The number gained and lost by concert performance, but we think that the ledger account leans to the side of profit. One missed the funeral pile, the mourning Vikings, the conflagration of Walhalla, but one was not disillusionized by the cab-horse Grane, and, above all, one heard the exciting and intricate music in a much fresher state of mind than would have been possible after 3 long acts of opera. Wagner's epic style makes abnormal demands upon an auditor, and we confess to being a little jaded by the time that Brunnhilde's majestic monologue is reached in the opera house.

Nor was Wagner at all opposed to excerpts of this kind. Indeed the present writer has the most vivid recollection of this same finale as he heard it in Villa Wahnfried (Wagner's home), with Stavenhagen and Mottl playing a piano accompaniment, Mme. Wagner turning the leaves, and Materna singing the vocal part.

But the orchestral part tells its mighty story whether in opera house or concert room. It is a picture of the crack of doom. Compare it with Berlioz's Judgment Day in his Requiem and we can better measure the greatness of Wagner. Berlioz uses the larger orchestra, the most sensational devices, even to 16 kettledrums and cohorts of trombones, but the true "Dies Irae" is here at the end of Goetterdaemmerung."

Louis C. Elson.

[76]

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY EXCELS IN WAGNER WORKS

Superb Fire and Force of Orchestra Far Outshines Work of Gadski and Van Hoose.

At its fourth of this season's concert the Symphony Orchestra was pu through the tremendous paces of Rich ard Wagner, the selections from th work of the master being March o Homage; Bacchanale and Elisabeth Greeting from "Tannhaeuser;" Priz Song from "The Mastersingers;" Sieg fried's Parting from Bruennhilde, Sieg fried's Death and Funeral March, an the Closing Scene from "The Dusk o the Gods." The singers to interpre the vocal parts were Mme. Gadski an Ellison Van Hoose.

It should be said at once that th instrumental portion of the concert fa outshone the work of the singers. Rare ly has Mr. Gericke so allowed himself and his men to give way to the fire and force of the titanic music. From the opening march, which the playing made to sound less trivial and unin spired than usual, to the magnificent tone picture of the fall of the gods everything was full of that specia emotional touch without which the Wagnerian output is a vain thing. The Venus-music had the tang of fiery sen suousness besides the charm of perfec technique; while the colossal funera music, one of the most stupendous or chestral conceptions that ever cam from the brain of man, was affecting i the highest degree.

Mme. Gadski was in excellent voice and sang the Bruennhilde music with that artistic sense and expression tha always is so prominent a part of he work. In the closing scene she ros to noble heights of emotional power Mr. Van Hoose was inadequate. He has a smooth and pleasant voice, it i true, and he sings in tune; but the mu sic of Siegfried, whether it be given o the operatic or the concert stage, de mands an heroic tenor, a man who ca stir the emotions with the inheren quality of his singing. Mr. Van Hoose' personality, his style and his voice ar all against him in such interpretation.

INQUIRER
PHILA. PA
OCT 2 1905
OCT 2 1905

NEWS OF T MUSIC

Grand Opera at the Academy Boston and Philad

Boston Symphony Orchestra

A program of the Boston Symphony ... in the Academy of Music, ... given on Monday evening, No... to the many lovers of ... Philadelphia. It will be ... concerts from Wagner's ... now, the first num... marsch." Then will ... ale from the ... After the ... ersinger" will ... and Bruen...

INQUIRER
PHILA. PA
OCT 15 1905

NEWS OF THE MUSICAL SEASON

First Program of the Philadelphia Orchestra—Dates of the Boston Concerts—Mme. Eames' Tour, Etc.

ELSA RUEGGER

To play with the Philadelphia Orchestra.
—Photo by Gessford.

MARIE HALL

To play with the Philadelphia Orchestra.
—Photo by Gessford.

VINCENT D'INDY

To conduct Boston Orchestra
—Photo by Elmer Chickering.

HENRI MARTEAU

To play with Boston Orchestra.
Copyright by Dupont.

The sixth season of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Fritz Scheel, conductor, promises to be the most successful of its existence. A very large advance sale of season tickets for the symphony concerts and public rehearsals is reported by the Executive Committee of the association, and the list of subscribers reads like the pages of the Blue Book. The first concerts will be given at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon, October 27, and Saturday evening, October 28. The symphony will be the Schumann, No. 2, C major, which was last played in this city by the Philadelphia Orchestra on February 13-14 1903. The other orchestral numbers will be the Tschaikowsky fantasie overture, "Hamlet," and A. Liadow's "Baba-Jaga," tone-painting from a Russian folk-march. Emile Sauret, the assisting artist at these concerts, will play the Dvorak Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in A minor, and Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso. At the first descriptive concert to be given at the Broad Street Theatre on Tuesday afternoon, November 14, the subject will be "The Orchestra and Its Instruments." The orchestra, under Conductor Scheel, will supply the musical illustrations, and Mr. W. J. Henderson, of the New York Sun, will furnish the comment.

The Boston Symphony Season

Philadelphia will have but five opportunities to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season on the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. The subscription sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock, at Theppe's music store, 1116 Chestnut street. The numbers of renewals both by the Monday and Wednesday night subscribers of last year has been unusually large and every prospect seems to point to a brilliant season.

Some particularly interesting features will be offered during the winter, not the least of which will be the appearance in Philadelphia as conductor of the orchestra at the December concert of M. Vincent d'Indy, who is by common consent the foremost composer of modern France and the most powerful influence in the French world of music. His name is not unknown for many of his works have been played here, not only by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but by the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the bare announcement of his coming will create as much interest here as it has in Boston and New York.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
PRESS
PHILA. PA
15

But five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this Winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, on the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12.

Some particularly interesting features will be offered during the coming Winter. Not the least of these will be the appearance in Philadelphia, as conductor of the orchestra at the December concert of M. Vincent d'Indy, who is, by common consent, the foremost living composer of France and the most powerful influence in the French world of music. M. d'Indy's name is not unknown to Philadelphia, for many of his works have been played here, not only by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but by the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the bare announcement of his coming will create as much interest here as it has in Boston and New York.

Mr. Gericke will, of course, conduct the other four concerts and for them he has prepared a most interesting set of programs. There will be a judicious admixture of novelties. The latter for the Philadelphia concerts will be chosen from the list prepared for the Boston series. In this list are included Mahler's fifth symphony, Amherst Webber's symphony in E major, a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South;" two other shorter pieces by Elgar entitled "Chasson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" new symphonic poems by Glazounov, Ernst Boehe and Dvorak, entitled respectively "Le Kremlin," "Odysseus Ausfahrt and Schiffbruck" and "Die Waldtaube," and new or unknown overtures by Busoni, Max Schillings, Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled, "Lustspiel," "Der Pfeifertag" and "Le Tasso"; also, an unknown overture by Smetana, called "Libussa."

The list of soloists comprises Mme. Gadski, who, with Ellison Van Hoose, will appear at the first concert in a Wagnerian programme; Elois Ruegger, Timothee Adamowski and Henri Marteau. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert.

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra is larger than ever, as it comprises 96 performers. Professor Willy Hess continues to be concert-master, the place he filled with such striking success last year. There will be, however, a new principal cellist in Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra, of Munich; a new first bassoon in Peter Sadony, of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn in Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra.

The Executive Committee of the Eurydice Chorus has changed the dates of rehearsals from Friday to Monday afternoons. Two concerts are to be given during the season, on Thursday evening, January 4, and Monday afternoon, April 23, at Horticultural Hall. Conductor Scheel will begin rehearsals on Monday afternoon, November 13.

Henry H. Gurney, the well-known tenor, has resigned his church positions—St. James' Roman Catholic, Thirty-eighth and Chestnut streets; Church of the Saviour, Thirty-eighth and Ludlow streets, and Adath Jeshurun, Seventh street and Columbia avenue—and canceled all engagements for the coming winter to spend a year in Europe.

He will pass the winter in Milan, studying Italian music at the Royal Conservatory. In the spring he will go to Paris to be under the tuition of Jean de Reszke.

NORTH
PHILA. PA

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first programme of the Boston Symphony series of concerts in the Academy of Music, which is to be given on Monday evening, November 6, will appeal to the many lovers of Wagner who live in Philadelphia, since it is to be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. The first number, it is announced, will be the "Huldigungsmarsch." Then will follow the overture and Bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhauser." After the prize song from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Bruennhilde from the first act of "Goetterdaemmerung," Siegfried's death and funeral march, and Bruennhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It will be interesting for Philadelphians to hear once more Mme. Gadski in Wagnerian music after the notable success she achieved as Bruennhilde in Munich last Summer.

INQUIRER
PHILA. PA
OCT 15 1905

RARE TREATS AHEAD FOR MUSIC LOVERS

Sixth Season of the Philadelphia Orchestra Promises to be Most Successful.

EAMES TO SING HERE

Conductor Gericke, of the Boston Orchestra, Has Long List of Novelties for Season.

The sixth season of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Fritz Scheel, conductor, promises to be the most successful of its existence. A very large advance sale of season tickets for the symphony concerts and public rehearsals is reported by the Executive Committee of the association, and the list of subscribers reads like the pages of the Blue Book. The first concerts will be given at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon, October 27, and Saturday evening, October 28. The symphony will be the Schumann, No. 2, C major, which was last played in this city by the Philadelphia Orchestra on February 13-14, 1903. The other orchestral numbers will be the Tschaikowsky Fantasie Overture, "Hamlet," and A. Liadow's "Baba-Jaga"—tone painting from a Russian Folk March.

Emile Sauret, the assisting artist at these concerts, will play the Dvorak Concerto for violin and orchestra, in A minor, and Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso.

At the first descriptive concert to be given at the Broad Street Theatre, on Tuesday afternoon, November 14, the subject will be "The Orchestra and Its Instruments." The orchestra, under Conductor Scheal, will supply the musical illustrations, and W. J. Henderson, of the New York Sun, will furnish the comment.

Mme. Emma Eames, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be heard in recital at the Academy of Music on Saturday afternoon, December 2, when she will have the assistance of Amherst Webber, composer and accompanist; Josef Hollman, cellist, and M. Gogorza, baritone. Mme. Eames' selections will be airs from the composers with which her fame is most closely identified, and songs of a lighter and more popular quality. Schubert and Schumann, Brahms and Richard Strauss will be included; but so, also, will be Horatio Parker, Tosti and perhaps a few of the contemporary lyricists. Eames' tour opened last week in Bangor, and her appearances thus far have been a succession of triumphs.

Conductor Gericke, of the Boston Orchestra, has a long line of novelties for the organization's forthcoming series of concerts here. The list includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, Amherst Webber's Symphony in E major, a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South," and two stonter pieces by Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin"; new or unknown symphonic poems by Glazounov, Ernst Boehe and Dvorak, entitled, respectively, "Le Kremlin," "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch" and "Die Waldtaube," and new or unknown overtures by Busoni, Max Schillings, Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled, "Lustspiel," "Der Pfeifertag" and "Le Tasso"; also, an unknown overture by Smetana, called "Libussa."

The list of soloists comprises Mme. Gadski, who, with Ellison Van Hoose, will appear at the first concert in a Wagnerian programme; Elois Ruegger, Timothee Adamowski and Henri Marteau. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert.

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra is larger than ever, as it comprises 96 performers. Professor Willy Hess continues to be concert-master, the place he filled with such striking success last year. There will be, however, a new principal cellist in Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra, of Munich; a new first bassoon in Peter Sadony, of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn in Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra.

The Executive Committee of the Eurydice Chorus has changed the dates of rehearsals from Friday to Monday afternoons. Two concerts are to be given during the season, on Thursday evening, January 4, and Monday afternoon, April 23, at Horticultural Hall. Conductor Scheel will begin rehearsals on Monday afternoon, November 13.

Henry H. Gurney, the well-known tenor, has resigned his church positions—St. James' Roman Catholic, Thirty-eighth and Chestnut streets; Church of the Saviour, Thirty-eighth and Ludlow streets, and Adath Jeshurun, Seventh street and Columbia avenue—and canceled all engagements for the coming winter to spend a year in Europe.

He will pass the winter in Milan, studying Italian music at the Royal Conservatory. In the spring he will go to Paris to be under the tuition of Jean de Reszke.

6 Nov 6/03

The Boston Journal

SYMPHONY EXCELS IN WAGNER WORKS

Superb Fire and Force of Orchestra Far Outshines Work of Gadski and Van Hoose.

At its fourth of this season's concerts the Symphony Orchestra was put through the tremendous paces of Richard Wagner, the selections from the work of the master being March of Homage; Bacchanale and Elisabeth's Greeting from "Tannhaeuser;" Prize Song from "The Mastersingers;" Siegfried's Parting from Bruennhilde, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, and the Closing Scene from "The Dusk of the Gods." The singers to interpret the vocal parts were Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose.

It should be said at once that the instrumental portion of the concert far outshone the work of the singers. Rarely has Mr. Gericke so allowed himself and his men to give way to the fire and force of the titanic music. From the opening march, which the playing made to sound less trivial and uninspired than usual, to the magnificent tone picture of the fall of the gods everything was full of that special emotional touch without which the Wagnerian output is a vain thing. The Venus-music had the tang of fiery sensuousness besides the charm of perfect technique; while the colossal funeral music, one of the most stupendous orchestral conceptions that ever came from the brain of man, was affecting in the highest degree.

Mme. Gadski was in excellent voice and sang the Bruennhilde music with that artistic sense and expression that always is so prominent a part of her work. In the closing scene she rose to noble heights of emotional power. Mr. Van Hoose was inadequate. He has a smooth and pleasant voice, it is true, and he sings in tune; but the music of Siegfried, whether it be given on the operatic or the concert stage, demands an heroic tenor, a man who can stir the emotions with the inherent quality of his singing. Mr. Van Hoose's personality, his style and his voice are all against him in such interpretation.

INQUIRER
PA 1905

05

NEWS OF T MUSIC

Grand Opera at the Academy Boston and Philad

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The first program of the Boston Symphony series of concerts in the Academy of Music, which will be given on Monday evening, November 6, will appeal to the many lovers of Wagner who live in Philadelphia. It will be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. As planned now, the first number will be the "Huldigungsmarsch." Then will follow the overture and Bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhauser." After the prize song from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Bruennhilde from the first act of "Gotterdammerung," Siegfried's death and funeral march and Bruennhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison

INQUIRER
PHILA., PA.
OCT 15 1905

NEWS OF THE MUSICAL SEASON

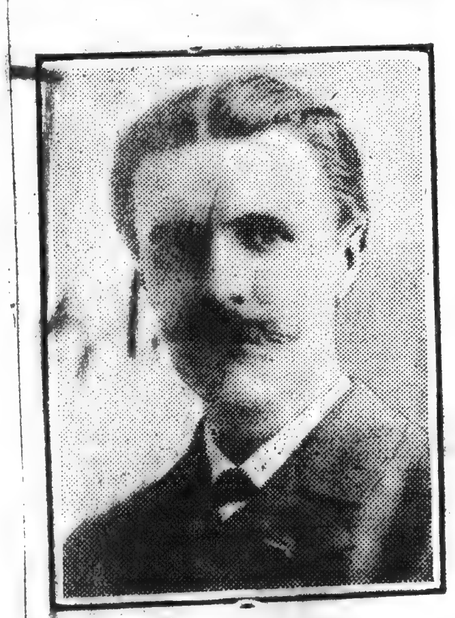
First Program of the Philadelphia Orchestra—Dates of the Boston Concerts—Mme. Eames' Tour, Etc.

ELSA RUEGGER

To play with the Philadelphia Orchestra.
—Photo by Gessford.

MARIE HALL

To play with the Philadelphia Orchestra.
—Photo by Gessford.



VINCENT D'INDY

To conduct Boston Orchestra
—Photo by Elmer Chickering.

HENRI MARTEAU

To play with Boston Orchestra.
Copyright by Dupont.

The sixth season of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Fritz Scheel, conductor, promises to be the most successful of its existence. A very large advance sale of season tickets for the symphony concerts and public rehearsals is reported by the Executive Committee of the association, and the list of subscribers reads like the pages of the Blue Book. The first concerts will be given at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon, October 27, and Saturday evening, October 28. The symphony will be the Schumann, No. 2, C major, which was last played in this city by the Philadelphia Orchestra on February 13-14, 1903. The other orchestral numbers will be the Tschaikowsky fantasie overture, "Hamlet," and A. Liadow's "Baba-Jaga," tone-painting from a Russian folk-march. Emile Sauret, the assisting artist at these concerts, will play the Dvorak Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in A minor, and Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso. At the first descriptive concert to be given at the Broad Street Theatre on Tuesday afternoon, November 14, the subject will be "The Orchestra and Its Instruments." The orchestra, under Conductor Scheel, will supply the musical illustrations, and Mr. W. J. Henderson, of the New York Sun, will furnish the comment.

The Boston Symphony Seasen

Philadelphia will have but five opportunities to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season on the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. The subscription sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock, at Heppe's music store, 1116 Chestnut street. The numbers of renewals both by the Monday and Wednesday night subscribers of last year has been unusually large and every prospect seems to point to a brilliant season.

Some particularly interesting features will be offered during the winter, not the least of which will be the appearance in Philadelphia as conductor of the orchestra at the December concert of M. Vincent d'Indy, who is by common consent the foremost composer of modern France and the most powerful influence in the French world of music. His name is not unknown to Philadelphia, for many of his works have been played here, not only by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but by the Philadelphia Orchestra. The announcement of his coming will create as much interest here as it has in Boston and New York.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
PRESS

But five concerts will be given in Philadelphia this Winter by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, on the Monday evenings of November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12.

Some particularly interesting features will be offered during the coming Winter. Not the least of these will be the appearance in Philadelphia as conductor of the orchestra at the December concert of M. Vincent d'Indy, who is, by common consent, the foremost living composer of France and the most powerful influence in the French world of music. M. d'Indy's name is not unknown to Philadelphia, for many of his works have been played here, not only by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but by the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the bare announcement of his coming will create as much interest here as it has in Boston and New York.

Mr. Gericke will, of course, conduct the other four concerts and for them he has prepared a most interesting set of programs. There will be a judicious admixture of novelties. The latter for the Philadelphia concerts will be chosen from the list prepared for the Boston series. In this list are included Mahler's fifth symphony, Amherst Webber's symphony in E major, a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South;" two other shorter pieces by Elgar entitled "Chason de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" new symphonic poems by Glazounov, Ernst Boehe and Dvorak, entitled respectively "Le Kremlin," "Odysseus Ausfahrt and Schiffbruck" and "Die Waldtaube," and new or unknown overtures by Busoni, Max Schillings, Eugene d'Harcourt and Smetana, entitled respectively "Lustspiel," "Der Pfeifertag," "Le Tasso" and "Libussa."

THE NORTH AMERICAN
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15.

RARE TREATS AHEAD FOR MUSIC LOVERS

Sixth Season of the Philadelphia Orchestra Promises to be Most Successful.

EAMES TO SING HERE

Conductor Gericke, of the Boston Orchestra, Has Long List of Novelties for Season.

The sixth season of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Fritz Scheel, conductor, promises to be the most successful of its existence. A very large advance sale of season tickets for the symphony concerts and public rehearsals is reported by the Executive Committee of the association, and the list of subscribers reads like the pages of the Blue Book. The first concerts will be given at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon, October 27, and Saturday evening, October 28. The symphony will be the Schumann, No. 2, C major, which was last played in this city by the Philadelphia Orchestra on February 13-14, 1903. The other orchestral numbers will be the Tschaikowsky Fantasie Overture, "Hamlet," and A. Liadow's "Baba-Jaga"—tone painting from a Russian Folk March.

Emile Sauret, the assisting artist at these concerts, will play the Dvorak Concerto for violin and orchestra, in A minor, and Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso.

At the first descriptive concert to be given at the Broad Street Theatre, on Tuesday afternoon, November 14, the subject will be "The Orchestra and Its Instruments." The orchestra, under Conductor Scheel, will supply the musical illustrations, and W. J. Henderson, of the New York Sun, will furnish the comment.

Mme. Emma Eames, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be heard in recital at the Academy of Music on Saturday afternoon, December 2, when she will have the assistance of Amherst Webber, composer and accompanist; Josef Hollman, cellist, and M. Gogorza, baritone. Mme. Eames' selections will be airs from the composers with which her fame is most closely identified, and songs of a lighter and more popular quality. Schubert and Schumann, Brahms and Richard Strauss will be included; but so, also, will be Horatio Parker, Tosti and perhaps a few of the contemporary lyricists. Eames' tour opened last week in Bangor, and her appearances thus far have been a succession of triumphs.

Conductor Gericke, of the Boston Orchestra, has a long line of novelties for the organization's forthcoming series of concerts here. The list includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, Amherst Webber's Symphony in E major, a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South," and two storter pieces by Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin"; new or unknown symphonic poems by Glazounov, Ernst Boehe and Dvorak, entitled, respectively, "Le Kremlin," "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch" and "Die Waldtaube," and new or unknown overtures by Busoni, Max Schillings, Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Lustspiel," "Der Pfeifertag" and "Le Tasso"; also, an unknown overture by Smetana, called "Libussa."

The list of soloists comprises Mme. Gadski, who, with Ellison Van Hoose, will appear at the first concert in a Wagnerian programme; Elois Ruegger, Timothee Adamowski and Henri Marteau. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert.

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra is larger than ever, as it comprises 96 performers. Professor Willy Hess continues to be concert-master, the place he filled with such striking success last year. There will be, however, a new principal cellist in Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra, of Munich; a new first bassoon in Peter Sadony, of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn in Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra.

The Executive Committee of the Eurydice Chorus has changed the dates of rehearsals from Friday to Monday afternoons. Two concerts are to be given during the season, on Thursday evening, January 4, and Monday afternoon, April 23, at Horticultural Hall. Conductor Scheel will begin rehearsals on Monday afternoon, November 13.

Henry B. Gurney, the well-known tenor, has resigned his church positions—St. James' Roman Catholic, Thirty-eighth and Chestnut streets; Church of the Saviour, Thirty-eighth and Ludlow streets, and Adath Jeshurun, Seventh street and Columbia avenue—and canceled all engagements for the coming winter to spend a year in Europe.

He will pass the winter in Milan, studying Italian music at the Royal Conservatory. In the spring he will go to Paris to be under the tuition of Jean de Reszke.

NORTH

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first programme of the Boston Symphony series of concerts in the Academy of Music, which is to be given on Monday evening, November 6, will appeal to the many lovers of Wagner who live in Philadelphia, since it is to be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. The first number, it is announced, will be the "Huldigungsmarsch." Then will follow the overture and Bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhauser." After the prize song from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Bruennhilde from the first act of "Goetterdaemmerung," Siegfried's death and funeral march, and Bruennhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It will be interesting for Philadelphians to hear once more Mme. Gadski in Wagnerian music after the notable success she achieved as Bruennhilde in Munich last summer.

[77]

First Established Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
RECORD

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

First Boston Symphony Concert a Week Hence.

GADSKI THE CHIEF SOLOIST

Ellison Van Hoose Will Aid in Notable Wagnerian Program. Irish Lassies to Render Folk Songs.

Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra will cut its local season in half this year, omitting the Wednesday evening performances entirely, there is ample reason to look for compensation in the fine musical treats to be offered in the Monday series. It is as if there had been a condensation, rather than an elision.

On Monday evening of next week the first of the five concerts which have been spared Philadelphia will be given at the Academy of Music. And it is no reflection whatever upon our own worthy symphonic organization to say that a more welcome program has not been outlined in all this city's long list of similar affairs. Such, at least, it appears from the preliminary announcement made. Johanna Gadski, the delightful operatic soprano, will be the chief soloist. She will be heard for the first time in this country since her success in Germany. In the two great scenes from "Goetterdaemmerung"—the parting scene from Act I and the immolation scene from Act III.

Since she last sang here Mme. Gadski has been making history for herself. On her return to Germany last summer she was asked to sing at the operatic festival held in Cologne. There she sang the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." Her success was not unstonishing to Americans, who have known for years the beauty of her art and the glory of her voice, but in Cologne, where she had never sung before, she came as a revelation. Later in the summer Mme. Gadski went to Munich, where she sang the three Bruennhildes in the third performance of "The Ring" at the great festival in the Prinz Rengenten Theatre, and also the Countess in Mozart's work, again winning a noteworthy triumph.

That excellent tenor, Ellison Van Hoose, will assist and the orchestra program will be in keeping.

The Boston forces this year number ninety-six performers, the largest traveling orchestra in the world. Herr Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, has already proved himself very worthy; the wood-winds have been strengthened by the famous bassoon player, Herr Sadony, of Cologne, and Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, has likewise made an immediate reputation.

LEDGER
OCT 15 1905

The subscription sale for the five concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens tomorrow at Heppe's. The first concert will be on Monday evening, November 6, when a Wagner programme will be given, with Madame Gadski and Ellison van Hoose as soloists. The December concert will be conducted by Vincent d'Indy, the French composer, and will probably be devoted to music of the modern French school. The orchestra is now larger than ever, with ninety-six players in all, and may be expected to maintain the very high standard of execution which Mr. Gericke has impressed upon it.

PHILADELPHIA RECO
OCTOBER 15, 1905.

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Emile Sauret to Play a Dvorak Violin Concerto.

THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA

Program for the Opening Concert Announced—A Schumann Symphony Its Chief Orchestral Feature—Fine Patronage.

The advance sale of Philadelphia Orchestra season tickets, which opened last Thursday to new subscribers, gives auspicious indication of the success of the coming season. Never in the six years of the orchestra's history has the patronage been so widespread. This not only speaks well for the local pride of Philadelphians in so enthusiastically supporting their own organization, but it indicates with striking emphasis the growing interest that has been aroused in this city in things musical. To attend a series of 18 evening symphony concerts, the same number of matinees, or both, bespeaks something more than pretended admiration for a form of entertainment, a taste for which was in the past usually supposed to indicate a kind of supercilious culture. To patronize 36 or 18 concerts in a winter argues a real love of music. Poseurs would not erect their wall of pretense on so elaborate a foundation.

The opening concerts, on the afternoon of October 27 and the evening of October 28, promise to be of exceptional interest. A notably attractive program has been provided, while the soloist, Emile Sauret, should be, as one of the most famed of French violinists, a strong artistic magnet. M. Sauret is said somewhat to resemble the exquisite Jacques Thibaud in style, but the former, whatever his abilities, is, of course, a virtuoso of far greater experience. He is considerably M. Thibaud's senior. The concerto will be Dvorak's A minor, a popular modern work, rich in characteristic harmonies and sparkling with the Bohemian composer's peculiar brilliancy of orchestration. For his second number Saint-Saens' familiar

At the immediately following concerts on November 3 and 4 Louise Homer will be the soloist, succeeded by Johanna Gadski on November 10 and 11, and Alfred Reisenauer on November 17 and 18. The order of the brilliant array of other virtuosi to appear with the orchestra this season is as yet uncertain. It is announced, however, that the series of descriptive lecture concerts will begin on the afternoon of Tuesday, November 14 at the Broad Street Theatre. On that occasion W. J. Henderson, musical critic of the New York Sun will talk on "The Orchestra and Its Instruments", Conductor Scheel's men will supply the musical illustrations.

The following is the list of boxholders at the orchestra's concerts for the coming season:

AFTERNOON AND EVENING.

Alexander Van Rensselaer,	J. Levering Jones.
Richard Y. Cook.	A. M. Chandler.
J. George Klemm,	John S. Newbold.
Samuel T. Bodine.	Mrs. A. J. Cassatt.

AFTERNOON.

Mrs. Thomas McKean.	Mrs. J. William White.
Mrs. Thomas Leaming, Jr.,	Mrs. C. A. Griscom.
Mrs. H. L. Kerbaugh.	Mrs. H. P. McKean.
Mrs. Geo. Dallas Dixon.	Mrs. Walter Horstmann.
Nathan A. Taylor,	Mrs. Washington H.
Mrs. Horace Eugene Smith.	Mrs. Monroe Smith.
Mrs. W. W. Atterbury.	Mrs. Charles W. Henry,
Mrs. Charles Edward Ingersoll.	Mrs. W. J. Serrill.
Mrs. Samuel F. Houston,	Mrs. Winthrop Sargeant.
	Mrs. S. M. Tomlinson.

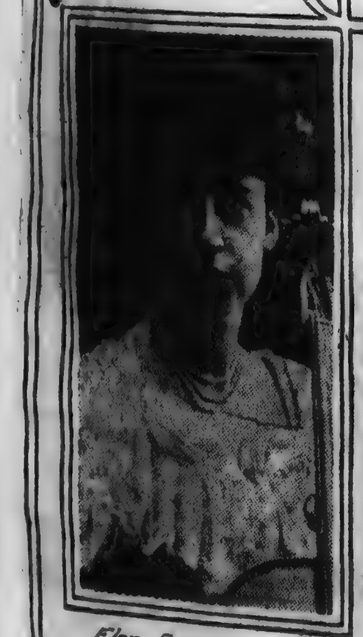
EVENING.

Mrs. Charles B. Coxe,	Miss Anne Thomson.
Mrs. Wm. Simpson, Jr.,	W. P. Hensley.
Mrs. Thomas S. Harrison,	Mrs. Frank H. Rosengarten,
Miss Nina Lea.	Mrs. George W. Childs Drexel.
James W. Paul, Jr.,	John F. Braun.
Thomas McKean,	George C. Thomas.
John H. Converse.	Miss Mary McMurtrie.
John Gribbel.	Mrs. George Biddle.
Francis T. Sully Darley.	L. G. Fause.
C. Hartman Kuhn.	Frederick McOwen.
Henry Whelen, Jr.,	George C. Hetzel.
Mrs. Harold Ellis Yarnall.	Theodore Voorhees.
Mrs. Henry S. Jeanes.	Miss Mary K. Gibson.

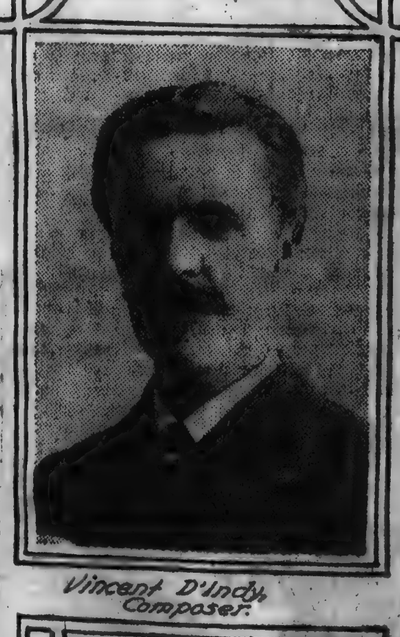
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
PHILA., PA
OCT 22 1905

The first program of the Boston Symphony series of concerts in the Academy of Music, which will be given on Monday evening, November 6, will appeal to the many lovers of Wagner who live in Philadelphia. It will be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. As planned now the first number will be the "Huldigungsmarsch." Then will follow the overture and Bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhauser." After the "Preislied" from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Brunnhilde from the first act of "Gotterdammerung" and Siegfried's death and funeral march and Brunnhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It will be most interesting for Philadelphians to hear once more Mme. Gadski in Wagnerian music after the tremendous success she had as Brunnhilde in Munich last Summer.

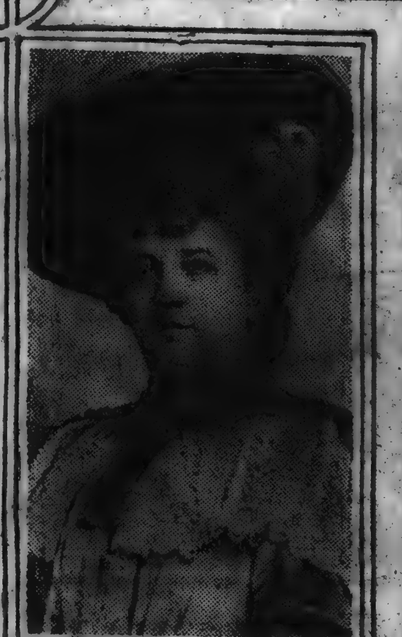
STARS TO COME HERE WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY



Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist.



Vincent D'Indy, Composer.



Johanna Gadski, Soprano.

Henry Marteau, Violinist.

PUBLIC LEDGER
OCT 29 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make only five appearances in Philadelphia this season, the Wednesday evening series having been shifted to Washington. The concerts at the Academy of Music will therefore occur on Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. The force of players will be increased to 96, and some particularly interesting features are to be offered. Not the least of these will be the appearance at the December concert of Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who will conduct the orchestra on that evening. Mr. Gericke will, of course, conduct the other four concerts. The soloists are to be Mme. Gadski, who, with Ellison Van Hoose, will appear in a Wagnerian program at the first concert; Elsa Ruegger, Timothee Adamowski and Henry Marteau. No soloist is announced for the [illegible] concerts.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TELEGRAPH
PHILA., PA
OCT 21 1905

Ye Gods! ye Wagnerites. The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6, will be devoted entirely to the works of your favorite composer. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski, fresh from her triumphs in Munich, where for the first time in Germany last summer she sang "Brunhilde" in the festival performance of "The Ring," and Ellison Van Hoose, the foremost of American tenors.

The general scheme of the programme provides for the Bacchanale and duet from the first act of the Paris version of "Tannhauser," the parting duet from the first act of "Goetterdammerung," Siegfried's Death, the Funeral March and the Immolation scene from the third act of the closing drama of the "Ring."

OCTOBER 15, 1905.

A FRENCH MUSICAL STAR

Vincent D'Indy and the New Gallic Symphonic School.

HIS FIRST AMERICAN VISIT

Something About the Ardent Disciple of Cesar Franck—Composer of Daring Harmonies and Novel Orchestration.

It is fortunate, if only for restoring equilibrium to the general opinion of Americans concerning the apparently preponderating importance of German composers in the field of modern music, that the coming season will see the importation of Paul Marie Theodore Vincent D'Indy. M. D'Indy is justly accounted the leader of the ultra-modern school of symphonic and chamber music in France, and his appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the principal cities of the East, including Philadelphia, cannot fail to excite a widespread interest. For the first time in many years a French musician will be among us whose fame does not rest upon virtuostic abilities, but solely upon his talents as a composer. Within the past two years alone we have been visited by Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner, two figures of notable eminence in the history of modern German composition. Going a few years farther back one can recall the Russian Tschaikowsky and the Bohemian Dvorak. But France, at least as regards the bodily manifestation here of her leading composers, has seemed out of the race entirely. M. D'Indy's presence has, indeed, been badly needed for some time. It will, it may be presumed, be instrumental in focusing the popular attention upon a school of music well worthy of study and interested regard.

"I believe in God, Mozart and Beethoven," runs the oft-quoted German musical creed. M. D'Indy has revised this. Bach, Beethoven and Cesar Franck compose his triumvirate of musical heroes, a strictly mundane array which must not, however, be regarded as in any way reflecting on his religious opinions. For Beethoven and Bach M. D'Indy possesses infinite respect and admiration, but his relation to Cesar Franck is something much more intimate. Franck, the great Belgian mystic, was not only his teacher, he was the founder of the school of which M. D'Indy is now the acknowledged head—the school that is restoring individuality to French music and breaking the bonds of uninspired ecclecticism that sapped its vitality throughout very nearly all the latter part of the nineteenth century. Within the past two decades there have arisen men of genuine originality such as Chabrier, Debussy and Charpentier. M. D'Indy is perhaps the greatest of them all, just as Franck in the earlier days was the "little father" to his younger disciples.

Vincent D'Indy, for the Paul Marie Theodore, is seldom in evidence, was born in Paris, March 27, 1852. In 1872 he became for the first time intimately associated with Cesar Franck, studying under him for the next three years in the Paris Conservatoire. Later he was Franck's private pupil, imbibing from the master that immense fund of technical knowledge concerning counterpoint and harmony which at times suggests Richard Strauss. There was, however, with Cesar Franck a certain basic conservatism which, mingling oddly with his modern love of unique orchestration, gave to his work such marked individuality and charm.

Following his tutelage under the Franco-Belgian, D'Indy, with Saint-Saens and Faure, founded the Society Nationale de Musique, which did yeoman work in fostering the course of chamber and symphonic music in France. In 1895 he refused the position of Professor of Composition in the Conservatoire and the succeeding year established, with Bordes and Guilmant, the Schola Cantorum, of which he is now director and Professor of Composition. A great deal of his time is devoted to work in this institution, although M. D'Indy is rich and quite removed from the absolute necessity of earning his own living. His home on the Avenue de Villars, in Paris, is said to be a model of elegance and good taste.

In the line of composition M. D'Indy's achievements are varied. It is in symphonic and chamber music, however, that he has won his greatest laurels. His Second Symphony in B flat, played in America last year by both the Boston and Philadelphia orchestras, is one of the most remarkable works in the entire range of modern music. The discussion that has been waged over its merits and demerits (according to the point of view), has made it one of the mooted topics of the hour. Some saw in its strange harmonies a subtle and exquisite poetry—others sheer insanity. This last, however, is an ancient cry against all innovations in music. Besides a considerable variety of chamber music pieces M. D'Indy has written two operas concerning which little has crossed the Atlantic. They are "Fervaal," written between 1889 and 1895, and "L'Etranger," composed in 1903.

M. D'Indy will be in Philadelphia on December 4, when he will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of modern French music.

First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
RECORD

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

First Boston Symphony Concert a Week Hence.

GADSKI THE CHIEF SOLOIST

Ellison Van Hoose Will Aid in Notable Wagnerian Program. Irish Lassies to Render Folk Songs.

Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra will cut its local season in half this year, omitting the Wednesday evening performances entirely, there is ample reason to look for compensation in the fine musical treats to be offered in the Monday series. It is as if there had been a condensation, rather than an omission.

On Monday evening of next week the first of the five concerts which have been spared Philadelphia will be given at the Academy of Music. And it is no reflection whatever upon our own worthy symphonic organization to say that a more welcome program has not been outlined in all this city's long list of similar affairs. Such, at least, it appears from the preliminary announcement made. Johanna Gadski, the delightful operatic soprano, will be the chief soloist. She will be heard for the first time in this country since her success in Germany, in the two great scenes from "Goetterdaemmerung"—the parting scene from Act I and the immolation scene from Act III.

Since she last sang here Mme. Gadski has been making history for herself. On her return to Germany last summer she was asked to sing at the operatic festival held in Cologne. There she sang the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." Her success was not unastonishing to Americans, who have known for years the beauty of her art and the glory of her voice, but in Cologne, where she had never sung before, she came as a revelation. Later in the summer Mme. Gadski went to Munich, where she sang the three Bruennhildes in the third performance of "The Ring" at the great festival in the Prinz Rengenten Theatre, and also the Countess in Mozart's work, again winning a noteworthy triumph.

That excellent tenor, Ellison Van Hoose, will assist and the orchestra program will be in keeping.

The Boston forces this year number ninety-six performers, the largest traveling orchestra in the world. Herr Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, has already proved himself very worthy; the wood-winds have been strengthened by the famous bassoon player, Herr Sedony, of Cologne, and Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, has likewise made an immediate reputation.

LEDGER

The subscription sale for the five concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens tomorrow at Heppe's. The first concert will be on Monday evening, November 6, when a Wagner programme will be given, with Madame Gadski and Ellison van Hoose as soloists. The December concert will be conducted by Vincent d'Indy, the French composer, and will probably be devoted to music of the modern French school. The orchestra is now larger than ever, with ninety-six players in all, and may be expected to maintain the very high standard of execution which Mr. Gericke has impressed upon it.

* * *

PHILADELPHIA RECO
OCTOBER 15, 1905.

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Emile Sauret to Play a Dvorak Violin Concerto.

THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA

Program for the Opening Concert Announced—A Schumann Symphony Its Chief Orchestral Feature—Fine Patronage.

The advance sale of Philadelphia Orchestra season tickets, which opened last Thursday to new subscribers, gives auspicious indication of the success of the coming season. Never in the six years of the orchestra's history has the patronage been so widespread. This not only speaks well for the local pride of Philadelphians in so enthusiastically supporting their own organization, but it indicates with striking emphasis the growing interest that has been aroused in this city in things musical. To attend a series of 18 evening symphony concerts, the same number of matinees, or both, bespeaks something more than pretended admiration for a form of entertainment, a taste for which was in the past usually supposed to indicate a kind of supercilious culture. To patronize 36 or 18 concerts in a winter argues a real love of music. Poseurs would not erect their wall of pretense on so elaborate a foundation.

The opening concerts, on the afternoon of October 27 and the evening of October 28, promise to be of exceptional interest. A notably attractive program has been provided, while the soloist, Emile Sauret, should be, as one of the most famed of French violinists, a strong artistic magnet. M. Sauret is said somewhat to resemble the exquisite Jacques Thibaud in style, but the former, whatever his abilities, is, of course, a virtuoso of far greater experience. He is considerably M. Thibaud's senior. The concerto will be Dvorak's A minor, a popular modern work, rich in characteristic harmonies and sparkling with the Bohemian composer's peculiar brilliancy of orchestration. For his second number M. Sauret will play Saint-Saens' familiar "Rondo Capriccioso."

program will be Saint-Saens' wonderful Symphony No. 2 in C minor, last played by the Philadelphia Orchestra on February 13 and 14, 1903; Tschaikowsky's "Fantasie Overture," "Hamlet," and A. Liadow's "Baba-Jaga," a so-called "tone-painting" based upon a Russian folk march.

At the immediately following concerts on November 3 and 4, Louise Homer will be the soloist, succeeded by Johanna Gadski on November 10 and 11, and Alfred Reisenauer on November 17 and 18. The order of the brilliant array of other virtuosi to appear with the orchestra this season is as yet uncertain. It is announced, however, that the series of descriptive lecture concerts will begin on the afternoon of Tuesday, November 14 at the Broad Street Theatre. On that occasion W. J. Henderson, musical critic of the New York Sun will talk on "The Orchestra and Its Instruments" Conductor Scheel's men will supply the musical illustrations.

The following is the list of boxholders at the orchestra's concerts for the coming season:

AFTERNOON AND EVENING.

Alexander Van Rensselaer,	J. Levering Jones.
Richard Y. Cook.	A. M. Chandler.
J. George Kleinm.	John S. Newbold.
Samuel T. Bodine.	Mrs. A. J. Cassatt.

AFTERNOON.

Mrs. Thomas McKean.	Mrs. J. William White.
Mrs. Thomas Leaming, Jr.,	Mrs. C. A. Griscom.
Mrs. H. L. Kerbaugh.	Mrs. H. P. McKean.
Mrs. Geo. Dallas Dixon,	Mrs. Walter Horstmann.
Nathan A. Taylor,	Mrs. Washington H.
Mrs. Horace Eugene Smith,	Mrs. Monroe Smith,
Mrs. W. W. Atterbury.	Mrs. Charles W. Henry,
Mrs. Charles Edward Ingersoll,	Mrs. W. J. Serrill,
Mrs. Samuel F. Houston,	Mrs. Winthrop Sargeant.
	Mrs. S. M. Tomlinson.

EVENING.

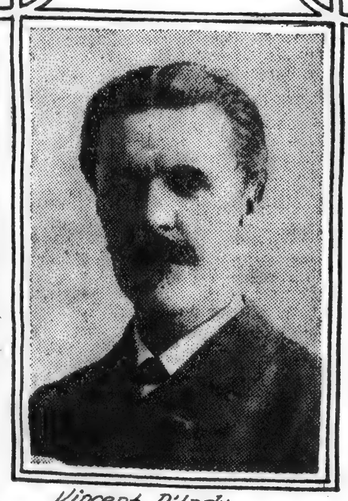
Mrs. Charles B. Coxe.	Miss Anne Thomson.
Mrs. Wm. Simpson, Jr.,	W. P. Henszey.
Mrs. Thomas S. Harrison,	Mrs. Frank H. Rosengarten.
Miss Nina Lea.	Mrs. George W. Childs Drexel.
James W. Paul, Jr.,	John F. Braun.
Thomas McKean.	George C. Thomas.
John H. Converse.	Miss Mary McMurtrie.
John Gribbel.	Mrs. George Biddle.
Francis T. Sully Darley,	L. G. Fouse,
C. Hartman Kuhn.	Frederick McOwen.
Henry Whelen, Jr.,	George C. Hetzel.
Mrs. Harold Ellis Yarnall.	Theodore Voorhees.
Mrs. Henry S. Jeanes,	Miss Mary K. Gibson.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS
PA
OCT 2 1905

The first program of the Boston Symphony series of concerts in the Academy of Music, which will be given on Monday evening, November 6, will appeal to the many lovers of Wagner who live in Philadelphia. It will be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. As planned now the first number will be the "Huldigungsmarsch." Then will follow the overture and Bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhauser." After the "Preislied" from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Brunnhilde from the first act of "Gotterdammerung" and Siegfried's death and funeral march and Brunnhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It will be most interesting for Philadelphians to hear once more Mme. Gadski in Wagnerian music after the tremendous success she had as Brunnhilde in Munich last Summer.

STARS TO COME HERE WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist.



Vincent D'Indy, Composer.

Johanna Gadski, Soprano

Henry Marteau, Violinist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make only five appearances in Philadelphia this season, the Wednesday evening series having been shifted to Washington. The concerts at the Academy of Music will therefore occur on Monday evenings, November 6, December 4, January 8, February 12 and March 12. The force of players will be increased to 96, and some particularly interesting features are to be offered. Not the least of these will be the appearance at the December concert of Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who will conduct the orchestra on that evening. Mr. Gericke will, of course, conduct the other four concerts. The soloists are to be Mme. Gadski, who, with Ellison Van Hoose, will appear in a Wagnerian program at the first concert; Elsa Ruegger, Timothie Adamowski and Henri Marteau. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PRESS

Ohez! ye Wagnerites. The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6, will be devoted entirely to the works of your favorite composer. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski, fresh from her triumphs in Munich, where for the first time in Germany last summer she sang "Brunhilde" in the festival performance of "The Ring," and Ellison Van Hoose, the foremost of American tenors.

The general scheme of the programme provides for the Bacchanale and duet from the first act of the Paris version of "Tannhauser," the parting duet from the first act of "Goetterdammerung," Siegfried's Death, the Funeral March and the Immolation scene from the third act of the closing drama of the "Ring."

PHILADELPHIA RECORD
OCTOBER 15, 1905.

A FRENCH MUSICAL STAB

Vincent D'Indy and the New Gallic Symphonic School.

HIS FIRST AMERICAN VISIT

Something About the Ardent Disciple of Cesar Franck—Composer of Daring Harmonies and Novel Orchestration.

It is fortunate, if only for restoring equilibrium to the general opinion of Americans concerning the apparently preponderating importance of German composers in the field of modern music, that the coming season will see the importation of Paul Marie Theodore Vincent D'Indy. M. D'Indy is justly accounted the leader of the ultra-modern school of symphonic and chamber music in France, and his appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the principal cities of the East, including Philadelphia, cannot fail to excite a widespread interest. For the first time in many years a French musician will be among us whose fame does not rest upon virtuostic abilities, but solely upon his talents as a composer. Within the past two years alone we have been visited by Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner, two figures of notable eminence in the history of modern German composition. Going a few years farther back one can recall the Russian Tschaikowsky and the Bohemian Dvorak. But France, at least as regards the bodily manifestation here of her leading composers, has seemed out of the race entirely. M. D'Indy's presence has, indeed, been badly needed for some time. It will, it may be presumed, be instrumental in focusing the popular attention upon a school of music well worthy of study and interested regard.

"I believe in God, Mozart and Beethoven," runs the oft-quoted German musical creed. M. D'Indy has revised this. Bach, Beethoven and Cesar Franck compose his triumvirate of musical heroes, a strictly mundane array which must not, however, be regarded as in any way reflecting on his religious opinions. For Beethoven and Bach M. D'Indy possesses infinite respect and admiration, but his relation to Cesar Franck is something much more intimate. Franck, the great Belgian mystic, was not only his teacher, he was the founder of the school of which M. D'Indy is now the acknowledged head—the school that is restoring individuality to French music and breaking the bonds of uninspired ecclecticism that sapped its vitality throughout very nearly all the latter part of the nineteenth century. Within the past two decades there have arisen men of genuine originality such as Chabrier, Debussy and Charpentier. M. D'Indy is perhaps the greatest of them all, just as Franck in the earlier days was the "little father" to his younger disciples.

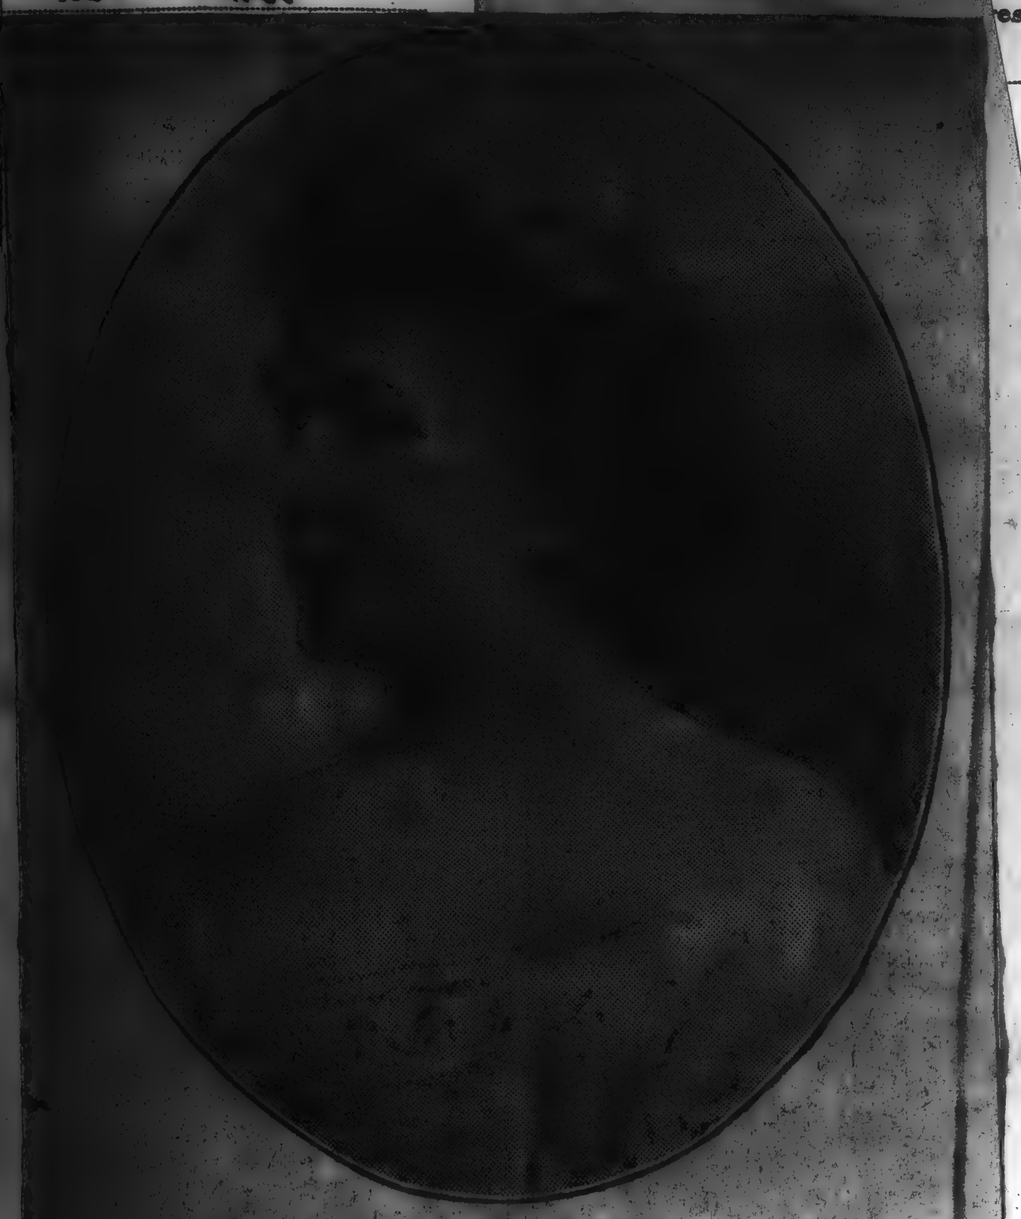
Vincent D'Indy, for the Paul Marie Theodore, is seldom in evidence, was born in Paris, March 27, 1852. In 1872 he became for the first time intimately associated with Cesar Franck, studying under him for the next three years in the Paris Conservatoire. Later he was Franck's private pupil, imbibing from the master that immense fund of technical knowledge concerning counterpoint and harmony which at times suggests Richard Strauss. There was, however, with Cesar Franck a certain basic conservatism which, mingling oddly with his modern love of unique orchestration, gave to his work such marked individuality and charm.

Following his tutelage under the Franco-Belgian, D'Indy, with Saint-Saens and Faure, founded the Society Nationale de Musique, which did yeoman work in fostering the course of chamber and symphonic music in France. In 1895 he refused the position of Professor of Composition in the Conservatoire and the succeeding year established, with Bordes and Guilmant, the Schola Cantorum, of which he is now director and Professor of Composition. A great deal of his time is devoted to work in this institution, although M. D'Indy is rich and quite removed from the absolute necessity of earning his own living. His home on the Avenue de Villars, in Paris, is said to be a model of elegance and good taste.

In the line of composition M. D'Indy's achievements are varied. It is in symphonic and chamber music, however, that he has won his greatest laurels. His Second Symphony in B flat, played in America last year by both the Boston and Philadelphia orchestras, is one of the most remarkable works in the entire range of modern music. The discussion that has been waged over its merits and demerits (according to the point of view), has made it one of the mooted topics of the hour. Some saw in its strange harmonies a subtle and exquisite poetry—others sheer insanity. This last, however, is an ancient cry against all innovations in music. Besides a considerable variety of chamber music pieces M. D'Indy has written two operas concerning which little has crossed the Atlantic. They are "Fervaal," written between 1889 and 1895, and "L'Etranger," composed in 1903.

M. D'Indy will be in Philadelphia on December 4, when he will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of modern French music.

RECORD
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 — 1905



JOHANNA GADSKI

Mme. Gadski will be the soloist to-morrow evening at the first local concert by the Boston Symphony. Oddly enough, she will reappear at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—on these occasions singing with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 — 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, will give the first of its annual series of concerts in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening. The visits of this superb organization have always been warmly welcomed by music-lovers, and never more so than since orchestral music has become an established institution in Philadelphia and is listened to by a constantly extending public with increasing appreciation. To this appreciation the Boston Orchestra has contributed more than we can readily repay. For several years we were almost entirely dependent upon it, and through it we learned the necessity of an orchestra of our own and were inspired to secure it. The more fully this need is supplied, the more complete must be our recognition of the splendid example from which we have learned so much. Its visits are a fine stimulus, and this season each one is likely to bring some feature of particular interest.

* * *

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA. PA
OCT 22 1905

SOME SOLOISTS O

Olga Samaroff, Pianist

THE musical season will open this week with the first public rehearsal of the Philadelphia Orchestra, followed by the first symphony concert on Saturday evening. The symphony chosen by Mr. Scheel for the opening is the romantic second of Schumann, in C major, a very noble composition, which has not been heard for two or three years. The other orchestral numbers are "Baba Jaga," a "tone painting from a Russian folk march," by Liadow, and Tschaikowsky's "fantasie overture" of "Hamlet." These have not before been played at these concerts, and Mr. Scheel adds to the Liadow piece the well remembered "Swan of Tuonela," by Sibelius, the Finnish composer. The soloist at these concerts will be Emil Sauret, one of the great violinists of the day, who will play the concerto in A minor by Dvorak and also Saint-Saens's brilliant "Rondo Capriccioso." The other soloists who are to appear with the Philadelphia Orchestra during the season have already been spoken of in the PUBLIC LEDGER. Besides the most distinguished violinists and 'cellists who will be in the country this winter they include a notable group of pianists and of singers. As the season opens with a very much larger subscription than ever before there is every promise of popular success as well as of high artistic interest.

* * *

The programme of the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6, will be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. The first number will be the "Huldigungsmarsch," followed by the overture and bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhaeuser." After the "Preislied" from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Bruennhilde from the first act of "Goetterdaemmerung," and Siegfried's death and funeral march and Bruennhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It will be interesting to hear Mme. Gadski again in Wagnerian music after the success she had as Bruennhilde in Munich last summer. The sale of season tickets for the five concerts is still in progress.

* * *

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 — 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, will give the first of its annual series of concerts in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening. The visits of this superb organization have always been warmly welcomed by music-lovers, and never more so than since orchestral music has become an established institution in Philadelphia and is listened to by a constantly extending public with increasing appreciation. To this appreciation the Boston Orchestra has contributed more than we can readily repay. For several years we were almost entirely dependent upon it, and through it we learned the necessity of an orchestra of our own and were inspired to secure it. The more fully this need is supplied, the more complete must be our recognition of the splendid example from which we have learned so much. Its visits are a fine stimulus, and this season each one is likely to bring some feature of particular interest.

* * *

TELEGRAPH
PHILA. PA
OCT 14 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is this year paying particular attention to the latter-day French school of music. Quite a cult has arisen in the Hub and anything with the modern French stamp is welcomed with open arms. We in Philadelphia will get some of this. Vincent d'Indy, the leader of the school, will conduct one concert here and we may look forward to being enlightened as to the French idea of French music. His programme will be made up almost entirely from this school.

Mr. Gericke will, of course, conduct the other four concerts, and for them he has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be a judicious admixture of novelties, which will be chosen from the list he has prepared for the Boston concerts. This list includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, Amherst Webber's Symphony in E major, a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South," and two shorter pieces by Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" new or little-known symphonic poems by Glazounov, Ernst Boehe and Dvorak, entitled respectively "Le Kremlin," "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck" and "Die Waldtaube," and new or unknown overtures by Busoni, Max Schillings, Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Lustspiel," "Der Pfeifertag" and "Le Tasse." Also an unknown overture by Smetana called "Libussa."

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra is larger than ever, as it comprises 96 performers. Professor Willy Hess continues to be concertmaster, the place he filled with such striking success last year. There will be, however, a new principal 'cellist in Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra of Munich; a new first bassoon in Peter Sadony, of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn in Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra.

INQUIRER
PHILA. PA
OCT 14 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music to-morrow evening at 8.15. The band this year returns to Philadelphia larger and better than ever. Instead of the ninety-four performers it carried last year on its monthly trips, it now carries ninety-six. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Mr. Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. Mr. Warnke made an extraordinarily successful debut as a soloist in Boston week before last. A new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, seems to have given the finishing touch to the wonderful perfection of the wood winds. His tone is remarkably soft and mellow and he is a virtuoso of the highest class. His reputation of having been the best bassoon in Germany seems to have been fully sustained. The new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich, is a most valuable addition to the brass of the orchestra, and now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance, as it has two firsts in all the different groups of wind instruments.

The program for the first concert is made up chiefly of excerpts from the music dramas of Wagner, and in order to give it there will be two singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. Neither needs introduction here. Mme. Gadski, who in a very few years has risen to the foremost rank of dramatic sopranos, may almost be considered a native, so much of her career has been spent in this city. Her recent triumphs in Germany will only increase the interest in her appearance. Mr. Van Hoose is one of the best tenors this country ever produced and his success in singing Wagner gives him a position quite his own. The program will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and duet from Tannhaeuser (Paris version).
Preislied—Die Meistersinger.
Siegfried and Bruennhilde—Goetterdaemmerung, Act I.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March—Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.
Closing Scene—Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.

TELEGRAPH
PHILA. PA
NOV 4 1905

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Monday evening at the Academy of Music ought to make a particularly strong appeal to Philadelphians. It affect Wagner a great deal in this city and really think we are great lovers of and so when an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes here gives an evening made up almost entirely of the great master's works there is no doubt that we will turn in full force show our appreciation of it. The programme for Monday night will be:—

Huldigungsmarsch.
Elisabeth's aria, from opening act (Paris version), ... "Tannhaeuser"
..... "Die Meistersinger" and Bruennhilde
"Goetterdaemmerung" (Act I)
Death and Funeral March
"Goetterdaemmerung" (Act III)
Scene, ... "Goetterdaemmerung" (Act III)
Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van year the orchestra returns to Phil... larger than ever. Instead of the ...our performers it carried last year ...thly trips, it now carries ninety-... changes in the personnel have ...ree. There is a new principal ... Mr. Heinrich Warnke, late o... Mr. Warnke made a successful ... soloist in Boston week before ... new first bassoon is Mr. Sadony, ... and the new alternate first ... Hess, like Mr. Warnke, ... Kaim Orchestra of Munich, ... is absolutely independent ... assistance, and it has two ... in the different groups of wind ...

BULLETIN
PHILA. PA
OCT 21 1905

Philadelphia lovers of Wagner will be interested to know that the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6, will be devoted entirely to the works of that composer. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The general scheme of the program provides for the Bacchanale and duet from the first act of "Tannhaeuser," the parting duet from the first act of "Gotterdammerung," "Siegfried's Death," the "Funeral March" and the "Immolation" scene, from the third act of the closing drama of the "Ring."

First Established and Most Complete Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
BULLETIN
PHILA. PA
OCT 28 1905

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6. The program will be chiefly Wagnerian, and will bring as soloists two favorite singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. Since she last sang here, Gadski has been adding to her fame abroad, having appeared with great success at the operatic festival in Cologne, and in Munich, where she sang the three Brunnhildes in the "Ring," and the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." This will be Gadski's first appearance in America since her return. Her numbers will be two scenes from "Gotterdammerung"—the parting scene from Act I and the Immolation scene from Act III. The Boston Orchestra returns this year stronger than ever, having been increased to ninety-six players, said to be the largest number that travels with an orchestra in the world.

—o—

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
RECORD
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Gericke's Organization to Open Its Local Season.

MME. GADSKI CHIEF SOLOIST

A Wagnerian Program Which Promises an Unusual Treat. Scenes From "Goetterdaemmerung" to Be a Feature.

To-morrow evening, at the Academy of Music will mark the opening of the local season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Only five concerts are to be given here this season by this fine organization, thus cutting in half the former allotment. But there promises to be recompense in the special brilliancy of each affair, a promise which the program for the initial concert supports admirably.

Gericke's band this year carried two additional performers, making 96 in all, which, it is credibly averred, constitutes the largest traveling orchestra in existence. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. Mr. Warnke made a successful debut as a soloist in Boston week before last. A new first bassoon, M. Sadony, of Cologne, seems to have given the finishing touch to the perfection of the wood-winds. His tone is remarkably soft and mellow and his reputation of having been the best bassoon in Germany seems to have been fairly sustained. The new alternate first horn, Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra of Munch, is a valuable addition to the brasses of the orchestra and now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance.

The program for the first concert will make a strong appeal to music-lovers. It is made up chiefly of excerpts from the music-dramas of Wagner, and in order to give it there will be two singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. Neither needs introduction here. Mme. Gadski has in a very few years risen to the foremost rank of dramatic sopranos, and her recent triumphs in Germany will only increase the interest in her appearance. Mr. Van Hoose is one of the best known tenors this country ever produced. The program will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and Duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris Version)
Preislied, "Die Meistersinger"
Siegfried and Bruennhilde, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act I
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March "Goetterdaemmerung," Act III
Closing Scene ... "Goetterdaemmerung," Act III

RECORD
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 — 1905

JOHANNA GADSKI

Mme. Gadski will be the soloist to-morrow evening at the first local concert by the Boston Symphony. Oddly enough, she will reappear at the Academy of Music on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—on these occasions singing with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, will give the first of its annual series of concerts in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening. The visits of this superb organization have always been warmly welcomed by music-lovers, and never more so than since orchestral music has become an established institution in Philadelphia and is listened to by a constantly extending public with increasing appreciation. To this appreciation the Boston Orchestra has contributed more than we can readily repay. For several years we were almost entirely dependent upon it, and through it we learned the necessity of an orchestra of our own and were inspired to secure it. The more fully this need is supplied, the more complete must be our recognition of the splendid example from which we have learned so much. Its visits are a fine stimulus, and this season each one is likely to bring some feature of particular interest.

* * *

TELEG
ss

The concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Monday evening at the Academy of Music ought to make a particularly strong appeal to Philadelphians. We affect Wagner a great deal in this city and really think we are great lovers of him, and so when an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes here and gives an evening made up almost entirely of the great master's works there is little doubt that we will turn in full force and show our appreciation of it. The programme for Monday night will be:—

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale—Elizabeth's aria, from opening of second act (Paris version)....."Tannhaeuser"
Preislied......"Die Meistersinger"
Siegfried and Bruennhilde "Goetterdaemmerung" (Act I)
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March "Goetterdaemmerung" (Act III)
Closing Scene...."Goetterdaemmerung" (Act III)
Soloists: Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

This year the orchestra returns to Philadelphia larger than ever. Instead of the ninety-four performers it carried last year on its monthly trips, it now carries ninety-six. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Mr. Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. Mr. Warnke made a successful debut as a soloist in Boston week before last. The new first bassoon is Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, and the new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, is from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich. Now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance, and it has two firsts in all the different groups of wind instruments.

PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA. PA
ess

SOME SOLOISTS O

Olga Samaroff, Pianist

THE musical season will open this week with the first public rehearsal of the Philadelphia Orchestra, followed by the first symphony concert on Saturday evening. The symphony chosen by Mr. Scheel for the opening is the romantic second of Schumann, in C major, a very noble composition, which has not been heard for two or three years. The other orchestral numbers are "Baba Jaga," a "tone painting from a Russian folk march," by Liadow, and Tschaikowsky's "fantasie overture" of "Hamlet." These have not before been played at these concerts, and Mr. Scheel adds to the Liadow piece the well remembered "Swan of Tuonele," by Sibelius, the Finnish composer. The soloist at these concerts will be Emil Sauret, one of the great violinists of the day, who will play the concerto in A minor by Dvorak and also Saint-Saens's brilliant "Rondo Capriccioso." The other soloists who are to appear with the Philadelphia Orchestra during the season have already been spoken of in the PUBLIC LEDGER. Besides the most distinguished violinists and 'cellists who will be in the country this winter they include a notable group of pianists and of singers. As the season opens with a very much larger subscription than ever before there is every promise of popular success as well as of high artistic interest.

* * *

The programme of the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6, will be composed entirely of excerpts from Wagner's music dramas. The first number will be the "Huldigungsmarsch," followed by the overture and bacchanale from the Paris version of "Tannhaeuser." After the "Preislied" from "Die Meistersinger" will come the parting scene of Siegfried and Bruennhilde from the first act of "Goetterdaemmerung," and Siegfried's death and funeral march and Bruennhilde's immolation from the last act. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It will be n. interesting to hear Mme. Gadski again i. Wagnerian music after the success she had as Bruennhilde in Munich last summer. The sale of season tickets for the five concerts is still in progress.

* * *

INQUIRER
ss

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music to-morrow evening at 8.15. The band this year returns to Philadelphia larger and better than ever. Instead of the ninety-four performers it carried last year on its monthly trips, it now carries ninety-six. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Mr. Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. Mr. Warnke made an extraordinarily successful debut as a soloist in Boston week before last. A new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, seems to have given the finishing touch to the wonderful perfection of the wood winds. His tone is remarkably soft and mellow and he is a virtuoso of the highest class. His reputation of having been the best bassoon in Germany seems to have been fully sustained. The new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich, is a most valuable addition to the brass of the orchestra, and now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance, as it has two firsts in all the different groups of wind instruments.

The program for the first concert is made up chiefly of excerpts from the music dramas of Wagner, and in order to give it there will be two singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. Neither needs introduction here. Mme. Gadski, who in a very few years has risen to the foremost rank of dramatic sopranos, may almost be considered a native, so much of her career has been spent in this city. Her recent triumphs in Germany will only increase the interest in her appearance. Mr. Van Hoose is one of the best tenors this country ever produced and his success in singing Wagner gives him a position quite his own. The program will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and duet from Tannhaeuser (Paris version).
Preislied—Die Meistersinger.
Siegfried and Bruennhilde—Goetterdaemmerung, Act I.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March—Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.
Closing scene, Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.

BULLETIN
21 1905

Philadelphia lovers of Wagner will be interested to know that the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6, will be devoted entirely to the works of that composer. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The general scheme of the program provides for the Bacchanale and duet from the first act of "Tannhaeuser," the parting duet from the first act of "Gotterdammerung," "Siegfried's Death," the "Funeral March" and the "Immolation" scene, from the third act of the closing drama of the "Ring."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is this year paying particular attention to the latter-day French school of music. Quite a cult has arisen in the Hub and anything with the modern French stamp is welcomed with open arms. We in Philadelphia will get some of this. Vincent d'Indy, the leader of the school, will conduct one concert here and we may look forward to being enlightened as to the French idea of French music. His programme will be made up almost entirely from this school.

Mr. Gericke will, of course, conduct the other four concerts, and for them he has prepared a most attractive set of programmes. There will be a judicious admixture of novelties, which will be chosen from the list he has prepared for the Boston concerts. This list includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, Amherst Webber's Symphony in E major, a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South," and two shorter pieces by Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" new or little-known symphonic poems by Glazounov, Ernst Boehe and Dvorak, entitled respectively "Le Kremlin," "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck" and "Die Waldtaube," and new or unknown overtures by Busoni, Max Schillings, Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Lustspiel," "Der Pfeifertag" and "Le Tasse." Also an unknown overture by Smetana called "Libussa."

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra is larger than ever, as it comprises 96 performers. Professor Willy Hess continues to be concertmaster, the place he filled with such striking success last year. There will be, however, a new principal 'cellist in Heinrich Warnke, who comes from the celebrated Kaim Orchestra of Munich; a new first bassoon in Peter Sadony, of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn in Max Hess, also from the Kaim Orchestra.

First Established and Most Complete
Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
BULLETIN
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Gericke's Organization to Open Its Local Season.

MME. GADSKI CHIEF SOLOIST

A Wagnerian Program Which Promises an Unusual Treat. Scenes From "Goetterdaemmerung" to Be a Feature.

To-morrow evening, at the Academy of Music will mark the opening of the local season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Only five concerts are to be given here this season by this fine organization, thus cutting in half the former allotment. But there promises to be recompense in the special brilliancy of each affair, a promise which the program for the initial concert supports admirably.

Gericke's band this year carried two additional performers, making 96 in all, which, it is credibly averred, constitutes the largest traveling orchestra in existence. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. Mr. Warnke made a successful debut as a soloist in Boston week before last. A new first bassoon, M. Sadony, of Cologne, seems to have given the finishing touch to the perfection of the wood-winds. His tone is remarkably soft and mellow and his reputation of having been the best bassoon in Germany seems to have been fairly sustained. The new alternate first horn, Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra of Munich, is a valuable addition to the brasses of the orchestra and now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance.

The program for the first concert will make a strong appeal to music-lovers. It is made up chiefly of excerpts from the music-dramas of Wagner, and in order to give it there will be two singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. Neither needs introduction here. Mme. Gadski has in a very few years risen to the foremost rank of dramatic sopranos, and her recent triumphs in Germany will only increase the interest in her appearance. Mr. Van Hoose is one of the best known tenors this country ever produced. The program will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and Duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris Version)
Preislied, "Die Meistersinger"
Siegfried and Bruennhilde, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act I
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act III
Closing Scene ..."Goetterdaemmerung," Act III

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Academy of Music on Monday evening, November 6. The program will be chiefly Wagnerian, and will bring as soloists two favorite singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. Since she last sang here, Gadski has been adding to her fame abroad, having appeared with great success at the operatic festival in Cologne, and in Munich, where she sang the three Brunnhildes in the "Ring," and the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." This will be Gadski's first appearance in America since her return. Her numbers will be two scenes from "Gotterdammerung"—the parting scene from Act I and the Immolation scene from Act III. The Boston Orchestra returns this year stronger than ever, having been increased to ninety-six players, said to be the largest number that travels with an orchestra in the world.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
RECORD
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 1905

PRESS
PHILA. PA
NOV 5 1905

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music to-morrow evening at 8.15. The return of this band will be welcomed by its large following of supporters that its years of concerts have made for it in Philadelphia, and the fact that it is to give but five concerts here this Winter instead of the usual ten seems to have but increased the interest in it.

This year it returns to Philadelphia larger and better than ever. Instead of the ninety-four performers it carried last year on its monthly trips, it now carries ninety-six. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Mr. Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. A new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, seems to have given the finishing touch to the wonderful perfection of the wood-winds. The new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra, of Munich, is a most valuable addition to the brass of the orchestra, and now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance, as it has two firsts in all the different groups of wind instruments.

The program for the first concert will make a strong appeal to Philadelphia music lovers and will be popular with all classes of the musical laity. It is made up chiefly of excerpts from the music-dramas of Wagner, and in order to give it there will be two singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It is as follows:—

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and Duet, from Tannhaeuser
Preislied ..... Die Meistersinger
Siegfried and Bruennhilde
Goetterdaemmerung, Act I
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March
Goetterdaemmerung, Act III
Closing Scene
Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NORTH

BOSTON MUSICIANS DO LIGHTNING CHANGE ACT

Symphony Orchestra Begins Series at Academy of Music To-Night.

PROGRAMME IS ALTERED

CHANGES of programme on short notice have been a feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts here for some years past. The curtailed series to be given at the Academy of Music this season opens to-night confirming this tradition.

Conductor Gericke's Wagnerian programme on this occasion, as heretofore announced, was to have opened with the "Huldigungs Marsch," followed by the bacchanale and duet from the opening act of "Tannhauser," sung by Mme. Gadski and Tenor Van Hoose, with the "Meistersinger" prize song as a third number.

At the last moment this arrangement was changed, and the Venus-Tannhauser duet is to be excised, the orchestra playing only the brilliant ballet music of the scena.

The prize song, too, has been cut out, leaving Tenor Van Hoose almost a negligible factor, since he will be heard only in the "Gotterdammerung" duet—the Siegfried-Brunnhilde music in act first.

For the "Meistersinger" prize song Mr. Gericke has substituted the "Dick Theurer Halle" aria for soprano, with which the second act of "Tannhauser" opens, the identical selection which Mme. Gadski is to sing at this week's public rehearsal and concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The resulting opportunity for comparison between methods of accompaniment and interpretation in two great orchestral bodies is likely to appeal strongly to admirers of Wagnerian music.

INQUIRER
PHILA. PA
OCT 29 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music a week from to-morrow evening. This concert will bring as soloists two great favorites in Philadelphia, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, and the program will be chiefly Wagnerian. Since she last sang here Mme. Gadski has been making history for herself. On her return to Germany last summer she was asked to sing at the operatic festival held in Cologne. Thither she went and sang the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." Her success was not astonishing to Americans who have known for years the beauty of this woman's art and of her voice, but in Cologne, where she had never sung before, she came as a revelation. Later in the summer Mme. Gadski went to Munich, where she sang the three Brunnhildes in the third performance of "The Ring" at the festival in the Prinz Regenten Theatre, and later the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." Her numbers here will be the two great scenes from "Gotterdammerung," the parting scene from Act I and the immolation scene from Act III.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns this year stronger than ever. It brings with it ninety-six performers, the largest number which travels with an orchestra in the world. Mr. Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, has already proved himself to be more than a worthy successor of the talented men who have preceded him in that difficult position. The wood winds—always the finest in this country—have been materially strengthened by the presence of the famous bassoon player, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, and Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, has turned out to be one of the finest artists that have ever been with the orchestra.

PRESS
PHILA. PA
OCT 29 1905

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music a week from to-morrow evening. This concert will bring as soloists two great favorites in Philadelphia, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, and the program will be chiefly Wagnerian. As Mme. Gadski regards Philadelphia in a sense as her home city—for here she first gained adequate recognition—it is especially gratifying to her to be able to sing here for the first time in America, since her success in Germany the two great scenes from "Gotterdammerung," for which she is down on the first Boston Symphony program—the parting scene from Act I and the immolation scene from Act III.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns this year stronger than ever. It brings with it ninety-six performers, the largest number which travels with an orchestra in the world. Mr. Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, has already proved himself to be more than a worthy successor of the talented men who have preceded him in that difficult position. The wood winds—always the finest in this country—have been materially strengthened by the presence of the famous bassoon player, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, and Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, has turned out to be one of the finest artists that has ever been with the orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PUBLIC LEDGER
PHILA. PA
OCT 29 1905

The Boston Symphony Orhestra will give the first of its five monthly concerts here on Monday evening of next week. Mr. Gericke has arranged for this occasion a Wagnerian programme, consisting mainly of excerpts from the music-dramas, in which Madame Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose will be the singers. Gadski has just returned from a most successful visit to Germany. At Munich she sang the three Bruennhildes in the "Ring" cycle at the Prinz Regenten Theatre, and everywhere was received with acclaim. She needs, however, no fresh commendation to a Philadelphia audience. The orchestra has had a number of accessions since last season, including a new first 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, and two or three leading players in the wood-wind, and the whole number of players, ninety-six, is now larger than ever before. The printed list of the "bookings" of the orchestra shows the time to be well occupied for a season of seven months, from the beginning of October (with a week's tour in Canada and the West) to the end of April. The Boston concerts are given weekly, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and there is usually one concert during the week at Cambridge, Providence, Hartford or some other New England city. Once in a month the home concerts are omitted, and the orchestra puts in the week at Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, New York and Brooklyn, with a second concert in New York on Saturday afternoon. It is evidently the policy for this season, the twenty-fifth of Mr. Higginson's great enterprise, to prepare particular features for these monthly tours, as in the Wagner performance for November and the French programme, with Vincent D'Indy as conductor, for December.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PHILA. PA
OCT 27 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent out a little year book showing the remarkable season's work which has been mapped out for it. There are 109 concerts already booked, forty-eight to be given in Boston, ten in New York, six in Cambridge, five each in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Baltimore, and Washington, three in Providence and Hartford, two in Buffalo, Worcester, and Portland, Me., and numerous "one-night stands" scattered among the towns of New York State and New England. It is gratifying to know that, from the box-office standpoint, the season promises to be the most profitable in the history of this organization. At the concert to be given here, a week from next Monday evening, Madame Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, the tenor, will be the soloists. The orchestra now numbers 96 members, which makes it the largest organization of its kind travelling in any country of the world.

BULLETIN
PHILA. PA
NOV 7 - 1905

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Opening of Its Local Series With a Wagnerian Program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, still with Mr. Gericke wielding the baton, opened its twenty-first season of concerts here last evening with a novel program. It was a symphony concert without a symphony. The numbers were drawn from the works of Richard Wagner and the orchestra was aided by Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, singing excerpts from Brunnhilde's and Siegfried's music from "Die Goetterdaemmerung." As solos Mme. Gadski sang "Elizabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhaeuser," and Mr. Van Hoose "Walther's Prize Song," from "The Miestersingers." Both were in excellent voice, but their work was somewhat marred by the dominancy of the orchestra, which seemed unable to adjust itself to the voices and give them their proper value in the ensemble.

Mme. Gadski's rendition of the Brunnhilde music in the Brunnhilde-Siegfried farewell was capital, but it was even excelled by the quality of her work in the final scene from "Die Goetterdaemmerung," where, viewing Siegfried's body upon its funeral pyre, she broods over the death of the hero and finally throws herself upon the fire to perish as his body is burned. In this scene Gadski displayed the keen dramatic instinct and the capability for exaltation, so great a factor in her success as an exponent of Wagnerian roles. Without the glamor and illusion of stage settings it is difficult for an artist to make an audience feel the real dramatic height of the music, but the picture Gadski's voice drew needed little of stage art to make it impressive.

Mr. Van Hoose singing of Siegfried's death song, likewise gave a most acceptable presentation. While he has not the power of the more heroic tenors who have sung Siegfried, Mr. Van Hoose possesses a high type of art.

The purely orchestral numbers—the noted "Huldegungsmarsch" and the so-called "Siegfried Funeral March," were performed in the classic style for which Mr. Gericke's organiation is famous. The latter number in particular, with its wonderful dramatic quality, was especially well done.

NORTH
NOV 7 - 1905

SYMPHONY CONCERT WITHOUT SYMPHONY

Boston Musicians in Background While Gadski and Van Hoose Sing.

AUDIENCE DELIGHTED

SYMPHONIC music took a vacation at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert of the season at the Academy of Music, while Madame Gadski sang Wagnerian arias from "Tannhaeuser" and "Goetterdaemmerung," with orchestral accompaniment, and Tenor Ellison Van Hoose struggled with the "Meistersinger" prize song.

It was a "Tannhaeuser" and "Goetterdaemmerung" symposium, with these two singers steadily in the lime-light.

In the "Huldigunga" march, as in the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," the two orchestral numbers, the musicians from the Hub found opportunity to disclose the admirable artistic poise and massive tone quality developed through years of ensemble playing.

The fire and fury of Wagner's inspiration was missed, as must needs be when stage accessories are lacking, but the fine interpretation of the scores, nevertheless, illustraated impressively the majestic art of the master of music drama.

A symphony concert without a symphony, and with star vocalists as leading attractions, is a novelty here, and the [illegible] crowded accordingly. The [illegible] and were

TELEGRAPH
PHILA. PA
NOV 7 - 1905

First Boston Symphony Concert for Season.

The return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this season's series of concerts was signalized at the Academy of Music last night by something of a departure in the way of programme making. It is customary to devote a whole evening to some particular composer now and then, and frequently a season has ended that way. Often, too, Wagner has been the composer selected for the "grande finale," but it is a bit unusual to open a season with a Wagner night. Perhaps on the principle that when a thing has been done it is well to get right about it and have it over with was last night's programme selected with regard to the Wagner devotees. They are determined to have one night a season given to their favorite, so now they have had it and can be satisfied at once for the rest of the winter.

Will they be altogether satisfied with the performance, however? That is a question to which there will be varying answers, according to the disposition of the several hearers. The several hearers were very many last night, for the house was full, even crowded in the upper tiers. The combination that brought them out was a strong one—the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a Wagner programme, Mme. Gadski, supported by Mr. Van Hoose—is it not "Paradise enow"?

The opening number was the "March of Homage," composed as an expression of gratitude toward Ludwig II of Bavaria, and was originally written for a brasss band. Perhaps for that reason it fails of impressiveness even when given by the full orchestra. The Bacchanale and duet from the Paris version of "Tannhauser" were billed for the second number, but after the Bacchanale Mme. Gadski appeared amid a tumultuous welcome from the audience and sang "Elizabeth's Greeting." She has not lost a trace of her charm and power in any way; her voice is as sweet, full and strong as ever, and her presence as gracious. Mr. Van Hoose then sang the Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger," and sang it fairly well. His voice is sweet, but lacks power and timbre; it is not resonant, and he has not the temperament to make it so. This was noticeable in the last group of selections from "Gotterdammerung," when he attempted to sing the Siegfried music. Neither in this duet with Mme. Gadski, the parting from Brunnhilde nor in the death of Siegfried was he equal to the demands of the orchestra. Mme. Gadski was fully so, however, and finished splendidly in the closing scene. As to the orchestral work, that it was fine goes without saying, beautifully finished and correct in execution—and just lacking the touch of emotion, of color and enthusiasm that would make it great art. Almost any other composer fares better at the hands of these polished performers than Wagner, but for him they lack fire and magnetism.

PRESS
7 - 1905

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Oldtime Scenes in the Academy Gadski and Van Hoose, the Soloists.

WAGNER. Huldigungsmarsch. Bacchanale and Elisabeth's Aria "Tannhaeuser." Preislied, "Die Meistersinger." Siegfried's Parting from Brunhilde Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, Closing Scene from "The Dusk of the Gods."

It was a typical old-time Boston Symphony night at the Academy of Music last evening. Quite the real thing; just as it used to be before the management divided up its patrons between the Monday and Wednesday night concerts. In other words, the Academy was jammed, filled up to the fire ordinance limits, with an enthusiastic audience that had come out primarily, let us hope, to hear the orchestra; secondly, to enjoy a Wagner night, and, thirdly, to be carried away by the sterling singing of two such favorites as Madame Gadski, the soprano and Van Hoose, the tenor.

Mr. Gericke perhaps does not consider it a matter of comity that he should consider the program scheme of the Philadelphia Orchestra. If he had he would not have changed Madame Gadski's Wagnerian solo from the Bacchanal duet to the over-joyous Dich Theure Holle of the second act of Tannhaeuser, which, of course, Madame Gadski sang superbly, since for a decade her "Elisabeth" has easily been the standard on the Academy stage. However, this is a mere detail in a concert that was a triumphal demonstration of the orchestra's great tonal beauty and its supreme virtuosity revealed as decidedly in the Paris version of the Bacchanal, not a happy concert selection, as in the Gotterdammerung depths.

With a local orchestra capable of the full sweep of the greatest orchestral music, it is a good idea for the Boston people to give us specialties, as it was as they did last night, even if one could have let the Huldigungsmarsch go for a more harmonious selection, and the Bacchanal, too, for that matter. The local orchestra must naturally be educative and comprehensive in its program, while the visitor can offer the dessert, as it were, five times a season. This can be made a matter of systematic arrangement, but it calls for comity and common sense.

[80]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PHILA. PA
NOV 3 1905

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music to-morrow evening at 8.15. The return of this band will be welcomed by its large following of supporters that its years of concerts have made for it in Philadelphia, and the fact that it is to give but five concerts here this Winter instead of the usual ten seems to have but increased the interest in it.

This year it returns to Philadelphia larger and better than ever. Instead of the ninety-four performers it carried last year on its monthly trips, it now carries ninety-six. The changes in the personnel have been three. There is a new principal 'cellist in Mr. Heinrich Warnke, late of Munich. A new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, seems to have given the finishing touch to the wonderful perfection of the wood-winds. The new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, like Mr. Warnke, from the Kaim Orchestra, of Munich, is a most valuable addition to the brass of the orchestra, and now the band is absolutely independent of outside assistance, as it has two firsts in all the different groups of wind instruments.

The program for the first concert will make a strong appeal to Philadelphia music lovers and will be popular with all classes of the musical laity. It is made up chiefly of excerpts from the music-dramas of Wagner, and in order to give it there will be two singers, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. It is as follows:—

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and Duet, from Tannhaeuser
Preislied ..... Die Meistersinger
Siegfried and Bruennhilde
Goetterdaemmerung, Act I
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March
Goetterdaemmerung, Act III
Closing Scene
Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

BOSTON MUSICIANS DO LIGHTNING CHANGE ACT

Symphony Orchestra Begins Series at Academy of Music To-Night.

PROGRAMME IS ALTERED

CHANGES of programme on short notice have been a feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts here for some years past. The curtailed series to be given at the Academy of Music this season opens to-night confirming this tradition.

Conductor Gericke's Wagnerian programme on this occasion, as heretofore announced, was to have opened with the "Huldigungs Marsch," followed by the bacchanale and duet from the opening act of "Tannhauser," sung by Mme. Gadski and Tenor Van Hoose, with the "Meistersinger" prize song as a third number.

At the last moment this arrangement was changed, and the Venus-Tannhauser duet is to be excised, the orchestra playing only the brilliant ballet music of the scena.

The prize song, too, has been cut out, leaving Tenor Van Hoose almost a negligible factor, since he will be heard only in the "Gotterdammerung" duet—the Siegfried-Brunnhilde music in act first.

For the "Meistersinger" prize song Mr. Gericke has substituted the "Dick Theurer Halle" aria for soprano, with which the second act of "Tannhauser" opens, the identical selection which Mme. Gadski is to sing at this week's public rehearsal and concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The resulting opportunity for comparison between methods of accompaniment and interpretation in two great orchestral bodies is likely to appeal strongly to admirers of Wagnerian music.

INQUIRER
PA
29 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music a week from to-morrow evening. This concert will bring as soloists two great favorites in Philadelphia, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, and the program will be chiefly Wagnerian. Since she last sang here Mme. Gadski has been making history for herself. On her return to Germany last summer she was asked to sing at the operatic festival held in Cologne. Thither she went and sang the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." Her success was not astonishing to Americans who have known for years the beauty of this woman's art and of her voice, but in Cologne, where she had never sung before, she came as a revelation. Later in the summer Mme. Gadski went to Munich, where she sang the three Brunnhildes in the third performance of "The Ring" at the festival in the Prinz Regenten Theatre, and later the Countess in "Figaro's Hochzeit." Her numbers here will be the two great scenes from "Gotterdammerung," the parting scene from Act I and the immolation scene from Act III.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns this year stronger than ever. It brings with it ninety-six performers, the largest number which travels with an orchestra in the world. Mr. Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, has already proved himself to be more than a worthy successor of the talented men who have preceded him in that difficult position. The wood-winds—always the finest in this country—have been materially strengthened by the presence of the famous bassoon player, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, and Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, has turned out to be one of the finest artists that have ever been with the orchestra.

PRESS
1905

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music a week from to-morrow evening. This concert will bring as soloists two great favorites in Philadelphia, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, and the program will be chiefly Wagnerian. As Mme. Gadski regards Philadelphia in a sense as her home city—for here she first gained adequate recognition—it is especially gratifying to her to be able to sing here for the first time in America since her success in Germany the two great scenes from "Gotterdammerung," for which she is down on the first Boston Symphony program—the parting scene from Act I and the immolation scene from Act III.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns this year stronger than ever. It brings with it ninety-six performers, the largest number which travels with an orchestra in the world. Mr. Warnke, the new principal 'cellist, has already proved himself to be more than a worthy successor of the talented men who have preceded him in that difficult position. The wood winds—always the finest in this country—have been materially strengthened by the presence of the famous bassoon player, Mr. Sadony, of Cologne, and Max Hess, the new alternate first horn, has turned out to be one of the finest artists that has ever been with the orchestra.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PUBLIC LEDGER

The Boston Symphony Orhestra will give the first of its five monthly concerts here on Monday evening of next week. Mr. Gericke has arranged for this occasion a Wagnerian programme, consisting mainly of excerpts from the music-dramas, in which Madame Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose will be the singers. Gadski has just returned from a most successful visit to Germany. At Munich she sang the three Bruennhildes in the "Ring" cycle at the Prinz Regenten Theatre, and everywhere was received with acclaim. She needs, however, no fresh commendation to a Philadelphia audience. The orchestra has had a number of accessions since last season, including a new first 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, and two or three leading players in the wood-wind, and the whole number of players, ninety-six, is now larger than ever before. The printed list of the "bookings" of the orchestra shows the time to be well occupied for a season of seven months, from the beginning of October (with a week's tour in Canada and the West) to the end of April. The Boston concerts are given weekly, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and there is usually one concert during the week at Cambridge, Providence, Hartford or some other New England city. Once in a month the home concerts are omitted, and the orchestra puts in the week at Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, New York and Brooklyn, with a second concert in New York on Saturday afternoon. It is evidently the policy for this season, the twenty-fifth of Mr. Higginson's great enterprise, to prepare particular features for these monthly tours, as in the Wagner performance for November and the French programme, with Vincent D'Indy as conductor, for December.

* * *

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has sent out a little year book showing the remarkable season's work which has been mapped out for it. There are 109 concerts already booked, forty-eight to be given in Boston, ten in New York, six in Cambridge, five each in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Baltimore, and Washington, three in Providence and Hartford, two in Buffalo, Worcester, and Portland, Me., and numerous "one-night stands" scattered among the towns of New York State and New England. It is gratifying to know that, from the box-office standpoint, the season promises to be the most profitable in the history of this organization. At the concert to be given here, a week from next Monday evening, Madame Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, the tenor, will be the soloists. The orchestra now numbers 96 members, which makes it the largest organization of its kind travelling in any country of the world.

BULLETIN
PHILA. PA
NOV 7 1905

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Opening of Its Local Series With a Wagnerian Program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, still with Mr. Gericke wielding the baton, opened its twenty-first season of concerts here last evening with a novel program. It was a symphony concert without a symphony. The numbers were drawn from the works of Richard Wagner and the orchestra was aided by Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, singing excerpts from Brunnhilde's and Siegfried's music from "Die Goetterdaemmerung." As solos Mme. Gadski sang "Elizabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhaeuser," and Mr. Van Hoose "Walther's Prize Song," from "The Meistersingers." Both were in excellent voice, but their work was somewhat marred by the dominancy of the orchestra, which seemed unable to adjust itself to the voices and give them their proper value in the ensemble.

Mme. Gadski's rendition of the Brunnhilde music in the Brunnhilde-Siegfried farewell was capital, but it was even exceled by the quality of her work in the final scene from "Die Goetterdaemmerung," where, viewing Siegfried's body upon its funeral pyre, she broods over the death of the hero and finally throws herself upon the fire to perish as his body is burned. In this scene Gadski displayed the keen dramatic instinct and the capability for exaltation, so great a factor in her success as an exponent of Wagnerian roles. Without the glamor and illusion of stage settings it is difficult for an artist to make an audience feel the real dramatic height of the music, but the picture Gadski's voice drew needed little of stage art to make it impressive.

Mr. Van Hoose singing of Siegfried's death song, likewise gave a most acceptable presentation. While he has not the power of the more heroic tenors who have sung Siegfried, Mr. Van Hoose possesses a high type of art.

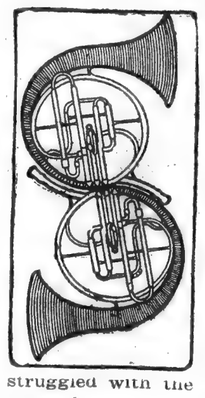
The purely orchestral numbers—the noted "Huldegungsmarsch" and the so-called "Siegfried Funeral March," were performed in the classic style for which Mr. Gericke's organiation is famous. The latter number in particular, with its wonderful dramatic quality, was especially well done.

PRESS
NOV 7 1905

SYMPHONY CONCERT WITHOUT SYMPHONY

Boston Musicians in Background While Gadski and Van Hoose Sing.

AUDIENCE DELIGHTED



SYMPHONIC music took a vacation at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert of the season at the Academy of Music, while Madame Gadski sang Wagnerian arias from "Tannhaeuser" and "Goetterdaemmerung," with orchestral accompaniment, and Tenor Ellison Van Hoose struggled with the "Meistersinger" prize song.

It was a "Tannhaeuser" and "Goetterdaemmerung" symposium, with these two singers steadily in the lime-light.

In the "Huldigungs" march, as in the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," the two orchestral numbers, the musicians from the Hub found opportunity to disclose the admirable artistic poise and massive tone quality developed through years of ensemble playing.

The fire and fury of Wagner's inspiration was missed, as must needs be when stage accessories are lacking, but the fine interpretation of the scores, nevertheless, illustraated impressively the majestic art of the master of music drama.

A symphony concert without a symphony, and with star vocalists as leading attractions, is a novelty here, and the house was crowded accordingly. The singers were in excellent voice, and were generously applauded.

[80]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PHILA. PA
NOV 7 1905

First Boston Symphony Concert for This Season.

The return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this season's series of concerts was signalized at the Academy of Music last night by something of a departure in the way of programme making. It is customary to devote a whole evening to some particular composer now and then, and frequently a season has ended that way. Often, too, Wagner has been the composer selected for the "grande finale," but it is a bit unusual to open a season with a Wagner night. Perhaps on the principle that when a thing has been done it is well to get right about it and have it over with was last night's programme selected with regard to the Wagner devotees. They are determined to have one night a season given to their favorite, so now they have had it and can be satisfied at once for the rest of the winter.

Will they be altogether satisfied with the performance, however? That is a question to which there will be varying answers, according to the disposition of the several hearers. The several hearers were very many last night, for the house was full, even crowded in the upper tiers. The combination that brought them out was a strong one—the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a Wagner programme, Mme. Gadski, supported by Mr. Van Hoose—is it not "Paradise enow"?

The opening number was the "March of Homage," composed as an expression of gratitude toward Ludwig II of Bavaria, and was originally written for a brasss band. Perhaps for that reason it fails of impressiveness even when given by the full orchestra. The Bacchanale and duet from the Paris version of "Tannhauser" were billed for the second number, but after the Bacchanale Mme. Gadski appeared amid a tumultuous welcome from the audience and sang "Elizabeth's Greeting." She has not lost a trace of her charm and power in any way; her voice is as sweet, full and strong as ever, and her presence as gracious. Mr. Van Hoose then sang the Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger," and sang it fairly well. His voice is sweet, but lacks power and timbre; it is not resonant, and he has not the temperament to make it so. This was noticeable in the last group of selections from "Gotterdammerung," when he attempted to sing the Siegfried music. Neither in this duet with Mme. Gadski, the parting from Brunnhilde nor in the death of Siegfried was he equal to the demands of the orchestra. Mme. Gadski was fully so, however, and finished splendidly in the closing scene. As to the orchestral work, that it was fine goes without saying, beautifully finished and correct in execution—and just lacking the touch of emotion, of color and enthusiasm that would make it great art. Almost any other composer fares better at the hands of these polished performers than Wagner, but for him they lack fire and magnetism.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Oldtime Scenes in the Academy. Gadski and Van Hoose the Soloists.

WAGNER, { Huldigungsmarsch. Bacchanale and Elisabeth's Aria, "Tannhaeuser." Preislied, "Die Meistersinger." Siegfried's Parting from Brunhilde, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, Closing Scene from "The Dusk of the Gods."

It was a typical old-time Boston Symphony night at the Academy of Music last evening. Quite the real thing; just as it used to be before the management divided up its patrons between the Monday and Wednesday night concerts. In other words, the Academy was jammed, filled up to the fire ordinance limits, with an enthusiastic audience that had come out primarily, let us hope, to hear the orchestra; secondly, to enjoy a Wagner night, and, thirdly, to be carried away by the sterling singing of two such favorites as Madame Gadski, the soprano, and Van Hoose, the tenor.

Mr. Gericke perhaps does not consider it a matter of comity that he should consider the program scheme of the Philadelphia Orchestra. If he had he would not have changed Madame Gadski's Wagnerian solo from the Bacchanal duet to the over-joyous Dich Theuse Holle of the second act of Tannhaeuser, which, of course, Madame Gadski sang superbly, since for a decade her "Elisabeth" has easily been the standard on the Academy stage. However, this is a mere detail in a concert that was a triumphal demonstration of the orchestra's great tonal beauty and its supreme virtuosity revealed as decidedly in the Paris version of the Bacchanal, not a happy concert selection, as in the Gotterdammerung depths.

With a local orchestra capable of the full sweep of the greatest orchestral music, it is a good idea for the Boston people to give us specialties, as it were, as they did last night, even if one could have let the Huldigungsmarsch go for a more harmonious selection, and the Bacchanal, too, for that matter. The local orchestra, must naturally be educative and comprehensive in its program, while the visitor can offer the dessert, as it were, five times a season. This can be made a matter of systematic arrangement, but it calls for comity and common sense.

...LEDGER
...HIA, PA.
NOV 4 - 1903

...N ORCHESTRA WARMLY WELCOMED

...ER EXCERPTS DELIGHTFULLY PLAYED AT ACADEMY

...ME. GADSKI SINGS IN FINE FORM

Mr. Gericke's Symphony Organization Begins Its 21st Season Before a Brilliant Audience

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, gave last evening the first of its twenty-first annual series of concerts in the Academy of Music. A large audience greeted this noble body of players, which has developed in a quarter of a century to a position unexcelled among the great orchestras of the world.

Though not essentially changed from last year, the organization has now more than recovered from any losses previously sustained and it has never played with finer power or with a richer and smoother tone. As a consummate musical instrument, it is hard to see where this orchestra leaves anything to be demanded.

For this first concert Mr. Gericke had made up a programme of excerpts from Wagner. Twenty or more years ago Theodore Thomas introduced the later music of Wagner to the American public by means of such excerpts, which then served a useful purpose, as the music-dramas had not been performed in their entirety. They have now become so familiar that a concert performance can have only the effect of a fragmentary suggestion. The "Huldigungsmarsch," with which the concert opened, is a distinct composition, but it was written originally for a military band, and it has no very great value as an orchestral work, though Mr. Gericke gets out of it all that is possible, while subduing the brassiness in which Thomas used to delight.

In the programme, as printed, the second number was the bacchanale and duet from the opening of "Tannhaeuser," but the duet was not given, and the ballet music alone, divorced from the overture, which it follows, and from the scene to which it leads, has little significance. It was, however, so brilliantly played that the audience received it gladly.

After that Madame Gadski sang the familiar "Dich Theure Halle," substituted for the duet, and Ellison Van Hoose followed with Walther's "Preistied." He sang this entrancing lyric very well, without distinction of style, but with an agreeable voice and excellent tone. But he does not go beyond that. When it came to the opening duet from "Goetterdaemmerung," it was apparent why the "Tannhaeuser" duet had been dropped, for the concert tenor was quite outclassed by the operatic soprano. Gadski sang this music and Brunhilde's last scene most brilliantly. Her voice has ripened and mellowed and gained in power and surety, without losing any of its purity, and these scraps that were heard last night could but quicken the desire to hear her sing all of Brunhilde's music in its right dramatic setting.

Between the two excerpts referred to came the scene of Siegfried's death and the funeral march, the most imposing music of its kind that has been conceived, and at the end of all was the stupendous finale of the "Goetterdaemmerung." These are "excerpts" that justify themselves in such a concert, since it is impossible to expect, in connection with a stage performance, an orchestra as big and sonorous as this, with all its resources concentrated upon the cumulative instrumental effect. Of course, it has not the dramatic significance that it has in its right place, but it is glorious music, and to hear it played on this splendid instrument was well worth while. It impressed the audience greatly, and warm applause was entirely deserved.

MANY HANDSOME GOWNS NOTED IN THE AUDIENCE

Brilliant Assemblage of the Fashionable Set Greets the Orchestra From Boston.

Among those noticed in the audience for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music last night were Mrs. C. Howard Clark, who is bringing out her daughter, Miss Amie Clark, this winter. Mrs. Clark looked very well in an extremely handsome black gown. The bodice was almost covered with jet trimmings. Two bands of white bead trimming, with stars made of black beads, formed a tablier on the bodice, and gave a very novel and striking effect. The elbow sleeves were finished by ruffings of white lace, which blended well with the white trimmings.

Mrs. George H. McFadden also wore a black gown, lightened by elaborate trimming of white lace. Row upon row of white lace finished the ruffles of black on the sleeves, and a stole effect of white lace was used on the corsage. To complete Mrs. McFadden's costume Mrs. McFadden wore a black beaver hat, caught on the left side with a white camellia, while a [illegible] white downy feathers, which only needed the single pompon of feathers which adorned it, was very becoming.

One of the most picturesque of the many frocks noticed about the well-filled house was that worn by Miss Isabel Wetherill, who, with her sister, Mrs. Christine Rice, and Miss Thomas, of West Chester, occupied one of the balcony boxes. The salient features of this frock of pale blue chiffon taffeta were its full but clinging skirt, guileless of trimming, and an exceedingly full blouse, arranged in front so that every tiny item showed conspicuously. A chemisette of rarest lace, airy as thistledown, gave the requisite softening touch, and the sleeves, though immensely loose, detracted nothing from the graceful silhouette. Then the most becoming hat, of the Gainsborough persuasion, completed her attire. A long sinuous white snake plume crawled round its brim.

Mrs. Wright was no less deserving of the admiring glances leveled toward her during the intermission. She was attired in a most gorgeous frock of Russian lace, the bodice of which revealed a soupcon of blue panne velvet, two narrow strips of which were arranged to pass through narrow slits and fastened with wonderfully embroidered buttons. A small toque, of ermine, arranged at one side with ornamental plumage, completed the attire. This effect was just as beautifully carried out on the smart gray felt hat which Miss Thomas chose for her gray broadcloth frock, with its trimmings of silver embroidery.

Miss Frances Roberts was accompanied by her grandfather, Doctor Thompson, and was beautiful to behold in a frock of black crepe de chine, accordion pleated. It was very supple, hung exquisitely, and, being in itself so pretty, required no trimming at all. Over this was worn a wrap of black taffeta, severely tailored but most becoming, for Miss Roberts resorted to the clever stratagem of wearing a vaporous looking scarf of black tulle, tied in a big bow beneath her chin.

Seated next to Miss Roberts was Miss Gladys Williams, gowned in simple white and wearing a tiny feather in her evening coiffure.

POST
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 15 1903

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON

As previously announced, Washington this winter is to be among the fortunate cities which will have a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Until seven years ago, these five concerts were annual fixtures of each season. Then, however, they were abandoned in order to make it possible to give a second series of five in New York. The original scheme contemplated the abandonment of the Baltimore concerts, but when the announcement was made, the Baltimore protest took the form of a very liberal guarantee, which the management of the orchestra could not in justice to itself or to Baltimore refuse.

Since 1898 many efforts have been made to have Washington once more placed on the list of cites which have the monthly visits of the orchestra in November, December, January, February, and March, but not until this year have sufficient inducements been offered. Last spring Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene took hold of the matter with her usual energy, and as a result it was decided to remove the second series of Philadelphia concerts to this city.

The concerts will be given on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13, in the New National Theater, at 4:30 o'clock. The subscription sale of seats will open on next Wednesday morning, October 18, at the ticket office of T. Arthur Smith, in the store of Sanders & Stayman, 1327 F street. The prices for the series will be, according to location, $10, $7.50, $5, and $3.75. Boxes will be $125.

Wilhelm Gericke.

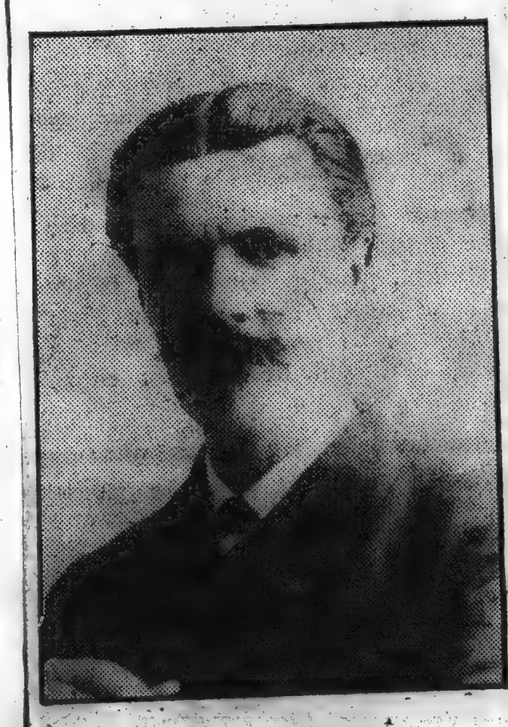
The orchestra will return stronger and



M. Vincent d'Indy.

better than ever. Under the conductorship of Mr. Gericke, it will bring a minimum of ninety-six performers, which makes it the largest regular orchestra of this country, and one of the largest in the world. In the years that have passed since the last Washington concerts, the work of improving its personnel has gone steadily on, for the policy of the management has always been to get the best instrumentalists in the world at whatever cost.

The concertmaster is Prof. Willy Hess, one of the leading violinists in the world, and also the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which is to give three concerts here this winter. Associated with him among the violins are such rare artists as Timothee Adamowski, Roth, Krafft, Barleben, Ondricek, and Hoffmann, to mention only a few.

The principal 'cellist is Heinrich Warnke, until this year the principal 'cellist of the celebrated Kaim Orchestra, of Munich. Other great 'cellists in the orchestra are Keller, Josef Adamowski, Erik Loeffler, Nagel, and Hadley. The principal violas are Ferir and Zach. Longy, the first oboe; Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Schuecker, the harpist, and Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, stand in the very front rank of their profession and are the results of many years of constant sifting and elimination.

...MES
...W, D. C.
OCT 12 1903

Boston Symphony Orchestra Season.

The subscription sale of seats for the five Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in the New National Theater this winter, will open at the office of T. Arthur Smith, 1327 F street, on Wednesday morning, October 18, at 9 o'clock. The concerts will be furnished on five Tuesday afternoons at 4:30, November 7, December 8, January 9, February 13 and March 13. The subscription prices for the series will be as follows: Orchestra, $10; balcony, first three rows, $10; balcony, other rows, $7.50; gallery, first five rows, $5; gallery, other rows, $3.75; boxes, $125.

The orchestra will bring to Washington its full membership of ninety-six performers. In all but one of the concerts—that in December—the conductor will be Wilhelm Gericke. In December Washington will have the good fortune to become acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer, who has accepted an invitation to conduct the orchestra in a series of concerts.

The list of solo artists is very strong, comprising Mme. Gadski, one of the greatest of dramatic sopranos; M. Vincent d'Indy, who is expected to introduce in Washington some most attractive works of the modern French school; Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, a pianist who has become one of the great favorites of this country, and finally Henri Marteau, whose fame as a violin virtuoso is general.

The large number of applications for seats which have already been filed with Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, to whose energy and courage the renewal of these concerts is due, indicates that by far the larger part of the theater will be sold out on subscription.

...ORCHESTRA

In the other concerts, Mr. Gericke will introduce some most interesting novelties, to be chosen from a list he has prepared for the Boston concerts. In this list are included Mahler's Fifth Symphony and Amherst Webber's Symphony in E major; Sir Edward Elgar's overture, "In the South," and two smaller pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" three symphonic poems, Glazounov's "Le Kremlin," Ernst Boehe's "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck" and Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube;" Smetana's overture "Libussa," Eugene d'Harcourt's overture "Le Tasse," Max Schilling's overture "Pfeifertag," and Busoni's overture "Lustspiel," and suite "Geharnischte."

Mme. Gadski.

The list of soloists is very strong. Mme. Gadski will be the singer at the first concert. The others will be Prof. Willy Hess, Harold Bauer, and Henri Marteau. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert.

Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene,

Whose Efforts Have Brought Back the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

...STAR
...D. C.

Boston Symphony Concert.

Until seven years ago the five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were annual fixtures of each season. Then, however, they were abandoned in order to make it possible to give a second series of five in New York. The original scheme contemplated the abandonment of the Baltimore concerts, but when the announcement was made the Baltimore protest took the form of a very liberal guarantee, which the management of the orchestra could not in justice to itself or to Baltimore refuse.

Since 1898 many efforts have been made to have Washington once more placed on the list of cities which have the monthly visits of the orchestra in November, December, January, February and March, but not until this year have sufficient inducements been offered. Last spring Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene took hold of the matter and it was decided to remove the second series of Philadelphia concerts to this city.

The concerts will be given on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, in the New National Theater, at 4:30 o'clock. The subscription sale of seats will open on next Wednesday morning.

The orchetsra, under the conductorship of Mr. Gericke, will bring a minimum of ninety-six performers, which makes it the largest regular orchestra of this country and one of the largest in the world.

per Cutting Bureau in the World

LEDGER

NOV 4 1903

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WARMLY WELCOMED

WAGNER EXCERPTS DELIGHTFULLY PLAYED AT ACADEMY

MME. GADSKI SINGS IN FINE FORM

Mr. Gericke's Symphony Organization Begins Its 21st Season Before a Brilliant Audience

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, gave last evening the first of its twenty-first annual series of concerts in the Academy of Music. A large audience greeted this noble body of players, which has developed in a quarter of a century to a position unexcelled among the great orchestras of the world.

Though not essentially changed from last year, the organization has now more than recovered from any losses previously sustained and it has never played with finer power or with a richer and smoother tone. As a consummate musical instrument, it is hard to see where this orchestra leaves anything to be demanded.

For this first concert Mr. Gericke had made up a programme of excerpts from Wagner. Twenty or more years ago Theodore Thomas introduced the later music of Wagner to the American public by means of such excerpts, which then served a useful purpose, as the music-dramas had not been performed in their entirety. They have now become so familiar that a concert performance can have only the effect of a fragmentary suggestion. The "Huldigungsmarsch," with which the concert opened, is a distinct composition, but it was written originally for a military band, and it has no very great value as an orchestral work, though Mr. Gericke gets out of it all that is possible, while subduing the brassiness in which Thomas used to delight.

In the programme, as printed, the second number was the bacchanale and duet from the opening of "Tannhaeuser," but the duet was not given, and the ballet music alone, divorced from the overture, which it follows, and from the scene to which it leads, has little significance. It was, however, so brilliantly played that the audience received it gladly.

After that Madame Gadski sang the familiar "Dich Theure Halle," substituted for the duet, and Ellison Van Hoose followed with Walther's "Preistied." He sang this entrancing lyric very well, without distinction of style, but with an agreeable voice and excellent tone. But he does not go beyond that. When it came to the opening duet from "Goetterdaemmerung," it was apparent why the "Tannhaeuser" duet had been dropped, for the concert tenor was quite outclassed by the operatic soprano. Gadski sang this music and Brunhilde's last scene most brilliantly. Her voice has ripened and mellowed and gained in power and surety, without losing any of its purity, and these scraps that were heard last night could but quicken the desire to hear her sing all of Brunhilde's music in its right dramatic setting.

Between the two excerpts referred to came the scene of Siegfried's death and the funeral march, the most imposing music of its kind that has been conceived, and at the end of all was the stupendous finale of the "Goetterdaemmerung." These are "excerpts" that justify themselves in such a concert, since it is impossible to expect, in connection with a stage performance, an orchestra as big and sonorous as this, with all its resources concentrated upon the cumulative instrumental effect. Of course, it has not the dramatic significance that it has in its right place, but it is glorious music, and to hear it played on this splendid instrument was well worth while. It impressed the audience greatly, and warm applause was entirely deserved.

MANY HANDSOME GOWNS NOTED IN THE AUDIENCE

Brilliant Assemblage of the Fashionable Set Greets the Orchestra From Boston.

Among those noticed in the audience for the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Academy of Music last night were Mrs. C. Howard Clark, who is bringing out her daughter, Miss Amie Clark, this winter. Mrs. Clark looked very well in an extremely handsome black gown. The bodice was almost covered with jet trimmings. Two bands of white bead trimming, with stars made of black beads, formed a tablier on the bodice, and gave a very novel and striking effect. The elbow sleeves were finished by flutings of white lace, which blended well with the white trimmings.

Mrs. George H. McFadden also wore a black gown, lightened by elaborate trimmings of white lace. Row upon row of narrow white lace finished the ruffles of black silk on the sleeves, and a stole effect of exquisite lace was used on the bodice. With this costume Mrs. McFadden wore a small black beaver hat, caught on one side with a white camellia, while a cluster of camellias and a short, white feather adorned the other side.

such very smart [illegible] hats and frocks, was sitting with her sister, Miss Fanny R. Sinnickson. Miss Sinnickson looked unusually attractive in a black taffeta gown, very simply made. The bodice, which had the surplice effect, showed at the neck a V-shaped yoke of lace. The elbow sleeves were finished with ruffles of black taffeta. A necklace of coral beads gave a bit of color. But it is in her hats that Miss Sinnickson is most original, and she always wears one which is especially becoming to her foreign type of beauty. The hat which she wore last evening was very English—a light mole-colored beaver, severely plain, except for three plumes of the same color clustered on the left side and falling over on the high crown.

Miss Fanny Sinnickson, who came out two seasons ago, was very becomingly gowned in a black and white checked frock made surplice. A V-shaped yoke of lace was set in at the neck and bands of broad black velvet ribbon trimmed the bodice. Coquettishly hidden on one side was a single white rose, which gave a very artistic touch.

Mrs. Thomas G. Ashton, who was sitting in one of the boxes with her husband, Dr. Thomas Ashton, and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Henszey, was looking very charming after her summer in Jamestown, in a light fawn-colored gown elaborately trimmed with quantities of lace. Her toque of exquisitely soft, downy feathers, which only needed the single pompon of feathers which adorned it, was very becoming.

One of the most picturesque of the many frocks noticed about the well-filled house was that worn by Miss Isabel Wetherill, who, with her sister, Mrs. Christine Rice, and Miss Thomas, of West Chester, occupied one of the balcony boxes. The salient features of this frock of pale blue chiffon taffeta were its full but clinging skirt, guileless of trimming, and an exceedingly full blouse, arranged in front so that every tiny item showed conspicuously. A chemisette of rarest lace, airy as thistledown, gave the requisite softening touch, and the sleeves, though immensely loose, detracted nothing from the graceful silhouette. Then the most becoming hat, of the Gainsborough persuasion, completed her attire. A long sinuous white snake plume crawled round its brim.

Mrs. Wright was no less deserving of the admiring glances leveled toward her during the intermission. She was attired in a most gorgeous frock of Russian lace, the bodice of which revealed a soupcon of blue panne velvet, two narrow strips of which were arranged to pass through narrow slits and fastened with wonderfully embroidered buttons. A small toque, of ermine, arranged at one side with ornamental plumage, completed the attire. This effect was just as beautifully carried out on the smart gray felt hat which Miss Thomas chose for her gray broadcloth frock, with its trimmings of silver embroidery.

Miss Frances Roberts was accompanied by her grandfather, Doctor Thompson, and was beautiful to behold in a frock of black crepe de chine, accordion pleated. It was very supple, hung exquisitely, and, being in itself so pretty, required no trimming at all. Over this was worn a wrap of black taffeta, severely tailored but most becoming, for Miss Roberts resorted to the clever stratagem of wearing a vaporous looking scarf of black tulle, tied in a big bow beneath her chin.

Seated next to Miss Roberts was Miss Gladys Williams, gowned in simple white and wearing a tiny feather in her evening coiffure.

[illegible]

Boston Symphony Orchestra Season.

The subscription sale of seats for the five Boston Symphony concerts, which will be given in the New National Theater this winter, will open at the office of T. Arthur Smith, 1327 F street, on Wednesday morning, October 18, at 9 o'clock. The concerts will be furnished on five Tuesday afternoons at 4:30, November 7, December 8, January 9, February 13 and March 13. The subscription prices for the series will be as follows: Orchestra, $10; balcony, first three rows, $10; balcony, other rows, $7.50; gallery, first five rows, $5; gallery, other rows, $3.75; boxes, $125.

The orchestra will bring to Washington its full membership of ninety-six performers. In all but one of the concerts—that in December—the conductor will be Wilhelm Gericke. In December Washington will have the good fortune to become acquainted with M. Vincent d'Indy, the eminent French composer, who has accepted an invitation to conduct the orchestra in a series of concerts.

The list of solo artists is very strong, comprising Mme. Gadski, one of the greatest of dramatic sopranos; M. Vincent d'Indy, who is expected to introduce in Washington some most attractive works of the modern French school; Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, a pianist who has become one of the great favorites of this country, and finally Henri Marteau, whose fame as a violin virtuoso is general.

The large number of applications for seats which have already been filed with Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, to whose energy and courage the renewal of these concerts is due, indicates that by far the larger part of the theater will be sold out on subscription.

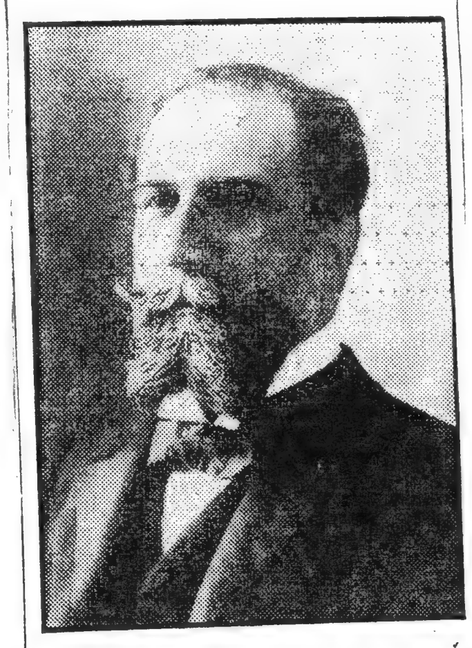
[illegible]

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON

As previously announced, Washington this winter is to be among the fortunate cities which will have a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Until seven years ago, these five concerts were annual fixtures of each season. Then, however, they were abandoned in order to make it possible to give a second series of five in New York. The original scheme contemplated the abandonment of the Baltimore concerts, but when the announcement was made, the Baltimore protest took the form of a very liberal guarantee, which the management of the orchestra could not in justice to itself or to Baltimore refuse.

Since 1898 many efforts have been made to have Washington once more placed on the list of cites which have the monthly visits of the orchestra in November, December, January, February, and March, but not until this year have sufficient inducements been offered. Last spring Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene took hold of the matter with her usual energy, and as a result it was decided to remove the second series of Philadelphia concerts to this city.

The concerts will be given on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13, in the New National Theater, at 4:30 o'clock. The



Wilhelm Gericke.

subscription sale of seats will open on next Wednesday morning, October 18, at the ticket office of T. Arthur Smith, in the store of Sanders & Stayman, 1327 F street. The prices for the series will be, according to location, $10, $7.50, $5, and $3.75. Boxes will be $125.

The orchestra will return stronger and

M. Vincent d'Indy.

better than ever. Under the conductorship of Mr. Gericke, it will bring a minimum of ninety-six performers, which makes it the largest regular orchestra of this country, and one of the largest in the world. In the years that have passed since the last Washington concerts, the work of improving its personnel has gone steadily on, for the policy of the management has always been to get the best instrumentalists in the world at whatever cost.

The concertmaster is Prof. Willy Hess, one of the leading violinists in the world, and also the leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which is to give three concerts here this winter. Associated with him among the violins are such rare artists as Timothee Adamowski, Roth, Krafft, Barleben, Ondricek, and Hoffmann, to mention only a few.

The principal 'cellist is Heinrich Warnke, until this year the principal 'cellist of the celebrated Kaim Orchestra, of Munich. Other great 'cellists in the orchestra are Keller, Josef Adamowski, Erik Loeffler, Nagel, and Hadley. The principal violas are Ferir and Zach. Longy, the first oboe; Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Schuecker, the harpist, and Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, stand in the very front rank of their profession and are the results of many years of constant sifting and elimination.

Mr. Gericke will conduct four of the five concerts, the first, third, fourth, and fifth. The second will serve to introduce M. Vincent d'Indy, the foremost composer of France, who has been invited to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of concerts. He will appear only in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and Brooklyn. His programme will consist entirely of works of the modern French school.

In the other concerts, Mr. Gericke will introduce some most interesting novelties, to be chosen from a list he has prepared for the Boston concerts. In this list are included Mahler's Fifth Symphony and Amherst Webber's Symphony in E major; Sir Edward Elgar's overture, "In the South," and two smaller pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" three symphonic poems, Glazounov's "Le Kremlin," Ernst Boehe's "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck" and Dvorak's "Die Waldtaube;" Smetana's overture "Libussa," Eugene d'Harcourt's overture "Le Tasse," Max Schilling's overture "Pfeifertag," and Busoni's overture "Lustspiel," and suite "Geharnischte."

Mme. Gadski.

The list of soloists is very strong. Mme. Gadski will be the singer at the first concert. The others will be Prof. Willy Hess, Harold Bauer, and Henri Marteau. No soloist is announced for the d'Indy concert.

Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene,

Whose Efforts Have Brought Back the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Symphony Concert.

Until seven years ago the five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were annual fixtures of each season. Then, however, they were abandoned in order to make it possible to give a second series of five in New York. The original scheme contemplated the abandonment of the Baltimore concerts, but when the announcement was made the Baltimore protest took the form of a very liberal guarantee, which the management of the orchestra could not in justice to itself or to Baltimore refuse.

Since 1898 many efforts have been made to have Washington once more placed on the list of cities which have the monthly visits of the orchestra in November, December, January, February and March, but not until this year have sufficient inducements been offered. Last spring Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene took hold of the matter and it was decided to remove the second series of Philadelphia concerts to this city.

The concerts will be given on Tuesday afternoons, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, in the New National Theater, at 4:30 o'clock. The subscription sale of seats will open on next Wednesday morning.

The orchetsra, under the conductorship of Mr. Gericke, will bring a minimum of ninety-six performers, which makes it the largest regular orchestra of this country and one of the largest in the world.

[81]

LIFE
From
Address

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO the field of music in this country was limited practically to a few signing societies; to casual and generally unprofitable seasons of grand opera by traveling companies, and to a few concerts by wandering stars. Of orchestral music there was none except in Boston and New York, and in those cities the supply was small and of not very high character. To-day, where twenty-five years ago the country possessed but one orchestra of serious artistic purpose—the Philharmonic Society of New York—there are no less than eight permanent or semi-permanent orchestras of full symphonic dimensions, while the number of smaller organizations that are doing admirable work seems to be limited only by the number of cities that possess a hundred and fifty thousand or more inhabitants.

The great impetus to this growth was undoubtedly given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which this year completes its first quarter century. Organized in the year of 1881, with a personnel of seventy men and with George Henschel as its conductor, it was the first permanent orchestra in America and the first orchestra in the world organized exclusively for the purpose of giving symphony concerts and having exclusive command of the services of its men. First in the field, it was its lot to make the long uphill fight necessary to create such a public sentiment for this highest class of music as would make other similar organizations possible. Constantly improved in personnel at whatever cost necessary and under the leadership of such men as Henschel, Gericke, Nikisch, Paur, and, again, Gericke, in its early years it did splendid missionary work throughout the country.

For many years Washington was one of the cities where concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were annual fixtures. Owing to a variety of reasons for the past seven years Washington has been without a visit from this organization. This year, through the efforts of Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, such inducements were offered the management that the second series of concerts, which have heretofore been given in Philadelphia, have been transferred to Washington. Accordingly the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five concerts in this city on Tuesdays of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 15, and March 13, in the New National Theater at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Orchestra this year comprises ninety-six performers and their quality is higher than it has ever been. The concert-master is Professor Willy Hess, one of the leading violinists of the world and leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which will be heard here during the course of the season. The principal 'cellist is Heinrich Warnke, until this year occupying a similar position in the celebrated Kain Orchestra of Munich. The leaders of the violas are Messrs. Ferir and Zach. Longy, the first oboe; Grisez, the first clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Schnecker, the harpist, and Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, stand in the highest rank of their profession and are the result of long years of constant sifting and elimination.

Of Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, it is hardly necessary to speak. He is to-day the first conductor of America, and in Europe there are very few whose names may be bracketed with his. A final authority in the traditions and interpretation of the music of the great masters, he is ever in touch with the work of the men of to-day and gives readings of them with a sympathetic insight which is found in very few conductors.

Mr. Gericke will conduct four of the Washington concerts, the first, third, fourth and fifth. The second will serve to introduce as conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, France's greatest living composer, who has been invited over as to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. His concerts will make special appeal to music-lovers through its novelty as many new works of the modern French school will be played in America for the first time.

In the other concerts, Mr. Gericke will present some most interesting novelties from the list he has provided for the Boston concerts. These comprise a new overture by Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South," a number of smaller pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin"; Gustav Mahler's fifth symphony; a symphonic poem by Arthur Foote; Glaxounov's symphonic poem, "Le Kremlin"; Ernst Boehe's symphonic poem, "Odysseus Austahrt und Schiffbruch"; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube"; Franciana's overture, "Libussa"; Busoni's overture, "Lustspiel," and Richard Strauss' "Ritter" suite; Eugene d'Harcourt's overture, "Le Tasse"; Otto Schilling's overture, "Pfeifertag," and a Ballade by Frederick S. Converse. Mme. Gadski will be the artist at the opening concert. The others will be Professor Willy Hess, Harold Bauer and Henri Marteau. For the d'Indy concert no soloist is announced.

The sale of subscription tickets for the five concerts will open at the ticket office of T. Arthur Smith, 1327 F street, on next Wednesday morning. The prices will be $10, $7.50, $5, and $3.75, according to location. Boxes will be $125.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ss

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mme. Gadski, the solo artist at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoon, November 7, is a great favorite here. Since last season she has gained new laurels through her work as Bruennhilde in the Munich performances last summer of Wagner's "Ring." The dates of the five concerts in the New National Theater are Tuesday, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, at 4:30 p.m. The solo artists announced for the season are Mme. Gadski, soprano; Prof. Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, pianist, and Henri Marteau, violinist. The subscription sale for the series has been very large.

ILLUSTRATED EXPRESS
From
Address BUFFALO, N. Y.
Date NOV 12 1905

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to give a second concert in Convention Hall on Monday evening, February 19th, is suffering from that rarest of complaints where orchestras are concerned, an embarrassment of riches. The week's tour in early October was such a success, artistically and financially, that offers of engagements on most flattering terms are coming in from all parts of the country. None of these can be accepted as the time of the orchestra from now until the end of April is fully occupied, but it seems like turning money away. Buffalo is the only city in the middle West which will get a second concert this year.

The present season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of this orchestra. Not only did the six concerts in this part of the country yield very large financial returns, but business everywhere shows a marked increase. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Providence and Hartford, where the orchestra gives three or more concerts, report the largest subscriptions on record. In Washington, where the orchestra will give five concerts for the first time in seven years, there will be, according to present indications, no seats for sale for the single concerts as the New National Theater was practically sold out on subscription for the five concerts before the open sale of season tickets began.

In Boston every seat is sold for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals, except the 505 unreserved 25-cent seats which are reserved for door sale, and every seat for the Saturday evening concerts except the 50 that the management holds for visitors to Boston. The prices these seats brought at auction ranged from fifteen to twenty per cent. higher than last year. Symphony Hall seats 2,569 persons. There is never an unsold seat for the 24 public rehearsals and concerts. That tells the story of the orchestra's popularity in its home city.

ILLUSTRATED TIMES
From
Address
Date NOV 12 1905

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to give a second concert in Convention Hall on Monday evening, February 19th, is suffering from that rarest of complaints where orchestras are concerned, an embarrassment of riches. The week's tour in early October was such a success, artistically and financially, that offers of engagements on the most flattering terms are coming in from all parts of the country. Of course, none of these can be accepted, as time of the orchestra from now until the end of April is fully occupied, but it seems like turning money away. Buffalo will be the only city in the Middle West which will get a second concert this year. The present season promises to be the most prosperous in this history of the orchestra. Not only did the six concerts in this part of the country yield very large financial returns, but business everywhere shows a marked increase. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Providence and Hartford, where the orchestra gives three or more conerts, report the largest subscriptions on record. In Washington, where the orchestra will give five concerts for the first time in seven years, there will be, according to present indications, no seats for sale for the single concerts, as the New National Theater was practically sold out on subscription for the five concerts before the open sale of season tickets began, and there has been a wild scramble for what are left.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR
ss D. C.
2 9 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the New National Theater on a week from next Tuesday afternoon, November 7, at 4:30 o'clock. The seven years in which there was no Boston Symphony concerts brought nothing to fill their place. The fact that Washingtonians will welcome the return of this famous organization finds evidence in the liberal subscription.

For the first concert Mme. Gadski will be the soloist, singing two arias, the names of which will be announced later. The orchestra itself will play the overture to Weber's "Oberon," two movements from the ballet music in Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust," two novelties by Sir Edward Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin," and finally Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor, No. 4.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR
ss D. C.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mme. Gadski, the solo artist at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoon, November 7, is a great favorite here. Since last season she has gained new laurels through her work as Bruennhilde in the Munich performances last summer of Wagner's "Ring." The dates of the five concerts in the New National Theater are Tuesday, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, at 4:30 p.m. The solo artists announced for the season are Mme. Gadski, soprano; Prof. Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, pianist, and Henri Marteau, violinist. The subscription sale for the series has been very large.

From
Address BUFFALO, N. Y.
NOV 12 1905

Boston Symyhony Orchestra.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is to give a second concert in Convention Hall on Monday evening, February 19, is suffering from that rarest of complaints where orchestras are concerned, an embarrassment of riches. The week's tour in early October was such a success, artistically and financially, that offers of engagements on the most flattering terms are coming in from all parts of the country. Of course, none of these can be accepted as the time of the Orchestra from now until the end of April is fully occupied but it seems like turning money away. Buffalo will be the only city in the Middle West which will get a second concert this year.

The present season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the Orchestra. Not only did the six concerts in this part of the country yield very large financial returns but business everywhere shows a marked increase. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Providence and Hartford, where the orchestra gives three or more concerts, report the largest subscriptions on record. In Washington where the Orchestra will give five concerts for the first time in seven years there will be according to present indications no seats for sale for the single concerts, as the new National Theater was practically sold out on subscription for the five concerts before the open sale of season tickets began and there has been a wild scramble for what are left.

In Boston there is the old story of every seat being sold for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals except the 505 unreserved 25 cent seats which are reserved for the door sale, and every seat for the Saturday evening concerts except the half hundred that the management holds out for sale to visitors to Boston. The prices these seats brought at the auction ranged on an average of from 15 to 20 per cent. higher than last year. Symphony Hall seats 2569 persons. There is never an unsold seat for the 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. That tells the story of the Orchestra's popularity in its home city.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
n POST
ress D. C.
e

It is yet possible to secure a few desirable seats for the series of concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in the New National Theater on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, Devember 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13. The subscription sale for the series which is now proceeding at Sanders & Stayman's, 1327 F street, has been very large and it will be well for those intending to subscribe to delay as little as possible.

TIMES
D. C.

First Boston Symphony.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the New National Theater on a week from next Tuesday afternoon, November 7, at 4:30 o'clock. This will be an event of utmost importance in Washington's social anad musical world. The seven years in which there were no Boston symphony concerts brought nothing to fill there place, and the eagerness with which Washingtonians will welcome the return of this famous organization finds evidence in the subscriptions which have thus far been sent in.

For the first concert Director Gericke has arranged an attractive program. Mme. Gadski will be the soloist, singing two arias, the names of which will be announced later. The orchestra will play the overture to Weber's "Oberon," two movements from the ballet music in Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," two novelties by England's talented composer, Sir Edward Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" and finally Tschaikowsky's fascinating symphony in F minor, No. 4. Despite the despairing beauty of the "Pathetique" and the grandeur of the symphony in E minor, No. 5, the one which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in Washington, is the favorite with a majority of the concertgoers if only because of its exquisite scherzo-marked "pizzicato ostinato." In noting more than in this movement is the extraordinary virtuosity of the orchestra revealed to a greater degree.

From ...

Address ...

Boston Symphony Orchestra

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO the field of music in this country was limited practically to a few ... societies, to casual and generally unprofitable seasons ... opera by traveling companies, and to a few concerts by ... ing stars. Of orchestral music there was none except in Boston and New York, and in those cities the supply was ... and of not very high character. To-day, where twenty ... ago the country possessed but one orchestra of ... purpose—the Philharmonic Society of New York—there are more than eight permanent or ... permanent orchestras of full symphonic dimensions, while the ... ber of smaller ... that are doing admirable work ... ems to be limited ... number of cities that possess ... ndred and fifty ... inhabitants.

The ... t impetus to this ... doubtedly given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ... year completes its first ... er century. ... of 1881, with a personnel of seventy ... schel as its conductor, it was the ... America and the first orchestra in the world ... for the purpose of giving symphony ... and ... sive command of the services of its men. ... was its lot to make the long ... hill fight ... a public sentiment for this highest class ... other similar organizations possible. ... personnel at whatever cost necessary and ... p of such men as Henschel, Gericke, Nikisch ... in, Gericke,' in its early years it did splendid ... throughout the country.

For many years Washington was ... of the cities where concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were annual fixtures. Owing to a variety of reasons ... the past seven years Washington has been without ... from this organization. This year, through the efforts of Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, such inducements were offered the management that the second series of concerts, which have ... given in Philadelphia, have been transferred to ... ingly the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five ... s in this city on Tuesdays of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 15, and March 13, in the New National ... ater at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Orchestra this year ... six performers and their quality is higher than it has ever been. The concertmaster is Professor Willy ... ss, one of the leading violinists of the world and leader of the Boston Symphony Quartet, which will be heard here during the course of the season. The principal 'cellist is Heinrich Warnke, until this year occupying a similar position in the celebrated Kain Orchestra of Munich. The leaders of the violas are Messrs. Ferir and Zach. Longy, the first oboe; Grisez, the f... clarinet; Sadony, the first bassoon; Schnecker, the harpist, and Hackebarth and Max Hess, the first horns, stand in the highest rank of their profession and are the result of long years ... onstant sifting and elimination.

Of Wilhelm Gericke, the conductor, it is hardly necessary to speak. He is to-day the first conductor of America, and in Europe there are very ... ians may be bracketed with his. A final authority ... the traditions and interpretation of the music of the great masters, he ... ver in touch with the work of the men of to-day ... gives readings of them with a sympathetic insight which ... d in very few conductors.

Mr. Gericke will conduct ... at the Washington concerts, the first, third, fourth and ... Fifth ... d will serve to introduce as conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, France's greatest living composer, who has been ... to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orc... s of its concerts. His concerts will mak... music-lovers through its novelty as many ... n French school will be played in America for ...

In the other concerts, ... present some most interesting novelties from the list he has ... provided for the Boston concerts. The ... Sir Edward Elgar, entitled "In the South," ... smaller pieces, "Chanson de Nuit" and "... de Matin"; ... Mahler's fifth symphony; a symp... ...ber; Glaxounov's symphonic poem, "Le Kremlin"; ...oche's symphonic poem, "Odysseus An... "; Dvorak's symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube"; ...erture, "Libussa"; Busoni's overture, "Lustspiel"; ...te" suite; Eugene d'Harcourt's overture, "Le T... illing's overture, "Pfeifertag," and a Ballade by ... verse. Mme. Gadski will be the artist at the opening ... The others will be Professor Willy Hess, Har... Henri Marteau. For the d'Indy concert no soloist ...

The sale of subscription ... for the five concerts will open at the ticket office of T... ...n, 1327 F street, on next Wednesday morning. T... ...ets will be $10, $7.50, $5, and $3.75, according to location. ... will be $125.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

...

...

...

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mme. Gadski, the solo artist at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the New National Theater on Tuesday afternoon, November 7, is a great favorite here. Since last season she has gained new laurels through her work as Bruennhilde in the Munich performances last summer of Wagner's "Ring." The dates of the five concerts in the New National Theater are Tuesday, November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13 and March 13, at 4:30 p.m. The solo artists announced for the season are Mme. Gadski, soprano; Prof. Willy Hess, violinist; Harold Bauer, pianist, and Henri Marteau, violinist. The subscription sale for the series has been very large.

ILLUSTRATED EXPRESS

From ...

Address ...

NOV 12 1905

...ate

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to give a second concert in Convention Hall on Monday evening, February 19th, is suffering from that rarest of complaints where orchestras are concerned, an embarrassment of riches. The week's tour in early October was such a success, artistically and financially, that offers of engagements on most flattering terms are coming in from all parts of the country. None of these can be accepted as the time of the orchestra from now until the end of April is fully occupied, but it seems like turning money away. Buffalo is the only city in the middle West which will get a second concert this year.

The present season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of this orchestra. Not only did the six concerts in this part of the country yield very large financial returns, but business everywhere shows a marked increase. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Providence and Hartford, where the orchestra gives three or more concerts, report the largest subscriptions on record. In Washington, where the orchestra will give five concerts for the first time in seven years, there will be, according to present indications, no seats for sale for the single concerts as the New National Theater was practically sold out on subscription for the five concerts before the open sale of season tickets began.

In Boston every seat is sold for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals, except the 505 unreserved 25-cent seats which are reserved for door sale, and every seat for the Saturday evening concerts except the 50 that the management holds for visitors to Boston. The prices these seats brought at auction ranged from fifteen to twenty per cent. higher than last year. Symphony Hall seats 2,569 persons. There is never an unsold seat for the 24 public rehearsals and concerts. That tells the story of the orchestra's popularity in its home city.

ILLUSTRATED

From ...

Address ...

...ate ...

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to give a second concert in Convention Hall on Monday evening, February 19th, is suffering from that rarest of complaints where orchestras are concerned, an embarrassment of riches. The week's tour in early October was such a success, artistically and financially, that offers of engagements on the most flattering terms are coming in from all parts of the country. Of course, none of these can be accepted, as time of the orchestra from now until the end of April is fully occupied, but it seems like turning money away. Buffalo will be the only city in the Middle West which will get a second concert this year. The present season promises to be the most prosperous in this history of the orchestra. Not only did the six concerts in this part of the country yield very large financial returns, but business everywhere shows a marked increase. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Providence and Hartford, where the orchestra gives three or more conerts, report the largest subscriptions on record. In Washington, where the orchestra will give five concerts for the first time in seven years, there will be, according to present indications, no seats for sale for the single concerts, as the New National Theater was practically sold out on subscription for the five concerts before the open sale of season tickets began, and there has been a wild scramble for what are left.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

...STAR.

D. C

...ss ...

...

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the New National Theater on a week from next Tuesday afternoon, November 7, at 4:30 o'clock. The seven years in which there was no Boston Symphony concerts brought nothing to fill their place. The fact that Washingtonians will welcome the return of this famous organization finds evidence in the liberal subscription.

For the first concert Mme. Gadski will be the soloist, singing two arias, the names of which will be announced later. The orchestra itself will play the overture to Weber's "Oberon," two movements from the ballet music in Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust," two novelties by Sir Edward Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin," and finally Tschaikowsky's symphony in F minor, No. 4.

...ess ...

...

...e ...

NOV 12 1905

Boston Symyhony Orchestra.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is to give a second concert in Convention Hall on Monday evening, February 19, is suffering from that rarest of complaints where orchestras are concerned, an embarrassment of riches. The week's tour in early October was such a success, artistically and financially, that offers of engagements on the most flattering terms are coming in from all parts of the country. Of course, none of these can be accepted as the time of the Orchestra from now until the end of April is fully occupied but it seems like turning money away. Buffalo will be the only city in the Middle West which will get a second concert this year.

The present season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the Orchestra. Not only did the six concerts in this part of the country yield very large financial returns but business everywhere shows a marked increase. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Providence and Hartford, where the orchestra gives three or more concerts, report the largest subscriptions on record. In Washington where the Orchestra will give five concerts for the first time in seven years there will be according to present indications no seats for sale for the single concerts, as the new National Theater was practically sold out on subscription for the five concerts before the open sale of season tickets began and there has been a wild scramble for what are left.

In Boston there is the old story of every seat being sold for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals except the 505 unreserved 25 cent seats which are reserved for the door sale, and every seat for the Saturday evening concerts except the half hundred that the management holds out for sale to visitors to Boston. The prices these seats brought at the auction ranged on an average of from 15 to 20 per cent. higher than last year. Symphony Hall seats 2569 persons. There is never an unsold seat for the 24 public rehearsals and 24 concerts. That tells the story of the Orchestra's popularity in its home city.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

n ...

ress ...

e ...

It is yet possible to secure a few desirable seats for the series of concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in the New National Theater on the Tuesday afternoons of November 7, December 5, January 9, February 13, and March 13. The subscription sale for the series which is now proceeding at Sanders & Stayman's, 1327 F street, has been very large and it will be well for those intending to subscribe to delay as little as possible.

TIMES

D. C

First Boston Symphony.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the New National Theater on a week from next Tuesday afternoon, November 7, at 4:30 o'clock. This will be an event of utmost importance in Washington's social anad musical world. The seven years in which there were no Boston symphony concerts brought nothing to fill there place, and the eagerness with which Washingtonians will welcome the return of this famous organization finds evidence in the subscriptions which have thus far been sent in.

For the first concert Director Gericke has arranged an attractive program. Mme. Gadski will be the soloist, singing two arias, the names of which will be announced later. The orchestra will play the overture to Weber's "Oberon," two movements from the ballet music in Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," two novelties by England's talented composer, Sir Edward Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin;" and finally Tschaikowsky's fascinating symphony in F minor, No. 4. Despite the despairing beauty of the "Pathetique" and the grandeur of the symphony in E minor, No. 5, the one which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in Washington, is the favorite with a majority of the concertgoers if only because of its exquisite scherzo-marked "pizzicato ostinato." In noting more than in this movement is the extraordinary virtuosity of the orchestra revealed to a greater degree.

[82]

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 22 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brings to Washington for its five concerts its full force of ninety-six performers, the orchestra that is used in Boston, New York and Philadelphia. This is the largest permanent organization in America and by far the largest traveling orchestra in the world. The expense of transporting this body of men from city to city is enormous, as no discrimination is made between the humblest member of the organization and the most expensive. All fare alike in hotels and railway cars. It requires three Pullmans and one baggage car to transport the orchestra. The subscribers of this year have the privilege of securing for next season the seats they will occupy this season before the books are opened for new subscribers. The subscription sale is now in progress.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 22 1905

Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will bring to Washington for its five concerts its full force of ninety-six performers, the orchestra that is used in Baltimore, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. This is the largest permanent organization in America, and by far the largest traveling orchestra in the world. The expense of transporting this body of men from city to city is enormous, as no discrimination is made between the humblest member of the organization and the most expensive. All fare alike in hotels and railway cars.

It is a great advantage to prospective patrons of the five Boston symphony concerts which will be given in the New National Theater this winter to subscribe for the whole series. Not only will there be a material reduction in the price—about 20 per cent—but such subscribers will always be sure of getting seats, which means a good deal when it is considered that the capacity of the theater will all but be exhausted by the season sale.

Moreover, the subscribers of this year have the privilege of securing for next season the seats they will occupy this season before the books are opened for new

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
TIMES.
ess

National—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place on next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the New National Theater.

It has been most gratifying to the management of the orchestra and to Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who is responsible for securing the renewal of the concerts, that Washington's response has been liberal.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has grown considerably since it was last here seven years ago. Then, when Mr. Paur was the conductor, it carried but eighty men on the monthly trips it made from Boston. Today it carries ninety-six. This is the largest traveling orchestra in America, if, indeed, not in the world, and no orchestra in the world is more complete. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made itself independent of all outside assistance.

Mme. Gadski, the soloist, needs no introduction in Washington where she has long been a great favorite. Her numbers have been happily chosen. Benvignani, who for so many years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau company, and had been familiar with singers for over half a century, was wont to say that no one had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did since the great Tietjens. Her singing of the Mozart tune in Cologne last summer fourteen recalls.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
ss

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place on next Tuesday afternoon at half past four o'clock in the New National Theater. The number of subscribers as long ago as June was sufficient to fill a good third of the theater. Mme. Gadski will be the soloist. Her numbers have been happily chosen. Benvignani, who for so many years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau Company, and had been familiar with singers for over half a century, was wont to say that no one had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did since the great Tietjens had sung it. Mme. Gadski did in Cologne last summer fourteen recalls.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
POST
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NOV 5 - 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra, National Theater, Tuesday Afternoon.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the National Theater. The concert is expected to gather together all that is best in the Washington musical and social world, and there is every prospect that the theater will be crowded to the doors. The greater part of the house has been sold out on subscriptions, and the seats that are left for those unprovided with season tickets are said to be few.

It has been most gratifying to the management of the orchestra and to Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene that Washington's response has been so liberal. When Mrs. Greene first broached the subject last spring, she was encouraged by everybody, and at no time since then has there been a moment when the project was threatened with failure. The number of subscribers as long ago as June was sufficient to fill a good third of the theater.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has grown considerably since it was last here, seven years ago. Then, when Mr. Paur was the conductor, it carried eighty men on the monthly trips it made from Boston. To-day it carries ninety-six. The personnel of the orchestra is divided as follows: First violins, sixteen; second violins, fourteen; violas, ten; 'celli, ten; contrabasses, eight; flutes, four; oboes, three; English horn, one; clarinets, three; bass clarinet, one; bassoons, four; contrabassoon, one; horns, six; trumpets, four; trombones, three, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets, and librarian, each one.

Mme. Gadski, the soloist, needs no introduction in Washington, where she has long been a great favorite. Her numbers have been most happily chosen. Benvignani, who for years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau company and had been familiar with singers for over a half a century, was wont to say that no one had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did since the great Tietjens. Her singing of the Mozart tune in Cologne last summer brought fourteen recalls.

STAR.
ess
NOV 9 - 1905

Boston Symphony Concert.

The most distinctly notable event of the season in musical affairs of the national capital was the first of the matinee concerts given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, at the New National Theater yesterday afternoon. Every seat and all the available standing room in the playhouse was occupied, the large audience being representative of the capital's fashionable and musical population. The eminent place occupied by this remarkable organization in the musical world could not fail to arouse high expectations in the minds of the audience. These expectations were not only realized but surpassed by the excellent and artistic work of the orchestra in the execution of the carefully selected program. Each number was received with applause so enthusiastic that there could be no doubt of the approval and keen enjoyment of the auditors.

The symphony was Tschaikowsky's No. 4, in F minor, Opus 36, considered the most important work of the Russian composer. In the execution of the various movements of this number the exquisite harmony, the expressive interpretative powers and the artistic precision of attack of the orchestra were brought out with delightful effect, arousing the audience to demonstrative response. Most artistic and enjoyable was the work of the orchestra in Elgar's "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin," the former a melodious andante in G major and the latter an allegretto in the same key. The overture to the opera "Oberon," by Weber, was accorded sustained applause, and the "Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Waltz of Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust," by the romantic Berlioz, were received with equal enthusiasm.

Mme. Gadski was the soloist for the occasion, singing the recitative and aria from Weber's "Der Frieschuts" and the recitative, "How Susanna Delays," and aria, "Flown Forever," from "The Marriage of Figaro," by Mozart. Mme. Gadski's pure, sweet tones and excellent method made her work effective and decidedly enjoyable.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NOV 9 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Tuesday's Brilliant Concert Greeted by a Capacity Audience.

The second coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has often been foretold by local prophets. After many seasons of weary waiting, it came to pass at the National Theater Tuesday afternoon. The occasion was notable in many respects. It meant, for one thing, that the present musical season is to have a dignity and importance such as only the presence of this organization can lend. It was also shown that these facts are appreciated for all they are worth by the audience which gathered to hear the orchestra. Many moons have come and waned since standing room was at a premium at a symphony concert. Yet that was the compliment which the players from Boston had paid them. Indeed, the size of the audience must have caused them to rejoice on their material side; its enthusiasm must have quickened the beating of their artistic hearts. And how richly did they deserve all the plaudits which they received.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra stands for all that is best in orchestral playing. Its excellence has grown with its growth and strengthened with its strength, until to-day it is excelled by none and equaled by few. The beauty or its tone would enthrall one, even were its brilliancy and other technical perfections absent. The combination of all these qualifications comes pretty near calling perfection its own. The interpretations depend, of course, upon whoever is at the conductor's desk. If he be a strict academician, the intellectual is bound to predominate; if he is not so much so, and has somewhat of an emotional side, he will naturally project that into his readings.

The orchestra was last heard here under the direction of Emil Paur. It returns under Wilhelm Gericke, who was one of the earliest, if not the first, of its conductors. Mr. Paur was apt to have his little emotional fights now and then; Mr. Gericke prefers the intellectual. His emotion, if any, is of the head, not the heart. His work of Tuesday was characterized by the most thorough scholarship, and notwithstanding his leanings toward the academic, there was no lack of variety. Let it be added that his conducting is quite as agreeable to the eye as to the ear. Not once during the afternoon did he find it necessary to make use of any but the most graceful method of leading his men.

Tuesday's symphony was the fourth by Tschaikowsky. It was probably a comparative novelty to most of the auditors. Those who have come to look upon Tschaikowsky as the composer of "dark blue" music must have been delighted to find that he has other colors on his palate. "Dark blue" there is, to be sure—witness the fate theme at the opening of the first and toward the close of the last movement (no Russian could get completely away from the idea of fate); but viewed as a whole, it is about the most cheerful expression which this composer has allowed himself. There is no sardonic touch to his merriment this time. The scherzo is charming. The strings are scored pizzicato throughout, which lends a beautiful effect to the whole movement. The final movement is decidedly brilliant, and, barring a few fate raps, about as joyous as the scherzo. The first two movements are treated in a somewhat more dark-blue manner. They seem to indicate that Tschaikowsky was not altogether of the mind to have a good time, after all. It is needless to add that the whole number was magnificently played. The strings fairly revelled in the scherzo music.

Much interest was felt in the two Elgar numbers on the programme, a "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." They proved to be quite worthy of the interest they had aroused, and were distinct additions to the already long list of music which sings of the night and morning. The other selections of the afternoon were the "Oberon" overture and two parts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust."

Mme. Gadski was the soloist. She was heard in recitatives and arias from the operas of "Der Freischutz" and "The Marriage of Figaro." Mme. Gadski is a singer whom it is always a pleasure to praise, and she can be relied upon to furnish ample opportunity to do so. Justice to her, however, demands that it be recorded that she did not appear to be in the best of voice Tuesday. In fact, in the first part of the "Der Frieschutz" number her voice gave evidence of being tired, and the fullness of tone, which is generally one of its chief beauties, was somewhat lacking. This was to an extent regained by the time she reached the Mozart music, which she gave in fine method and a beautiful legato style. With the exception noted, there was in Mme. Gadski's singing yesterday all the delights which it always gives, and her intelligence and sincerity stamp her the fine artist she is. The charm of her personality was never more strong, and she furnished a picture for the eye. She was recalled time and again, but Mr. Gericke's rigid adherance to symphony programme etiquette allowed of no encores.

H. R. A.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR.
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NOV 5 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place next Tuesday afternoon at half past four o'clock in the New National Theater. The number of subscribers as long ago as June was sufficient to fill a good third of the theater. Mme. Gadski will be the soloist. Her numbers have been happily chosen. Benvignani, who for so many years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau Company, and had been familiar with singers for over half a century, was wont to say that no one had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did since the great Tietjens had sung it. Mme. Gadski did in Cologne last summer fourteen recalls.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brings to Washington for its five concerts its full force of ninety-six performers, the orchestra that is used in Boston, New York and Philadelphia. This is the largest permanent organization in America and by far the largest traveling orchestra in the world. The expense of transporting this body of men from city to city is enormous, as no discrimination is made between the humblest member of the organization and the most expensive. All fare alike in hotels and railway cars. It requires three Pullmans and one baggage car to transport the orchestra. The subscribers of this year have the privilege of securing for next season the seats they will occupy this before the books are opened for new subscribers. The subscription sale is now in progress.

TIMES
WASHINGTON, D. C.
OCT 22

Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will bring to Washington for its five concerts its full force of ninety-six performers, the orchestra that is used in Baltimore, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. This is the largest permanent organization in America, and by far the largest traveling orchestra in the world. The expense of transporting this body of men from city to city is enormous, as no discrimination is made between the humblest member of the organization and the most expensive. All fare alike in hotels and railway cars.

It is a great advantage to prospective patrons of the five Boston symphony concerts which will be given in the New National Theater this winter to subscribe for the whole series. Not only will there be a material reduction in the price—about 20 per cent—but such subscribers will always be sure of getting seats, which means a good deal when it is considered that the capacity of the theater will all but be exhausted by the season sale.

Moreover, the subscribers of this year have the privilege of securing for next season the seats they will occupy this before the books are opened for new subscribers.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
ess

National—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place on next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the New National Theater.

It has been most gratifying to the management of the orchestra and to Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who is responsible for securing the renewal of the concerts, that Washington's response has been liberal.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has grown considerably since it was last here seven years ago. Then, when Mr. Paur was the conductor, it carried but eighty men on the monthly trips it made from Boston. Today it carries ninety-six. This is the largest traveling orchestra in America, if, indeed, not in the world, and no orchestra in the world is more complete. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made itself independent of all outside assistance.

Mme. Gadski, the soloist, needs no introduction in Washington where she has long been a great favorite. Her numbers have been happily chosen. Benvignani, who for so many years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau company, and had been familiar with singers for over half a century, was wont to say that no one had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did since the great Tietjens. Her singing of the Mozart tune in Cologne last summer brought fourteen recalls.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
STAR,

ss

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place Tuesday afternoon at half past four o'clock in the New National Theater. The number of subscribers as long ago as June was sufficient to fill a good third of the theater. Mme Gadski will be the soloist. Her numbers have been happily chosen. Benvignani, who for so many years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau Company and had been familiar with singers for over half a century, was wont to say that no one since the great Tietjens had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did. The singing of the Mozart tune in Cologne last summer brought fourteen recalls.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
POST

ss

Boston Symphony Orchestra, National Theater, Tuesday Afternoon.

The first of the five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington this winter will take place next Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the National Theater. The concert is expected to gather together all that is best in the Washington musical and social world, and there is every prospect that the theater will be crowded to the doors. The greater part of the house has been sold out on subscriptions, and the seats that are left for those unprovided with season tickets are said to be few.

It has been most gratifying to the management of the orchestra and to Mrs. Katie Wilson-Greene that Washington's response has been so liberal. When Mrs. Greene first broached the subject last spring, she was encouraged by everybody, and at no time since then has there been a moment when the project was threatened with failure. The number of subscribers as long ago as June was sufficient to fill a good third of the theater.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has grown considerably since it was last here, seven years ago. Then, when Mr. Paur was the conductor, it carried eighty men on the monthly trips it made from Boston. To-day it carries ninety-six. The personnel of the orchestra is divided as follows: First violins, sixteen; second violins, fourteen; violas, ten; 'celli, ten; contrabasses, eight; flutes, four; oboes, three; English horn, one; clarinets, three; bass clarinet, one; bassoons, four; contrabassoon, one; horns, six; trumpets, four; trombones, three, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets, and librarian, each one.

Mme. Gadski, the soloist, needs no introduction in Washington, where she has long been a great favorite. Her numbers have been most happily chosen. Benvignani, who for years was one of the Italian conductors of the Grau company and had been familiar with singers for over a half a century, was wont to say that no one had sung the "Freischutz" aria as Gadski did since the great Tietjens. Her singing of the Mozart tune in Cologne last summer brought fourteen recalls.

ess

Boston Symphony Concert.

The most distinctly notable event of the season in musical affairs of the national capital was the first of the matinee concerts given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, at the New National Theater yesterday afternoon. Every seat and all the available standing room in the playhouse was occupied, the large audience being representative of the capital's fashionable and musical population. The eminent place occupied by this remarkable organization in the musical world could not fail to arouse high expectations in the minds of the audience. These expectations were not only realized but surpassed by the excellent and artistic work of the orchestra in the execution of the carefully selected program. Each number was received with applause so enthusiastic that there could be no doubt of the approval and keen enjoyment of the auditors.

The symphony was Tschaikowsky's No. 4, in F minor, Opus 36, considered the most important work of the Russian composer. In the execution of the various movements of this number the exquisite harmony, the expressive interpretative powers and the artistic precision of attack of the orchestra were brought out with delightful effect, arousing the audience to demonstrative response. Most artistic and enjoyable was the work of the orchestra in Elgar's "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin," the former a melodious andante in G major and the latter an allegretto in the same key. The overture to the opera "Oberon," by Weber, was accorded sustained applause, and the "Minuet of Will-o'-the-Wisps" and "Waltz of Sylphs," from "The Damnation of Faust," by the romantic Berlioz, were received with equal enthusiasm.

Mme. Gadski was the soloist for the occasion, singing the recitative and aria from Weber's "Der Frieschutz" and the recitative, "How Susanna Delays," and aria, "Flown Forever," from "The Marriage of Figaro," by Mozart. Mme. Gadski's pure, sweet tones and excellent method made her work effective and decidedly enjoyable.

ess
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NOV 9 - 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Tuesday's Brilliant Concert Greeted by a Capacity Audience.

The second coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has often been foretold by local prophets. After many seasons of weary waiting, it came to pass at the National Theater Tuesday afternoon. The occasion was notable in many respects. It meant, for one thing, that the present musical season is to have a dignity and importance such as only the presence of this organization can lend. It was also shown that these facts are appreciated for all they are worth by the audience which gathered to hear the orchestra. Many moons have come and waned since standing room was at a premium at a symphony concert. Yet that was the compliment which the players from Boston had paid them. Indeed, the size of the audience must have caused them to rejoice on their material side; its enthusiasm must have quickened the beating of their artistic hearts. And how richly did they deserve all the plaudits which they received.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra stands for all that is best in orchestral playing. Its excellence has grown with its growth and strengthened with its strength, until to-day it is excelled by none and equaled by few. The beauty of its tone would enthrall one, even were its brilliancy and other technical perfections absent. The combination of all these qualifications comes pretty near calling perfection its own. The interpretations depend, of course, upon whoever is at the conductor's desk. If he be a strict academician, the intellectual is bound to predominate; if he is not so much so, and has somewhat of an emotional side, he will naturally project that into his readings.

The orchestra was last heard here under the direction of Emil Paur. It returns under Wilhelm Gericke, who was one of the earliest, if not the first, of its conductors. Mr. Paur was apt to have his little emotional fights now and then; Mr. Gericke prefers the intellectual. His emotion, if any, is of the head, not the heart. His work of Tuesday was characterized by the most thorough scholarship, and notwithstanding his leanings toward the academic, there was no lack of variety. Let it be added that his conducting is quite as agreeable to the eye as to the ear. Not once during the afternoon did he find it necessary to make use of any but the most graceful method of leading his men.

Tuesday's symphony was the fourth by Tschaikowsky. It was probably a comparative novelty to most of the auditors. Those who have come to look upon Tschaikowsky as the composer of "dark blue" music must have been delighted to find that he has other colors on his palate. "Dark blue" there is, to be sure—witness the fate theme at the opening of the first and toward the close of the last movement (no Russian could get completely away from the idea of fate); but viewed as a whole, it is about the most cheerful expression which this composer has allowed himself. There is no sardonic touch to his merriment this time. The scherzo is charming. The strings are scored pizzicato throughout, which lends a beautiful effect to the whole movement. The final movement is decidedly brilliant, and, barring a few fate raps, about as joyous as the scherzo. The first two movements are treated in a somewhat more dark-blue manner. They seem to indicate that Tschaikowsky was not altogether of the mind to have a good time, after all. It is needless to add that the whole number was magnificently played. The strings fairly revelled in the scherzo music.

Much interest was felt in the two Elgar numbers on the programme, a "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." They proved to be quite worthy of the interest they had aroused, and were distinct additions to the already long list of music which sings of the night and morning. The other selections of the afternoon were the "Oberon" overture and two parts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust."

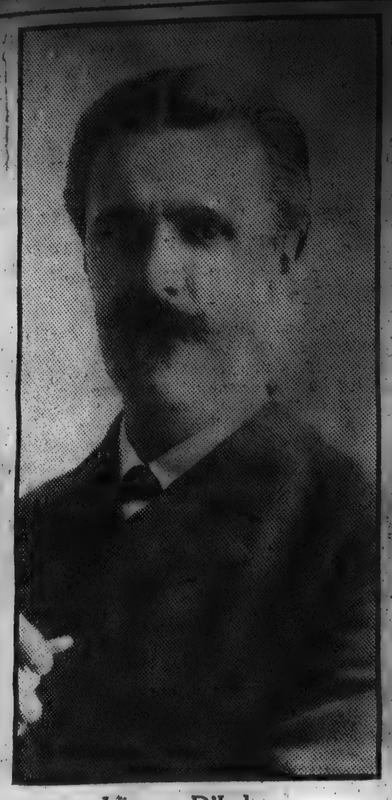
Mme. Gadski was the soloist. She was heard in recitatives and arias from the operas of "Der Freischutz" and "The Marriage of Figaro." Mme. Gadski is a singer whom it is always a pleasure to praise, and she can be relied upon to furnish ample opportunity to do so. Justice to her, however, demands that it be recorded that she did not appear to be in the best of voice Tuesday. In fact, in the first part of the "Der Frieschutz" number her voice gave evidence of being tired, and the fullness of tone, which is generally one of its chief beauties, was somewhat lacking. This was to an extent regained by the time she reached the Mozart music, which she gave in fine method and a beautiful legato style. With the exception noted, there was in Mme. Gadski's singing yesterday all the delights which it always gives, and her intelligence and sincerity stamp her the fine artist she is. The charm of her personality was never more strong, and she furnished a picture for the eye. She was recalled time and again, but Mr. Gericke's rigid adherance to symphony programme etiquette allowed of no encores.

H. R. A.

...ING HERALD, ...

Coming With the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Henri Marteau



Vincent D'Indy

Miss Marie Hall

D'Indy is a French conductor and will hold the baton over the Boston Symphonists during part of the coming season. Mr. Marteau and Miss Hall are violinists. Both are to be heard in Baltimore.

...NGUISHED FRENCH COMPOSER, WHO WILL CONDUCT THE ... SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN BALTIMORE ON DECEMBER 6.

...ress Clipping Bureau in the World
NEWS AMERICA
MD.
HERALD
...ss
From AMERICA
Address
Date

The second Baltimore concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (December 6) will be devoted to modern French works, and it will be conducted by M. Vincent d'Indy. Such a distinction would seem appropriate if shown to Richard Strauss, who, with all his vagaries and riotous excesses, is easily the genius of his generation; but in the above case it seems a bit forced.

NEWS

Jean Gerardy, the greatest of 'cellists, is to make a tour of America this season. He arrives in New York on November 2. Hope we may have the pleasure of hearing him.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces the following soloists for its concerts in Boston:

Waldemar Luetschg, pianist; Madame Samaroff, pianist; Marie Hall, violinist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, and Rudolph Gang, pianist. Others well known are Henri Marteau, violinist; Ben Davies, tenor; Emma Eames-Story; Madame Gadsky and Ellison Van Hoose, together in a Wagner programme; Olive Fremstadt, soprano; Alfred Reisenauer, pianist; Adele Aus der Ohe, Harold Bauer, Ernest Hutcheson, all of them pianists; Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist; David Bispham, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEWS

BOSTON SYMPHONY LIST.

Subscriptions Likely To Be Larger Than Ever Before.

The indications are that the coming season will be the most successful that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by the subscribers of last year is unusually large, and the inquiries which are being sent in warrant the belief that the list of new subscribers will be very long. This year the concerts will be given, as usual, in the Lyric Theatre, but on Wednesday evenings, instead of on Tuesdays, as last year. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers of last season have until next Saturday, October 21, in which to secure the same seats they had last season. On Monday, October 23, the books will be opened for the new subscribers.

Boston Symphony Concerts.

Everything indicates that the coming season will be the most successful the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by subscribers of last year has been unusually large, and the inquiries that are being sent to W. A. Albaugh indicate that the list of new subscribers will be unusually long.

This year the concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater, as in the past, but on Wednesday evenings instead of Tuesday. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers of last season have until Saturday next, October 21, in which to retain their old seats. The books for new subscribers will be opened on the following Monday, October 23.

Applications for renewals must be made to W. A. Albaugh, 109 North Charles street, either in person or by letter. If by letter they must be accompanied by checks or money orders, payable to W. A. Albaugh. The prices this year will be the same as last.

From
Address
Date

Boston Symphony In Demand.

Indications are that the coming season will be the most successful the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by subscribers of last year has been unusually large, and the inquiries that are being sent to Mr. W. A. Albaugh indicate that the list of new subscribers will be a long one. This year the concerts will be given in the Lyric Theatre, as in the past, but on Wednesday evenings instead of Tuesday. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
HERALD

The World of Music

The subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given this winter in the Lyric by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in progress at Albaugh's since last Monday, and already it is the largest that Baltimore has known since the orchestra began to come to this city.

The first concert will be given in the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8. The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the program will be entirely Wagnerian. It is impossible to announce at present exactly what the program will be, as Mme. Gadski has not yet reached America, having sailed only last Tuesday, and there is as yet some doubt concerning the opening number. But the last half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," the superb parting scene between Brunnhilde and Siegfried from the first scene of act 1, the death of Siegfied, and the funeral march from the first scene of act 3, and finally the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," "Brunnhilde's Immolation," undoubtedly the most tremendous scene dramatically and musically that was ever written. Different from many of the excerpts from Wagner's works, it loses little by being sung in concert.

Mme. Gadski has sung the Brunnhilde of "Gotterdammerung" twice in this country with extraordinary success. That was two years ago, soon after she had learned the part. Last September she sang it again in Munich at the Wagner festival in the Prinz Regenten Theater. It was the sensation of the summer in Germany. At the fall of the curtain she was acclaimed as no other woman in Germany, has been since the unforgettable Amalia Materna was in her prime.

The sale of single seats for the first concert will open at Albaugh's on Monday morning, November 6.

HERALD
...ORE, MD.
OCT 24 190...

GLEANINGS FROM THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Musical people all over the world are recognizing this as a Mozart year—the one hundred and fiftieth since his birth. Abroad there are Mozart festivals and revivals of his tuneful operas, after much experience among the Wagner declamatory recitatives. Berlin has just heard a splendid rendition of "The Magic Flute," with an all-tar cast. Conried will give the same opera in New York, with "Don Giovanni" and the "Marriage of Figaro." It is a pity that he does not also give "Titus," instead of the light and trivial "Gypsy Baron." The Mozart masterworks are needed to keep the world in mind of the true ideals of classic art. When the old musical ideals are abandoned, grand opera is taken away from the realms of real music and given over to dramatic tragedy, where the vocalists spoil their voices by struggling in contests of startling recitative, which might almost as well be spoken without musical tones. The world owes an everlasting debt to Mozart his tuneful melodies in "The Marriage of Figaro," "Titus," "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." Baltimore ought not to let the season pass without a Mozart festival.

Another Nikisch, formerly well known in Baltimore as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now the director of the Leipsic opera. He will produce there during the coming season; Leoncavallo's new opera, "Roland of Berlin;" "The Curious Women," by Wolf Ferrari; "The Enforced Marriage," by Humperdinck; "Salome," by Richard Strauss, and "Beatrice and Benedict," by Berlioz.

Eugen d'Albert's new opera "Flanto Solo," will have its premiere at Prague this season. The Germans in Berlin have translated from the Swedish William Stenhamer's "Feast of Solway." The German translation was sung in Stuttgart before the original Swedish was sung in Stockholm, where Mr. Stenhamer is director of the Philharmonic Chorus. Stenhamer's music, like that of Grieg, is characteristically Scandinavian and includes some of the beautiful Swedish folk melodies.

...ress Clipping Bureau in the World
HERALD
...ORE, MD.
OCT 15 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Everything indicates that the coming season will be the most successful the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by subscribers of last year has been unusually large, and the inquiries that are being sent to W. A. Albaugh indicate that the list of new subscribers will be unusually long.

This year the concerts will be given in the Lyric, as in the past, but on Wednesday evenings instead of Tuesday. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers of last season have until Saturday next, October 21, in which to retain their old seats. The books for new subscribers will be opened on the following Monday, October 23.

Applications for renewals must be made to W. A. Albaugh, 109 North Charles street, either in person or by letter. If by letter, they must be accompanied by checks or money orders, payable to W. A. Albaugh. The prices this year will be the same as last, $7 and $5, according to location.

The World of Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little year book, showing its bookings for the present season. Together with those which have been given already this year, the total number of concerts for the season will be 109, the season ending in Boston on Saturday, April 28. Forty-eight of the concerts will be given in Boston. Then comes New York with ten and Cambridge with six; Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford three each, and Buffalo, Worcesteer and Portland, Me., two each. The rest are scattered about among the cities and towns of New York state and New England. The season promises to be the most profitable in the history of the orchestra. The week's trip to Canada and the Middle West, which began the season, was most profitable, and everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions are substantially larger than they were last year. It is a notable fact that in Washington, where the orchestra will give a series of concerts for the first time in seven years, the New National Theater has been sold out by subscription. The sale of seats for the Baltimore season is now in progress at Albaugh's, 109 North Charles street.

SUN
BALTIMORE, M...
OCT 22 190...

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN WAGNER

Ellison Van Hoose And Mme. Gadski To Be Soloists.

The first of the five concerts to be given in Baltimore this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8.

The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the program will be entirely Wagnerian. There is some doubt concerning the opening number, for Mme. Gadski will not arrive in this country until several days before the concert. The last half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," the superb parting scene between Brunnhilde and Siegfried from the first scene of Act I; the death of Siegfried and the funeral march from the first scene of Act III and the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"Brunnhilde's Immolation," one of the most tremendous scenes, dramatically and musically, that was ever written—and different from many of the excerpts from

[84]

BALTIMORE EVENING HERALD, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1905.

Coming With the Boston Symphony Orchestra

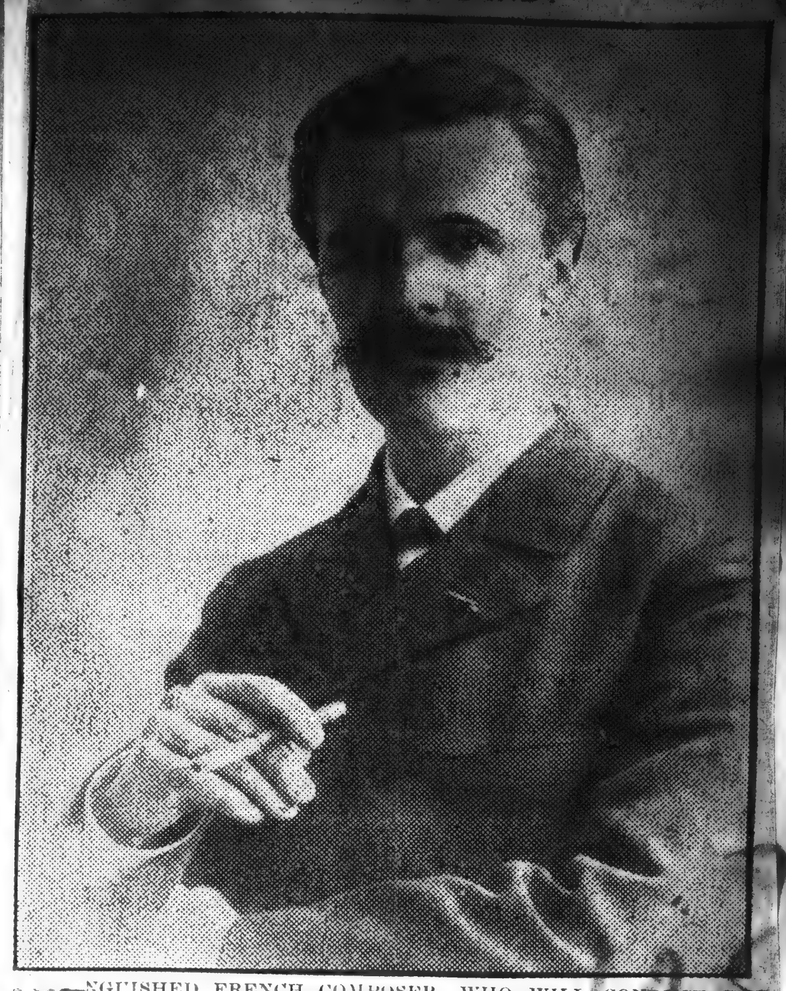
Henri Marteau

Vincent D'Indy

Miss Marie Hall

D'Indy is a French conductor and will hold the baton over the Boston Symphonists during part of the coming season. Mr. Marteau and Miss Hall are violinists. Both are to be heard in Baltimore.

M. VINCENT D'INDY



NGUISHED FRENCH COMPOSER, WHO WILL CONDUCT THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN BALTIMORE ON DECEMBER 5.

...ublished and most complete
...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World

The second Baltimore concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (December 6) will be devoted to modern French works, and it will be conducted by M. Vincent d'Indy. Such a distinction would seem appropriate if shown to Richard Strauss, who, with all his vagaries and riotous excesses, is easily the genius of his generation; but in the above case it seems a bit forced.

Jean Gerardy, the greatest of 'cellists, is to make a tour of America this season. He arrives in New York on November 2. Hope we may have the pleasure of hearing him.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces the following soloists for its concerts in Boston:

Waldemar Luetschg, pianist; Madame Samaroff, pianist; Marie Hall, violinist; Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist. Others well known are Henri Marteau, violinist; Ben Davies, tenor; Emma Eames-Story; Madame Gadsky and Ellison Van Hoose, together in a Wagner programme; Olive Fremstadt, soprano; Alfred Reisenauer, pianist; Adele Aus der Ohe, Harold Bauer, Ernest Hutcheson, all of them pianists; Elsa Ruegger, 'cellist; David Bispham, and from the orchestra, in addition to Mr. Warnke, Willy Hess, Timothy Adamowski, Felix Winternitz and Jacques Hoffmann.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World

Boston Symphony Concerts.

Everything indicates that the coming season will be the most successful the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by subscribers of last year has been unusually large, and the inquiries that are being sent to W. A. Albaugh indicate that the list of new subscribers will be unusually long.

This year the concerts will be given in the Lyric Theater, as in the past, but on Wednesday evenings instead of Tuesday. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers of last season have until Saturday next, October 21, in which to retain their old seats. The books for new subscribers will be opened on the following Monday, October 23.

Applications for renewals must be made to W. A. Albaugh, 109 North Charles street, either in person or by letter. If by letter they must be accompanied by checks or money orders, payable to W. A. Albaugh. The prices this year will be the same as last.

From .....

Address .....

Date .....

Boston Symphony In Demand.

Indications are that the coming season will be the most successful the Boston Symphony Orchestra has had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by subscribers of last year has been unusually large, and the inquiries that are being sent to Mr. W. A. Albaugh indicate that the list of new subscribers will be a long one. This year the concerts will be given in the Lyric Theatre, as in the past, but on Wednesday evenings instead of Tuesday. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World

BOSTON SYMPHONY LIST.

Subscriptions Likely To Be Larger Than Ever Before.

The indications are that the coming season will be the most successful that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by the subscribers of last year is unusually large, and the inquiries which are being sent in warrant the belief that the list of new subscribers will be very long. This year the concerts will be given, as usual, in the Lyric Theatre, but on Wednesday evenings, instead of on Tuesdays, as last year. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers of last season have until next Saturday, October 21, in which to secure the same seats they had last season. On Monday, October 23, the books will be opened for the new subscribers.

The World of Music

The subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given this winter in the Lyric by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in progress at Albaugh's since last Monday, and already it is the largest that Baltimore has known since the orchestra began to come to this city.

The first concert will be given in the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8. The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the program will be entirely Wagnerian. It is impossible to announce at present exactly what the program will be, as Mme. Gadski has not yet reached America, having sailed only last Tuesday, and there is as yet some doubt concerning the opening number. But the last half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," the superb parting scene between Brunnhilde and Siegfried from the first scene of act 1, the death of Siegfied, and the funeral march from the first scene of act 3, and finally the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," "Brunnhilde's Immolation," undoubtedly the most tremendous scene dramatically and musically that was ever written. Different from many of the excerpts from Wagner's works, it loses little by being sung in concert.

Mme. Gadski has sung the Brunnhilde of "Gotterdammerung" twice in this country with extraordinary success. That was two years ago, soon after she had learned the part. Last September she sang it again in Munich at the Wagner festival in the Prinz Regenten Theater. It was the sensation of the summer in Germany. At the fall of the curtain she was acclaimed as no other woman in Germany, has been since the unforgettable Amalia Materna was in her prime.

The sale of single seats for the first concert will open at Albaugh's on Monday morning, November 6.

...spaper Cutting Bureau in the World

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Everything indicates that the coming season will be the most successful the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ever had in Baltimore. The number of renewals by subscribers of last year has been unusually large, and the inquiries that are being sent to W. A. Albaugh indicate that the list of new subscribers will be unusually long.

This year the concerts will be given in the Lyric, as in the past, but on Wednesday evenings instead of Tuesday. The dates are November 7, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. Subscribers of last season have until Saturday next, October 21, in which to retain their old seats. The books for new subscribers will be opened on the following Monday, October 23.

Applications for renewals must be made to W. A. Albaugh, 109 North Charles street, either in person or by letter. If by letter, they must be accompanied by checks or money orders, payable to W. A. Albaugh. The prices this year will be the same as last, $7 and $5, according to location.

The World of Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little year book, showing its bookings for the present season. Together with those which have been given already this year, the total number of concerts for the season will be 109, the season ending in Boston on Saturday, April 28. Forty-eight of the concerts will be given in Boston. Then comes New York with ten and Cambridge with six; Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford three each, and Buffalo, Worcesteer and Portland, Me., two each. The rest are scattered about among the cities and towns of New York state and New England. The season promises to be the most profitable in the history of the orchestra. The week's trip to Canada and the Middle West, which began the season, was most profitable, and everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions are substantially larger than they were last year. It is a notable fact that in Washington, where the orchestra will give a series of concerts for the first time in seven years, the New National Theater has been sold out by subscription. The sale of seats for the Baltimore season is now in progress at Albaugh's, 109 North Charles street.

From .....

Address .....

Date .....

GLEANINGS FROM THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Musical people all over the world are recognizing this as a Mozart year—the one hundred and fiftieth since his birth. Abroad there are Mozart festivals and revivals of his tuneful operas, after much experience among the Wagner declamatory recitatives. Berlin has just heard a splendid rendition of "The Magic Flute," with an all-star cast. Conried will give the same opera in New York, with "Don Giovanni" and the "Marriage of Figaro." It is a pity that he does not also give "Titus," instead of the light and trivial "Gypsy Baron." The Mozart masterworks are needed to keep the world in mind of the true ideals of classic art. When the old musical ideals are abandoned, grand opera is taken away from the realms of real music and given over to dramatic tragedy, where the vocalists spoil their voices by struggling in contests of startling recitative, which might almost as well be spoken without musical tones. The world owes an everlasting debt to Mozart his tuneful melodies in "The Marriage of Figaro," "Titus," "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." Baltimore ought not to let the season pass without a Mozart festival.

Another Nikisch, formerly well known in Baltimore as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now the director of the Leipsic opera. He will produce there during the coming season; Leoncavallo's new opera, "Roland of Berlin;" "The Curious Women," by Wolf Ferrari; "The Enforced Marriage," by Humperdinck; "Salome," by Richard Strauss, and "Beatrice and Benedict," by Berlioz.

Eugen d'Albert's new opera "Flauto Solo," will have its premiere at Prague this season. The Germans in Berlin have translated from the Swedish William Stenhamer's "Feast of Solway." The German translation was sung in Stuttgart before the original Swedish was sung in Stockholm, where Mr. Stenhamer is director of the Philharmonic Chorus. Stenhamer's music, like that of Grieg, is characteristically Scandinavian and includes some of the beautiful Swedish folk melodies.

SUN

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN WAGNER

Ellison Van Hoose And Mme. Gadski To Be Soloists.

The first of the five concerts to be given in Baltimore this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8.

The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the program will be entirely Wagnerian. There is some doubt concerning the opening number, for Mme. Gadski will not arrive in this country until several days before the concert. The last half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," the superb parting scene between Brunnhilde and Siegfried from the first scene of Act I; the death of Siegfried and the funeral march from the first scene of Act III and the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"Brunnhilde's Immolation," one of the most tremendous scenes, dramatically and musically, that was ever written—and different from many of the excerpts from Wagner's works.

[84]

AMERICA
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 22

... principal causes of trouble ... Hall is the lack of Baltimore ...

... organizations, including an ... Boston, New York, Philadel... Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and ... other large American cities have ... orchestras of their own. But ... has none, and the hall where ... an orchestra ought to have its ... and give concerts is but little used ... such a purpose.

That this city is large enough to support symphony concerts is shown by the patronage annually given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which comes for five concerts. If proper efforts were made Baltimore might have 25 symphony concerts instead of five each season, and our music loving people would hear all the new works as they come out, as well as the old favorites, which afford so much delight.

If there were 25 orchestral concerts at Music Hall each season there would be no trouble about supporting Music Hall and making it a paying, if not a profitable, investment. It has not been a good place for theatrical ventures, and if it is made over into a theater it will be lost as a music hall.

The first concert by the Boston Symphony in Baltimore was given at the Academy of Music, which was then rented at $125 a night. The second concert, the next season, was given after it had been leased as a theater, and the Orchestra had to pay $500 for one night's rent. If Music Hall becomes a theater, Baltimore will have no place for symphony concerts, or for the Oratorio Society or any other large musical organization. WILLARD ...

HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 25 ...

... W. L. M.

The Music Hall.

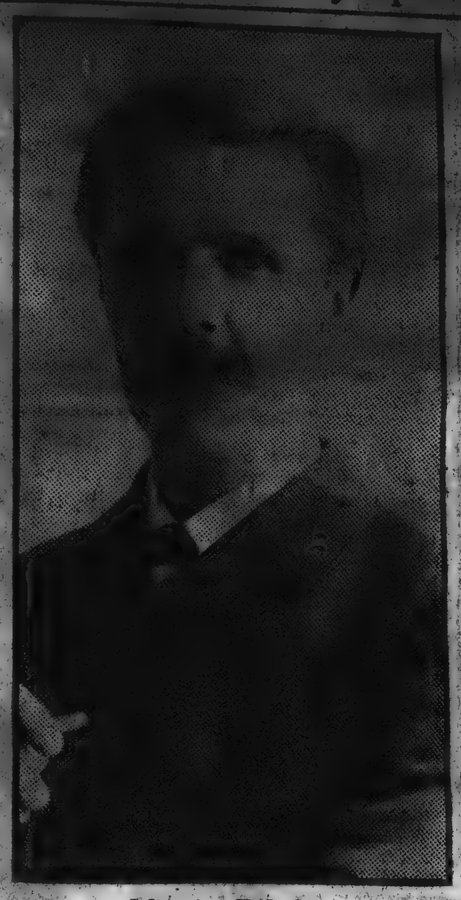
To the Editor of the Herald:

The fact that the Music Hall may be used temporarily for a skating rink is causing some caustic comments in the papers as to the propriety of turning this "temple of music and art" into a place for roller skating. It is certainly to be regretted that the place where we have heard the work of the master musicians interpreted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Theodore Thomas' and Victor Herbert's Orchestras, as well as the recitals of Paderewski, Hambourg, Sauer, Joseffy and other masters of the piano and violin, is to be used for such a purpose. Yet is it not better to devote this hall to skating, which does not offend our artistic senses in the least, than to allow it to be used for Mr. Al Herford's one-eating contests and cakewalks, as well as for the pugilistic arguments of Mr. Joe Gans and others, as has been done in the past? Although these entertainments were well attended by our "art" loving citizens, they cannot in any manner be classed as art. Yet they called forth no protests at the time they were held. If these contests do not desecrate the artistic atmosphere of the hall, surely skating will not do so. SKATER.

HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 21 ...

Coming With the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Henri Marteau



Vincent D'Indy

Miss Marie Hall

D'Indy is a French conductor and will hold the baton over the Boston Symphonists during part of the coming season. Mr. Marteau and Miss Hall are violinists. Both are to be heard in Baltimore.

HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 25 ...

... LIST OF SOLOISTS.

... Arrangements For Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

As already announced, the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year at the Lyric will be given on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. The renewals of last year's subscribers are now pending at Albaugh's, 109 North Charles street. Books for new subscribers will be opened on Monday morning, October ... The list of soloists is strong, the novelties promise well, and, above all, Baltimore will be enabled to make the acquaintance of the most distinguished ... composer of today, M. Vincent ... who will conduct a programme ... modern French music at the December concert. The soloists will be Mme. ... and Ellison Van Hoose at the ... concert; Alfred Reisenauer, the distinguished pianist, at the third; Marie ..., the young English violinist, at the ..., and Henri Marteau, the great ... violinist, at the fifth. For the ... concert no soloist is announced, ... d'Indy's programme does not pro... for one.

NEWS
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 28 ...

LARGE SYMPHONY SALE.

First Concert Of Boston Orchestra At Lyric On November Eighth.

The subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given this winter in the Lyric by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in progress at Albaugh's since last Monday, and it is the largest that Baltimore has known since the orchestra began to come to this city. The first concert will be given in the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8. The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the programme will be entirely Wagnerian. It is impossible to announce at present exactly what the programme will be, as Mme. Gadski has not yet reached America, having sailed only last Tuesday, and there is as yet some doubt concerning the opening number. But the last half of the programme will be devoted to excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung," the superb parting scene between Bruennhilde and Siegfried from the first scene of Act 1; the death of Siegfried and the funeral march from the first scene of Act 3, and finally the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"Bruennhilde's Immolation."

NEWS
BALTIMORE, MD.
NOV 2 1905

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric on Wednesday evening. The organization is said to be larger, stronger and better than ever. The soloists will be Madame Gadski and Mr. Van Hoose, and the programme will be made up of excerpts from Wagner.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

Louisville Courier-...

...ress ... 1905

THE LYRIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at the Lyric on next Wednesday, November 8, with Mr. Wilhelm Gericke conducting. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, both notable grand-opera singers, who have sung here before. The program will show Mr. Gericke's usual discriminating selection, and will form an appropriate setting for the artistic songs of the soloists.

NEWS
...LTIMORE, MD.
...ss ... NOV 4 - 1905

SUN
...s ...

Musical Season To Open.

The musical season, tardy in beginning, will be opened during the coming week in what can be termed "full blast." All the principal orchestras that minister to the delight of musical New York—the Philharmonic Society, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Herbert's organization at the Majestic—will be at work, and some of the recitalists, instrumental and vocal, will have made their appearance in the winter's scheme of things.

The Philharmonic Society will give its first public rehearsal and concert of its season at Carnegie Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Pursuing this year the same plan which has proved financially successful and artistically beneficial to the orchestra recently, the society has invited a series of foreign "star" conductors, which this year includes the names of four men well known in Europe who have not before been heard in this country. The first of these newcomers, Mr. Willem Mengelberg, of Amsterdam, will hold the baton at this week's concerts.

Miss Marie Hall, a young English violiniste, of whom her master, Sevcik, and London press opinion have been saying very flattering things, will make her debut in a concert at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening, when she will have the assistance of Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra. Her program is of an exacting sort, which only an artist of the largest pretensions would venture to present in New York.

Miss Hall will make an extended tour of the country under Henry Wolfsohn's management.

Operatic Stars Back.

HERALD
...LTIMORE, MD. 6
NOV-1 1905

...program of the first Boston Symphony orchestra concert at the Lyric next ... night is as follows:

...marsch."
... and duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris ...
... Meistersinger."
... Bruennhilde—"Goetterdaemmerung."
... and Funeral March—"Goetterdaemmerung," act 3.
... Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.
... noted all of the compositions ... Richard Wagner.

AMERICAN
BALTIMORE, MD.
OCT 29 1905

... Symphony Orchestra.

The subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given this winter in the Lyric by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in progress at Albaugh's since last Monday, and already it is the largest that Baltimore has known since the orchestra began to come to this city. In this Baltimore is merely keeping pace with the other cities which have concerts by the Boston band.

The first concert will be given in the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8. The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the program will be entirely Wagnerian. It is impossible to announce at present exactly what the program will be, as Mme. Gadski has not yet reached America, having sailed only last Tuesday, and there is as yet some doubt concerning the opening number. But the last half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," the superb parting scene between Brunnhilde and Siegfried, from the first scene of act 1; the death of Siegfried and the funeral march from the first scene of act 3, and finally the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"Brunnhilde's Immolation," undoubtedly the most tremendous scene dramatically and musically that was ever written—and, different from many of the excerpts from Wagner's works, it loses little by being sung in concert.

The sale of seats for the first concert will open at Albaugh's on Monday morning, November 6.

AMERICAN
BALTIMORE, MD.
NOV 5 - 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric Wednesday evening, November 8, at 8.15 o'clock. Among the new members of the organization are Warnke, the principal 'cellist; Sadony, the first bassoon, and Max Hess, of Munich, the alternate first horn. The orchestra of 1905-1906 carries ninety-six men, two more than ever before. These are divided as follows: First violins, 16; second violins, 14; violas, 10; 'celli, 10; contrabasses, 8; flutes, 4; oboes, 3; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bass clarinet, 1; bassoons, 4; contrabassoon, 1; horns, 6; trumpets, 4; trombones, 3, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets and librarian, 1 each. This is the largest and most complete traveling orchestra in the world. The program for the first concert is made up of excerpts from the music-dramas of Richard Wagner. As a conductor in the Imperial opera in Vienna Mr. Gericke was often in command of Wagnerian performances and, too, was associated with the great Richter there. There will be two soloists, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only a few weeks ago she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines—Bruennhilde—and won a success that was nothing short of sensational. This was at the third performance of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" at the Wagner festival held in the Prinz Regenten Theater in Munich. Mr. Van Hoose is well known here as being one of the best tenors this country has ever produced. The programme will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris version).
Preislied—"Die Meistersinger."
Siegfried and Bruennhilde—"Goetterdaemmerung," act 3.
Siegfried's death and funeral march.
"Goetterdaemmerung."

HERALD
...LTIMORE, MD.
NOV 5 - 1905

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Wagner Programme By The Boston Orchestra On Wednesday.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric on next Wednesday evening, November 8, at 8.15 o'clock. This year the Orchestra returns stronger and larger and better than ever. The few changes that have been made in the personnel have been entirely for the better. The programme for the first concert will appeal to the wildest sort of musical public, for it is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. This in itself ought to be very interesting to Baltimore, because this city has so seldom an opportunity to hear any of this music performed with the full Wagnerian orchestra that the composer demands. In order to give what Mr. Gericke believes to be the ideal programme of this kind there will be two soloists—Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only a few weeks ago she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines—Bruennhilde—and won a success that, it is said, was nothing short of sensational. This was at the third performance of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" at the Wagner festival, held in the Prinz Regenten Theatre, in Munich. Mr. Van Hoose is well known here as being one of the best tenors this country has ever produced. The programme will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale and duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris version).
Preislied—"Die Meistersinger."
Siegfried and Bruennhilde—"Goetterdaemmerung," Act 3.
Siegfried's death and funeral march.
"Goetterdaemmerung."

[85]

AMERICAN

MD

One of the principal causes of trouble at Music Hall is the lack of Baltimore musical organizations, including an orchestra. Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and many other large American cities have symphony orchestras of their own. But Baltimore has none, and the hall where such an orchestra ought to have its home and give concerts is but little used for such a purpose.

That this city is large enough to support symphony concerts is shown by the patronage annually given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which comes for five concerts. If proper efforts were made Baltimore might have 25 symphony concerts instead of five each season, and our music loving people would hear all the new works as they come out, as well as the old favorites, which afford so much delight.

If there were 25 orchestral concerts at Music Hall each season there would be no trouble about supporting Music Hall and making it a paying, if not a profitable, investment. It has not been a good place for theatrical ventures, and if it is made over into a theater it will be lost as a music hall.

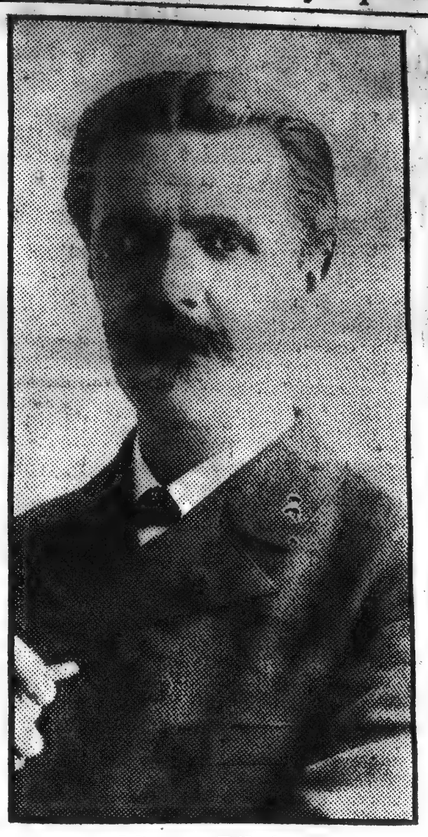
The first concert by the Boston Symphony in Baltimore was given at the Academy of Music, which was then rented at $125 a night. The second concert, the next season, was given after it had been leased as a theater, and the Orchestra had to pay $500 for one night's rent. If Music Hall becomes a theater, Baltimore will have no place for symphony concerts, or for the Oratorio Society or any other large musical organization. WILLARD G. HAAS.

HERALD

MD

Coming With the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Henri Marteau



Vincent D'Indy

Miss Marie Hall

D'Indy is a French conductor and will hold the baton over the Boston Symphonists during part of the coming season. Mr. Marteau and Miss Hall are violinists. Both are to be heard in Baltimore.

NEWS

MD

W. L. M.

Dec. 20.

The Music Hall.

To the Editor of the Herald:

The fact that the Music Hall may be used temporarily for a skating rink is causing some caustic comments in the papers as to the propriety of turning this "temple of music and art" into a place for roller skating. It is certainly to be regretted that the place where we have heard the work of the master musicians interpreted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Theodore Thomas' and Victor Herbert's Orchestras, as well as the recitals of Paderewski, Hambourg, Sauer, Kubelik and other masters of the piano and violin, is to be used for such a purpose. Yet is it not better to devote this hall to skating, which does not offend our artistic senses in the least, than to allow it to be used for Mr. Al Herford's pie-eating contests and cakewalks, as well as for the pugilistic arguments of Mr. Joe Gans and others, as has been done in the past? Although these entertainments were well attended by our "art" loving citizens, they cannot in any manner be classed as art. Yet they called forth no protests at the time they were held. If these contests do not desecrate the artistic atmosphere of the hall, surely skating will not do so. SKATER.

NEWS

MD

LARGE SYMPHONY SALE.

First Concert Of Boston Orchestra At Lyric On November Eighth.

The subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given this winter in the Lyric by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in progress at Albaugh's since last Monday, and it is the largest that Baltimore has known since the orchestra began to come to this city. The first concert will be given in the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8. The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the programme will be entirely Wagnerian. It is impossible to announce at present exactly what the programme will be, as Mme. Gadski has not yet reached America, having sailed only last Tuesday, and there is at yet some doubt concerning the opening number. But the last half of the programme will be devoted to excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung," the superb parting scene between Bruennhilde and Siegfried from the first scene of Act 1; the death of Siegfried and the funeral march from the first scene of Act 3, and finally the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"Bruennhilde's Immolation."

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric on Wednesday evening. The organization is said to be larger, stronger and better than ever. The soloists will be Madame Gadski and Mr. Van Hoose, and the programme will be made up of excerpts from Wagner.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

ress

THE LYRIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at the Lyric on next Wednesday, November 8, with Mr. Wilhelm Gericke conducting. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, both notable grand-opera singers, who have sung here before. The program will show Mr. Gericke's usual discriminating selection, and will form an appropriate setting for the artistic songs of the soloists.

5

performance.

Musical Season To Open.

The musical season, tardy in beginning, will be opened during the coming week in what can be termed "full blast." All the principal orchestras that minister to the delight of musical New York—the Philharmonic Society, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Herbert's organization at the Majestic—will be at work, and some of the recitalists, instrumental and vocal, will have made their appearance in the winter's scheme of things.

The Philharmonic Society will give its first public rehearsal and concert of its season at Carnegie Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Pursuing this year the same plan which has proved financially successful and artistically beneficial to the orchestra recently, the society has invited a series of foreign "star" conductors, which this year includes the names of four men well known in Europe who have not before been heard in this country. The first of these newcomers, Mr. Willem Mengelberg, of Amsterdam, will hold the baton at this week's concerts.

Miss Marie Hall, a young English violiniste, of whom her master, Sevcik, and London press opinion have been saying very flattering things, will make her debut in a concert at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday evening, when she will have the assistance of Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra. Her program is of an exacting sort, which only an artist of the largest pretensions would venture to present in New York.

Miss Hall will make an extended tour of the country under Henry Wolfsohn's management.

Operatic Stars Back.

STRONG LIST OF SOLOISTS.

Arrangements For Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

As already announced, the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year at the Lyric will be given on Wednesday evenings, the dates being November 8, December 6, January 10, February 14 and March 14. The renewals of last year's subscribers are now proceeding at Albaugh's, 109 North Charles street. Books for new subscribers will be opened on Monday morning, October 23. The list of soloists is strong, the novelties promise well, and, above all, Baltimore will be enabled to make the acquaintance of the most distinguished French composer of today, M. Vincent d'Indy, who will conduct a programme of modern French music at the December concert. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose at the first concert; Alfred Reisenauer, the distinguished pianist, at the third; Marie Hall, the young English violinist, at the fourth, and Henri Marteau, the great French violinist, at the fifth. For the second concert no solist is announced, as M. d'Indy's programme does not provide for one.

HERALD

PE. MD

The program of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Lyric next Wednesday night is as follows:

"Huldigungsmarsch."

Bacchanale and duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris version).

Preislied—"Die Meistersinger."

Siegfried and Brunnhilde—"Goetterdaemmerung."

Siegfried's Death and Funeral March—"Goetterdaemmerung," act 3.

Closing Scene—"Goetterdaemmerung," act 3.

Soloists—Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

As will be noted all of the compositions on the program are by Richard Wagner.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The subscription sale for the five concerts which will be given this winter in the Lyric by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in progress at Albaugh's since last Monday, and already it is the largest that Baltimore has known since the orchestra began to come to this city. In this Baltimore is merely keeping pace with the other cities which have concerts by the Boston band.

The first concert will be given in the Lyric on Wednesday evening, November 8. The soloists will be Ellison Van Hoose and Mme. Johanna Gadski, and the program will be entirely Wagnerian. It is impossible to announce at present exactly what the program will be, as Mme. Gadski has not yet reached America, having sailed only last Tuesday, and there is as yet some doubt concerning the opening number. But the last half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Gotterdammerung," the superb parting scene between Brunnhilde and Siegfried, from the first scene of act 1; the death of Siegfried and the funeral march from the first scene of act 3, and finally the closing scene of the music-drama and of that tremendous tragedy which is embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"Brunnhilde's Immolation," undoubtedly the most tremendous scene dramatically and musically that was ever written—and, different from many of the excerpts from Wagner's works, it loses little by being sung in concert.

The sale of seats for the first concert will open at Albaugh's on Monday morning, November 6.

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Wagner Programme By The Boston Orchestra On Wednesday.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric on next Wednesday evening, November 8, at 8.15 o'clock. This year the Orchestra returns stronger and larger and better than ever. The few changes that have been made in the personnel have been entirely for the better. The programme for the first concert will appeal to the wildest sort of musical public, for it is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. This in itself ought to be very interesting to Baltimore, because this city has so seldom an opportunity to hear any of this music performed with the full Wagnerian orchestra that the composer demands. In order to give what Mr. Gericke believes to be the ideal programme of this kind there will be two soloists—Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only a few weeks ago she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines—Bruennhilde—and won a success that, it is said, was nothing short of sensational. This was at the third performance of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" at the Wagner festival, held in the Prinz Regenten Theatre, in Munich. Mr. Van Hoose is well known here as being one of the best tenors this country has ever produced. The programme will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.

Bacchanale and duet from "Tannhaeuser" (Paris version).

Preislied—"Die Meistersinger."

Siegfried and Bruennhilde—"Goetterdaemmerung," Act I.

Siegfried's death and funeral march—"Goetterdaemmerung," Act III.

Closing scene—"Goetterdaemmerung," Act III.

Soloists—Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric Wednesday evening, November 8, at 8.15 o'clock. Among the new members of the organization are Warnke, the principal 'cellist; Sadony, the first bassoon, and Max Hess, of Munich, the alternate first horn. The orchestra of 1905-1906 carries ninety-six men, two more than ever before. These are divided as follows: First violins, 16; second violins, 14; violas, 10; 'celli, 10; contrabasses, 8; flutes, 4; oboes, 3; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bass clarinet, 1; bassoons, 4; contrabassoon, 1; horns, 6; trumpets, 4; trombones, 3, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets and librarian, 1 each. This is the largest and most complete traveling orchestra in the world. The program for the first concert is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. As a conductor in the Imperial opera in Vienna Mr. Gericke was often in command of Wagnerian performances and, too, was associated with the great Richter there. There will be two soloists, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only a few weeks ago she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines—Bruennhilde—and won a success that was nothing short of sensational. This was at the third performance of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" at the Wagner festival held in the Prinz Regenten Theater in Munich.

* * *

[85]

AMERICAN.
Baltimore, MD
NOV 5 - 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric on next Wednesday evening, November 8, at 8:15 o'clock. The return of this favorite organization will signify that Baltimore's musical season is finally under full swing and that the serious work of the winter has begun for the music lovers. The series of concerts here this winter promises to be the most successful of any that Boston's great band has had in Baltimore. The orchestra of 1905-06 carries 96 men—two more than ever before. These are divided as follows: First violins, 16; second violins, 14; violas, 10; celli, 10; contrabasses, 8; flutes, 4; oboes, 3; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bass clarinet, 1; bassoons, 4; contrabassoon, 1; horns, 6; trumpets, 4; trombones, 3, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets and librarian, one each.

The program for the first concert will appeal to the widest sort of musical public, for it is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. In order to give what Mr. Gericke believes to be the ideal program of this kind there will be two soloists—Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only a few weeks ago she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines—Brunhilde—and won a success that was nothing short of sensational. Mr. Van Hoose is well and favorably known here as being one of the best tenors this country has ever produced. The program will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bacchanale—"Tannhauser,"
Elisabeth's Aria, "Tannhauser," Act. II.
Siegfried and Brunhilde....."Gotterdammerung," Act I.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, "Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Closing Scene....."Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Soloists..Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose

UN

MUSIC SEASON IS HERE

Boston Symphony Orchestra At The Lyric Wednesday Night.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric Wednesday evening, beginning at 8.15 o'clock. The return of this favorite organization and Miss Nielsen's appearance here mark the opening of Baltimore's musical season.

The orchestra returns this year stronger than ever. In order to give what Mr. Gericke believes to be an ideal program of its kind, there will be two soloists, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only recently she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines — Brunnhilde — and von great success. Mr. Van Hoose is favorably known here as being one of the best of tenors.

Mr. Warnke, the new principal cellist, met with a most flattering reception in Boston week before last, when he made his debut as a soloist. Mr. Sadony, the new first bassoon, seems to have given the finishing touch to the wonderful perfection of the famous wood-winds. Mr. Max [illegible], of Munich, the new alternate first horn, has also been a marked success.

The orchestra carries 96 men, 2 more than ever before. These are divided as follows: First violins, 16; second violins, 14; violas, 10; celli, 10; contrabasses, 8; flutes, 4; oboes, 3; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bass clarinet, 1; bassoons, 4; contrabassoon, 1; horns, 6; trumpets, 4; trombones, 3, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets and librarian, 1 each.

The program for the first concert should appeal to the widest sort of musical public, for it is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. Moreover, Mr. Gericke, although he has naturally never been much identified in this country with Wagnerian music, is accounted abroad one of the greatest interpreters of the works.

om SUN
idress
NOV 8 - 1905

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON

Mrs. Roosevelt And Miss Alice At Boston Symphony Concert.

[Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.]

Washington, Nov. 7.—Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Alice Roosevelt, wife and daughter of the President, occupied a box at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in the New National Theatre. In their party were Mrs. J. West Roosevelt and daughter Loraine, and Miss Wagner.

Mrs. Roosevelt wore a gown of soft brocaded satin in grays and blues, with a full gray coat and a small black velvet hat, with blue trimmings and black plumes. Miss Roosevelt was exceedingly pretty in a gown of "Alice" blue cloth, the bodice having a heavy white lace collar, and a small velvet toque to match, with a jaunty green wing in it. Her wrap was a long, loose affair of the same cloth as the suit, with large collar and cuffs of silver fox fur. The au- [illegible] standing room. [illegible] Ambassador and Mrs. [illegible]

AMERICAN.
Baltimore, MD.
NOV 8 - 1905

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the season's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric at 8:15 o'clock this evening. A particularly attractive program has been arranged by Mr. Gericke, one which consists entirely of excerpts from musical dramas of Richard Wagner, with the single exception of the first number, which is his celebrated "Huldigungsmarsch." The second number will be the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," and the third will be Elizabeth's aria from the second act of the same opera. The fourth number will be that loveliest of selections from "Die Meistersinger," "Walter's Prize Song." The second half of the program will be devoted entirely to excerpts from the culminating dramas of "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"The Dusk of the Gods." These comprise the parting of Siegfried and Bruennhilde, from the first act, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, and the closing scene from the last act. For this occasion two soloists have been engaged—Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose. Mme. Gadski returns to this country fresh from the triumphs won as Bruennhilde at the Wagner Festival in Munich last summer. Mr. Van Hoose is easily the best tenor that America has ever produced.

N. Y. EVG. TELEGRAM
ss
NOV 9 - 1905

One of the most interesting concerts of the season will be given by the Longy Club of Boston in Mendelssohn Hall on Tuesday evening, December 19. The Longy Club is composed of the principal players of wind instruments in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it takes its name from its leader, M. Georges Longy, the first oboe of the parent organization. Although it has been in existence for five years this will be its formal début in New York, its only other appearance in this city having been made several seasons since in the Lyceum Theatre at a special matinee.

The members of this club are the artists who have made the wind chorus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the most famous in this country. They are as follows:—Flutes, A. Maquarre and D. Maquarre; oboes, G. Longy and C. Lenom; clarinets, G. Grisez and P. Mimart; horns, F. Hain and H. Lorbeer; bassoons, P. Sadony and I. Helleberg; pianist, M. A. De Voto.

HERALD
ess BALTIMORE, MD.
NOV 9 - 1905

The Musical World

The Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra commenced its annual Baltimore visits last evening at the Lyric with one of the greatest concerts it has ever fallen to the lot of Baltimoreans to hear. The program, drawn exclusively from Wagner's works, included "The March of Homage," better known as "Huldigungsmarsch" "Bacchanale" and "Elisabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhauser;" the "Prize Song," from "Die Meistersinger," and "Siegfried's Parting From Bruennhilde," "Siegfried's Death" and the "Funeral March," and the closing scene of the opera, all being excerpts from "Die Goetterdaemmerung." The soloists were Madame Johanna Gadski and Mr. Ellison van Hoose.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is an organization with far too great a reputation to call for any corroboration in these columns, and indeed none but an orchestra splendidly controlled and directed with consummate skill could have played the concert of last night.

That Mr. Gericke is a fine conductor has never been questioned for an instant, but exception has often been taken to his reading of certain works, and notably to his persistent evasion of the great and effective climaxes in Wagner's music. However, last evening Mr. Gericke excelled anything he has done in this city both in the making of the program and in its production, and nothing save praise and that of the highest order, can be given to him, except it be the thanks of the community at large, for his presentation of so excellent and interesting a selection from Wagner's operas, for Baltimore is a city that knows how to appreciate Wagner. Hence the large audience attracted thither by the magic of his name.

Madame Gadski, like all other singers, may not always be in the best of voice, but whatever she does she is invariably the artist. Yesterday, however, she was in excellent voice and, assisted by the surrounding conditions of a grateful choice of selections, a fine orchestra, an enthusiastic and sympathetic audience, her singing afforded intense pleasure, perhaps even more so on the concert stage than on the operatic stage itself. To sing against a full orchestra makes great demands upon a vocalist, no matter how much the various instruments be subdued. Nevertheless, Madame Gadski was at all times distinctly audible, and that, apparently, without any visible effort, so perfectly under control is her voice. Moreover, her absolute purity of intonation was delightful, and the more one considers the exceedingly difficult intervals demanded the more one can but admire her finished and artistic work.

Particularly trying on the voice, partly on account of its extreme length and partly by reason of its declamatory character, is the closing scene from the "Goetterdaemmerung," but in this Madame Gadski achieved her most pronounced success of the evening.

Mr. Van Hoose has appeared in Baltimore upon many previous occasions and has firmly established himself as a favorite with local music lovers, more especially in Wagner numbers. Last night he but added to his laurels, singing exceptionally well. He possesses all the requirements that go to make a good singer—a well cultivated voice of excellent quality and volume, purity of intonation, versatility and temperament. His rendering of the "Prize Song" was highly artistic. It was sung with the feeling that it was a prize song, and, indeed, in his hands it became such. The scene of Siegfried's death was given in a truly artistic and masterly manner, although the efforts of the singer were partially forgotten on account of the length of the "Funeral March," which followed. None can appreciate the situation so acutely as the artist himself, compelled to maintain a rigid position before the audience awaiting the completion of the orchestral performance, in which he takes no part. Nevertheless, the fact remains that Mr. Van Hoose's singing of that number fully justified his acknowledged reputation.

To the majority of those present last night the long abstinence of the past four or five months from music must have caused a feeling as of hungering after music. To such the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not only eminently satisfactory, but thoroughly satisfying; and if the remaining visits of the organization be constructed on the level established by that of yesterday music lovers of the city have in store for them a treat the like of which has not been seen within its walls for many a long year.

om SUN
idress BALTIMORE, MD
NOV 9 - 1905

'TWAS WAGNER NIGHT

Boston Symphony Charms Large And Fashionable Audience.

MME. GADSKI'S TRIUMPH

Mr. Van Hoose's Difficult Part—Mr. Gericke's Master Hand — Brilliant Program Given.

Whether it was the Boston Symphony Orchestra or the brilliant Wagnerian program that attracted probably the largest and most fashionable audience seen this season at the Lyric last evening is an undetermined question. Every seat on the main floor and in the gallery was thronged and many were obliged to stand.

The concert was the first of a series to be given by the Boston Symphony during the winter, and the soloists were Mme. Johanna Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose. Of the former there is nothing but good to be said. Mme. Gadski is a soloist of mature experience, with a rich, well-trained voice that is fully equal to a test such as it was put to last evening. Her singing was convincing, and she left nothing undone even in the closing and heaviest number, the final scene from "The Dusk of the Gods" in "Gotterdammerung."

In the Siegfried music Mr. Van Hoose doubtless had more than he could manage. There is much more to be expected of him before he is able to master in an acceptable manner what is admittedly one of the most difficult of Wagner's creations.

The program, which was arranged by Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the director, consisted entirely of excerpts from Wagner's dramas, with the exception of the first number, which was his celebrated "Huldi-gungsmarsch," (March of Homage). Instead of the second number as given on the program—Bacchanale and duet from "Tannhauser"—Mme. Gadski sang "Elizabeth's Greeting," from Act II of "Tannhauser."

ELLISON VAN HOOSE

The third number was the prize song from "Die Meistersinger." Siegfried's parting from Brunnhilde, Siegfried's death and funeral march and the closing scene from "The Dusk of the Gods", composed the concluding number.

The program was one of unusual brilliancy and volume. This fact only enhanced the credit of the orchestra, which rendered the works in a manner that only a body of well-trained, disciplined and thorough musicians can. Much of this credit is probably due to Mr. Gericke, whose interpretation of the closing scene of the tragedy embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," one of the most tremendous scenes dramatically and musically, that was ever written, was truly masterful. The "Huldigungsmarsch," although relatively unimportant when compared to much of the rest of the program, is a splendid concert piece and as an opening number won the well-deserved plaudits of the audience.

The next concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric December 6, when Monsieur Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, will be the conductor. M. d'Indy is expected to sail from Cherbourg on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse next Wednesday and is scheduled to arrive in New York on Tuesday, November 21. He will conduct the concerts in Boston December 1 and 2 and those in New York December 7 and 9, as well as the concerts in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Brooklyn on December 4, 5, 6 and 8, respectively. The programs for the New York concerts will be composed entirely of modern French music and will include some of his own and the works of Chausson, Debussy, Dukas and other men of that school.

[86]

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric on next Wednesday evening, November 8, at 8:15 o'clock. The return of this favorite organization will signify that Baltimore's musical season is finally under full swing and that the serious work of the winter has begun for the music lovers. The series of concerts here this winter promises to be the most successful of any that Boston's great band has had in Baltimore. The orchestra of 1905-06 carries 90 men—two more than ever before. These are divided as follows: First violins, 16; second violins, 14; violas, 10; 'celli, 10; contrabasses, 8; flutes, 4; oboes, 3; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bass clarinet, 1; bassoons, 4; contrabassoon, 1; horns, 6; trumpets, 4; trombones, 3, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets and librarian, one each.

The program for the first concert will appeal to the widest sort of musical public, for it is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. In order to give what Mr. Gericke believes to be the ideal program of this kind there will be two soloists—Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only a few weeks ago she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines — Brunhilde — and won a success that was nothing short of sensational. Mr. Van Hoose is well and favorably known here as being one of the best tenors this country has ever produced. The program will be as follows:

Huldigungsmarsch.
Bachnale—"Tannhauser,"
Elizabeth's Aria, "Tannhauser," Act. II.
Siegfried and Brunhilde....."Gotterdammerung," Act I.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, "Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Closing Scene....."Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Soloists..Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first of the season's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Lyric at 8:15 o'clock this evening. A particularly attractive program has been arranged by Mr. Gericke, one which consists entirely of excerpts from musical dramas of Richard Wagner, with the single exception of the first number, which is his celebrated "Huldigungsmarsch." The second number will be the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser," and the third will be Elizabeth's aria from the second act of the same opera. The fourth number will be that loveliest of selections from "Die Meistersinger," "Walter's Prize Song." The second half of the program will be devoted entirely to excerpts from the culminating dramas of "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—"The Dusk of the Gods. These comprise the parting of Siegfried and Bruennhilde, from the first act, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, and the closing scene from the last act. For this occasion two soloists have been engaged—Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose. Mme. Gadski returns to this country fresh from the triumphs won as Bruennhilde at the Wagner Festival in Munich last summer. Mr. Van Hoose is easily the best tenor that America has ever produced.

One of the most interesting concerts of the season will be given by the Longy Club of Boston in Mendelssohn Hall on Tuesday evening, December 19. The Longy Club is composed of the principal players of wind instruments in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it takes its name from its leader, M. Georges Longy, the first oboist of the parent organization. Although it has been in existence for five years this will be its formal début in New York, its only other appearance in this city having been made several seasons since in the Lyceum Theatre at a special matinée.

The members of this club are the artists who have made the wind choirs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the most famous in this country. They are as follows:—Flutes, A. Maquarre and D. Maquarre; oboes, G. Longy and C. Lenom; clarinets, G. G. Longy and P. Mimart; horns, F. Hain and H. Lorleberg; bassoons, P. Sadony and L. Hellebergh; pianist, M. A. De Voto.

MUSIC SEASON IS HERE

Boston Symphony Orchestra At The Lyric Wednesday Night.

The first of the season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric Wednesday evening, beginning at 8.15 o'clock. The return of this favorite organization and Miss Nielsen's appearance here mark the opening of Baltimore's musical season.

The orchestra returns this year stronger than ever. In order to give what Mr. Gericke believes to be an ideal program of its kind, there will be two soloists, Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The appearance of Mme. Gadski will be especially interesting, for only recently she made her debut in Germany as the greatest of Wagnerian heroines — Brunnhilde — and won great success. Mr. Van Hoose is favorably known here as being one of the best of tenors.

Mr. Warnke, the new principal cellist, met with a most flattering reception in Boston week before last, when he made his debut as a soloist. Mr. Sadony, the new first bassoon, seems to have given the finishing touch to the wonderful perfection of the famous wood-winds. Mr. Max [illegible], of Munich, the new alternate first horn, has also been a marked success.

The orchestra carries 96 men, 2 more than ever before. These are divided as follows: First violins, 16; second violins, 14; violas, 10; celli, 10; contrabasses, 8; flutes, 4; oboes, 3; English horn, 1; clarinets, 3; bass clarinet, 1; bassoons, 4; contrabassoon, 1; horns, 6; trumpets, 4; trombones, 3, and harp, tuba, tympani, drums, cymbals, triangle, tambour, castanets and librarian, 1 each.

The program for the first concert should appeal to the widest sort of musical public, for it is made up of excerpts from the music dramas of Richard Wagner. Moreover, Mr. Gericke, although he has naturally never been much identified in this country with Wagnerian music, is accounted abroad one of the greatest interpreters of the works.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON

Mrs. Roosevelt And Miss Alice At Boston Symphony Concert.

[Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.]

Washington, Nov. 7.—Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Alice Roosevelt, wife and daughter of the President, occupied a box at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in the New National Theatre. In their party were Mrs. J. West Roosevelt and daughter Loraine, and Miss Hagner.

Mrs. Roosevelt wore a gown of soft brocaded satin in grays and blues, with a full gray boa and a small black velvet hat, with blue trimmings and black plumes. Miss Roosevelt was exceedingly pretty in a gown of "Alice" blue cloth, the bodice having a heavy white lace collar, and a small velvet toque to match, with a jaunty green wing in it. Her wrap was a long, loose affair of the same cloth as the suit, with large collar and cuffs of silver fox fur. The audience packed the house to standing room. Others in boxes were the German Ambassador, the French Ambassador and Madame Jusserand, the Russian Ambassador and [illegible]

The Musical World

The Boston Symphony Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra commenced its annual Baltimore visits last evening at the Lyric with one of the greatest concerts it has ever fallen to the lot of Baltimoreans to hear. The program, drawn exclusively from Wagner's works, included "The March of Homage," better known as "Huldigungsmarsch"; "Bacchanale" and "Elisabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhauser;" the "Prize Song," from "Die Meistersinger," and "Siegfried's Parting From Bruennhilde," "Siegfried's Death" and the "Funeral March," and the closing scene of the opera, all being excerpts from "Die Goetterdaemmerung." The soloists were Madame Johanna Gadski and Mr. Ellison van Hoose.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is an organization with far too great a reputation to call for any corroboration in these columns, and indeed none but an orchestra splendidly controlled and directed with consummate skill could have played the concert of last night.

That Mr. Gericke is a fine conductor has never been questioned for an instant, but exception has often been taken to his reading of certain works, and notably to his persistent evasion of the great and effective climaxes in Wagner's music. However, last evening Mr. Gericke excelled anything he has done in this city both in the making of the program and in its production, and nothing save praise and that of the highest order, can be given to him, except it be the thanks of the community at large, for his presentation of so excellent and interesting a selection from Wagner's operas, for Baltimore is a city that knows how to appreciate Wagner. Hence the large audience attracted thither by the magic of his name.

Madame Gadski, like all other singers, may not always be in the best of voice, but whatever she does she is invariably the artist. Yesterday, however, she was in excellent voice and, assisted by the surrounding conditions of a grateful choice of selections, a fine orchestra, an enthusiastic and sympathetic audience, her singing afforded intense pleasure, perhaps even more so on the concert stage than on the operatic stage itself. To sing against a full orchestra makes great demands upon a vocalist, no matter how much the various instruments be subdued. Nevertheless, Madame Gadski was at all times distinctly audible, and that, apparently, without any visible effort, so perfectly under control is her voice. Moreover, her absolute purity of intonation was delightful, and the more one considers the exceedingly difficult intervals demanded the more one can but admire her finished and artistic work.

Particularly trying on the voice, partly on account of its extreme length and partly by reason of its declamatory character, is the closing scene from the "Goetterdaemmerung," but in this Madame Gadski achieved her most pronounced success of the evening.

Mr. Van Hoose has appeared in Baltimore upon many previous occasions and has firmly established himself as a favorite with local music lovers, more especially in Wagner numbers. Last night he but added to his laurels, singing exceptionally well. He possesses all the requirements that go to make a good singer—a well cultivated voice of excellent quality and volume, purity of intonation, versatility and temperament. His rendering of the "Prize Song" was highly artistic. It was sung with the feeling that it was a prize song, and, indeed, in his hands it became such. The scene of Siegfried's death was given in a truly artistic and masterly manner, although the efforts of the singer were partially forgotten on account of the length of the "Funeral March," which followed. None can appreciate the situation so acutely as the artist himself, compelled to maintain a rigid position before the audience awaiting the completion of the orchestral performance, in which he takes no part. Nevertheless, the fact remains that Mr. Van Hoose's singing of that number fully justified his acknowledged reputation.

To the majority of those present last night the long abstinence of the past four or five months from music must have caused a feeling as of hungering after music. To such the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not only eminently satisfactory, but thoroughly satisfying; and if the remaining visits of the organization be constructed on the level established by that of yesterday music lovers of the city have in store for them a treat the like of which has not been seen within its walls for many a long year.

'TWAS WAGNER NIGHT

Boston Symphony Charms Large And Fashionable Audience.

MME. GADSKI'S TRIUMPH

Mr. Van Hoose's Difficult Part—Mr. Gericke's Master Hand — Brilliant Program Given.

Whether it was the Boston Symphony Orchestra or the brilliant Wagnerian program that attracted probably the largest and most fashionable audience seen this season at the Lyric last evening is an undetermined question. Every seat on the main floor and in the gallery was thronged and many were obliged to stand.

The concert was the first of a series to be given by the Boston Symphony during the winter, and the soloists were Mme. Johanna Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose. Of the former there is nothing but good to be said. Mme. Gadski is a soloist of mature experience, with a rich, well-trained voice that is fully equal to a test such as it was put to last evening. Her singing was convincing, and she left nothing undone, even in the closing and heaviest number, the final scene from "The Dusk of the Gods" in "Gotterdammerung."

In the Siegfried music Mr. Van Hoose doubtless had more than he could manage. There is much more to be expected of him before he is able to master in an acceptable manner what is admittedly one of the most difficult of Wagner's creations.

The program, which was arranged by Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the director, consisted entirely of excerpts from Wagner's dramas, with the exception of the first number, which was his celebrated "Huldigungsmarsch," (March of Homage). Instead of the second number as given on the program—Bacchanale and duet from "Tannhauser"—Mme. Gadski sang "Elizabeth's Greeting," from Act II of "Tannhauser."

ELLISON VAN HOOSE

The third number was the prize song from "Die Meistersinger," Siegfried's parting from Brunnhilde, Siegfried's death and funeral march and the closing scene from "The Dusk of the Gods" composed the concluding number.

The program was one of unusual brilliancy and volume. This fact only enhanced the credit of the orchestra, which rendered the works in a manner that only a body of well-trained, disciplined and thorough musicians can. Much of this credit is probably due to Mr. Gericke, whose interpretation of the closing scene of the tragedy embodied in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," one of the most tremendous scenes, dramatically and musically, that was ever written, was truly masterful. The "Huldigungsmarsch," although relatively unimportant when compared to much of the rest of the program, is a splendid concert piece, and as an opening number won the well-deserved plaudits of the audience.

The next concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given at the Lyric December 6, when Monsieur Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, will be the conductor. M. d'Indy is expected to sail from Cherbourg on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse next Wednesday and is scheduled to arrive in New York on Tuesday, November 21. He will conduct the concerts in Boston December 1 and 2 and those in New York December 7 and 9, as well as the concerts in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Brooklyn on December 4, 5, 6 and 8, respectively. The programs for the New York concerts will be composed entirely of modern French music and will include some of his own and the works of Chausson, Debussy, Dukas and other men of that school.

---

[86]

REDUCTION

RATIO

13x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

From NEW YORK EVENING
Address
OCT 14 1905
Date

...ll concerts of the Boston Sym... Orchestra except those in December, ...ll be under the direction of M. ...'Indy, the distinguished French ...er. Among the soloists will be Mme. ... and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. ...euther, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Harold ..., Mr. Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy ...

From
Address
OCT 15 1905
Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, last Friday afternoon, and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The auction sale of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a very substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. Besides the fact that the prospects in the other cities where the orchestra gives series of concerts are unusually good, the week's trip into Canada and the Middle West turned out to be profitable, very large audiences being the rule everywhere. The first concerts in New-York will be on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. The sale of season tickets for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23, at the Carnegie Hall box office, Tyson's, and Luckhardt & Belder's, No. 10 East 17th-st.

...ss
OCT 15 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. Besides the fact that the prospects in the other cities where the orchestra gives series of concerts is unusually good, the week's trip into Canada and the Middle West turned out to be profitable, large audiences being the rule everywhere. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, Nov 9, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11.

NEW YORK SUN
...ss
OCT 15 1905

NOTES OF MUSIC EVENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH
...s
OCT 15 1905

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon. The auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a very substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. The sale of season tickets for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23.

NEW YORK SUN
From
Address
OCT 15 1905
Date

...Symphony concerts for young people enter ... year upon their eighth season. Six concerts ... given in Carnegie Hall on Saturdays, Novem... 16, January 6, February 10 and ... 31 at 2:30 in the afternoon.

...ts engaged for the concerts of the ...riet in the coming season are Harold ...dolf Ganz, Harold Randolph, Heinrich ...ourtlandt Palmer and Vincent d'Indy ... M. Loeffler, violinist, and Georges ... Among the novelties will be a ... by Frederick Stock, successor ... conductor of the Chicago ... quartet in

GLOBE
...R COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER
OCT 16 1905

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy Hess.

NEW YORK PRESS
...ss
OCT 22 1905

The renewal subscription sale for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been large, and the prospects for a fine season are highly favorable. The sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning in Carnegie Hall, Luckhardt & Belder's and Tyson's. Concerts will be given on the evenings of November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, and the afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, when Vincent d'Indy, distinguished French composer, will wield the baton. D'Indy will conduct two concerts in Boston, two here and one apiece in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. This will be his first visit to America. Some novelties on the Boston orchestra's list for the season are: Mahler's Fifth Symphony; a symphony by Amherst Webber; a new overture by Max Schilling, "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel"; a new suite by Busoni, "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe—"Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

...ss
MAIL
New York City
OCT 21 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's coming season will be the twenty-fifth of its existence and the twentieth of its New York appearances. Steinway Hall, Chickering Hall, the Metropolitan Opera House and now Carnegie Hall have in turn harbored it here, and in recent seasons the last named auditorium has often been too small for those that would have heard the superb orchestra.

Mr. Gericke's announced plans for the coming winter, which have already been summarized in these columns, should insure another highly prosperous series in this city, culminating in the appearance as guest-conductor of Vincent d'Indy, the leader of the modern French school.

...paper Cutting Bureau in the World

...ember 8.

The two New York concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that will be conducted by Vincent d'Indy will have programmes made up chiefly of modern French music not yet heard in this city. As for the other concerts, the list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schilling, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni called "Geharnischte"; and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

...POST

...ROM NEW YORK SUN
...ddress
OCT 15 1905
...ate

The complete schedule of bookings for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has now been completed, and is published in the Orchestra's little Year Book. Counting those concerts which have already been given, the orchestra will play 109 times up to April 28 next, when the season closes in Boston. Of these concerts, Boston gets forty-eight, the twenty-four public rehearsals and the twenty-four evening concerts. Next comes New York with ten, and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered, for the most part, among the ...lar cities and towns of New Yor... ...New England.

MAIL
New York City
OCT 28 1905

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Forecast of Concert Season—...en Orchestras, Twenty Conductors, Dozens of Singers, Pianists and Fiddlers—Child Prodigies Out of Fashion—Operas—Preparations.

Nobody knows at this time just how much music will be offered to the New York public this winter, but there will be enough to go round, perhaps even more than ticket buyers will fully pay for. It promises to be a fairly well balanced season. There will be no Paderewski to outweigh every one else; no Ysaye and Kreisler to stamp the year as one for overmastering violinists. No new singers are in sight for concerts, and not many at the opera, though the best of the familiar ones are listed, and with Mme. Sembrich giving a song recital a fortnight hence, nothing more distinguished in that department could be asked.

Probably it will be a conductors' season, for no less than twenty of these gentry will wield the baton here between now and next May, among them Felix Weingartner, Vincent d'Indy, Vasili von Safonoff and half a dozen other famous Europeans, besides the men that make their homes on this side the sea.

For one negative feature concertgoers should be thankful. There will be no infant prodigies. Even Europe is getting tired of the exploitation of gifted little violinists and pianists that should be in the schoolroom or in bed instead of under concert room strain. New York's horizon is at present clear of them, and managers have grown suddenly cautious about applying the word "young" to the musicians in their charge. Thus, Jan Kubelik, who was neither child, boy nor old man when he came a few years since, but a strange blend of all three, is now emphasized as a very masculine young man, and he is bringing his titled wife and a pair of bouncing twin babies to make life merry in a private car on his transcontinental tour. And Miss Marie Hall, a slight little English girl of twenty-one, who is declared a violinist of marked talent, is heralded rather as a full-grown young woman than as any variety, however advanced, of the wonder-child. It is a wholesome tendency.

Of operatic prospects something has already been said in these columns. The seventeen weeks' season will last from November 20 to March 17, and there will be ninety-odd performances. The concert year will be a full one. To begin with, ten orchestras will play at least 125 times in the aggregate. The Philharmonic Society will be directed by Max Fiedler, of Hamburg; Dr. Ernst Kunwald, of Frankfort; Fritz Steinbach, of Cologne; William Mengelberg, of Amsterdam; Victor Herbert, of New York, and Vasili von Safonoff, of Moscow.

The New York Symphony Orchestra will be headed by Walter Damrosch and by Felix Weingartner, of Berlin, as guest. The Boston Symphony, under Wilhelm Gericke, will have Vincent d'Indy, of Paris, as guest conductor for two concerts here. The Russian Symphony Orchestra, conducted by its founder, Modest Altschuler, will bring over Rachmaninoff, of Moscow, for several New York appearances as leader.

Victor Herbert is already leading his own orchestra every Sunday night at the Majestic Theatre. Sam Franko will direct the American Symphony Orchestra in concerts of old music. F. X. Arens will conduct three sets of People's Symphony Concerts, and Frank Damrosch will use the New York Symphony for his series of Young People's Concerts. The Sunday evening entertainments by the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra will have Alfred Hertz, Arturo Vigna and Nahan Franko as conductors. Fritz Scheel will head the visiting Philadelphia orchestra. The Women's String Orchestra will again give its concerts, good to eye and ear alike—for all the players wear white and Mendelssohn Hall puts on a gala aspect in their honor.

Six string quartets and three other chamber music organizations are listed. The Kneisels, the Boston Symphony Quartet and the quartets named after Leo Schulz, Olive Mead, Edward Dannreuther and Franz Kaltenborn will play twenty or twenty-five times. The Richard Arnold String Sextet, the Adele Margulies Trio and the Morgan-Danziger Trio will be heard from, and doubtless others.

Choral concerts will enlist the Oratorio Society, Musical Art Society, People's Choral Union, the opera chorus, Musurgia, the Mendelssohn Glee Club, the Rubinstein Club, the Irish Ladies' Choir and others, for a total of some twenty-five appearances.

Perhaps the noted Scranton Oratorio Society, composed partly of coal miners, and led by a magnetic Welshman, John T. Watkins, may come to New York to sing "Elijah." They have won prizes at St. Louis and Brooklyn, and they are planning to go to Wales itself next year, 150 strong, to compete in the Eisteddfods.

New singers of importance are not announced, but some familiar ones are to return. Sembrich and Eames will be heard in both concert and opera. Calve, Gadski, Bispham, Campanari, Mme. Kirkby Lunn have forsworn opera this year for the sometimes more profitable concert stages of America's principal cities. How much longer the vogue of the concert company will last is an open question.

Ellison van Hoose, tenor; Gwilym Miles, basso; Mrs. Ryder-Kelsey, Mrs. Hissem de Moss, Mrs. Shotwell-Piper, a ... of young sopranos; Miss Janet Spen...

Miss Muriel Foster, the English mezzo, and Ben Davis, first of English concert singers, despite his advancing years, will cross the Atlantic again this season. Mme. Calve brings two or three foreign singers in her train, among them Bouxmann, basso, and Van Norden, tenor. Emilio de Gogorza, who is by now pretty well Americanized, is a baritone to be heard in New York with the Eames concert party, and again later.

Miss Marie Hall, the young English girl, will be one of the new violinists. The tale that she used to make music in the streets with her parents, for a living, has been pronounced true by this now prosperous concert giver. Miss Otie Chew is another English newcomer, and Miss Argyro Castron is one of Mme. Calve's musical satellites of the violin. Incidentally, Miss Maud Powell, of New York, is to be heard in her own city this winter. This is good news.

Hugo Heermann, German master of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, and one of the sanest and surest of violin players, is en route from Australia and San Francisco. With him is his son, Emil Heermann, described as a promising young artist, also of the violin. They will give novel recitals together. Kubelik, who was a tremendous draw here, will come, and so will Henri Marteau, the romantic young Frenchman. Charles M. Loeffler, Willy Hess, Alexander Saslavsky and Edwin Grasse are all to be heard.

'Cellists will include Jean Gerardy, happily long past his prodigy days; Miss Elsa Ruegger, the accomplished young Belgian; Josef Hollman, with the Eames party, and Hans Kronold, who has the reputation of keeping busier at profitable concert work than any other New York resident musician.

Rafael Joseffy, of New York and Tarrytown, properly heads the list of pianists. Walter Damrosch has lured him from his willful retirement to play a Brahms concerto. From Europe will come Harold Bauer and Alfred Reisenauer, Raoul Pugno, the bearded Frenchman; Josef Lhevine, a new Russian celebrity; Anton Rubinstein, a young aspirant not related to the master whose name he bears; Adele Aus der Ohe, Rudolph Ganz and Amherst Webber. Heinrich Gebhardt is an excellent Boston pianist and Harold Randolph hails from Baltimore.

Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler will make her usual spring tour from Chicago; Miss Minnie Coons and Miss Elsa Breidt are two young American pianistic newcomers; Mme. Olga Samaroff is also American, despite her Russian name. In the piano field, as among violinists, women are numerous and promise to dispute man's supremacy.

[87]

rom

ddress

ate

Mr. Gericke will, as usual, conduct the Carnegie Hall concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Mr. Harold Bauer, Mr. Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy Hess.

From

Address

Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, last Friday afternoon, and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The auction sale of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a very substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. Besides the fact that the prospects in the other cities where the orchestra gives series of concerts are unusually good, the week's trip into Canada and the Middle West turned out to be most profitable, very large audiences being the rule everywhere. The first concerts in New-York will be on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. The sale of season tickets for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23, at the Carnegie Hall box office, Tyson's, and Luckhardt & Belder's, No. 10 East 17th-st.

ss

***

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. Besides the fact that the prospects in the other cities where the orchestra gives series of concerts is unusually good, the week's trip into Canada and the Middle West turned out to be profitable, large audiences being the rule everywhere. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, Nov. 9, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11.

***

NEW YORK SUN

ess

NOTES OF MUSIC EVENTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

OCT 15 1905

ss

Boston Symphony Concerts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon. The auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a very substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. The sale of season tickets for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, October 23.

NEW YORK SUN

rom

ddress

ate

OCT 15 1905

The symphony concerts for young people enter this year upon their eighth season. Six concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on Saturdays, November 26, December 16, January 6, February 10 and 24 and March 31 at 2:30 in the afternoon.

The soloists engaged for the concerts of the Kneisel Quartet in the coming season are Harold Bauer, Rudolf Ganz, Harold Randolph, Heinrich Gebhardt, Courtlandt Palmer and Vincent d'Indy pianists; Charles M. Loeffler, violinist, and Georges Longy, oboist. Among the novelties will be a quartet in C minor by Frederick Stode, successor of Theodore Thomas as conductor of the Chicago Orchestra, and Vincent d'Indy's piano quartet in

GLOBE

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the directfon of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy Hess.

NEW YORK PRESS

ss

The renewal subscription sale for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been large, and the prospects for a fine season are highly favorable. The sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning in Carnegie Hall, Luckhardt & Belder's and Tyson's. Concerts will be given on the evenings of November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, and the afternoons of November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, when Vincent d'Indy, distinguished French composer, will wield the baton. D'Indy will conduct two concerts in Boston, two here and one apiece in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. This will be his first visit to America. Some novelties on the Boston orchestra's list for the season are: Mahler's Fifth Symphony; a symphony by Amherst Webber; a new overture by Max Schilling, "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel"; a new suite by Busoni, "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe—"Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's coming season will be the twenty-fifth of its existence and the twentieth of its New York appearances. Steinway Hall, Chickering Hall, the Metropolitan Opera House and now Carnegie Hall have in turn harbored it here, and in recent seasons the last named auditorium has often been too small for those that would have heard the superb orchestra.

Mr. Gericke's announced plans for the coming winter, which have already been summarized in these columns, should insure another highly prosperous series in this city, culminating in the appearance as guest-conductor of Vincent d'Indy, the leader of the modern French school.

paper Cutting Bureau in the World

cember 8.

The two New York concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that will be conducted by Vincent d'Indy will have programmes made up chiefly of modern French music not yet heard in this city. As for the other concerts, the list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schilling, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni called "Geharnischte"; and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

The complete schedule of bookings for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has now been completed, and is published in the Orchestra's little Year Book. Counting those concerts which have already been given, the orchestra will play 109 times up to April 28 next, when the season closes in Boston. Of these concerts, Boston gets forty-eight, the twenty-four public rehearsals and the twenty-four evening concerts. Next comes New York with ten, and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered, for the most part, among the smaller cities and towns of New York State and New England.

[87]

MAIL

1905

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Forecast of Concert Season—Ten Orchestras, Twenty Conductors, Dozens of Singers, Pianists and Fiddlers—Child Prodigies Out of Fashion—Opera Preparations.

Nobody knows at this time just how much music will be offered to the New York public this winter, but there will be enough to go round, perhaps even more than ticket buyers will fully pay for. It promises to be a fairly well-balanced season. There will be no Paderewski to outweigh every one else; no Ysaye and Kreisler to stamp the year as one for overmastering violinists. No new singers are in sight for concerts, and not many at the opera, though the best of the familiar ones are listed, and with Mme. Sembrich giving a song recital a fortnight hence, nothing more distinguished in that department could be asked.

Probably it will be a conductors' season, for no less than twenty of these gentry will wield the baton here between now and next May, among them Felix Weingartner, Vincent d'Indy, Vasili von Safonoff and half a dozen other famous Europeans, besides the men that make their homes on this side the sea.

For one negative feature concertgoers should be thankful. There will be no infant prodigies. Even Europe is getting tired of the exploitation of gifted little violinists and pianists that should be in the schoolroom or in bed instead of under concert room strain. New York's horizon is at present clear of them, and managers have grown suddenly cautious about applying the word "young" to the musicians in their charge. Thus, Jan Kubelik, who was neither child, boy nor old man when he came a few years since, but a strange blend of all three, is now emphasized as a very masculine young man, and he is bringing his titled wife and a pair of bouncing twin babies to make life merry in a private car on his transcontinental tour. And Miss Marie Hall, a slight little English girl of twenty-one, who is declared a violinist of marked talent, is heralded rather as a full-grown young woman than as any variety, however advanced, of the wonder-child. It is a wholesome tendency.

Of operatic prospects something has already been said in these columns. The seventeen weeks' season will last from November 20 to March 17, and there will be ninety-odd performances. The concert year will be a full one. To begin with, ten orchestras will play at least 125 times in the aggregate. The Philharmonic Society will be directed by Max Fiedler, of Hamburg; Dr. Ernst Kunwald, of Frankfort; Fritz Steinbach, of Cologne; William Mengelberg, of Amsterdam; Victor Herbert, of New York, and Vasili von Safonoff, of Moscow.

The New York Symphony Orchestra will be headed by Walter Damrosch and by Felix Weingartner, of Berlin, as guest. The Boston Symphony, under Wilhelm Gericke, will have Vincent d'Indy, of Paris, as guest conductor for two concerts here. The Russian Symphony Orchestra, conducted by its founder, Modest Altschuler, will bring over Rachmaninoff, of Moscow, for several New York appearances as leader.

Victor Herbert is already leading his own orchestra every Sunday night at the Majestic Theatre. Sam Franko will direct the American Symphony Orchestra in concerts of old music. F. X. Arens will conduct three sets of People's Symphony Concerts, and Frank Damrosch will use the New York Symphony for his series of Young People's Concerts. The Sunday evening entertainments by the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra will have Alfred Hertz, Arturo Vigna and Nahan Franko as conductors. Fritz Scheel will head the visiting Philadelphia orchestra. The Women's String Orchestra will again give its concerts, good to eye and ear alike—for all the players wear white and Mendelssohn Hall puts on a gala aspect in their honor.

Six string quartets and three other chamber music organizations are listed. The Kneisels, the Boston Symphony Quartet and the quartets named after Leo Schulz, Olive Mead, Edward Dannreuther and Franz Kaltenborn will play twenty or twenty-five times. The Richard Arnold String Sextet, the Adele Margulies Trio and the Morgan-Danziger Trio will be heard from, and doubtless others.

Choral concerts will enlist the Oratorio Society, Musical Art Society, People's Choral Union, the opera chorus, Musurgia, the Mendelssohn Glee Club, the Rubinstein Club, the Irish Ladies' Choir and others, for a total of some twenty-five appearances.

Perhaps the noted Scranton Oratorio Society, composed partly of coal miners, and led by a magnetic Welshman, John T. Watkins, may come to New York to sing "Elijah." They have won prizes at St. Louis and Brooklyn, and they are planning to go to Wales itself next year, 150 strong, to compete in the Eisteddfods.

New singers of importance are not announced, but some familiar ones are to return. Sembrich and Eames will be heard in both concert and opera. Calve, Gadski, Bispham, Campanari, Mme. Kirkby Lunn have forsworn opera this year for the sometimes more profitable concert stages of America's principal cities. How much longer the vogue of the concert company will last is an open question.

Ellison van Hoose, tenor; Gwilym Miles, basso; Mrs. Ryder-Kelsey, Mrs. Hissem de Moss, Mrs. Shotwell-Piper, a trio of young sopranos; Miss Janet Spencer, alto; Herbert Witherspoon, the tall basso; Edward Johnson, a tenor of sudden and recent vogue; Theodore van Yorx, tenor; Frank Croxton, a Chicago basso—these are all American singers, likely to be heard often, as they should be, in their own country.

Miss Bessie Abbott, who first gained notice as one of the Abbott Sisters in "1492," and has since become a soprano at the Paris opera and a protege of Jean de Reszke, will come back for concert appearances, and good accounts have preceded her.

Miss Muriel Foster, the English mezzo, and Ben Davis, first of English concert singers, despite his advancing years, will cross the Atlantic again this season. Mme. Calve brings two or three foreign singers in her train, among them Bouxmann, basso, and Van Norden, tenor. Emilio de Gogorza, who is by now pretty well Americanized, is a baritone to be heard in New York with the Eames concert party, and again later.

Miss Marie Hall, the young English girl, will be one of the new violinists. The tale that she used to make music in the streets with her parents, for a living, has been pronounced true by this now prosperous concert giver. Miss Orie Chew is another English newcomer, and Miss Argyro Castron is one of Mme. Calve's musical satellites of the violin. Incidentally, Miss Maud Powell, of New York, is to be heard in her own city this winter. This is good news.

Hugo Heermann, German master of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, and one of the sanest and surest of violin players, is en route from Australia and San Francisco. With him is his son, Emil Heermann, described as a promising young artist, also of the violin. They will give novel recitals together. Kubelik, who was a tremendous draw here, will come, and so will Henri Marteau, the romantic young Frenchman. Charles M. Loeffler, Willy Hess, Alexander Saslavsky and Edwin Grasse are all to be heard.

'Cellists will include Jean Gerardy, happily long past his prodigy days; Miss Elsa Ruegger, the accomplished young Belgian; Josef Hollman, with the Eames party, and Hans Kronold, who has the reputation of keeping busier at profitable concert work than any other New York resident musician.

Rafael Joseffy, of New York and Tarrytown, properly heads the list of pianists. Walter Damrosch has lured him from his willful retirement to play a Brahms concerto. From Europe will come Harold Bauer and Alfred Reisenauer, Raoul Pugno, the bearded Frenchman; Josef Lhevine, a new Russian celebrity; Anton Rubinstein, a young aspirant not related to the master whose name he bears; Adele Aus der Ohe, Rudolph Ganz and Amherst Webber. Heinrich Gebhardt is an excellent Boston pianist and Harold Randolph hails from Baltimore.

Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeisler will make her usual spring tour from Chicago; Miss Minnie Coons and Miss Elsa Breidt are two young American pianistic newcomers; Mme. Olga Samaroff is also American, despite her Russian name. In the piano field, as among violinists, women are numerous and promise to dispute man's supremacy.

REDUCTION

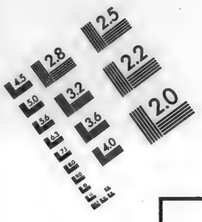
RATIO

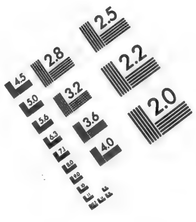
12x

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

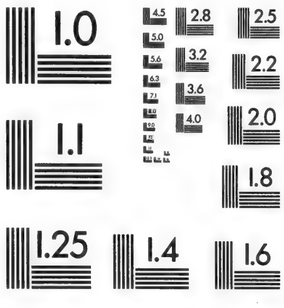
PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC





150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

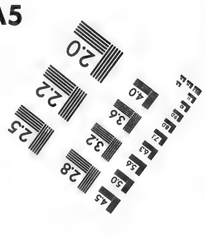
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm

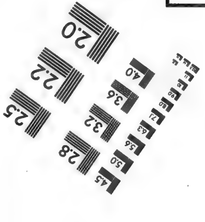
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

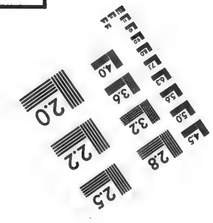
2.5 mm

A5



A4





PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
4.5 mm 1234567890

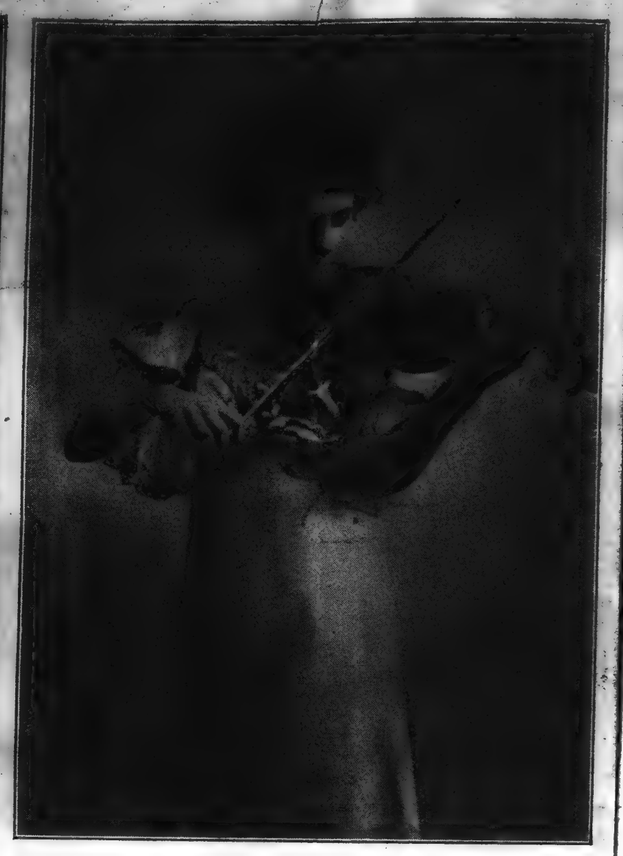
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
3.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

MAIL
Year ... York Edition
OCT 28 1905

THREE CONCERT ARTISTS SOON TO APPEAR IN NEW YORK

MINNIE COONS,
A YOUNG AMERICAN PIANIST WHO MAKES HER FIRST APPEARANCE IN CARNEGIE HALL WITH WALTER DAMROSCH AND THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2.

MME. EMMA CALVE.
WHO MAKES HER FIRST AMERICAN CONCERT TOUR THIS SEASON. SHE WILL SING AT CARNEGIE HALL NEXT SATURDAY WITH THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Copyright, 1904, by Dupont.



MARIE HALL,
THE GIFTED YOUNG ENGLISH VIOLINIST, WHO MAKES HER AMERICAN DEBUT WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, AND LATER IN THE SEASON PLAYS WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

...ress ...
...e ... OCT 28 ...

THE COMING MUSICAL SEASON.

One might fancy that the Penal Code provided dire punishments for musicians giving concerts in September and October, so strictly do they avoid any public appearance before the first week in November. When once the army of musical invaders has appeared, however, nothing can check its ruthless advance. We are not yet quite in the predicament of Berlin, where a single concert agency reports over 600 "bookings" for the season, and where so prominent an artist as M. Girardy was unable to play last year because he had neglected to hire a hall in time; but we are fast getting there. An English journalist wrote, some weeks ago: "So many musical artists are going to America this autumn, that the drain on London will be very heavy, and the London musical season will suffer in consequence." Another critic retorted that the supply of eminent artists in London was so greatly in excess of the demand that enough respectable performers would be left in spite of "America's voracity."

Rotation of crops has been found as useful in the musical world as in agriculture. Most of the eminent foreign players and singers who visited us last year—among them Paderewski, D'Albert, Pachmann, Kreisler, Ysaye—are tilling the soil at home this season. In their place we are to hear within the next six months a host of others; the list includes the pianists Pugno, Reisenauer, Bauer, Bloomfield-Zeisler, Joseffy, Arthur Rubinstein; the violinists Maud Powell, Kubelik, Marteau, Sauret, Otie Chew, Marie Hall, Marie Nichols, Hugo Heermann; the concert singers Calvé, Gadski, Nielsen, Campanari, Witherspoon, Bushnell, Bispham, Ben Davies, Kirkby Lunn, and many others—not to speak of Conried's famous song-birds, several of whom will also be heard in the concert hall. A somewhat disquieting phenomenon is the centrifugal movement (taking the Metropolitan Opera House as the centre of the musical universe) of the stars. Four of the singers just mentioned—Calvé, Gadski, Campanari, and Bispham—used to be among the principal ornaments of our opera company, and would be so now had they not chosen, for one reason or another, to take to solitaire. Two others, Fritzi Scheff and Schumann-Heink, left Conried's happy family to start opera companies of their own. Yet there is no cause for alarm; there will be as many first-class singers at the Metropolitan as ever.

If the race of tenors is really dying out, as some say, we are to hear some remarkable survivors, including Caruso, Knote, Burgstaller, and Reiss, each without an equal in his specialty, besides the protean Dippel, the Doppelgänger of any one of his colleagues. Nor could any foreign opera house begin to equal Conried's list of sopranos, altos, baritones, and basses, among them Abarbanell, Alten, Eames, Morena, Nordica, Sembrich, Weed, Fremstad, Homer, Walker, Dufriche, Goritz, Scotti, Van Rooy, Plançon. On these singers and the costly operatic machinery needed to run them, the New York public spent a million dollars last season, and is doubtless prepared to do the same again. The opera owes its popularity to the fact that it is the neutral ground on which all classes—the musical, the semi-musical, and the unmusical—meet in amity. Time was when it was a savage battlefield, on which the partisans of Italian, French, and German opera broke each others' heads. But one day Maurice Grau had the good sense to drop the appellation of "Italian Opera," and to give all operas in the language they were written in, and by the best vocal specialists in each style. This policy gradually healed all animosities, and today the former bitterness of feeling is a mere vague memory; the Italians are glad to hear that the "Flying Dutchman" is to be revived, and the high "Parsifal" prices split in two; while the Wagnerites are pleased with the prospect of hearing Sembrich and Caruso in such Italian revivals as "Favorita," "Sonnambula," and "Il Trovatore."

One of the conspicuous features of the opera season is to be the appearance of Engelbert Humperdinck to conduct his "Hänsel und Gretel." This, the greatest operatic success in Germany since the production of "Parsifal," in 1882, has been heard here before, but under conditions which did not reveal all of its charming features. It is also expected that another opera in the list, "Manon Lescaut," will be conducted by its composer. But even if Puccini does not come, there will be a record-breaking number of eminent foreign composers and conductors on view. The first of them to make his début is André Messager, the French opera and operetta composer, whose "Veronique" will be heard here on Monday. His eminent countryman, Vincent D'Indy, will be heard next month at the local concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. England's musical lion of the hour, Edward Elgar, has also promised to cross the Atlantic, but he will appear only at the Cincinnati Festival. Russia sends the well-known composer Rachmaninoff, besides the irresistible Cossack, Safonoff, for whom the Philharmonic Society will ...wspaper ...

NEW YORK PRESS
... OCT 29 1905

Theodore Van Yorx

THEODORE VAN YORX, well known as "one of the greatest tenors America has produced," has already entered upon another season of engagements that fortunately command twentieth century facilities of transit for fulfillment. The West and the South are enthusiastic in recall engagements, and, as soloist in St. Thomas's choir, this city, and with local and Canadian dates to fill, this concert and oratorio artist has the proof that demand alone can give of unequivocal appreciation. Among his engagements within the past twelve months have been dates filled with the following: Boston Cecilia Society, in "Stabat Mater"; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he sang the duet from the first act of "Valkyrie" and the duet from the third act of "Lohengrin" with Mme. Gadski; the Sherlock Society of Toronto, in the "Seasons"; Fortnightly Musical Club, Cleveland, in the "Beatitudes"; Raleigh, N. C., Festival, and many clubs and other musical organizations. Both Mr. and Mrs. Van Yorx (soprano) have the available treasures of extensive repertoires and adaptation and ability to give response to short notice demand. From multitudinous press notices here are some brief selections:

With the first oratorio singers in this country and in Europe must Theodore Van Yorx be ranked. Each year has seen a development upon artistic ... excellence of the voice and possible ... to the sincere musician. ... —Chicago Musical Leader and Concert-Goer, December 29, 1904.

Mr. Van Yorx is a welcome addition to the oratorio tenors heard here. His style is sincere, manly and appreciative, and he has a vocal equipment of beauty and strength.—Boston Journal, February 8, 1905.

Mme. Gadski was in her best voice, and Mr. Van Yorx again surprised us by his surety in the most trying numbers. It is seldom that one hears the tenor part of a Wagnerian opera sung with such musical security and perfect intonation.—Louis C. Elson, in the Boston Advertiser, March, 1905.

As his first solo Mr. Van Yorx gave Bartlett's "L'Amour," a number in which his vibrant, powerful voice found excellent expression. ... his later numbers, however, that he most charmed his audience. He sang then a trio of songs: "Is So Innocent," by Lecocq; "I'll Sing a Song of Araby," by Clay, and "Onaway, Awake, Beloved," by Cowen. In all three he sang with fine effect; in the first two, light and graceful, his voice fairly tripped and danced over the melody, and in the third, more dramatic, his voice rang out fairly afire, and full of the spirit of the impassioned love song.—Atlanta Journal, May 5, 1905.

Van Yorx was in his best form, his voice pure, and true as the notes of a silver bell. He was compelled to add several numbers to his program, and yet the people clamored for more. The triumph was such as must have ... Atlanta critic, Musical Courier.

Among Mr. Van Yorx's bookings in the near future are the following:

Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. Van Yorx ... son."

Toronto, Mr. Van Yorx.

Boston, Handel and Haydn Society, "The Messiah."

Washington, "The Messiah."

Jacksonville, recital.

Brooklyn, "The Messiah."

[88]

MAIL
1
ress
e

THREE CONCERT ARTISTS SOON TO APPEAR IN NEW YORK

MINNIE COONS,
A YOUNG AMERICAN PIANIST WHO MAKES HER FIRST APPEARANCE IN CARNEGIE HALL WITH WALTER DAMROSCH AND THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2.

MME. EMMA CALVE,
WHO MAKES HER FIRST AMERICAN CONCERT TOUR THIS SEASON. SHE WILL SING AT CARNEGIE HALL NEXT SATURDAY WITH THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Copyright, 1904, by Dupont.

MARIE HALL,
THE GIFTED YOUNG ENGLISH VIOLINIST, WHO MAKES HER AMERICAN DEBUT WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, AND LATER IN THE SEASON PLAYS WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Newspaper
N W YORK
s 88

THE COMING MUSICAL SEASON.

One might fancy that the Penal Code provided dire punishments for musicians giving concerts in September and October, so strictly do they avoid any public appearance before the first week in November. When once the army of musical invaders has appeared, however, nothing can check its ruthless advance. We are not yet quite in the predicament of Berlin, where a single concert agency reports over 600 "bookings" for the season, and where so prominent an artist as M. Girardy was unable to play last year because he had neglected to hire a hall in time; but we are fast getting there. An English journalist wrote, some weeks ago: "So many musical artists are going to America this autumn, that the drain on London will be very heavy, and the London musical season will suffer in consequence." Another critic retorted that the supply of eminent artists in London was so greatly in excess of the demand that enough respectable performers would be left in spite of "America's voracity."

Rotation of crops has been found as useful in the musical world as in agriculture. Most of the eminent foreign players and singers who visited us last year—among them Paderewski, D'Albert, Pachmann, Kreisler, Ysaye—are tilling the soil at home this season. In their place we are to hear within the next six months a host of others; the list includes the pianists Pugno, Reisenauer, Bauer, Bloomfield-Zeisler, Joseffy, Arthur Rubinstein; the violinists Maud Powell, Kubelik, Marteau, Sauret, Otie Chew, Marie Hall, Marie Nichols, Hugo Heermann; the concert singers Calvé, Gadski, Nielsen, Campanari, Witherspoon, Bushnell, Bispham, Ben Davies, Kirkby Lunn, and many others—not to speak of Conried's famous song-birds, several of whom will also be heard in the concert hall. A somewhat disquieting phenomenon is the centrifugal movement (taking the Metropolitan Opera House as the centre of the musical universe) of the stars. Four of the singers just mentioned—Calvé, Gadski, Campanari, and Bispham—used to be among the principal ornaments of our opera company, and would be so now had they not chosen, for one reason or another, to take to solitaire. Two others, Fritzi Scheff and Schumann-Heink, left Conried's happy family to start opera companies of their own. Yet there is no cause for alarm; there will be as many first-class singers at the Metropolitan as ever.

If the race of tenors is really dying out, as some say, we are to hear some remarkable survivors, including Caruso, Knote, Burgstaller, and Reiss, each without an equal in his specialty, besides the protean Dippel, the Doppelgänger of any one of his colleagues. Nor could any foreign opera house begin to equal Conried's list of sopranos, altos, baritones, and basses, among them Abarbanell, Alten, Eames, Morena, Nordica, Sembrich, Weed, Fremstad, Homer, Walker, Dufriche, Goritz, Scotti, Van Rooy, Plançon. On these singers and the costly operatic machinery needed to run them, the New York public spent a million dollars last season, and is doubtless prepared to do the same again. The opera owes its popularity to the fact that it is the neutral ground on which all classes—the musical, the semi-musical, and the unmusical—meet in amity. Time was when it was a savage battlefield, on which the partisans of Italian, French, and German opera broke each others' heads. But one day Maurice Grau had the good sense to drop the appellation of "Italian Opera," and to give all operas in the language they were written in, and by the best vocal specialists in each style. This policy gradually healed all animosities, and today the former bitterness of feeling is a mere vague memory; the Italians are glad to hear that the "Flying Dutchman" is to be revived, and the high "Parsifal" prices split in two; while the Wagnerites are pleased with the prospect of hearing Sembrich and Caruso in such Italian revivals as "Favorita," "Sonnambula," and "Il Trovatore."

One of the conspicuous features of the opera season is to be the appearance of Engelbert Humperdinck to conduct his "Hänsel und Gretel." This, the greatest operatic success in Germany since the production of "Parsifal," in 1882, has been heard here before, but under conditions which did not reveal all of its charming features. It is also expected that another opera in the list, "Manon Lescaut," will be conducted by its composer. But even if Puccini does not come, there will be a record-breaking number of eminent foreign composers and conductors on view. The first of them to make his début is André Messager, the French opera and operetta composer, whose "Veronique" will be heard here on Monday. His eminent countryman, Vincent D'Indy, will be heard next month at the local concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. England's musical lion of the hour, Edward Elgar, has also promised to cross the Atlantic, but he will appear only at the Cincinnati Festival. Russia sends the well-known composer Rachmaninoff, besides the irresistible Cossack, Safonoff, for whom the Philharmonic Society will

Theodore Van Yorx

THEODORE VAN YORX, well known as "one of the greatest tenors America has produced," has already entered upon another season of engagements that fortunately command twentieth century facilities of transit for fulfillment. The West and the South are enthusiastic in recall engagements, and, as soloist in St. Thomas's choir, this city, and with local and Canadian dates to fill, this concert and oratorio artist has the proof that demand alone can give of unequivocal appreciation. Among his engagements within the past twelve months have been dates filled with the following: Boston Cecilia Society, in "Stabat Mater"; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he sang the duet from the first act of "Valkyrie" and the duet from the third act of "Lohengrin" with Mme. Gadski; the Sherlock Society of Toronto, in the "Seasons"; Fortnightly Musical Club, Cleveland, in the "Beatitudes"; Raleigh, N. C., Festival, and many clubs and other musical organizations. Both Mr. and Mrs. Van Yorx (soprano) have the available treasures of extensive repertoires and adaptation and ability to give response to short notice demand. From multitudinous press notices here are some brief selections:

With the first oratorio singers in this country and in Europe must Theodore Van Yorx be ranked. Each year has seen a development upon artistic lines and a broadening of the voice only possible to the sincere musician. * * *.—Chicago Musical Leader and Concert-Goer, December 29, 1904.

Mr. Van Yorx is a welcome addition to the oratorio tenors heard here. His style is sincere, manly and appreciative, and he has a vocal equipment of beauty and strength.—Boston Journal, February 8, 1905.

Mme. Gadski was in her best voice, and Mr. Van Yorx again surprised us by his surety in the most trying numbers. It is seldom that one hears the tenor part of a Wagnerian opera sung with such musical security and perfect intonation.—Louis C. Elson, in the Boston Advertiser, March 6 1905.

As his first solo Mr. Van Yorx gave Bartlett's "L'Amour," a number in which his vibrant, beautiful voice found excellent expression. It was in his later numbers, however, that he most charmed his audience. He sang then a trio of songs—"She Is So Innocent," by Lecocq; "I'll Sing Thee a Song of Araby," by Clay, and "Onaway, Awake, Beloved," by Cowen. In all three he sang with fine effect; in the first two, light and airy, his voice fairly tripped and danced over the music, and in the third, more dramatic, his voice was fairly afire, and full of the spirit of the savage love song.—Atlanta Journal, May 5, 1905.

Van Yorx was in his best form, his voice being pure and true as the notes of a silver bell. He was compelled to add several numbers as encores, and yet the people clamored for more. His triumph was such as must have delighted his soul.—Atlanta critic, Musical Courier, May 10, 1905.

Among Mr. Van Yorx's bookings for the near future are the following:

Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. Van Yorx in "Samson."

Toronto, Mr. Van Yorx.

Boston, Handel and Haydn Society in "The Messiah."

Washington, "The Messiah."

Jacksonville, recital.

Brooklyn, "The Messiah."

[88]

...Press Cutting Bureau in the...
...NEW YORK...
...
Address ...
...
OCT 29 1905

...ple Are Doing Here ...bout Gotham.

...PLANS are floating in the air. Secretaries are ... engaged in making out ball and dinner lists, ... for be it known that the busy women of so... ciety have little leisure for the arrangement ... parties and it takes much time and tact to ... who are acceptable and congenial persons ... thrown together. People are coming to town ... houses are being opened and much—very much ... ping is being done. Nevertheless, the season ... yet begun and it will be several weeks before ... people will be persuaded to leave their at... country places.

... houses are placed in readiness, however, and ... now are occasionally occupied for a day or two ... time. The theatres are already well patronized. ... several society plays now in evidence attract ... smart set, many of whom seem to enjoy seeing ... selves imitated and travestied. Among other ... known people at the opening performance of ... derland" the other night were Mr. and Mrs. ... Thomas, Mrs. James L. Kernochan, Richard ... Sidney Paget, Edward Crowninshield, Stan... White, Thomas Clark and J. Dunbar Wright.

Society women are still interested in the hat ... to be held at the residence of Mrs. Richard ... No. 1 West Thirty-ninth street, on Tuesday ... this week. The sale was to have taken place ... week, but owing to the death of a niece of ... Irwin the affair was postponed. The pro... of the sale are to go to various charitable ... anizations. The combined facts that a worthy charity is aided by a purchase, that the prices are reasonable and the hats pretty and, more than all, that the fair milliners are women well known in society, present an irresistible attraction to the feminine contingent. Some of the makers of the hats are Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Harry Duryea, Mrs. Conde Nast, Miss Rosamond Street, Mrs. Henry Alexander, Mrs. Harry Bendleston and Mrs. Irwin.

This afternoon society people in town will turn their ways to the St. Regis Convent, at One Hundred and Forty-fifth street and Riverside Drive, where, at 3 o'clock, His Grace the Archbishop of New York will conduct the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the new chapel which is building. St. Regis House is well known as a retreat much patronized by the women of society of various religious denominations. Here they go when in search of rest, quiet and comfort, which is given them by the sisters of the order.

Many of the patrons of the retreat are of the Roman Catholic faith, but the sisters welcome any woman of good birth and breeding, whatever her religious preferences. A large attendance is expected this afternoon. Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, jr., Mrs. and Miss de Barrill, Henry Lehr and many other society people are much interested in the convent.

Miss Lillian Barker, who is to be married to-morrow to Franklin Butler Lord, jr., gave a luncheon last Wednesday at Sherry's for her bridesmaids, who are Miss Ruth Vanderbilt Twombly, Miss Martha McCook, Miss Margaret D. Dix, Miss Sybil Douglas, Miss Virginia Murray and Miss Violet D. Cruger. Much interest is taken in this wedding, which, it is said, will be one of the prettiest given in a long time. The bridesmaids are all pretty girls and their costumes, it is rumored, are decidedly picturesque.

Last night Bryce Metcalf, whose wedding with Miss Susie Hall is set for Thursday next, gave his bachelor dinner at Delmonico's. His guests included Harris Fahnestock, T. Tileston Wells, Peyton J. Van Rensselaer, Frank Hillhouse, Lamont Dominick, John Hubbard and Edward L. Hall.

Dates for dinners and receptions are beginning to be announced. On Nov. 6 Mrs. Herbert Sanford Carpenter will give a dinner-dance at Sherry's for her daughter, Miss Cora Carpenter. On Nov. 4 Mrs. Augustine Nicholas Lawrence and Miss Lawrence give an "at home" at the Nevada.

The first lecture in the series to be given by Mrs. Richard Henry Savage will take place at the St. Regis on Nov. 7, at 4 o'clock.

On Nov. 10 Brig.-Gen. and Mrs. Frederick D. Grant will give a large reception at Governor's Island, at 2:30, in honor of Rear-Admiral H. I. H. Prince Louis of Battenberg. The Prince plans to give a ball on his flagship, the Drake, on Nov. 14.

The first Boston Symphony will take place at Carnegie Hall on Thursday, Nov. 9.

The first Philharmonic comes on Friday, Nov. 10.

A bit of news of interest floating around is that Mr. Bagby has just engaged Madame Nordica to sing at one of his Musical Mornings in December. As the prima donna is always a favorite with society people, both on acount of her wonderful voice and charming personality, which interest is further enhanced, perhaps, by the recent matrimonial rumors concerning the popular singer, this announcement is received with more than ordinary attention.

Much interest is taken in the approaching opera season, which opens at the Metropolitan Opera House on Nov. 20. More subscriptions are said to have been sold than ever before, and it is expected the season will be one of great brilliancy.

...Press Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 29 1905

...the little Year Book of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, just published, it is shown the orchestra will have played 109 times this season by April 28, when the season closes in Boston. Boston gets forty-eight concerts—twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four evening concerts. New York, as usual, will have ten concerts, and Cambridge six. Five concerts apiece will be given in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington; three in Providence and Hartford, and two in Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me. Other concerts will be given in the smaller cities and towns of New York State and New England. The Boston orchestra's season of 1905-1906 promises to be one of the most prosperous in its history. The preliminary trip in Canada and the Middle West, early this month, proved highly profitable. Everywhere subscriptions are larger than last year, and in New York the renewals by old subscribers is record breaking. The first concerts of the season here will take place in Carnegie Hall on the evening of November 9 and the afternoon of November 11. At Thursday's concert the soloist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, who has met with great success in Boston. He will play the Dvorak concerto. On Saturday afternoon the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The programme will be devoted to excerpts from Wagner operas.

...Press Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK STAATS ZEITUNG
OCT 29 1905

... — Marie Hall, eine junge Violinistin, die in England große Erfolge erzielt haben soll, wird am 8. November in Carnegie Hall ein Konzert geben. Unter Anderem wird sie das Paganini'sche D-dur-Concert vortragen. — Hugo Heermann, der vortreffliche Frankfurter Violinist, wird am 18. November, Nachmittags, in Mendelssohn Hall ein Recital geben. — Alice Nielsen, die hier vor mehreren Jahren als Operettensängerin ziemlich erfolgreich war, kehrt als Opernsängerin zurück. Sie wird zunächst in einer Matinee am 10. November im neuen Casino als Norina in Donizetti's „Don Pasquale" erscheinen. — Fräulein Minnie Coons, eine junge amerikanische Pianistin, die ihre Ausbildung von Xaver Scharwenka genossen hat, wird in ihrem Einführungskonzert, am 2. November in Carnegie Hall, das G-dur-Concert von Beethoven, das Konzertstück von Weber und eine Reihe Solonummern vortragen. — Das erste Gesangsrezital der Saison zu geben hat sich Herr Gwilym Miles vorbehalten: es wird am 31. Oktober, Abends, in Mendelssohn Hall stattfinden. In dem Programm befindet sich auch eine ganze Gruppe Hugo Kaun'scher Lieder. — Im ersten Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters wird sich der neue erste Cellist des Orchesters, Herr Heinrich Warnke, als Solist hören lassen. Im zweiten Konzert, am Samstag Nachmittag, den 11. November, wird Frau Johanna Gadski mitwirken.

...Press Cutting Bureau in the World
From N. Y. TRIBUNE,
Address ...
Date ...

The complete schedule of bookings for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has now been completed and is published in the orchestra's little year book. Counting those concerts which have already been given, the orchestra will play 109 times up to April 28 next, when the season closes in Boston. Of these concerts Boston gets forty-eight, the twenty-four public rehearsals and the twenty-four evening concerts. Next comes New-York with ten, and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each, Providence and Hartford three each, and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered for the most part among the smaller cities and towns of New-York State and New-England. The first concerts of the season will be given in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. At the Thursday evening concert the soloist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Mr. Warnke has met with success in Boston. He will play in New-York the Dvorak concerto. The singers on Saturday afternoon will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, the programme being devoted to excerpts from Wagnerian music dramas.

...Press Cutting Bureau in the World
From N. Y. TRIBUNE,
Address ...
Date ...

Mme. Olga Samaroff (the name was adopted for the concert platform), an American pianist already known to the readers of The Tribune, will give her first pianoforte recital in America ... Mendelssohn Hall on the afternoon of No... 9. She will play this season at three ... of the Boston Orchestra, one of the ... Society of St. Louis, ... in Boston, Baltimore, ... and

NEW YORK PRESS
...
OCT 1[illegible] 1905

Boston's Symphony Orchestra began its series of concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon under most favorable circumstances. The first concerts in New York will take place Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. The sale of season tickets for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 23, in Carnegie Hall and Tyson's, Luckhardt and Belder's music stores.

...
...
OCT 23 1905

Notes of the Musical World

The coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New York. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conducter, but conditions were very different. Concert-goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New York. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering, in turn, gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New York concerts, giving five Saturday matinées in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts.

VINCENT D'INDY.

The renewal of subscriptions, which has been going on for the last few weeks, is larger than ever before. This season's sal. for new subscribers opens Monday at the Carnegie Hall box office. The dates of the concerts are: Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; and Saturday afternoons, Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

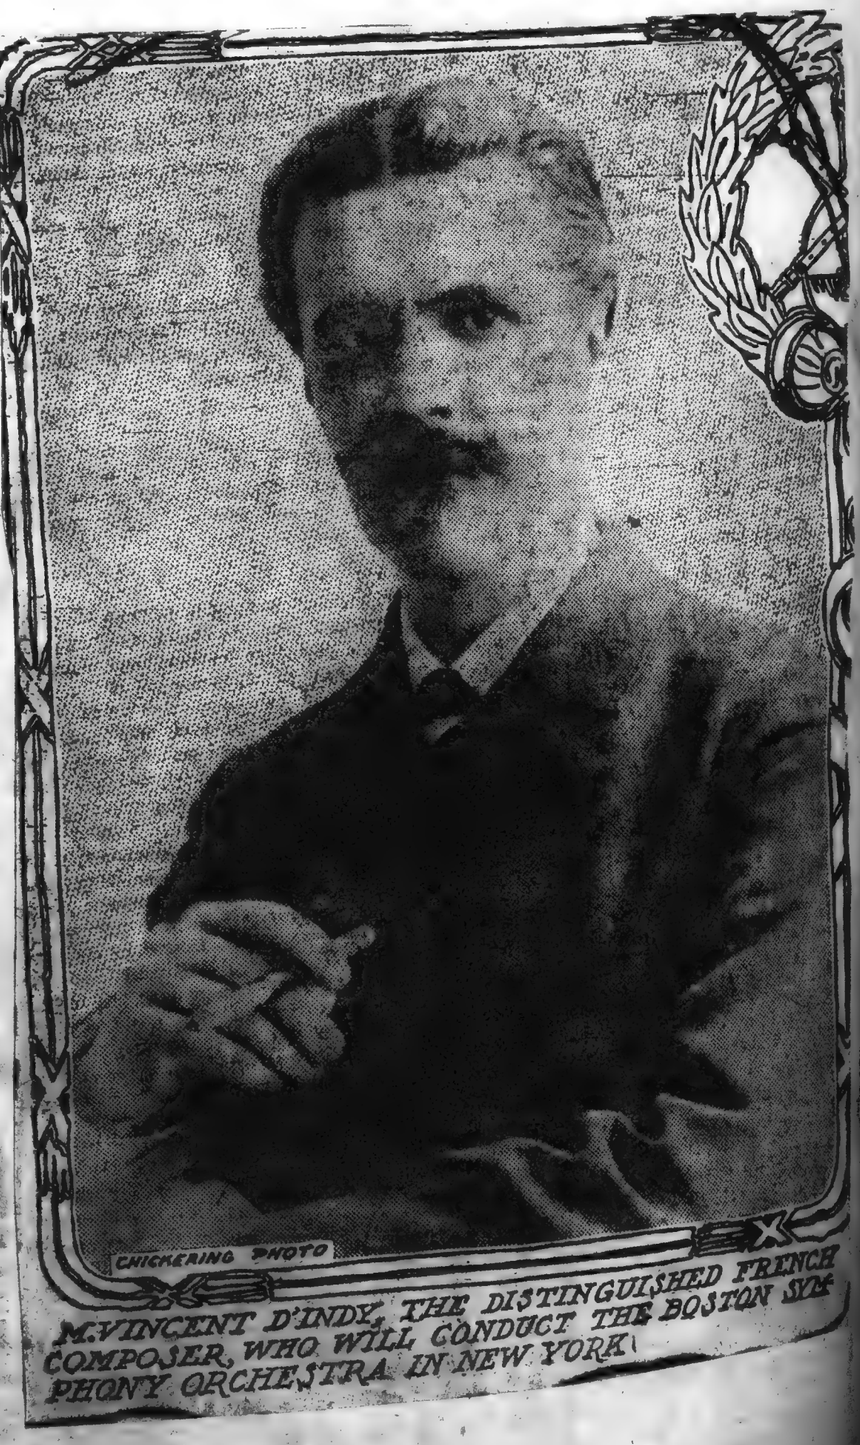
A particularly interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the French composer. The concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York, and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington. This will be his first visit to America, and the first visit to this country of a distinguished composer since Tschaikowsky came to New York to open the Carnegie Music Hall.

M. d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen" and to-day is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has been favorably received here in New York. As a conductor M. d'Indy has been very successful in Germany and Austria. His two New York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music for the most part unknown to New York.

The solo artists that may now be announced for the series are Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in a Wagnerian programme, Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Prof. Willy Hess, and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra.

There will also be some interesting novelties. The list includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schilling, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugène d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe—"Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck."

The Metropolitan Opera House orchestra has already begun work under the direction of Alfred Hertz, and has rehearsed Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," which, as already announced, is to open the season on Nov. 20. The orchestra has been considerably strengthened, notably by the reinforcement of the string instruments.



CHICKERING PHOTO

M. VINCENT D'INDY, THE DISTINGUISHED FRENCH COMPOSER, WHO WILL CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN NEW YORK

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From NEW YORK WORLD
Address
Date

What People Are Doing Here and There About Gotham.

PLANS are floating in the air. Secretaries are engaged in making out ball and dinner lists, for be it known that the busy women of society have little leisure for the arrangement of their parties and it takes much time and tact to discover who are acceptable and congenial persons to be thrown together. People are coming to town daily; houses are being opened and much—very much—shopping is being done. Nevertheless, the season has not yet begun and it will be several weeks before society people will be persuaded to leave their attractive country places.

The houses are placed in readiness, however, and even now are occasionally occupied for a day or two at a time. The theatres are already well patronized. The several society plays now in evidence attract the smart set, many of whom seem to enjoy seeing themselves imitated and travestied. Among other well-known people at the opening performance of "Wonderland" the other night were Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Thomas, Mrs. James L. Kernochan, Richard Peters, Sidney Paget, Edward Crowninshield, Stanford White, Thomas Clark and J. Dunbar Wright.

Society women are still interested in the hat sale to be held at the residence of Mrs. Richard Irwin, No. 1 West Thirty-ninth street, on Tuesday of this week. The sale was to have taken place last week, but owing to the death of a niece of Mrs. Irwin the affair was postponed. The proceeds of the sale are to go to various charitable organizations. The combined facts that a worthy charity is aided by a purchase, that the prices are reasonable and the hats pretty and, more than all, that the fair milliners are women well known in society, present an irresistible attraction to the feminine contingent. Some of the makers of the hats are Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Harry Duryea, Mrs. Conde Nast, Miss Rosamond Street, Mrs. Henry Alexander, Mrs. Harry Beadleston and Mrs. Irwin.

This afternoon society people in town will turn their ways to the St. Regis Convent, at One Hundred and Fortieth street and Riverside Drive, where, at 3 o'clock, His Grace the Archbishop of New York will conduct the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the new chapel which is building. St. Regis House is well known as a retreat much patronized by the women of society of various religious denominations. Here they go when in search of rest, quiet and comfort, which is given them by the sisters of the order.

Many of the patrons of the retreat are of the Roman Catholic faith, but the sisters welcome any woman of good birth and breeding, whatever her religious preferences. A large attendance is expected this afternoon. Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, jr., Mrs. and Miss de Barrill, Henry Lehr and many other society people are much interested in the convent.

Miss Lillian Barker, who is to be married to-morrow to Franklin Butler Lord, jr., gave a luncheon last Wednesday at Sherry's for her bridesmaids, who are Miss Ruth Vanderbilt Twombly, Miss Martha McCook, Miss Margaret D. Dix, Miss Sybil Douglas, Miss Virginia Murray and Miss Violet D. Cruger. Much interest is taken in this wedding, which, it is said, will be one of the prettiest given in a long time. The bridesmaids are all pretty girls and their costumes, it is rumored, are decidedly picturesque.

Last night Bryce Metcalf, whose wedding with Miss Susie Hall is set for Thursday next, gave his bachelor dinner at Delmonico's. His guests included Harris Fahnestock, T. Tileston Wells, Peyton J. Van Rensselaer, Frank Hillhouse, Lamont Dominick, John Hubbard and Edward L. Hall.

Dates for dinners and receptions are beginning to be announced. On Nov. 6 Mrs. Herbert Sanford Carpenter will give a dinner-dance at Sherry's for her daughter, Miss Cora Carpenter. On Nov. 4 Mrs. Augustine Nicholas Lawrence and Miss Lawrence give an "at home" at the Nevada.

The first lecture in the series to be given by Mrs. Richard Henry Savage will take place at the St. Regis on Nov. 7, at 4 o'clock.

On Nov. 10 Brig.-Gen. and Mrs. Frederick D. Grant will give a large reception at Governor's Island, at 2.30, in honor of Rear-Admiral H. R. H. Prince Louis of Battenberg. The Prince plans to give a ball on his flagship, the Drake, on Nov. 14.

The first Boston Symphony will take place at Carnegie Hall on Thursday, Nov. 9.

The first Philharmonic comes on Friday, Nov. 10.

A bit of news of interest floating around is that Mr. Bagby has just engaged Madame Nordica to sing at one of his Musical Mornings in December. As the prima donna is always a favorite with society people, both on acount of her wonderful voice and charming personality, which interest is further enhanced, perhaps, by the recent matrimonial rumors concerning the popular singer, this announcement is received with more than ordinary attention.

Much interest is taken in the approaching opera season, which opens at the Metropolitan Opera House on Nov. 20. More subscriptions are said to have been sold than ever before, and it is expected that the season will be one of great brilliancy.

From N. Y. TRIBUNE.
Address
Date

Mme. Olga Samaroff (the name was adopted for the concert platform), an American pianist already known to the readers of The Tribune, will give her first pianoforte recital in America at Mendelssohn Hall on the afternoon of November 9. She will play this season at three [illegible] concerts of the Boston Orchestra, one of the [illegible] Symphony Society of St. Louis, one of [illegible] Philadelphia Orchestra in New-York and [illegible] Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington; [illegible] recitals in Boston, Philadelphia and

NEW YORK PRESS
OCT 29 1905

In the little Year Book of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, just published, it is shown the orchestra will have played 109 times this season by April 28, when the season closes in Boston. Boston gets forty-eight concerts—twenty-four public rehearsals and twenty-four evening concerts. New York, as usual, will have ten concerts, and Cambridge six. Five concerts apiece will be given in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington; three in Providence and Hartford, and two in Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me. Other concerts will be given in the smaller cities and towns of New York State and New England. The Boston orchestra's season of 1905-1906 promises to be one of the most prosperous in its history. The preliminary trip in Canada and the Middle West, early this month, proved highly profitable. Everywhere subscriptions are larger than last year, and in New York the renewals by old subscribers is record breaking. The first concerts of the season here will take place in Carnegie Hall on the evening of November 9 and the afternoon of November 11. At Thursday's concert the soloist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, who has met with great success in Boston. He will play the Dvorak concerto. On Saturday afternoon the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The programme will be devoted to excerpts from Wagner operas.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK STAATS-ZEITUNG

[illegible] November [illegible]. — Marie Hall, eine junge Violiſtin, die in England große Erfolge erzielt haben ſoll, wird am 8. November in Carnegie Hall ein Konzert geben. Unter Anderem wird ſie das Paganini'ſche D-dur-Concert vortragen. — Hugo Heermann, der vortreffliche Frankfurter Violiniſt, wird am 18. November, Nachmittags, in Mendelsſohn Hall ein Recital geben. — Alice Nielſen, die hier vor mehreren Jahren als Operettenſängerin ziemlich erfolgreich war, kehrt als Opernſängerin zurück. Sie wird zunächſt in einer Matinee am 10. November im neuen Caſino als Norina in Donizetti's „Don Pasquale" erſcheinen. — Fräulein Minnie Coons, eine junge amerikaniſche Pianiſtin, die ihre Ausbildung von Xaver Scharwenka genoſſen hat, wird in ihrem Einführungskonzert, am 2. November in Carnegie Hall, das G-dur-Concert von Beethoven, das Konzertſtück von Weber und eine Reihe Solonummern vortragen. — Das erſte Geſangsrezital der Saiſon zu geben hat ſich Herr Gwilym Miles vorbehalten: es wird am 31. Oktober, Abends, in Mendelsſohn Hall ſtattfinden. In dem Programm befindet ſich auch eine ganze Gruppe Hugo Kaun'ſcher Lieder. — Im erſten Konzert des Boſtoner Symphonieorcheſters wird ſich der neue erſte Celliſt des Orcheſters, Herr Heinrich Warnke, als Soliſt hören laſſen. Im zweiten Konzert, am Samstag Nachmittag, den 11. November, wird Frau Johanna Gadski mitwirken.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From N. Y. TRIBUNE.
Address
Date

The complete schedule of bookings for the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has now been completed and is published in the orchestra's little year book. Counting those concerts which have already been given, the orchestra will play 109 times up to April 28 next, when the season closes in Boston. Of these concerts Boston gets forty-eight, the twenty-four public rehearsals and the twenty-four evening concerts. Next comes New-York with ten, and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each, Providence and Hartford three each, and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered for the most part among the smaller cities and towns of New-York State and New-England. The first concerts of the season will be given in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. At the Thursday evening concert the soloist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Mr. Warnke has met with success in Boston. He will play in New-York the Dvorak concerto. The singers on Saturday afternoon will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, the programme being devoted to excerpts from Wagnerian music dramas.

[illegible]s
Boston's Symphony Orchestra began its series of concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon under most favorable circumstances. The first concerts in New York will take place Thursday evening, November 9, and Saturday afternoon, November 11. The sale of season tickets for new subscribers will open Monday morning, October 23, in Carnegie Hall and Tyson's, Luckhardt and Belder's music stores.
R.

GLOBE
[illegible]ERTISER
OCT 23 190[illegible]

Notes of the Musical World

The coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history Lon of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New York. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conductor, but conditions were very different. Concert-goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New York. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering, in turn, gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New York concerts, giving five Saturday matinées in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts.

VINCENT D'INDY.

The renewal of subscriptions, which has been going on for the last few weeks, is larger than ever before. This season's sal for new subscribers opens Monday at the Carnegie Hall box office. The dates of the concerts are: Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; and Saturday afternoons, Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

A particularly interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the French composer. The concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York, and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington. This will be his first visit to America, and the first visit to this country of a distinguished composer since Tschaikowsky came to New York to open the Carnegie Music Hall.

M. d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen" and to-day is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has been favorably received here in New York. As a conductor M d'Indy has been very successful in Germany and Austria. His two New York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music for the most part unknown to New York.

The solo artists that may now be announced for the series are Mme Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in a Wagnerian programme, Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Prof. Willy Hess, and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra.

There will also be some interesting novelties. The list includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schilling, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugène d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe—"Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck."

The Metropolitan Opera House orchestra has already begun work under the direction of Alfred Hertz, and has rehearsed Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," which, as already announced, is to open the season on Nov 20. The orchestra has been considerably strengthened, notably by the reinforcement of the string instruments.

M. VINCENT D'INDY, THE DISTINGUISHED FRENCH COMPOSER, WHO WILL CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN NEW YORK

THE NEW YORK TIMES.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1905

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Beginning of its First Quarter Century—Its Start in New York.

As the coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so it will be the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New York, for it was not until the orchestra was five years old that its first concert was given in Steinway Hall. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conductor, but conditions were very different. Concert-goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New York, a work of the better part of the nineteen years that it has visited this city. The growth was always sure, but at first very slow. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering in turn gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New York concerts, giving five Saturday matinées in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts.

This move was greeted at the time with much skepticism, but its wisdom was demonstrated from the beginning. Since the season of 1899-1900, when ten concerts were given for the first time, the patronage has steadily and rapidly increased, until last season it was rare that Carnegie Hall was not filled to its utmost capacity.

What was true last year will be true this. The renewals of subscriptions which has been going on for the last few weeks is larger than ever before, and the prospects for a large season sale were never so good as they are now. This season sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning at the Carnegie Hall box office. Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street, and at Tyson's. The prices will be the same as last year, $7.50, $6, $5, and $3, with boxes at $50 and $40.

The dates of the concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

A particular interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last Summer to come to America this Winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. This he accepted with much pleasure, and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York, and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.

This will be his first visit to America. M d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen," and to-day is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As a conductor M. d'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria, whither he has gone as guest several times. His two New York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New York.

The solo artists that may be now announced for the series are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian programme; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Prof. Willy Hess, and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later.

Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schillings, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus's Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK CITY
NOV 4 - 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Carnegie Hall concerts next week will have these programmes, with Wilhelm Gericke conducting:

THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 9.

Academic Overture ..... Brahms
Concerto for violoncello, in E minor, op. 104 ..... Dvorak
Death and Transfiguration ..... R. Strauss
Symphony in F minor, No. 4 ..... Tschaikowsky
Soloist: Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

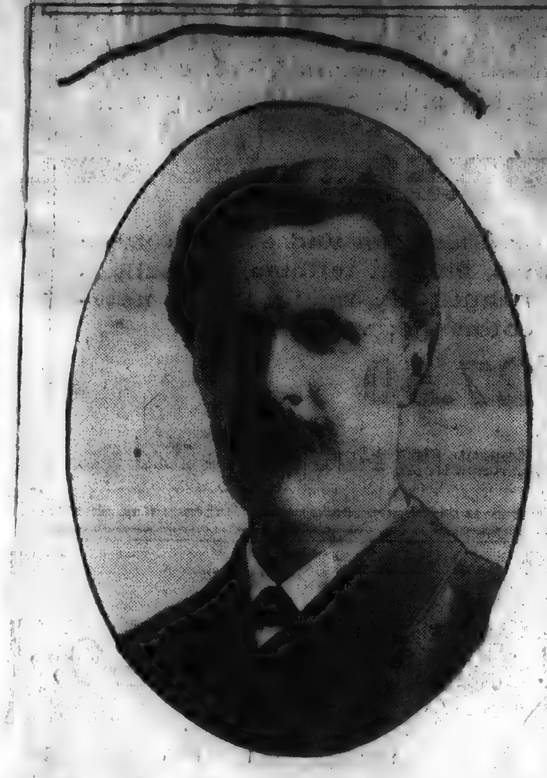
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 11.

Wagner Programme.

"Huldigungsmarsch."
Bacchanals and duet from "Tannhauser."
"Preislied," from "Die Meistersinger."
Siegfried and Brunnhilde, "Gotterdammerung," Act I.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, "Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Closing scene from "Gotterdammerung."

Soloists: Mme. Gadski, soprano; Mr. [illegible]

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1905



M. VINCENT D'INDY.
The French composer who will visit the United States in December.

As the coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so it will be the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New-York, for it was not until the orchestra was five years old that its first concert was given in Steinway Hall. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conductor, but conditions were very different. Concert goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New-York, a work of the better part of the nineteen years that it has visited this city. The growth was always sure, but at first very slow. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering in turn gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New-York concerts, giving five Saturday matinees in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts. Since the season of 1899-1900, when ten concerts were given for the first time, the patronage has steadily and rapidly increased, until last season it was rare that Carnegie Hall was not filled to its utmost capacity. This season's sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning, Monday, October 23, at Carnegie Hall box office, Luckhardt & Belder's, No. 10 East 17th-st., and at Tyson's. The prices will be the same as last year—$7 50, $6, $5 and $3, with boxes at $50 and $40. The dates of the concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17.

An interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last summer to come to America this winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. This he accepted with much pleasure, and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New-York and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. This will be his first visit to America, and the first visit to this country of a distinguished composer since Tschaikowsky came to New-York to open the Carnegie Music Hall. His two New-York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New-York. Among the solo artists are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in a Wagnerian programme; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later. Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce, there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New-York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, an overture by Max Schellings, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck."

s
[illegible]
84

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first programme on Thursday in Carnegie Hall will include Brahms's "Academic" overture, Dvorák's cello concerto, Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4. The orchestra's new soloist, Heinrich Warnke, is lately from Munich.

In Brooklyn's Baptist Temple on Friday Mr. Gericke repeats the overture and symphony. Between them he will present a Dvorák symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and operatic airs of Weber and Mozart, sung by Johanna Gadski.

Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose are soloists for the third concert, a Carnegie Hall Saturday matinée, in a Wagner programme from "Tannhäuser," "Meistersinger" and "Gotterdammerung."

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 22, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLANS

Features of the Season as Announced of Much Interest to Music Lovers.

The dates of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York are as follows: Thursday evening, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17.

Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last Summer to come to America this Winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. He accepted and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

This will be his first visit to America. M. d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen," and to-day is an authority on things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has been very favorably received here in New York. As a conductor M. d'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria. His two New York programmes will be composed large of new modern French music.

The soloists announced for the series are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Roose in a Wagnerian programme; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra.

Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce, there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for the New York concerts includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schilling, entitled "Der Pfeifertag;" an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa; another by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse;" one by Busoni, "Lustpiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, entitled "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and Odysseus' "Journey and Shipwreck."

GLOBE
YORK COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER
OCT 31 1905

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to New York next week for its first pair of concerts this season in Carnegie Hall, on the evening of Thursday, Nov. 9, and the afternoon of Saturday, Nov. 11. No novelty is announced for either concert, but the programmes are drawn from the more recent composers, from Wagner to Richard Strauss. On Thursday evening Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" is to be played, and Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, makes his début here as a soloist in Dvorak's B minor concerto. Brahms's Academic Overture and Tschaikowsky's comparatively unfamiliar Fourth Symphony complete the list. Saturday afternoon is to be devoted to a Wagner programme, inc uding the "Huldigungsmarsch," the Venusberg scene from "Tannhäuser" (Paris version), the "Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger," and from "Götterdämmerung" the duet of Siegfried and Brünhilde in the prologue, Siegfried's death and the succeeding funeral march, and the final scene of Brünhilde's self-immolation. Mme Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose will sing the vocal parts.

THREE new players come with the Boston Orchestra this year—Mr. Sadony, formerly of Cologne, as first bassoon; Mr. Hess of Munich, as alternate first horn, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, the soloist of the first concert.

Mr. Warnke is a native of Wesselburen, Holstein, where he was born Aug. 30, 1871. Like many another virtuoso, he received his first instruction in music from his father. After studying the 'cello with Goya of Hamburg and Klengel of Leipsic, he appeared in the latter city at one of the famous Gewandhaus concerts. Later he has been the principal 'cellist of the Baden Baden Orchestra, of the Opera and Museums Orchestra of Frankfort, and of the Kain Orchestra of Munich. Last week in Boston his playing of the Dvorak concerto won him many recalls from an audience traditionally undemonstrative and perhaps too ready to take the excellences of its own orchestra, individual and united, as a matter of course.

GERMAN HERALD
NEW YORK CITY.
NOV 4 1905

Gustav Mahler für Boston?

Es geht das Gerücht, daß Wilhelm Gericke nach Schluß der gegenwärtigen Saison von der Leitung des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters zurücktreten [illegible] man nennt auch schon den [illegible]

AMERICAN HEBREW
From
Address
New York City
NOV 3 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its New York season at Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening, November 9th, and Saturday afternoon, November 11th. This season's series of concerts will be conducted, as usual, by Mr. Gericke, except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. This will be his first visit to America.

The soloists announced to appear with the Orchestra during the season are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in a Wagnerian program; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later. The dates of the other concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, Dec. 7. Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and Mar. 15, and Saturday afternoons, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

n
ress
e

MUSICAL NEWS AND GOSSIP

Local Announcements — Puccini in England — Lucky French Composers—MacDowell in Germany — Henry Holden Huss — Scandinavian Composers — Tamagno's German Song

Orchestral music will be rampant in this town next week. Heretofore care has always been taken not to have the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony concerts occur at Carnegie Hall the same week. This season, however, it will happen repeatedly that the Boston musicians will play on Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, and the New York players on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the same week. This will be the case next week, and the Bostonians will fill up the chinks by also playing on Friday evening, in the neighborly borough of Brooklyn. The reason why the good old rule has been given up seems to be that there will be week-end orchestral concerts in Carnegie Hall nearly every week, so that crowding was inevitable.

The programme for the Thursday concert of the Boston Orchestra includes: Brahms, academic overture; Dvorák, concerto for violoncello; R. Strauss, Death and Transfiguration; Tchaikovsky, symphony in F minor, No. 4; soloist, Mr. Heinrich Warnke. On Saturday afternoon the soloists are to be Mme. Gadski and Ellison van Hoose, while the programme will be devoted to Wagner, as follows: Huldigungsmarsch; Bacchanale and Duet from Tannhaeuser (Paris version); Preisslied, "Die Meistersinger"; Siegfried and Bruenhilde, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act I.; Siegfried's Death, Funeral March, and closing scene, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act III.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
REVUE
New York City
NOV 5 - 1905

Die beiden ersten [illegible] stor Symphony-Orchesters [illegible] nerstag Abend und Samstag in [illegible] gie Hall statt.

Wie schon im Eingang erwähnt [illegible] Generalprobe und erstes [illegible] sches Concert Freitag [illegible] Samstag Abend; dieselben [illegible] Leitung von Willem Mengelberg [illegible] ein Acl. Ottie Chew. [illegible] ist folgendes: Symphonie [illegible] Schumann. Violin-Concert [illegible] „Ein Heldenleben", Richard [illegible]

[90]

THE NEW YORK TIMES.
SUNDAY. OCTOBER 22. 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Beginning of Its First Quarter Century—Its Start in New York.

As the coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so it will be the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New York, for it was not until the orchestra was five years old that its first concert was given in Steinway Hall. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conductor, but conditions were very different. Concert-goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New York, a work of the better part of the nineteen years that it has visited this city. The growth was always sure, but at first very slow. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering in turn gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New York concerts, giving five Saturday matinées in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts.

This move was greeted at the time with much skepticism, but its wisdom was demonstrated from the beginning. Since the season of 1899-1900, when ten concerts were given for the first time, the patronage has steadily and rapidly increased, until last season it was rare that Carnegie Hall was not filled to its utmost capacity.

What was true last year will be true this. The renewals of subscriptions which has been going on for the last few weeks is larger than ever before, and the prospects for a large season sale were never so good as they are now. This season sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning at the Carnegie Hall box office. Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street, and at Tyson's. The prices will be the same as last year, $7.50, $6, $5 and $3, with boxes at $50 and $40.

The dates of the concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

A particular interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last Summer to come to America this Winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. This he accepted with much pleasure, and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York, and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.

This will be his first visit to America. M d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen," and to-day is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As a conductor M. d'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria, whither he has gone as guest several times. His two New York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New York.

The solo artists that may be now announced for the series are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian programme; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Prof. Willy Hess, and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later.

Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schillings, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugène d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus' Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Carnegie Hall concerts next week will have these programmes, with Wilhelm Gericke conducting:

THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 9.

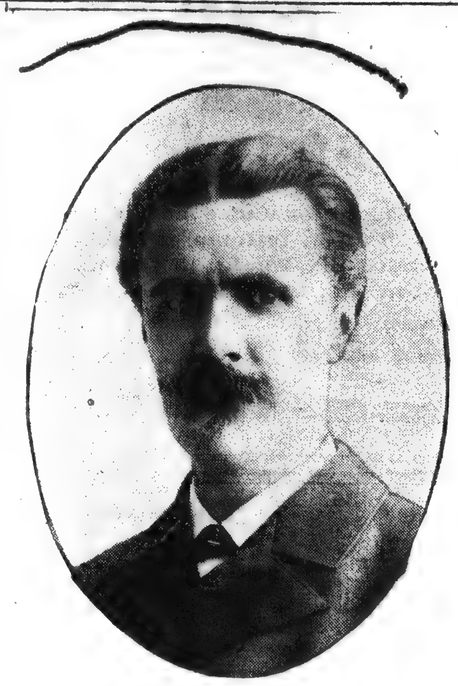
Academic Overture ..... Brahms
Concerto for violoncello, in B minor, op. 104 ..... Dvorak
Death and Transfiguration ..... R. Strauss
Symphony in F minor, No. 4 ..... Tschaikowsky
Soloist: Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 11.

Wagner Programme.

"Huldigungsmarsch."
Bacchanale and duet, from "Tannhauser."
"Preislied," from "Die Meistersinger."
Siegfried and Brunnhilde, "Gotterdammerung," Act I.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, "Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Closing scene from "Gotterdammerung," Act III.
Soloists: Mme. Gadski, soprano; Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, tenor.

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE
SUNDAY. OCTOBER 22. 1905.



M. VINCENT D'INDY.
The French composer who will visit the United States in December.

As the coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so it will be the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New-York, for it was not until the orchestra was five years old that its first concert was given in Steinway Hall. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conductor, but conditions were very different. Concert goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New-York, a work of the better part of the nineteen years that it has visited this city. The growth was always sure, but at first very slow. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering in turn gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New-York concerts, giving five Saturday matinees in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts. Since the season of 1899-1900, when ten concerts were given for the first time, the patronage has steadily and rapidly increased, until last season it was rare that Carnegie Hall was not filled to its utmost capacity. This season's sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning, Monday, October 23, at Carnegie Hall box office, Luckhardt & Belder's, No. 10 East 17th-st., and at Tyson's. The prices will be the same as last year—$7.50, $6, $5 and $3, with boxes at $50 and $40. The dates of the concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17.

An interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last summer to come to America this winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. This he accepted with much pleasure, and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New-York and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. This will be his first visit to America, and the first visit to this country of a distinguished composer since Tschaikowsky came to New-York to open the Carnegie Music Hall. His two New-York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New-York. Among the solo artists are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in a Wagnerian programme; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later. Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce, there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New-York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, an overture by Max Schellings, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus Ausfahrt und Schiffbruck."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first programme on Thursday in Carnegie Hall will include Brahms's "Academic" overture, Dvorák's cello concerto, Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4. The orchestra's new soloist, Heinrich Warnke, is lately from Munich.

In Brooklyn's Baptist Temple on Friday Mr. Gericke repeats the overture and symphony. Between them he will present a Dvorák symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube," and operatic airs of Weber and Mozart, sung by Johanna Gadski.

Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose are soloists for the third concert, a Carnegie Hall Saturday matinée, in a Wagner programme from "Tannhäuser," "Meistersinger" and "Götterdämmerung."

THE SUNDAY TELEGRAPH,
NEW YORK, OCTOBER 22, 1905.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLANS

Features of the Season as Announced of Much Interest to Music Lovers.

The dates of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York are as follows: Thursday evening, November 9, December 7, January 11, February 15 and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, November 11, December 9, January 13, February 17 and March 17.

Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last Summer to come to America this Winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. He accepted and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.

This will be his first visit to America. M. d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen," and to-day is an authority on things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has been very favorably received here in New York. As a conductor M. d'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria. His two New York programmes will be composed large of new modern French music.

The soloists announced for the series are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Roose in a Wagnerian programme: Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra.

Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce, there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for the New York concerts includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schilling, entitled "Der Pfeifertag;" an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa; another by Eugene d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse;" one by Busoni, "Lustpiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, entitled "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and Odysseus' "Journey and Shipwreck."

YORK COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to New York next week for its first pair of concerts this season in Carnegie Hall, on the evening of Thursday, Nov. 9, and the afternoon of Saturday, Nov. 11. No novelty is announced for either concert, but the programmes are drawn from the more recent composers, from Wagner to Richard Strauss. On Thursday evening Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" is to be played, and Heinrich Warnke, the new first 'cellist of the orchestra, makes his début here as a soloist in Dvorak's B minor concerto. Brahms's Academic Overture and Tschaikowsky's comparatively unfamiliar Fourth Symphony complete the list. Saturday afternoon is to be devoted to a Wagner programme, inc uding the "Huldigungsmarsch," the Venusberg scene from "Tannhäuser" (Paris version), the "Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger," and from "Götterdämmerung" the duet of Siegfried and Brünhilde in the prologue, Siegfried's death and the succeeding funeral march, and the final scene of Brünhilde's self-immolation. Mme Gadski and Mr. Ellison Van Hoose will sing the vocal parts.

THREE new players come with the Boston Orchestra this year—Mr. Sadony, formerly of Cologne, as first bassoon; Mr. Hess of Munich, as alternate first horn, and Heinrich Warnke, 'cellist, the soloist of the first concert.

Mr. Warnke is a native of Wesselburen, Holstein, where he was born Aug. 30, 1871. Like many another virtuoso, he received his first instruction in music from his father. After studying the 'cello with Góya of Hamburg and Klengel of Leipsic, he appeared in the latter city at one of the famous Gewandhaus concerts. Later he has been the principal 'cellist of the Baden Baden Orchestra, of the Opera and Museums Orchestra of Frankfort, and of the Kain Orchestra of Munich. Last week in Boston his playing of the Dvorak concerto won him many recalls from an audience traditionally undemonstrative and perhaps too ready to take the excellences of its own orchestra, individual and united, as a matter of course.

GERMAN HERALD

Gustav Mahler für Boston?

Es geht das Gerücht, daß Wilhelm Gericke nach Schluß der gegenwärtigen Saison von der Leitung des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters zurücktreten wird, und man nennt auch schon verschiedene bedeutende Musiker als seine Nachfolger, so in erster Linie Gustav Mahler, den Dirigenten der Wiener Oper, dessen Wiener Kontrakt bald abläuft.

AMERICAN HEBREW.

rom .....
ddress .....
ate .....

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its New York season at Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening, November 9th, and Saturday afternoon, November 11th. This season's series of concerts will be conducted, as usual, by Mr. Gericke, except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. This will be his first visit to America.

The soloists announced to appear with the Orchestra during the season are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose in a Wagnerian program; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Professor Willy Hess and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later. The dates of the other concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and Mar. 15, and Saturday afternoons, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

n .....
ress .....
e .....

MUSICAL NEWS AND GOSSIP

Local Announcements — Puccini in England — Lucky French Composers—MacDowell in Germany — Henry Holden Huss — Scandinavian Composers — Tamagno's German Song

Orchestral music will be rampant in this town next week. Heretofore care has always been taken not to have the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony concerts occur at Carnegie Hall the same week. This season, however, it will happen repeatedly that the Boston musicians will play on Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, and the New York players on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of the same week. This will be the case next week, and the Bostonians will fill up the chinks by also playing on Friday evening, in the neighborly borough of Brooklyn. The reason why the good old rule has been given up seems to be that there will be week-end orchestral concerts in Carnegie Hall nearly every week, so that crowding was inevitable.

The programme for the Thursday concert of the Boston Orchestra includes: Brahms, academic overture; Dvorák, concerto for violoncello; R. Strauss, Death and Transfiguration; Tchaikovsky, symphony in F minor, No. 4; soloist, Mr. Heinrich Warnke. On Saturday afternoon the soloists are to be Mme. Gadski and Ellison van Hoose, while the programme will be devoted to Wagner, as follows: Huldigungsmarsch; Bacchanale and Duet from Tannhaeuser (Paris version); Preislied, "Die Meistersinger"; Siegfried and Bruenhilde, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act I.; Siegfried's Death, Funeral March, and closing scene, "Goetterdaemmerung," Act III.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
REVUE.

5 1905

Die beiden ersten Conzerte des Boston Symphony Orchesters finden Donnerstag Abend und Samstag in Carnegie Hall statt.

Wie schon im Eingang erwähnt, sind Generalprobe und erstes philharmonisches Conzert Freitag Nachmittag und Samstag Abend; dieselben stehen unter Leitung von Willem Mengelberg; Solistin Frl. Ottie Chew. Das Programm ist folgendes: Symphony in D moll, Schumann. Violin-Conzert, Brahms. „Ein Heldenleben", Rich. Strauß.

N. Y. EVG. STAATSZEITUN

NOV 4 1905

Boston?

Ein Gerücht.

Der Wahrschinlichkeit nach wird Weingartner Gericke's Posten übernehmen.

Seit langer Zeit ist das Gerücht im Umlauf, daß Herr Wilhelm Gericke, der bekannte Dirigent des Bostoner Orchesters, mit dem Ablauf dieser Saison seinen Posten niederlegen und Amerika Valet sagen wird. Zu derselben Zeit wurden verschiedene deutsche und amerikanische Dirigenten als eventuelle Nachfolger Herrn Gericke's erwähnt. Der neueste Name, der in diesen Tagen bekannt gemacht ist, ist der des Herrn Gustav Gustav Mahler.

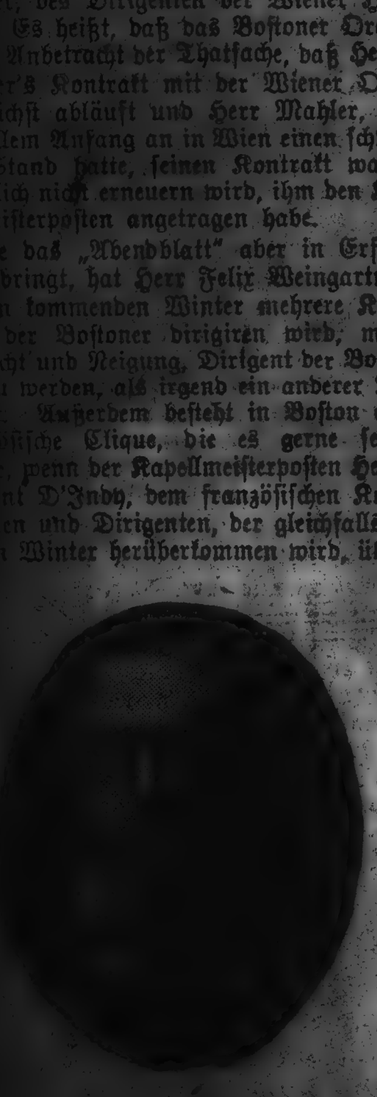
Mahler, des Dirigenten der Wiener Hofoper. Es heißt, daß das Bostoner Orchester in Anbetracht der Thatsache, daß Herrn Mahler's Kontrakt mit der Wiener Oper demnächst abläuft und Herr Mahler, der von allem Anfang an in Wien einen schweren Stand hatte, seinen Kontrakt wahrscheinlich nicht erneuern wird, ihm den Kapellmeisterposten angetragen habe.

Wie das „Abendblatt" aber in Erfahrung bringt, hat Herr Felix Weingartner, der im kommenden Winter mehrere Konzerte der Bostoner dirigiren wird, mehr Aussicht und Neigung, Dirigent der Bostoner zu werden, als irgend ein anderer Dirigent. Außerdem besteht in Boston eine französische Clique, die es gerne sehen würde, wenn der Kapellmeisterposten Herrn Vincent D'Indy, dem französischen Komponisten und Dirigenten, der gleichfalls in diesem Winter herüberkommen wird, über-



Felix Weingartner.

geben würde. D'Indy ist ein Schüler Franck's und des Pariser Conservatoires. Er ist Präsident der Nationalmusikgesellschaft, Inspektor des musikalischen Unterrichts der Stadt Paris in Paris. Unter seinen Kompositionen sind eine „Wallenstein Trilogie", eine neue Symphonie „Sur un Chant montagnard", ein Drama „Fervaal" und Kammermusikwerke zu nennen. Felix Weingartner ist am 7. Juli 1860 in Zara geboren. Ohne eigentlich ein Wunderkind zu sein, entwickelte er sich zu einem guten Pianisten und einem namhaften Tondichter. Er war am Hoftheater in Mannheim erster Kapellmeister und wurde dann an der Wiener Hofoper von allem Anfang an mit Ränken, Intrigen und aller Art seiner Kollegen

From N. Y. HERALD

Address Nov 5, 1905

The season of Boston Symphony concerts will open in Carnegie Hall this week, when the regular monthly pair of concerts will be given on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. The orchestra returns strengthened in personnel and numbers. There are a new principal 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, who will be the solo performer on Thursday evening; a new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, late of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, of Munich. The orchestra now numbers ninety-six. Mr. Heinrich Warnke came to Boston this year from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra and a member of the trio of which Weingartner was pianist and Rettig the violinist. He was born in Wesselburen, Holstein, on August 30, 1871; began to study the piano with his father at the age of six, and at ten began to study the 'cello. Two years later he was sent to Hamburg, where he studied with Goya, and later he went to Leipsic to study with Klengel. His real debut as a 'cellist took place in Leipsic at one of the Gewandhaus concerts. He has been the principal 'cellist in the Baden Baden Orchestra and in the Opera and Museum Orchestra in Frankfort. The solo singers on Saturday afternoon will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. This will be Mme. Gadski's first appearance in New-York since she won such marked success last summer, when she sang at the operatic festivals in Cologne and Munich. Following are the programmes:

THURSDAY EVENING.

"Academic" overture.....Brahms
Concerto for violoncello in B minor, op. 104.....Dvorak
Heinrich Warnke.
"Death and Transfiguration".....R. Strauss
Symphony No. 4, in F minor.....Tschaikowsky

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Huldigungsmarsch, bacchanale and duet from "Tannhäuser" (Paris version).....
Scene between Siegfried and Brünnhilde ("Götterdämmerung," Act I).....
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March ("Götterdämmerung," Act III).....
Closing scene (Götterdämmerung," Act III).....
Wagner
Singers: Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose.

From

Address Nov

HEINRICH WARNKE.
He will play at the concert of the Boston Orchestra next Thursday.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau

ILLUSTRATED TIMES

From

Address

Date NOV 5 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little Year Book, showing the complete bookings for the present season. Counting the concerts already given, the total number for the year is 109. Forty-eight of the concerts will be given in the home city. Then come New York with ten and Cambrige with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The rest are scattered throughout cities and towns of New York State and New England. The season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the orchestra. Not only was the week's preliminary trip to Canada and the Middle West most profitable, but everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions show a decided increase over those of last year. The season will end in Boston on Saturday, April 28th.

The second concert in Buffalo is set for Monday evening, February 19th.

A triumph, a [illegible] personal

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The season of Boston Symphony concerts will open in Carnegie Hall this week, when concerts will be given on Thursday evening, Nov. 9, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11. This year the orchestra returns strengthened in personnel and strengthened in numbers. There are a new principal 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, who will be the soloist on Thursday evening; a new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, late of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn, Max Hess of Munich. Now the regular number of performers in the orchestra is ninety-six instead of ninety-four, as last year.

Mr. Gericke has arranged two attractive programmes for the opening New York concerts. That on Saturday afternoon will consist of Wagnerian excerpts. The soloist on Thursday evening, Mr. Heinrich Warnke, came to Boston this year from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra, and a member of the trio of which Weingartner was pianist and Rettig the violinist. He was born in Wesselburen, Holstein, on Aug. 30, 1871. His real début as a 'cellist took place in Leipsic at one of the Gewandhaus concerts.

The soloists on Saturday afternoon will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The programmes will be as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING.

Academic overture.....Brahms
Concerto for violoncello in B minor, Op. 104.....Dvorak
Death and transfiguration.....R. Strauss
Symphony No. 4, in F minor.....Tschaikowsky
Soloist, Mr. Heinrich Warnke.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Huldigungsmarsch.....Wagner
Bacchanale and duet from Tannhaeuser, (Paris version).....Wagner
Preislied, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Siegfried and Bruennhilde—Goetterdaemmerung, Act I.....Wagner
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March—Goetterdaemmerung, Act III.....Wagner
Closing scene—Gotterdaemmerung, Act III.....Wagner
Soloists, Mme. Gadski, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

The schedule of bookings for the season has now been completed and is published in the orchestra's little Year Book. Counting those concerts which have already been given, the orchestra will play 109 times up to April 28 next, when the season closes in Boston. Of these concerts, Boston gets forty-eight, the twenty-four public rehearsals and the twenty-four evening concerts. Next comes New York with ten and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford three each, and Buffalo, Worcester, and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered for the most part among the smaller cities and towns of New York State and New England.

The preliminary trip made in Canada and the Middle West in the first week of this month turned out to be profitable, as it netted a large sum of money—something quite unusual in the history of orchestras, and this despite the fact that seventy-five men were taken. Everywhere the subscriptions are larger than they were last year. In New York the number of renewals by old subscribers exceeds anything in the past, while the number of new subscribers recorded since the beginning of the open sale on last Monday will make a new record for the orchestra in this city.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From

Address Nov

BOSTON SYMPHONY REFUSES

Will Not Play at the Hippodrome, but Damrosch's Men Will.

The managers of the New York Hippodrome have made overtures to the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give a series of Sunday night concerts in the vast auditorium.

The overtures from the management of the Hippodrome must have come as as cruel shock to the musical followers in Boston. The advances of the Hippodrome managers have been rejected, although the terms are said to have been flattering.

Walter Damrosch and his men will give a concert at the Hippodrome on Nov. 12.

NEW YORK PRESS

NOV 5 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which Charles Martin Loeffler, after hearing the principal orchestras in Europe, asserts is the best in the world, has been strengthened this year in personnel and in numbers. There are now ninety-six players. The new members are Mr. Warnke, first 'cellist; Mr. Sadony, first bassoon player, and a new alternate first hornist, Max Hess of Munich. Warnke, who made a noteworthy success when he played the Dvorak concerto in Boston week before last, will be the soloist of Thursday evening's concert. He has been principal 'cellist in the Baden-Baden orchestra; the opera and museum orchestra in Frankfort, and the Kaim orchestra in Munich. He was also a member of the trio in which Weingartner was the pianist and Rettig the violinist.

NEW YORK HERALD

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its season with the usual two concerts this week—the first on Thursday evening and the second on Saturday afternoon. This orchestra returns this year augmented in numbers and strengthened in personnel. The principal newcomers are Mr. Heinrich Warnke, principal violoncellist, who will be the soloist on Thursday evening; Mr. Sadony, late of Cologne, the new first bassoon, and Mr. Max Hess, of Munich, the new alternate first horn.

Mr. Gericke's programmes for both this week's concerts are delightful ones. That for Thursday evening includes Brahms' Academic Overture, Dvorak's concerto for violoncello in B minor, Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Death and Transfiguration," and Tschaikowsky's seldom used Fourth Symphony. On Saturday afternoon the programme is devoted entirely to Wagner and has more than one number in it to which the refined balance of the Boston Orchestra should give uncommonly enjoyable interpretation. Among the numbers are the Huldigungsmarsch, the Bacchanale and Duet from "Tannhäuser" and the duet between Siegfried and Brünnhilde from the first act of "Göetterdämmerung," in which Mme. Gadski, the soloist of the occasion, will be assisted by Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, tenor. Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, with the closing scene from the same music drama, close the programme.

This reminds one that Mme. Gadski will be finishing a week of uncommon activity at this concert. Indeed, she will have been giving since her arrival last Wednesday rather more than one concert a day. Tomorrow, for instance, she will sing with the Boston Orchestra in Philadelphia and on Wednesday and in Baltimore on Thursday. On Friday afternoon, the 10th, she will sing in Philadelphia with the Philadelphia Orchestra, and in the evening jump all the way to Brooklyn for an appearance there with the Boston players.

After Saturday's matinee in Carnegie Hall she will reverse this feat by singing in Philadelphia that night. Mme. Gadski evidently likes hard work, and this extensive tour which she is making under the management of Mr. Loudon G. Charlton will give her plenty of it, apparently.

NEW YORK WORLD

Then on Thursday of next week the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives the first of this season's concerts at Carnegie Hall. On this occasion Brahm's Academic Overture, Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphoney will be performed by the orchestra while the orchestra's new first 'cello player, Hadarion Wanike, will be the soloist of the evening, performing Dvorak's 'cello Concerto.

The same orchestra will give its first of this season's matinees on Saturday, when Mme. Gadski and Mr. Van Hoose will be the soloists. They will be heard in the duet from the first act of "Tannhauser" and duet from the first act of "Gutterdaemerung," also Mme. Gadski will sing the Innolation Scene from he latter music-drama, while Van Hoose will be heard in Walther's prize song from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." The orchestral part of the programme includes the Huldigungsmarsch and excerpts from "Tannhauser" and "Goetterdammerung." The entire programme is devoted to Wagner.

The first of this season's public re-

From NEW YORK SUN

Address Nov 5 1905

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its first concerts at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and Saturday afternoon. The programme for the evening concert is Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture, Dvorák's 'cello concerto, Strauss's "Tod und Verklärung" and Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony. The soloist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new solo cellist of the orchestra. The programme for the matinée will be all Wagner—the "Huldigungsmarsch," bacchanale and duet from "Tannhäuser," prize song from "Die Meistersinger," Siegfried's death and the funeral march from "Götterdämmerung," and the closing scene from the same drama. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison van Hoose.

From

Address

The series of illustrated lectures on the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arranged by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will take their beginning next Wednesday afternoon, when Mr. Krehbiel will talk about Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Dvorak's "Waldtaube" and Brahms's "Academic" overture. Miss Emma J. Banks will play the illustrations.

From NEW YORK PRESS

Address

Date NOV 5 1905

MUSICAL NOTES.

Alice Neilson will make her first appearance in opera in Brooklyn on Friday afternoon, Nov. 10, when she will present Donizetti's opera "Don Pasquale" at the Shubert Park Theatre.

It has been found necessary to make a slight change in the programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert for next Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11. The second number, instead of being the Bacchanale and duet from the first act of "Tannhäuser," will be merely the Bacchanale, and the third number will be Elizabeth's aria from the opening of the second act. The rest of the programme is unchanged.

[91]

N. Y. EVG. STAATSZEITUNG

NOV 4 1905

Mahler für Boston?

Ein Gerücht.

Aller Wahrschinlichkeit nach wird Weingartner Gericke's Posten übernehmen.

Seit langer Zeit ist das Gerücht im Umlauf, daß Herr Wilhelm Gericke, der derzeitige Dirigent des Bostoner Orchesters, mit Ablauf dieser Saison seinen Posten niederlegen und Amerika Valet sagen wird. Zur selben Zeit wurden verschiedene deutsche wie amerikanische Dirigenten als eventuelle Nachfolger Herrn Gericke's erwähnt. Der neueste Name, der in diesen Tagen aufgetaucht ist, ist der des Herrn Gustav Gustav Mahler.

Mahler, des Dirigenten der Wiener Hofoper. Es heißt, daß das Bostoner Orchester in Anbetracht der Thatsache, daß Herrn Mahler's Kontrakt mit der Wiener Oper demnächst abläuft und Herr Mahler, der von allem Anfang an in Wien einen schweren Stand hatte, seinen Kontrakt wahrscheinlich nicht erneuern wird, ihm den Kapellmeisterposten angetragen habe.

Wie das „Abendblatt" aber in Erfahrung bringt, hat Herr Felix Weingartner, der im kommenden Winter mehrere Konzerte der Bostoner dirigiren wird, mehr Aussicht und Neigung, Dirigent der Bostoner zu werden, als irgend ein anderer Dirigent. Außerdem besteht in Boston eine französische Clique, die es gerne sehen würde, wenn der Kapellmeisterposten Herrn Vincent D'Indy, dem französischen Komponisten und Dirigenten, der gleichfalls in diesem Winter herüberkommen wird, übertragen werden würde. D'Indy ist ein Schüler César Franck's und des Pariser Conservatoires. Er ist Präsident der Nationalen Musikgesellschaft, Inspektor des musikalischen Unterrichts der Stadt Paris und lebt in Paris. Unter seinen Kompositionen sind eine „Wallenstein Trilogie", Chorwerke, seine Symphonie „Sur un Chant Montagnard", ein Drama „Fervaal" und Kammermusikwerke zu nennen.

Felix Weingartner.

Gustav Mahler ist am 7. Juli 1860 in Kalitsch, Böhmen, geboren. Ohne eigentliche Lehrer entwickelte er sich zu einem meisterhaften Dirigenten, guten Pianisten und eigenartigen, bedeutsamen Tondichter. Er begann seine Wirksamkeit am Hoftheater in Cassel, war dann erster Kapellmeister in Leipzig, Prag, Budapest und wurde später Nachfolger Jahn's an der Wiener Hofoper. Er hatte aber von allem Anfang an mit Schwierigkeiten, mit Ränken und Intriguen zu kämpfen, und aller Wahrscheinlichkeit nach wird er seinen Kontrakt, der in nicht langer Zeit abläuft, nicht erneuern.

From

Address

The season of Boston Symphony concerts will open in Carnegie Hall this week, when the regular monthly pair of concerts will be given on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. The orchestra returns strengthened in personnel and numbers. There are a new principal 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, who will be the solo performer on Thursday evening; a new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, late of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn, Mr. Max Hess, of Munich. The orchestra now numbers ninety-six. Mr. Heinrich Warnke came to Boston this year from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra and a member of the trio of which Weingartner was pianist and Rettig the violinist. He was born in Wesselburen, Holstein, on August 30, 1871; began to study the piano with his father at the age of six, and at ten began to study the 'cello. Two years later he was sent to Hamburg, where he studied with Goya, and later he went to Leipsic to study with Klengel. His real debut as a 'cellist took place in Leipsic at one of the Gewandhaus concerts. He has been the principal 'cellist in the Baden Baden Orchestra and in the Opera and Museum Orchestra in Frankfort. The solo singers on Saturday afternoon will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. This will be Mme. Gadski's first appearance in New-York since she won such marked success last summer, when she sang at the operatic festivals in Cologne and Munich. Following are the programmes:

THURSDAY EVENING.

"Academic" overture.....Brahms
Concerto for violoncello in B minor, op. 104.....Dvorak
Heinrich Warnke.
"Death and Transfiguration".....R. Strauss
Symphony No. 4, in F minor.....Tschaikowsky

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Huldigungsmarsch, bacchanale and duet from "Tannhäuser" (Paris version).....
Scene between Siegfried and Brünnhilde ("Götterdämmerung," Act I).....} Wagner
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March ("Götterdämmerung," Act III).....
Closing scene (Götterdämmerung," Act III).....
Singers: Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose.

From

Address

HEINRICH WARNKE.
He will play at the concert of the Boston Orchestra next Thursday.

ILLUSTRATED

From

Address

Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just published its little Year Book, showing the complete bookings for the present season. Counting the concerts already given, the total number for the year is 109. Forty-eight of the concerts will be given in the home city. Then come New York with ten and Cambrige with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford, three each; and Buffalo, Worcester and Portland, Me., two each. The rest are scattered throughout cities and towns of New York State and New England. The season promises to be the most prosperous in the history of the orchestra. Not only was the week's preliminary trip to Canada and the Middle West most profitable, but everywhere, without a single exception, the subscriptions show a decided increase over those of last year. The season will end in Boston on Saturday, April 28th.

The second concert in Buffalo is set for Monday evening, February 19th.

A triumph, a tremendous personal

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The season of Boston Symphony concerts will open in Carnegie Hall this week, when concerts will be given on Thursday evening, Nov. 9, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11. This year the orchestra returns strengthened in personnel and strengthened in numbers. There are a new principal 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, who will be the soloist on Thursday evening; a new first bassoon, Mr. Sadony, late of Cologne, and a new alternate first horn, Max Hess of Munich. Now the regular number of performers in the orchestra is ninety-six instead of ninety-four, as last year.

Mr. Gericke has arranged two attractive programmes for the opening New York concerts. That on Saturday afternoon will consist of Wagnerian excerpts. The soloist on Thursday evening, Mr. Heinrich Warnke, came to Boston this year from Munich, where for the last eight years he has been the principal 'cellist of the Kaim Orchestra, and a member of the trio of which Weingartner was pianist and Rettig the violinist. He was born in Wesselburen, Holstein, on Aug. 30, 1871. His real début as a 'cellist took place in Leipsic at one of the Gewandhaus concerts.

The soloists on Saturday afternoon will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose. The programmes will be as follows:

THURSDAY EVENING.

Academic overture.....Brahms
Concerto for violoncello in B minor, Op. 104.....Dvorak
Death and transfiguration.....R. Strauss
Symphony No. 4, in F minor.....Tschaikowsky
Soloist, Mr. Heinrich Warnke.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Huldigungsmarsch.....Wagner
Bacchanale and duet from Tannhaeuser, (Paris version).....Wagner
Preislied, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Siegfried and Bruennhilde—Goetterdaemmerung, Act I.....Wagner
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March—Goetterdaemerung, Act III.....Wagner
Closing scene—Gotterdaemmerung, Act III.....Wagner
Soloists, Mme. Gadski, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose.

The schedule of bookings for the season has now been completed and is published in the orchestra's little Year Book. Counting those concerts which have already been given, the orchestra will play 109 times up to April 28 next, when the season closes in Boston. Of these concerts, Boston gets forty-eight, the twenty-four public rehearsals and the twenty-four evening concerts. Next comes New York with ten and Cambridge with six. Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington get five each; Providence and Hartford three each, and Buffalo, Worcester, and Portland, Me., two each. The others are scattered for the most part among the smaller cities and towns of New York State and New England.

The preliminary trip made in Canada and the Middle West in the first week of this month turned out to be profitable, as it netted a large sum of money—something quite unusual in the history of orchestras, and this despite the fact that seventy-five men were taken. Everywhere the subscriptions are larger than they were last year. In New York the number of renewals by old subscribers exceeds anything in the past, while the number of new subscribers recorded since the beginning of the open sale on last Monday will make a new record for the orchestra in this city.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

From

Address

Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY REFUSES

Will Not Play at the Hippodrome, but Damrosch's Men Will.

The managers of the New York Hippodrome have made overtures to the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give a series of Sunday night concerts in the vast auditorium.

The overtures from the management of the Hippodrome must have come as as cruel shock to the musical followers in Boston. The advances of the Hippodrome managers have been rejected, although the terms are said to have been flattering.

Walter Damrosch and his men will give a concert at the Hippodrome on Nov. 19.

From

Address

Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which Charles Martin Loeffler, after hearing the principal orchestras in Europe, asserts is the best in the world, has been strengthened this year in personnel and in numbers. There are now ninety-six players. The new members are Mr. Warnke, first 'cellist; Mr. Sadony, first bassoon player, and a new alternate first hornist, Max Hess of Munich. Warnke, who made a noteworthy success when he played the Dvorak concerto in Boston week before last, will be the soloist of Thursday evening's concert. He has been principal 'cellist in the Baden-Baden orchestra; the opera and museum orchestra in Frankfort, and the Kaim orchestra in Munich. He was also a member of the trio in which Weingartner was the pianist and Rettig the violinist.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its season with the usual two concerts this week—the first on Thursday evening and the second on Saturday afternoon. This orchestra returns this year augmented in numbers and strengthened in personnel. The principal newcomers are Mr. Heinrich Warnke, principal violoncellist, who will be the soloist on Thursday evening; Mr. Sadony, late of Cologne, the new first bassoon, and Mr. Max Hess, of Munich, the new alternate first horn.

Mr. Gericke's programmes for both this week's concerts are delightful ones. That for Thursday evening includes Brahms' Academic Overture, Dvorak's concerto for violoncello in B minor, Richard Strauss' symphonic poem, "Death and Transfiguration," and Tschaikowsky's seldom-heard Fourth Symphony. On Saturday afternoon the programme is devoted entirely to Wagner and has more than one number in it to which the refined balance of the Boston Orchestra should give uncommonly enjoyable interpretation. Among the numbers are the Huldigungsmarsch, the Bacchanale and Duet from "Tannhäuser," and the duet between Siegfried and Brünnhilde from the first act of "Götterdämmerung," in which Mme. Gadski, the soloist of the occasion, will be assisted by Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, tenor. Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, with the closing scene from the same music drama, close the programme.

This reminds one that Mme. Gadski will be finishing a week of uncommon activity at this concert. Indeed, she will have been giving since her arrival last Wednesday rather more than one concert a day. Tomorrow, for instance, she will sing with the Boston Orchestra in Philadelphia and with the same organization in Washington on Wednesday and in Baltimore on Thursday. On Friday afternoon, the 10th, she will sing in Philadelphia with the Philadelphia Orchestra, and in the evening jump all the way to Brooklyn for an appearance there with the Boston players.

After Saturday's matinee in Carnegie Hall she will reverse this feat by singing in Philadelphia that night. Mme. Gadski evidently likes hard work, and this extensive tour which she is making under the management of Mr. Loudon G. Charlton will give her plenty of it, apparently.

Then on Thursday of next week the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives the first of this season's concerts at Carnegie Hall. On this occasion Brahm's Academic Overture, Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphoney will be performed by the orchestra while the orchestra's new first 'cello player, Hadaden Wanke, will be the soloist of the evening, performing Dvorak's 'cello Concerto.

The same orchestra will give its first of this season's matinees on Saturday, when Mme. Gadski and Mr. Van Hoose will be the soloists. They will be heard in the duet from the first act of "Tannhauser" and duet from the first act of "Gutterdaemerung," also Mme. Gadski will sing the Inmolation Scene from he latter music-drama, while Van Hoose will be heard in Walther's prize song from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." The orchestral part of the programme includes the Huldigungsmarsch and excerpts from "Tannhauser" and "Goetterdammerung." The entire programme is devoted to Wagner.

The first of this season's public re-

---

n

ress

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its first concerts at Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and Saturday afternoon. The programme for the evening concert is Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture, Dvorák's 'cello concerto, Strauss's "Tod und Verklärung" and Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony. The soloist will be Heinrich Warnke, the new solo cellist of the orchestra. The programme for the matinée will be all Wagner—the "Huldigungsmarsch," bacchanale and duet from "Tannhäuser," prize song from "Die Meistersinger," Siegfried's death and the funeral march from "Götterdämmerung," and the closing scene from the same drama. The singers will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison van Hoose.

From

Address

Date

The series of illustrated lectures on the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arranged by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will take their beginning next Wednesday afternoon, when Mr. Krehbiel will talk about Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. Dvorak's "Waldtaube" and Brahms's "Academic" overture. Miss Emma J. Banks will play the illustrations.

Es

n

ress

ess

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which Charles Martin Loeffler, after hearing the principal orchestras in Europe, asserts is the best in the world, has been strengthened this year in personnel and in numbers. There are now ninety-six players. The new members are Mr. Warnke, first 'cellist; Mr. Sadony, first bassoon player, and a new alternate first hornist, Max Hess of Munich. Warnke, who made a noteworthy success when he played the Dvorak concerto in Boston week before last, will be the soloist of Thursday evening's concert. He has been principal 'cellist in the Baden-Baden orchestra; the opera and museum orchestra in Frankfort, and the Kaim orchestra in Munich. He was also a member of the trio in which Weingartner was the pianist and Rettig the violinist.

---

ess

MUSICAL NOTES.

Alice Neilson will make her first appearance in opera in Brooklyn on Friday afternoon, Nov. 10, when she will present Donizetti's opera "Don Pasquale" at the Shubert Park Theatre.

It has been found necessary to make a slight change in the programme of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert for next Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11. The second number, instead of being the Bacchanale and duet from the first act of "Tannhäuser," will be merely the Bacchanale, and the third number will be Elizabeth's aria from the opening of the second act. The rest of the programme is unchanged.

[91]

New York City
THE MORNING TELEGRAPH
ess 6 1905

Changes in Programme.

It has been found necessary to make a slight change in the programme of the New York concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for next Saturday afternoon. The second number, instead of being the Bacchanale and Duet from the first act of "Tannhauser," will be merely the Bacchanale, and the third number will be Elisabeth's aria from the opening of the second act. The rest of the programme is unchanged.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
NEW YORK EV'G POST
NOV 8 1905

The Boston Symphony Quartet announces that it will give three concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this winter, the dates being January 2, February 6, and March 7. As its name implies, it is an integral part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its members all being players of the principal string instruments in the parent organization. It is composed of Prof. Willy Hess, first violin; Mr. Otto Roth, second violin; Mr. Emile Ferir, viola, and Mr. Heinrich Warnke, 'cello.

NEW YORK EV'G POST
ess NOV 8 1905

Vincent d'Indy.

Monsieur Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer, who is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts, will sail from Cherbourg on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse on Wednesday, November 15, and is therefore expected to arrive in New York on Tuesday, November 21. Monsieur d'Indy will conduct the concerts in Boston on December 1 and 2, and the concerts in New York on December 7 and 9, as well as concerts in that same week in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, and Brooklyn. The interest which has been created by the coming of Monsieur d'Indy is most widespread, and his visit will be one of the most notable events of the season. His programme for the two New York concerts are composed entirely of modern French music. The numbers will include some works of his own and works by Chausson, Debussy, Dukas, and other men of that school.

NEW YORK STAATS ZEITUNG
ess NOV 10 1905

Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester.

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester gab gestern Abend in Carnegie Hall sein erstes New Yorker Konzert in dieser Saison, und ein fast gänzlich gefülltes Haus begrüßte die willkommenen Gäste. Wäre der Solist eine Berühmtheit gewesen, würden wahrscheinlich auch die letzten Plätze im Saale verkauft gewesen sein.

Das Programm bot zwar nichts Neues dar, gewährte aber dem ausgezeichneten Orchester hinreichende Gelegenheit, sich von seiner virtuosen Seite zu zeigen. Tschaikowsky und Richard Strauß sind sicherlich nicht unter die Lieblings-Komponisten des Herrn Gericke zu zählen, aber man muß dem Dirigenten nachsagen, daß er sich gestern Abend Mühe gab, dem Orchester die nöthige Freiheit in der Tonentfaltung zu lassen, um „Tod und Verklärung" und die vierte Symphonie (in F.-moll) nicht zu zahm klingen zu machen. Man kann nichts gegen seine innerste Natur unternehmen, und Herr Gericke steht nach Temperamentanlage und Gewöhnung der neuen Musik so fern, wie das einem modernen Menschen nur möglich ist; persönlich verdient er also Anerkennung dafür, daß er im Emotionellen gestern Abend wirklich weiter als gewöhnlich ging. Aber man kann doch nicht umhin, sich wiederum die Frage vorzulegen, was für eine Ausführung dieses Orchester der Strauß'sche Tondichtung „Tod und Verklärung" bereiten könnte, wenn es dem Stabe eines Dirigenten folgte, der durchaus in Sympathie mit den Modernen ist. Selbst wenn Herr Gericke seinen Leuten eine gewisse Freiheit gestattet, wie er das gestern that, so kommt doch bei einem Tongemälde wie „Tod und Verklärung", wo Alles unkontrollirter Impuls zu sein scheint, wo beim Komponisten der Gedanke kaum ausgedacht war, als er bereits musikalische Form angenommen hatte, unter seiner Leitung etwas Reflektirtes in den Vortrag, das abkühlen muß. Die musikalische Genauigkeit allein thut's nun einmal nicht.

Außer den beiden genannten Werken spielte das Orchester auch noch die „Akademische Ouverture" von Brahms. Wie gesagt, die Orchesterleistung, objektiv betrachtet, war wieder eine unübertreffliche, und die New Yorker waren froh, daß sie wieder einmal das Beste, das von Boston kommt, bei sich zu Gaste hatten.

Als Solist trat der neue erste Cellist des Orchesters, Herr Heinrich Warnke, auf. Trotz seines respektablen Könnens muß gesagt werden, daß die Linie Schroeder-Krasselt-Warnke denn doch eine absteigende ist. Man konnte über den vorjährigen Cellisten nicht in Enthusiasmus gerathen, über den diesjährigen aber noch weniger. Warnke ist gewiß ein tüchtiger Musiker, er besitzt auch eine ansehnliche Technik und keinen üblen Ton, aber von der sublimen Künstlerschaft, die allein ein solch' widerhaariges Ding wie das Concert von Dvorak erfreulich machen kann, ist er ziemlich weit entfernt. Er hatte hübsche Momente, besonders im langsamen Satz, aber über den Schrecken der Cello-Technik, die im Dvorak'schen Concert noch dazu so wenig Cello-mäßig ist, weiß er nicht hinweg zu schmeicheln. Uebrigens hat er auch den empfindlichen technischen Mangel, daß er in den höheren Lagen häufig recht unrein spielt; zu loben ist eine gewisse Frische und Energie der Attacke im Passagenwerk.

Am Samstag Nachmittag giebt es ein Wagner-Programm mit Frau Gadski und van Hoose als Solisten.

NEW YORK EV'G POST
ess NOV 10 1905

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. William Gericke brought his excellent Boston Orchestra down to our Carnegie Hall last night and gave the first of the ten concerts we are to hear under his baton. There was a large audience and much applause. Brahms, more beloved in Boston than in this frivolous town, came first, with one of his most human pieces, the Academic Overture, in which German student songs supply the melodic element in which that great master of technique is apt to be deficient. The orchestra played it in the true Brahms spirit.

Dvorák's violoncello concerto, which followed the overture, served to introduce to Gothamites the Boston band's new 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, concerning whom Philip Hale supplies this information: "He was born at Wesselburen, a few miles from the German Ocean, on August 30, 1871. His father was a violinist and all his sons are musicians. Mr. Warnke began to study the pianoforte when he was six years old, and when he was ten, his father began to give his violoncello lessons. Two years later, the boy was sent to the Conservatory of Music in Hamburg, where he studied with Gowa, and it was there that he first played in public. He afterwards studied at Leipsic with Julius Klengel, and made his début at the Gewand House. He has been associated with orchestras in Baden-Baden and Frankfurt-on-the-Main. Eight years ago, Felix Weingartner invited him to be first violoncellist of the Kaim Orchestra at Munich and he left that orchestra to take the like position in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as successor to Mr. Rudolf Krasselt, whom he taught. In Munich, he was associated with Messrs. Rettich and Weingartner in a trio club, and he was also a member of a quartet." Of a man with such antecedents, much was to be expected. If the highest expectations were not realized, this may have been due partly to nervousness, partly to the extreme difficulty of the concerto chosen by him. While written in this country during Dvorák's three years' residence here as director of the National Conservatory, it is not equal in inspiration to the other works the great Bohemian composed on American soil, and there is much in the two allegro movements that is almost unplayable. The adagio shows his genius to better advantage; in this it was that Mr. Warnke revealed himself a master of his instrument, with a warm, rich tone, and genuine musical instincts. In the florid runs his intonation was not always pure. Mr. Warnke was warmly applauded and repeatedly recalled.

One thing the concerto called attention to, and that was Dvorák's superiority as a master of orchestration to Richard Strauss, whose "Death and Transfiguration" was the next number on the programme. It cannot be gainsaid that Strauss succeeds in this tone-poem in creating the moods suggested by the two words "Death" and "Transfiguration"; but he does this almost entirely by means of what might be called musical rhetoric, in the sense of artificial eloquence. Just as an eloquent minister or other speaker might stir an audience by his vocal modulations and vehemence, though he used a language not understood by his hearers, so Richard Strauss has a knack of deluding unsophisticated listeners into the belief that he is telling them something immensely exciting, when as a matter of fact he is not telling anything at all—i. e., has no melodic message to convey. To those who reject music not illumined by the divine spark of melody, these Strauss tone-poems are as hollow and offensive as the ranting of an unintelligent actor.

For his final and chief number Mr. Gericke chose Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony. Apart from the first movement, which is too long and labored, what a contrast this music presents to Strauss's—how it bubbles over with melody! Here we have sparkling champagne in place of stale beer. How sweetly melancholy the andantino! How gay, almost supernaturally weird the scherzo, with its pizzicato obstinato turning the whole string band into an intoxicated guitar! How wildly Russian the final allegro con fuoco! If some of the Cossack fury escaped the Boston players, they were simply perfect in the slow movement and the scherzo. Such precision is fabulous—a triumph for conductor and orchestra alike.

His tone seemed superficial, but he showed musicianly qualities.

NEW YORK CITY.
NOV 10 1905

[illegible] music lovers congratulate [illegible] that such an orchestra [illegible] this side of the Atlantic. Last night Carnegie Hall the ninety-six musicians headed by Wilhelm Gericke, gave a superb exhibition of their precision, vitality, their nobility of tone, their abundant nervous energy.

In the Brahms "Academic" overture the psychic effect was akin to that produced by a trio of splendidly handled fire engine horses, combining the freest individual initiative with the closest unity of purpose. So, here, did the orchestral choirs leap and thunder. The Richard Strauss "Death and Transfiguration" went boldly, but the feature of the evening, on the technical side, was the scherzo of Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony, in which the pizzicato notes of the strings, against the background of clean-cut brass and wood wind passages, shone like showers of sparks.

Verily, the summer's rest has refreshed Mr. Gericke and his men. Except for two slight slips by one of the horns the performances were without flaw. And it was not merely dazzling, this exhibition of technical proficiency. Rather was it used to bring out the musical significance of what was played. It would be hard to recall a more eloquent reading of the Brahms "Acadamic" overture, while in the Strauss tone poem, Mr. Gericke, who sometimes has lacked emotional vigor, gave of his best. The Tschaikowsky symphony has sounded more poignant, more heart searching, but never clearer or more sensuously beautiful. The fine audience applauded with cordial unanimity.

A new first 'cellist, Heinrich Warnke, has come to the orchestra, and last night he played Dvorak's long and only intermittently inspired concerto in B minor.

N. Y. EV'G SUN
NOV 10 1905

Three world-musicians in our time have appeared in bodily form at New York's Carnegie Hall. Tschaikowsky, Dvorák and Richard Strauss alone among the giants are more than a name. They have been seen by the deafest inhabitant who is not also blind. So there was a strange living interest in the programme with which Wilhelm Gericke in his most genial mood opened the twnty-fifth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its twentieth in New York, at Carnegie Hall last evening.

With the well-chosen Brahms "Academic" overture for joyful prelude, the "prima donna" orchestra presented Dvorak's 'cello concerto, Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration" and Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 4. A gilt-edged audience, built up in all these years out of individually sound music-lovers without the chaff of sensational or sentimental personalities, packed the hall. The performance, as usual, was the refinement of art in its way, and after the Russian composer's scherzo, that stirring "Pizzicato ostinato," the conductor opened his arms and signalled all his men to rise with him and bow.

In these busy times, when some new orchestra is forming about every second day, it was a welcome sight to see the familiar heads—some bald heads, too—of Mr. Higginson's famous Boston band, piloted again to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Brooklyn and New York by that human headlight of good humor, Mr. F. R. Comee. From Gericke's averted Olympian calm to the first night tremor of Heinrich Warnke and the half dozen other new men, the public greeting was that given to old friends like Willy Hess, Georges Longy and others, never forgetting the picturesque third double bass.

The 'cellist, Mr. Warnke, was a most presentable person of manly bearing and artistic self-sufficiency. If the human-voiced 'cello and the inhuman "concerto" form are, as Mr. Richard Aldrich has declared, a case of incompatibility of temper, at least there were some highly pleasing sounds interspersed among the kakophonies. It was only too much of a good thing.

The Richard Strauss mountain came to its musical Mohammed like cooing doves and bleating lambs, for no American orchestra can draw the lightning of harmonies from Strauss's great scoring as can the wise men from Boston. It is the things that they miss.

Johanna Gadski late this afternoon [illegible] come flying from a Philadelphia [illegible] to sing with the Boston Orchestra in [illegible] lyn to-night, when last evening's overture and symphony are to be repeated with other numbers. To-morrow, after the Carnegie Hall matinée, she goes flying back to the Quaker Saturday night with Frita Scheel's orchestra again. Four concerts of [illegible] magnitude in two short days. [illegible] doubt that such energy [illegible] class of the younger [illegible]

New York City
N. Y. EV'G SUN
NOV 8 1905

Symphony Concert in Washington.

HERALD BUREAU,
No. 734 FIFTEENTH STREET, N. W.,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, and with the assistance of Mme. Gadski as soloist, this afternoon opened the concert season in Washington at the National Theatre. The audience was large and contained representatives of the social and official set of the city, who were enthusiastic in their reception of the programme.

Those who have taken boxes for the season or are subscribers for the series, include Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Arthur J. Parsons, John R. McLean, Mrs. Slater, Mrs. Newberry, Mrs. Audenreid, Mrs. Boardman, Justice Brewer, Mrs. Calderon Carlisle, Mrs. Reyburn, Mrs. J. R. Garfield, Mrs. E. K. Goldsborough, Mrs. Arnold Hague, Mrs. J. W. Pinchot, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth, Miss Harlan, Mrs. Cleveland Perkins and Lieutenant H. H. Ward.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
N. Y. EV'G SUN
NOV 8 1905

Mme. Gadski, resplendent in green net over green velvet and glittering ornaments in gems and silver, aroused great enthusiasm in Boston at the start of her amazing week's tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr Gericke's Wagner programme goes the rounds. It will reach New York for a last appearance, when Ellison Van Hoose will also assist.

From MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK CITY.
NOV 8 1905

MISIC IN MAINE.

PORTLAND, Me., November 4, 1905.

MUSICAL matters in Maine suffered a slight relapse after the musical excitement of the Chapman Festival in October, a natural consequence, no doubt. Of unusual interest to music lovers is the late announcement of the Ellis course of concerts to take place in City Hall on the dates Wednesdays, November 22, December 13, January 3, January 24 and February 7. An exceedingly attractive list of artists is announced, containing the following names: Madame Sembrich, assisted by the Boston Symphony Quartet; Madame Gadski, Madame Rider-Kelsey, Marie Hall, Olga Samaroff, Laura Hawkins, Myron W. Whitney, Jr., Prof. Willy Hess, Longy Club, of Boston, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke conductor (two concerts). In no way is this more interesting and to be looked forward to than this it affords Portland another favorable opportunity to listen to and enjoy the exceedingly artistic singing of Madame Rider-Kelsey, who made a most favorable impression at the Maine Music Festival this season.

THE BOSTON HERALD
NOVEMBER 10, 1905.

SYMPHONY IN NEW YORK.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

